

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 1.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 7, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

REV. C. L. MANN, D.D., M.D., LL.D.—M. E. CHURCH—DESIGN OF THE UNIVERSITY OF SOUTHLAND, BLUFFTON, S.C.

unless our to that such 2.)
t

A FORWARD MOVEMENT.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED LAST SUNDAY, JANUARY 4, 1891, AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE NEW YORK ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Urgent Need of Advance—The Universal Activity of the Enemy—A Well Equipped Force—Some Startling Facts—Where the Need Lies—Enduement From on High Indispensable—What Men Have Achieved by it in the Past—The Wonderful Outpouring Thirty-three Years Ago—A Time of Financial Convulsion—Charles Finney's Services in the Theatre—Conversions on Shipboard—The History of Unanswered Prayers.

"Tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high." Luke 24: 49.

FOR a few months, in the providence of God, I have two pulpits, one in Brooklyn and the other in New York, and through the kindness of the printing-press an ever-widening opportunity. To all such hearers and readers I come with an especial message. The time has arrived for a forward movement such as the Church and the world have never seen. That there is a need for such a religious movement is evident from the fact that never since our world was swung out among the planets has there been such an organized and determined effort to overthrow righteousness and make the Ten Commandments obsolete and the whole Bible a derision. Meanwhile alcoholism is taking down its victims by the hundreds of thousands, and the political parties get down on their knees, practically saying: "O thou almighty Rum Jug, we bow down before thee. Give us the offices, city, State, and national. Oh, give us the offices and we will worship thee forever and ever, Amen." The Christian Sabbath meanwhile, appointed for physical, mental, and spiritual rest, is being secularized and abolished. As if the bad publishing-houses of our own country had exhausted their literary filth, the French and Russian sewers have been invited to pour their scurrility and moral slush into the trough where our American swine are now wallowing. Meanwhile, there are enough houses of infamy in all our cities, open and unmolested of the law, to invoke the Omnipotent wrath which buried Sodom under a deluge of brimstone. The pandemoniac world, I think, has massed its troops, and they are this moment plying their batteries upon family circles, church circles, social circles, political circles, and national circles. Apollyon is in the saddle and riding at the head of his myrmidons would capture this world for darkness and woe.

That is one side of the conflict now raging. On the other side we have the most magnificent Gospel machinery that the world ever saw or heaven ever invented. In the first place, in this country more than eighty thousand ministers of religion and, take them as a class, more consecrated, holier, more consistent, more self-denying, more faithful men never lived. I know them by the thousands. I have met them in every city. I am told, not by them but by people outside our profession, people engaged in Christian and reformatory work, that the clergy of America are at the head of all good enterprises and, whoever else fail, they may be depended on. The truth of this is demonstrated by the fact that when a minister of religion does fall, it is so exceptional that the newspapers report it as something startling, while a hundred men in other callings may go down without the matter being considered as especially worth mentioning. In addition to their equipment in moral character, the clergy of this country have all that the schools can give. All theological, rhetorical, scientific, scholastic, literary attainment. So much for the Christian side of the conflict. In the next grandest churches of all time, and higher style of membership, and more of them, and a host without number of splendid men and women who are doing their best to have this world purified, elevated, gospelized. But we all feel that something is wanting. Enough hearty songs have been sung and enough earnest sermons preached within the last six months to save all the cities of America, and saving the cities you save the world, for they overflow all the land either with their religion or their infamy.

But look at some of the startling facts. It is nearly nineteen hundred years since Jesus Christ came by the way of Bethlehem caravanary to save this world, yet the most of the world has been no more touched by this most stupendous fact of all eternity than if on the first Christmas night the beasts of the stall amid the bleatings of their own young had not heard the bleating of the Lamb that was to be slain. Out of the eighteen hundred million of the human race fourteen hundred million are without God and without hope in the world, the camel-driver of Arabia, Mahomet, with his nine wives, having half as many disciples as our blessed Christ, and more people are worshipping chunks of painted wood and carved stone than are worshipping the living and eternal God. Meanwhile, the most of us who are engaged in Christian work—I speak for myself as well as others—are toiling up to our full capacity of body, mind and soul, harnessed up to the last buckle, not able to draw a pound more than we are drawing, or lift an ounce more than we are lifting.

Old Burton's Theatre, New York, where Charles G. Finney Preached.

What is the matter? My text lets out the secret. We all need more of the power from on high. Not muscular power, not logical power, not scientific power, not social power, not financial power, not brain power, but power from on high. With it we could accomplish more in one week than without it in a hundred years. And I am going to get it, if in answer to prayer, earnest and long-continued, God will grant it me, his unworthy servant. Men and women who know how to pray, when you pray for yourself, pray for me that I may be endued with power from on high. I would rather have it than all the diamond fields of Golconda, and all the pearls of the sea, and all the gold of the mountains. Many of the mightiest intellects never had a touch of it, and many of the less than ordinary intellects have been surcharged with it. And every man and woman on earth has a right to aspire to it, a right to pray for it, and, properly persistent, will obtain it. Power from on the level is a good thing, such power as I may give you, or you may give me, by encouraging words and actions. Power from on the level, when we stand by each other in any Christian undertaking. Power from on the level when other pulpits are in accord with ours. Power from on the level when the religious and secular press forward our Christian undertakings. But power from on the level is not sufficient. Power from on high is what we need to take possession of us. Power straight from God. Supernatural power, Omnipotent power, all-conquering power. Not more than one out of a thousand of the ministers have it continuously. Not more than one out of ten thousand Christians have it all the time. Given in abundance, these last ten years of the nineteenth century would accomplish more for God and the Church and the world than the previous ninety years of this century.

A few men and women in each age of the world have possessed it. Caroline Fry, the immortal Quakeress, had it, and three hundred of the depraved and suffering of Newgate prison under her exhortation, repented and believed. Jonathan Edwards had it, and Northampton meeting-house heard the outburst of religious emotion as he spake of righteousness and judgment to come. Samuel Budgett, the Christian merchant, had it, and his benefactions showered the world. John Newton had it. Bishop Latimer had it. Isabella Graham had it. Andrew Fuller had it. The great evangelists, Daniel Baker, and Dr. Nettleton, and Truman Osborn, and Charles G. Finney had it. In my boyhood I saw Truman Osborn rise to preach in the village church at Somerville, New Jersey, and before he had given out his text or uttered a word, people in the audience sobbed aloud with religious emotion. It was the power from on high. All in greater or less degree may have it. Once get it and nothing can stand before you. Satan goes down. Caricature goes down. Infidelity goes down. Worldliness goes down. All opposition goes down.

Several times in the history of the Church and the world has this power from on high been demonstrated. In the seventeenth century, after a great season of moral depression, this power from on high came down upon John Tillotson and Owen and Flavel and Baxter and Bunyan, and there was a deluge of mercy higher than the tops of the highest mountains of sin. In the eighteenth century, in England and America, religion was at a low water mark. Cowper, writing of the clergy of those days, said:

Except a few with Eli's spirit blest
Hophni and Phineas may describe the rest.

The infidel writings of Shaftesbury and Hobbes and Chubb had done their work. But power from on high came upon both the Wesleys and Lady Huntingdon on the other side the Atlantic, and upon William Tennant and Gilbert Tennant and David Brainerd on this side the Atlantic, and both hemispheres felt the tread of a pardoning God. Coming to later date, there may be here and there in this audience an aged man or woman who can remember New York in 1831, when this power from on high descended most wondrously. It came upon pastors, and congregations, and theatres, and commercial establishments. Chatham Street Theatre,

New York, was the scene of a most tremendous religious awakening. A committee of Christian gentlemen called upon the lessee of the theatre and said they would like to buy the lease of the theatre. He said, "What do you want it for?" They replied, "for a church." "For wh-a-a-t?" said the owner. "For a church" was the reply. The owner said: "You may have it and I will give you a thousand dollars to help you on with your work." Arthur Tappan, a man mightily persecuted in his time, but a man, as I saw him in his last days, as honest and pure and good as any man I ever knew, stepped on the stage of old Chatham Theatre as the actors were closing their morning rehearsal and said: "There will be preaching here to-night on this stage," and then gave out and sang with such people as were there, the old hymn:

The voice of free grace cries, escape to the mountain,
For all that believe Christ has opened a fountain.

The bar-room of the theatre was turned into a prayer-room, and eight hundred persons were present at the first meeting. For seventy successive nights religious services were held in that theatre, and such scenes of mercy and salvation as will be subjects of conversation and congratulation among the ransomed in glory as long as heaven lasts. But I come to a later time—1857—remembered by many who are here. I remember it especially as I had just entered the office of the ministry. It was a year of hard times. A great panic had flung hundreds of thousands of people penniless. Starvation entered habitations that had never before known a want. Domestic life, in many cases, became a tragedy. Suicide, garroting, burglary, assassination were rampant.

PRAYERS IN A BAR-ROOM.

What an awful day that was when the banks went down. There has been nothing like it in thirty years, and I pray God there may not be anything like it in the next thirty centuries. Talk about your Black Fridays! It was Black Saturday, Black Sunday, Black Monday, Black Tuesday, Black Wednesday, Black Thursday, as well as Black Friday.

This nation in its extremity fell helpless before the Lord and cried for pardon and peace, and upon ministers and laymen the power from on high descended. Engine-houses, warehouses, hotel parlors, museums, factories from twelve to one o'clock while the operatives were resting, were opened for prayers and sermons, and inquiry rooms, and Burton's old theatre on Chambers Street, where our ancestors used to assemble to laugh at the comedies, and all up and down the streets, and out on the docks and on the deck of ships lying at the wharf, people sang, "All hail the power of Jesus' name," while others cried for mercy. A great mass-meeting of Christians on a week-day, in Payne's Hall, Philadelphia, telegraphed to Fulton Street Prayer Meeting, in New York, saying: "What hath God wrought?" and a telegram went back, saying "Two hundred souls saved at our meeting to-day." A ship came through the Narrows into our harbor, the captain reporting that himself and all the crew had been converted to God between New Orleans and New York. In the busiest marts of our busiest American cities, where the worshippers of Mammon had been counting their golden beads, men began to calculate, "What shall it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his soul?" The waiters in restaurants after the closing of their day's work knelt among the tables where they had served. Policemen asked consent of the Commissioner of Police to be permitted to attend religious meetings. At Albany members of the New York Legislature assembled in the room of the Court of Appeals at half-past eight o'clock in the morning for prayer and praise. Printed invitations were sent out to the firemen of New York saying, "Come as suits your convenience best, whether in fire or citizens' dress, but come! come!" Quarrymen knelt among the rocks. Fishermen knelt in their boats. Weavers knelt among the looms. Sailors knelt among the hammocks. Schoolmasters knelt among their classes. A gentleman travelling said there was a line of prayer-meetings from Omaha to Washington

REV. CHARLES G. FINNEY.

City, and, he might have added, a line of prayer-meetings from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coast, and from the St. Lawrence to the Gulf of Mexico.

In those days, what songs, what sermons, what turnings to God, what recital of thrilling experiences, what prodigals brought home, what burning tidings of souls saved, what serfdom of sin emancipated, what wild rout of the forces of darkness, what victories for the truth! What millions on earth and in heaven are now thanking God for 1857, which, though the year of worst financial calamity, was the year of America's most glorious blessing. How do you account for 1857, its spiritual triumphs on the heels of its worldly misfortune? It was what my text calls the power from on high.

That was thirty-three years ago, and though there have been in various parts of the land many stirrings of the Holy Ghost, there has been no general awakening. Does it not seem to you that we ought to have and may have the scenes of power in 1857, eclipsed by the scenes of power in 1891? The circumstances are somewhat similar. While we have not had national panic, and universal prostration as in 1857, there has been a stringency in the money market that has put many of the families of the earth to their wit's end. Large commercial interests collapsing have left multitudes of employees without means of support. The racked brains of business men have almost or entirely given way. New illustrations all over the land of the fact that riches have not only feet, on which they walk slowly as they come, but wings on which they speed when they go. Eternal God! Thou knowest how cramped, and severe, and solemn a time it is with many. And, as the business ruin of 1857 was followed by the glorious triumphs of grace, let the awful struggles of 1890, be followed by the hallelujahs of a nation saved in 1891.

Brethren in the Gospel ministry! if we spent half as much time in prayer, as we do in the preparation of our sermons nothing could stand before us. We would have the power from on high as we never have had it. Private membership of all Christendom! if we spent half as much time in positive prayer for this influence as we do in thinking about it and talking about it, there would not be secretaries enough to take down the names of those who would want to give in their names for enlistment. What would have hundreds of cases like those recently reported when a man said to an evangelist, "I am a lost sinner. Pray for me. My wife has been a professor of religion for years, but I knew she did not enjoy religion, and I said that was all there was in religion, I did not want it. But for the last few days she has loved and acted in such an elevated and glorious spirit that I cannot stand it, away from God. I want the same religion that inspires her. Come! Come! all through the United States, and all through Christendom, and all around the world let us join hands in holy pledge that we will call upon God for the power. Oh, for the power from on high, the power that came at Pentecost, yea, for ten thousand Pentecosts. Such times will come, and they will come in our day if we have the faith and the prayer and the consecration.

As the power from on high in 1857 was more remarkable in Academies of Music, and Lyceum halls, and theatres than in churches, why not this winter of 1891 in these two Academies of Music, places of secular entertainment where we are, during the rebuilding of our Brooklyn Tabernacle, so grandly and graciously treated by the owners and lessors and lessees; why not expect, and why not have the power from on high, comforting power, arousing power, convicting power, converting power, saving power, Omnipotent power? My opinion is that in the cluster of cities by the Atlantic coast, there are five hundred thousand people now ready to accept the Gospel call, if, freed from all the conventionalities of the Church, it were earnestly and with strong faith presented to them. In these brilliant assemblies, there are hundreds who are not frequenters of churches, and who do not believe much, if at all, in ministers of religion or ecclesiastical organizations. But God knows you have struggles in which you need help and bereavements, in which you want grace and persecutions, in which you ought to have defence, and perplexities in which you need guidance, and with a profound thoughtfulness you stand by the grave of the old year, and in the cradle of the young year, wondering where you will be, and what you will be when "rolling years shall cease to move." Power from on high descend upon them! Men of New York, and Brooklyn, I offer you God and heaven. From the day you came to these cities, what a struggle you have had! I can tell from your care-worn countenances, and the tears in your eyes, and the deep sigh, you have just breathed that you want reinforcement, and here it is greater than Blucher, when he reinforced Wellington, greater than the Bank of England, when last month it re-enforced the Barings; namely, the God who through Jesus Christ is ready to pardon all your sin, comfort all your sorrows, scatter all your doubts, and swing all the shining gates of heaven wide open before your redeemed spirit. Come into the Kingdom of God! Without a half second of delay, come in! Many of my hearers to-day are what the world calls, and what I would call, splendid fellows, and they seem happy enough, and are jolly, and obliging, and if I were in trouble, I would go to them with as much confidence as I would to my father, if he were yet alive. But their rooms at night or when the excitement of social and business life are off, they are not content, and they want something better than this world can offer. I understand them so well I would, without any fear of being thought rough, put my right hand on their one shoulder and my left hand on their other shoulder, and push them into the kingdom of God. But I cannot. Power from high, lay hold of them!

SERVICE IN THE SUPREME COURT.

Years ago, at the close of a religious service in Brooklyn Tabernacle, a gentleman most distinguished in appearance, and with remarkable cerebral development came forward with his wife and daughter, and said to me in a most courteous and elegant way: "Let me introduce you to my wife and daughter who wish a some counsel in regard to religious matters," and the three sat down. After I had conversed with the wife and daughter, I turned to the gentleman, and said: "Perhaps you have some interest yourself in these matters?" "None whatever," was the reply, polite yet firm. But before the meeting had closed I saw his hand lifted to his forehead, and his eyes closed, and I said: "Sir, have you not changed your mind and are you not thoughtful on this subject?" He said: "I am: since coming to this seat, I have sought and found Christ as my Saviour and I have—but I desire more and that is, before I leave this house to join my wife and daughter in making profession of the Christian religion, I have been known as on the long side long enough." What was it that had come upon him? Was it power from high?

At the first communion after the dedication of our former church, three hundred and twenty-eight souls stood up in the aisles and publicly espoused the cause of Christ. At another time four hundred souls; at another time five hundred; and our four thousand five hundred membership but a small part of those within those sacred walls on themselves the vows of a Christian. What turned that saved them? Power from high? No. Power from

But greater things are to be seen if ever these cities, and ever this world is to be taken for God. There is one class of men and women in all these assemblages whom I have especial interest, that is those who had fathers and mothers once, but they are dead. What multitudes of us are orphans! We may be forty, fifty, eighty years old, but we never get used to having father and mother gone. Oh, how often we have had troubles that we would like to have told them, and we always felt as long as father and mother were alive we had some one to whom we could go. Now I would like to ask if you think that all their prayers in your behalf have been answered. "No," you say, "but it is too late, the old folks are gone now." I must courteously contradict you. It is not too late. I have a friend in the ministry, who was attending the last hours of an aged Christian, and my friend said to the old Christian: "Is there no trouble on your mind?" The old man turned his face to the wall for a few moments and then said: "Only one thing: I hope for the salvation of my ten children, but not one of them is yet saved; yet I am sure they will be. God means to wait until I am gone." So he died. When my friend told of the circumstances eight of the ten had found the Lord, and I have no doubt the other two before this have found him. Oh, that the long-postponed answers to prayer for you my brother, for you my sister, might this hour be answered! Power from on high.

Story of these unanswered prayers for only knows. They may have been offered in the solemn birth-hour. They may have been offered when you were down with scarlet fever or diphtheria, or membranous croup. They may have been offered some night when you were sound asleep in the trundle-bed, and your mother came in to see if you were rightly covered in the cold winter night. They may have been offered at that time which comes at least once in almost every one's life when your father and mother had hard work to make a living, and they feared that want would come to them and you. They may have been offered when the lips could no longer move and the eyes were closed for the long sleep. O, unanswered prayers of father and mother, where are you? In what room of the old homestead have they hidden? O, unanswered prayers, rise in a mist of many tears into a cloud, and then break in a shower which shall soften the heart of that man who is so hard he cannot cry, or that woman who is ashamed to pray! O, armchair of the aged, now empty and in the garret among the rubbish, speak out! O staff of the pilgrim who has ended his weary journey, tell of the parental anxieties that bent over thee. O family Bible with story of births and deaths, rustle some of thy time-worn leaves, and let us know of the wrinkled hands that once turned thy pages, and explain that spot where a tear fell upon the passage: "O, Absalom, my son, my son, would God I had died for thee!"

"Captain and Crew Converted on a Voyage from New Orleans to New York."

Good and gracious God! What will become of us, if after having had such a devout and praying parentage, we never pray for ourselves! We will pray. We will begin now. Oh, for the power from on high, power to move this assemblage, power to save Brooklyn and New York, power of evangelism that shall sweep across this continent like an ocean surge, power to girdle the round earth with a red girdle dipped in the blood of the cross. If this forward movement is to begin at all, there must be some place for it to begin, and why not this place? And there must be some time for it to begin, and why not this time? And so I sound for your ears a rhythmic invitation, which, until a few days ago, never came under my eye, but it is so sweet, so sobbing with pathos, so triumphant with joy, that whoever chimed it, instead of being anonymous, ought to be immortal:

Thy sins I bore on Calvary's tree:
The stripes, thy due, were laid on me,
That peace and pardon might be free—
O, wretched sinner come!

Burdened with guilt, wouldst thou be blest?
Trust not the world; it gives no rest:

I bring relief to hearts oppress—
O, weary sinner, come!

Come, leave thy burden at the cross:
Count all thy gains but empty dross,
My grace repays all earthly loss—
O, needy sinner, come!

Come, hither bring thy boding fears,
Thy aching heart, thy bursting tears,
'Tis mercy's voice salutes thine ears:
O, trembling sinner, come!

THE UNIVERSITY OF THE SOUTHLAND.

Dr. C. L. Mann's Great Enterprise for Promoting Industrial and Higher Education in the South.

THE whole South, and that large-section of the North which is in hearty sympathy with every well-conceived effort to promote the welfare of the South, will be interested in the pictures that appear this week on the first page of this journal, and in the story of an enterprise which seems destined to supply its most urgent need. What that need is, cannot be a matter of doubt with any man who has both a personal knowledge of the condition of that section and a realization of the power of religious education to benefit any people. The lower panel of the illustration represents the central building of the University of the Southland, which, it is hoped, will soon be erected in Alabama, (from the design of the architect, Mr. G. M. Pollard.) The upper panels contain a portrait of its founder and Chancellor, Dr. C. L. Mann (from a photograph by Davis Garber, 747 Broadway, New York), and a picture of St. Paul's M. E. Church, Anniston, which he founded.

The idea of the University is an outgrowth of the work which Dr. Mann has been doing in Alabama during the past ten years. Dr. Mann had completed a course of medical training with the object of going out as a medical missionary to China. In his Christian home, he had been led under the tender influences of a saintly mother and a godly father to give his heart to God and to consecrate his life to the cause of the Saviour. He had been preaching for several years, his first sermon having been delivered, with a wood-pile for a pulpit, when he was only fourteen years of age. God had blessed his labors to the conversion of many, and the young man was full of enthusiasm and a desire to go to the front where the battle was raging most fiercely between the forces of Christ and Satan. China offered such a field and Dr. Mann, having gained by hard study and practice of the healing art, that medical qualification which has been found so valuable an aid to the work of the Christian missionary, was preparing to set out for that field. It was then that he listened to words from the lips of a man who had just returned from a tour in the South, which gave to the current of his life a new direction. He was deeply impressed by the story he heard of the misery, destitution, ignorance, and degradation in which thousands of the people were living in the Southern States. That was a call nearer home, and, after prayerful consideration, Dr. Mann felt it his duty to respond to it.

The next year found him at Birmingham, Ala., then a mere village. From the Conference which was sitting at Weedowee, Clay County, he obtained an appointment to labor in South Alabama. He went there and began Christian work, living with the poorest of the people and sharing their humble homes and frugal fare. He learned the nature of their lives, their difficulties, and their sorrows, as no mere visitor could. He soon arrived at the conviction that next to the religion which was a necessity for their souls, their crying need was such education as would raise their lives in this world to a higher level. Some of the most grievous cases of poverty that he met with were the result of ignorance. One instance is worthy of record, as a specimen of many others. A man who had managed by the most rigorous self-denial to accumulate savings to the amount of $300, was induced to purchase some land for $500. The balance was to be secured on mortgage, which was also to cover money advanced for the purchase of tools, seed, and provisions for the use of the family until the crops were realized. One crop was gathered in and a payment on account was made. The man toiled on in hope; but just as a second crop was approaching maturity his farm was seized under the mortgage and he and his wife and children and his aged mother were turned out of doors. The whole of his two years' work and his original hoard of $300 had been sacrificed, and he had to start life anew. It was all legal; the mortgage deed, which the man had signed with his mark, sanctioned all the proceedings, but the man had not been able to read it. In numberless similar ways the poorer class of the people are being swindled by unprincipled men, who take advantage of their ignorance. Dr. Mann saw them, sorrowed with them and sought a way to help them by helping them to protect themselves.

His first step was to organize a school, and get a charter for it, to secure for it the protection of the State. The erection of the building required a tremendous effort. He secured donations of lumber, volunteer laborers did much of the work, without pay, and Dr. Mann was his own architect and general manager. The value of the building, with the site, was estimated at $5,000. It was opened with sixty students and a curriculum including the higher branches was arranged. After a year thus spent in Southern Alabama, Dr. Mann returned to Birmingham with the object of more widely extending his work. A school was established in Northwestern Alabama, another, in the Northeastern district, was revived; also a new log school-house was built in connection with a very neat frame church. Still another school was established at Bluffton, and a church was built. At this place Dr. Mann also secured two hundred acres of land and succeeded in interesting in his enterprise the Bluffton Land Ore and Furnace Company. This company is one of the corporations which, since the war, has found in the South a veritable mine of wealth. The land they own and work, yields the finest ore on the Continent. They are very liberal people who, feeling a concern for the welfare of the people around them, entered enthusiastically into Dr. Mann's plans. They have generously undertaken to erect, on the land he has secured, a building which shall be the glory of the State, and which shall serve as a nucleus and centre of educational work. To this all the schools Dr. Mann has organized, and others that may be hereafter formed, in other districts, will send their brightest pupils to gain the benefits of a University course. This is the magnificent stone edifice, a picture of which appears on the first page. It is to have a frontage of three hundred feet, wings each two hundred feet, and to be five stories high, making one of the finest college buildings in America. Bishop Mallalieu, in his address at the breaking of ground for the new building, said: "Who would have thought, twenty-five years ago, that upon this magnificent summit, looking out upon these grand mountain peaks and this beautiful valley, there should rise a glory of architecture, a poem in rock? Yet this is being accomplished before our eyes." Governor Seay said: "In behalf of the State I extend ardent sanction to it, and trust with confidence that its work will be commensurate with the grace and power of the great denomination of Christians under whose auspices it is founded." Dr. Wm. F. Warren, President of Boston University telegraphed, "Welcome! Boston University sends cordial congratulations and good wishes."

Dr. Mann is now engaged in raising funds to make this institution all that he, and the generous donors who are building it, desire to see it. Having the gift of the building to begin with—a gift like that of Peter Cooper to New York, and that of Andrew Carnegie to Allegheny City, Pa.—Dr. Mann is sanguine of success. It is true he needs much. The University must be furnished plainly, but substantially; it must have a library and educational apparatus and appliances for the school of Technology which is to be a prominent feature of the University. There must also be an endowment for the support of Professors. All this requires money. Here is an opportunity for the North to show its sympathy for the South in a practical way. There is no better way of helping a people than by helping them to help themselves, and that is the nature of this enterprise. The young men who are to be the leaders of the State will there receive the best kind of preparation for the discharge of their responsible duties.

Dr. Mann is fortified with the strongest kind of recommendations from eminent men. Dr. Talmage writes: "I rejoice in the establishment and prosperity of the University of the Southland, and hope that you may obtain all needed re-enforcement in carrying on your great educational enterprise." The Rev. R. S. Rust, D.D., LL.D., Hon. Secretary of the Freedman's Aid and Southern Education Society, writes: "I congratulate you upon what you have already accomplished, which is truly marvellous. . . . I pray that your enterprise may be crowned with success." Similar words of sympathy and commendation come from Bishops C. H. Fowler, Thomas Bowman, John P. Newman, J. N. Fitzgerald, H. W. Warren, John H. Vincent, D. A. Goodsell, John F. Hurst, W. X. Ninde, and many other well-known men. So endorsed Dr. Mann will find a sympathetic hearing from the Churches and the public, and will, we trust, achieve the success for which he has so ardently labored.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Purchase of a Ring Recently Saved a Lady from expulsion from a boarding-house at Saratoga, N. Y. She was young and beautiful and had with her a child of three years of age. She noticed after a short stay in the boarding-house that the other lady boarders avoided her, and she could not imagine the reason. All her efforts to be friendly with them were repulsed, and their aversion increased after her husband visited her there. Finally the boarding-house-keeper told her that she must leave. The ladies in the house objected to her presence there. They said that although she had her child with her, they did not believe she was married, as she wore no wedding-ring. The lady explained that she was married when she was only seventeen and her husband, who was only two years older, was too poor at the time to buy a ring. Since that time, though, prosperity had shone upon them, their expenses had increased and other things had appeared more necessary than the ring. She produced her marriage certificate and promised to write at once to her husband. He answered in person and together they visited a jeweller's and purchased a ring wherewith to satisfy the scruples of the boarders. The marriage-certificate ought to have been sufficient to satisfy them, but society is apt to attach importance to symbols. Too much importance is sometimes attached to them, as when people are more concerned about the sacraments than about union with the Saviour. (Ezek. 33: 31.)

The Cause of the Permanence of Tattoo Marks on the human skin may be inferred from the report of an investigation recently made by a surgeon in Mount Washington University Hospital, Baltimore. He, in common with other surgeons and chemists had experimented with the object of discovering some agent which would remove the India ink marks made by the tattooing-needles. He failed as others have done and was curious about the cause. A short time ago a sailor died in the hospital and his body, being unclaimed, was dissected. On the sailor's arm a coat-of-arms had been tattooed in various colors. The surgeon removed the skin and found that the marks were clear in the flesh beneath. He removed one layer of flesh after another and still the pattern appeared. At last the bone was exposed and, to his astonishment the surgeon found the coat of arms clearly defined on its white surface in the original colors. It had not penetrated the bone but it had marked it. The surgeon says he shall make no more attempts to remove tattoo-marks; he has no hope of taking out marks that have made their way to the very bone. Sin has the same penetrating quality and no system of philosophy has found a way to remove its indelible stain. Neither repentance nor reformation can eradicate it. The sinner finds no remedy until he applies to "the blood of Jesus Christ which cleanseth us from all sin." (1. John, 1: 7.)

The Exclusion of a Healthy American Ship from British ports in the West Indies has caused some surprise and no little annoyance to the officers. The United States Cruiser Petrel has been on her first long voyage. She put in at Porto Rico a Spanish island in the West Indies. There was an interruption at that port of telegraphic communication, owing to a break in the cable. It was being repaired, so the cruiser waited two days in the port, the officers visiting the quaint town and making the acquaintance of Spanish officers there, and on a Spanish gunboat then in the harbor. They passed a pleasant time and were sorry when the day came to resume the voyage. Their regret at leaving, however, was soon changed for regret at having been there at all. On arriving at Tortola, the ship was refused admission to the harbor as the English quarantine all vessels arriving from Porto Rico. On December 22, the Petrel steamed away for St. Kitts and there, too, she was warned off. The captain protested that the ship was new and there was not a case of sickness on board, but it made no difference. The authorities said that any ship coming from Porto Rico must be excluded for fifteen days, no matter what her condition might be. It would be useless attempting to enter any English port before the expiration of that period. If such precautions were used against moral infection, there would be a revolution in society. At present, society welcomes not only men who are known to associate with immoral people, but men who are themselves notoriously immoral, and this in defiance of the Apostolic command. (II. Cor. 6: 17.)

A Marriage Contract Signed in Fun Appears likely to cause some embarrassment to two young people in St. Louis. At a large party in an aristocratic mansion in that city, on Christmas Eve, fun and merriment and practical joking were unrestrained. Some one suggested that there should be a marriage and a lawyer, who was one of the guests, sat down and drew up a marriage contract. Then signs were looked for and in the prevailing hilarity two young people were soon found who carelessly attached their signatures to the document. Several others signed as witnesses and no more was thought of it until the young lady returned home and told her parents of "the joke." Her father was concerned about the matter and the next day sought the lawyer who had the contract in his possession. On examining it and consulting the marriage laws of the State, they found that the lawyer had unwittingly made the contract a valid marriage. Both parties to it insist that they only signed in fun and had no idea they were being really married. But the law takes no account of inadvertence and it is believed the contract will hold good until it is dissolved by legal process. In this feature it is an exact contrast to union with Christ, of which marriage is a type. In that case all forms are worthless and intention is all-important. Though in the excitement of a revival a convert may declare and honestly believe that he has entered into that union, it does not exist unless he has given himself entirely to the Saviour to be his in body, soul and spirit, with all that such an offering involves. (Rom. 12: 1, 2.)

PRE-MILLENNIALISM IN THE CHURCH.

Dr. McBride's Address of Welcome at the Recent Conference in Brooklyn, Held in His Church.

MR. PRESIDENT and Brethren of this Conference, I salute you in the name of our divine Master. I bid you welcome to the Centennial Church and the city of Brooklyn. When we learned of your purpose to hold a meeting of this kind we at once concluded that this was the most appropriate place for such a meeting. Brooklyn is a beautiful city, beautifully situated. It was once entitled to be called the City of Churches. We regret that it can no longer be honored by such distinction. It is outranked in this respect by many other cities. A constant stream of humanity from all lands has poured into our borders. Half our population never go to church. We trust, therefore, that your coming among us, beside creating a relish for Bible study and a new interest in the

Neglected Truths of Prophecy,

will be instrumental in awakening the Christians of this community to an appreciation of their privileges and of the tremendous responsibilities that rest upon them.

We welcome you because you are Bible believers. To us this is most important. Perilous times have come. The old Book is being assaulted as never before. The batteries of hell have opened upon it. The forces of evil are confederated for its destruction. From every quarter within the Church as well as without, men are assailing it with a virulence and a violence hitherto unheard of. Instructors and infidels, doctors of divinity and defamers of divinity, professors of religion and protestors against religion, higher critics and critics for hire are seeking to undermine the Word of God and blow up the rock on which we stand. Its inspiration, its authenticity, its credibility and authority are questioned or denied. Its accounts of the creation and the flood are pronounced pure fiction. The authors of "Lux Mundi" have sacrificed the pre-Abrahamic stories. Eve is a fabrication, and the account of Jonah legendary. We believe the old book from cover to cover. We have no sympathy with what is called or any other work of darkness. We take no stock in Elohistic or Jahvistic documents. We have no need for redactors. We believe that all Scripture is God-breathed; that men spake from God, being moved by the Holy Spirit; that every chapter, verse, line, jot and tittle on the original parchments was inspired. We believe its professions, its promises, its precepts, its stories of Eve and Lot's wife, of Jonah, and of the flood. It is enough for us, as the late Canon Alford has said, that Jesus Christ set the seal of his infallible testimony on the whole of the old Testament and went out of his way to sanction the very parts that modern sceptics reject. We believe in the ultimate triumph of this Book. The Word of our God shall stand forever.

The Higher Criticism,

Again, we welcome you as pre-millennialists. You believe in the second personal coming of our Lord; that the same Jesus who was taken up into heaven shall so come in like manner as he went. This is an old Baptist doctrine. In this belief you are in the true line of apostolic succession. That it was no one who reads the New Testament candidly and impartially can doubt. One verse in twenty-five, or three hundred verses speak of it. Equally certain is it that it was a post-apostolic faith. The historian Gibbon shows that it was held by the whole Church of Christ until the Council of Nice. It received its first check when Constantine, in imperial splendor, ascended the throne and dreamed of a millennium of which he should be the head. And the apostate Church of Rome is heir to all this fallacy. Said Cardinal Manning, "In the person of Pius IX. Jesus Christ reigns on earth." The Waldenses in the mountains have ever held firmly to the ancient hope. And the best, and holiest, and most learned men of the eighteenth century believed it. Among them we might mention Gill, the distinguished Baptist commentator, and Bunyan, and Toplady, and Wesley, and the great Bengel.

The Belief of the Apostles

In our own century this doctrine has come prominently to the front, and it has been supported by a host of illustrious names in Germany and in England, in Scotland and the United States. Alford has remarked that since the French Revolution

The Majority of Interpreters,

both in number, learning and research, adopt the pre-millennial advent, following the plain and undeniable sense of the sacred text. "Never since the martyr age," as Dr. West puts it, "has Christian Chiliasm attained such distinction. Christian people are perceiving that our view is the true optimistic view of the future. You take a hopeful view of the situation. This is not what is commonly said of you. We have been told that you are indolent and fanatical, raving pessimists who look only on the dark side of things, that your teaching is destructive to the best energies of the Church, that it cuts the nerve of missions and paralyzes the right arm of evangelism. We don't believe it. It is, to use the vigorous language of Luther, "A falsehood forged by Satan." If there are any indolent men in the ministry they are not pre-millennialists. I never knew a lazy pre-millennialist. What could impel men to more than the belief that the Lord may come at any moment? The times are fraught with evil. The very air is oppressive, heavy with the tidings that we have heard. But who has proclaimed these doleful tidings? Who speaks of the outlook as being dark and discouraging? One voice has reached us from boastful Chicago. It announces that "there are 300,000,000 nominal Christians thoroughly corrupt and worldly, while about 100,000,000 professing Christians are worldly, apathetic, sleeping as if drugged by some fatal opiate; that in the last one hundred years the heathen population has increased 200,000,000, while the number converted to Christianity is estimated at 3,000,000. Another voice reaches us from that centre of light and culture, Boston. It says: "Large masses, very many of them native population, go upon Sunday excursions instead of attending worship. The communistic, anarchistic and other radical revolutionary theories assailing government, social order and religion have been promulgated in the largest centres of our population.

Consecration and Effort,

The Spirit of Atheism is in the Air.

It steams up from the slums. It organizes in leagues. It has its presses. Large batches of organs of atheism are published in New York and Chicago." Another voice is heard, this time from New York. It says: "The increased licentiousness, the materialism of the age, the absorption in money-making, the dying out of religious influences in sparsely settled districts all tend to show a change in the condition of our land which demands careful consideration. Probably one-half our people never enter a church." "Our great cities," says another "are baptized in a torrent of foreign immigration, are reeking with the vileness of licentiousness and Sabbath desecration. Continental Sundays are on the free list. Seventy-five per cent. of the children of New York city do not attend Sabbath school." One other quotation, this time from the world's metropolis, London: "Just now the whole of civilized society seems to be in a state of intense agitation. Never before, perhaps, in the history of the world has there been so much

Evidence of Unrest.

Everywhere the old foundations are breaking up, the convictions are giving way, while the creeds are rapidly losing their hold on the popular mind. Confusion reigns everywhere. The demon of disorder holds undisturbed sway throughout the whole of the religious and social realm." There is much more of the same sort of thing about rum, Romanism and rebellion against religion and righteous rule. Who confess and deplore these evils? Pessimistic pre-millennial-ists? No; optimistic post-millennarians. Every man of them is careful to say he is not looking for the Lord to come in person, and also that he is not a pessimist. This is what these leaders of thought see. And they stand amid this general demoralization, helpless and appalled. With them "the millennial period is far off, somewhere in the depths of the illimitable future." No wonder our hearts are heavy. They bring us no hope. But you, brethren, while you agree with them as to the condition of the world, tell us to lift up our heads. "The night is dark," you say, "but the morning cometh." Soon the sun shall arise and shine in splendor, dispelling the darkness and ushering in the millennial day.

GOD'S CARE OF ELIJAH.

S. S. LESSON FOR JAN. 18, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
I. KINGS 17: 1-16; GOLDEN TEXT, PS. 34: 10.

Israel's Degradation—Witnesses for God in Every Age—Elijah Raised Up—Bears a Message to Ahab—Directed to Hide Himself—The Provision Made for Him—His Failure—A Widow's Straits—A Testing Command—Elijah's Unflinching Obedience—The Widow's Faith.

ISRAEL fell deeper and deeper into idolatry. Jeroboam, having given it government patronage, this terrible sin laid hold of the people who readily followed their ruler, and the kings who succeeded him on the throne of Israel all of them "did evil in the sight of the Lord," until Ahab the son of Omri surpassed them all in his daring worship of false gods. It is in times of deepest declension that ## God Develops His Prophets.

It would seem as though, in every age, he would raise up some witness who should prefigure in some point or other, the Bride of the Lamb, "the Lamb's wife," whom he is gathering out from the nations in this dispensation. God wants for prophets, men and women who are altogether yielded up to him, and who can carry out his purposes in loyal and unquestioning obedience.

Elijah the Tishbite was such an one. Of his antecedents we hear nothing; what matters it? he was no man of the world where such things count. God had a message to the king, and needed a messenger. Elijah never left his presence. Is it then to be wondered at that when he needed a heart which understood him to minister to Ahab he should find it in this man? He could trust Elijah to speak with the authority of one to whom God's presence meant more than the king's, and he could trust him to say what he had to say without adding anything and without drawing attention to himself. "As the Lord God of Israel liveth before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years but according to my word."

What it had cost Elijah of suffering in shame and grief for the idolatry of Israel before he came to the point of delivering this message, we know not. There may have been in Elijah's previous life months or years of crying and sighing for the abominations which were in the land, God's cause was Elijah's cause; he lived for nothing else. But no sooner was this bold, decisive message delivered to the king than the Lord bids him to hide himself. "The word of the Lord came unto him, saying, get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and hide thyself by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan."

Hide Thyself!

What? A man who has such courage? Most men who have to do with the training of evangelists would have said, "Elijah is just the man we want, he fears nothing and nobody, he must be set free from business, and all which can hinder him, he will make a splendid evangelist." They would have sent him all over the towns and villages of Israel to preach about the true God, and to testify against Baal-worship. But God said, "Hide thyself," and Elijah followed God. Few Christian workers understand God when he speaks thus to them, and when through a failure of physical strength, or through pressure of family, or other circumstances, he calls one of his prophet-children apart to get more deeply acquainted with himself, and fitted for a service which he can trust only to the few, let not his child misunderstand him, or compass sea and land to get rid of the sickness or whatever hindrance may seem to stand in his way, in order to get back into the same work he has done before. God has something far greater in store, and he calls his child to be patient and trust him to work out his purposes. A true prophet must learn to be dead and his life "hid with Christ in God." (Col. 3 : 3.)

But what would people think of a prophet, who, having been so bold in the presence of a king, should hide himself away as though he were ashamed of his testimony? It was not necessary that Elijah should undertake to maintain his reputation as a prophet; he was not a man to run away from the clear direction of God from selfish motives, as Jonah did. The court of Ahab for an unflinching testimony, or the brookside to learn more deeply and intensely the thoughts of his God, came alike to a man who had really and not in theory only, yielded up his will to God. But how would he be maintained? By what means could his life be sustained under such circumstances? Again, this was no question for Elijah. The Lord was his Shepherd, he could not want. God can never permit the consequences of following him to be deleterious to his own prophet-children. "It shall be that thou shalt drink of the brook, and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there." Such was God's provision. The prophet's experience, had he consulted it, would have gone to prove that such means of livelihood were most untrustworthy. His self-esteem, had he yielded to it, would have rebelled against being thus set aside after such a proof of faithfulness as he had given in his testimony to the king. But God's direction to hide himself applied not only to his relations with other men, but with himself, too. Elijah's personality must be hidden from his very self that he might learn to know his God. In simple obedience, "he went and did according to the word of the Lord," and the Lord did according to his word, too, for "the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening, and he drank of the brook,"—God's supply was sure.

A prophet of the Lord must be A Tried Man.

God is jealous over his prophet-children. He will not leave them in the simple light of any part of his truth without letting them be put to the test, that he may prove to them, and to others also, his faithfulness, and also how far they can trust him. The famine which Elijah had predicted began to make itself felt in the land. Did Elijah forget when he spoke to Ahab, that he also would have to suffer? When he prayed to the Lord that it might not rain in his God-inspired prayers for the people of Israel (James 5 : 17), did it not strike him that he, too, might have to suffer from thirst? Yes; Elijah had counted the cost, his prophet-vocation did not admit of personal considerations, and he knew he could count upon his God.

"After awhile, the brook dried up;" day by day the stream diminished, until only a few drops of water trickled among the stones, and at last not even a drop could be seen. Had God forgotten his servant? Meanwhile, in the city of Zarephath, God was dealing with a widow woman who had an only son. While the water of the brook Cherith dried up, the little provision of this poor widow was becoming rapidly exhausted, until only a handful of meal remained of all her store, and a little cruse of oil. Things were at their worst with Elijah's circumstances, and also with the widow's, when God's hand interposed, in its wonder-working power, to rescue both. First, he speaks to Elijah, "Arise, get thee to Zarephath which belongeth to Sidon, and dwell there; behold, I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee." A widow woman in a time of famine! Who that was possessed of any manliness would take the last bit from a widow and her son? "No; the ravens and the brooks were truly God's direct provision, but this is too humbling." So would speak human nature which values itself. But Elijah was a true prophet, who did not argue, but obeyed.

"So He Arose and Went."

Arrived at the gate of the city, he met the very woman, and begged her to fetch him "a little water in a vessel." Almost in despair as she was, the poor widow broke off from her occupation, and went to fetch the water, but when the prophet called after her, "Bring me a morsel of bread in thine hand," it was more than she could bear. "As the Lord thy God liveth, I have not a cake, but an handful of meal in a barrel, and a little oil in the cruse, and behold, I am gathering two sticks that I may go in and dress it for me and for my son, that we may eat it and die." Less instructed than the prophet, she looks to her own resources and sees no hope. Would this not shake the faith of the man of God? Would he now make any further claim on this distressed widow? Yes; behind him was the declaration of his God, "I have commanded a widow woman there to sustain thee," and he would leave to him all the consequences of his obedience. Elijah still standing before his God, more than before the widow woman, spoke as a prophet, "Fear not; go and do as thou hast said, but make me thereof a little cake first, for thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, the barrel of meal shall not waste nor the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth." The woman, broken by her trouble, and recognizing the authority of Elijah's God, believed and was blest. A cup of cold water given in the name of a disciple shall not lose its reward. A widow cannot receive a prophet of the Lord into her house without being enriched by it. Thus the Lord fits his prophets for their ministry. Oh let us prize all the discipline by which our God lovingly tries us and tests our faith. Let us learn to live above the opinions of men. Our humiliations, the apparently false positions in which we find ourselves, are the very means which God provides for our purification. The straits, in regard to circumstances to which he may bring us are the very means through which he manifests himself as "Jehovah Jireh," and those who have experienced his wonderful interventions can truly say, "The Lord does provide."

A SIXTEENTH CENTURY ELIJAH.

A Story of the Sunday School Lesson for January 18.
"God's Care over Elijah."

MANY years ago a man lay one night in a Scottish castle awaiting execution. His offence was the preaching of the Gospel and the denunciation of Mariolatry and the abuses of priestcraft. His name was Wishart. With him, and affectionately waiting on him, was a young man who had been his pupil and afterwards his friend and helper. The young man was urging a strange request. He wanted to declare himself, and die with his master, at the stake. "Na, na," said the elder, "return to your bairns, and God bless you; ane is sufficient for a sacrifice." The young man obeyed; sadly took his leave and went to the boys he was teaching, who were the "bairns" Wishart had spoken of. He lived to be the nearest prototype of the prophet Elijah that this world has seen in Christian days. The influence of the work he did in Scotland, extended to England, and afterward to New England. In this country and at this day we have reason for thankfulness that in that hour of Scotland's crisis God sent forth John Knox as, in an earlier time, he sent forth John the Baptist, "in the spirit and power of Elias."

The work Knox had to do was very much the same as that of Elijah, and he felt, as Elijah felt, the voice of God calling him to it. He saw his queen leading the nation into sin. She came from France to rule Scotland. By nature and by education she was inclined to the evil influences which crush the life out of a nation, Not only was she subservient to Romish priests, but her private life was impure. Her example was pernicious and her religion was demoralizing. But she was beautiful and graceful and charming. Her winning manner made her influence stronger and, therefore, more dangerous. It was a critical time, but the stern old Puritan was equal to his duty. He went to her with his solemn message. "Who are you," Mary asked, "that presume to school the nobles and sovereign of this realm?" "Madam," Knox said, "a subject born within the same." A noble answer, containing within it the assertion of the rights of the meanest subject to liberty of conscience and patriotic concern for the welfare of his native land. It required no little courage to stand thus, face to face, with a young and beautiful queen and reprove her. Mary, it is said, burst into tears as the preacher's words fell upon her ears and there were nobles around her and in sympathy with her whose passions, stirred by the sight of those tears, might have made Knox's life rather precarious. But neither concern for his own safety nor the grief that such a man must have felt in causing pain to his queen, could make Knox untrue to his duty.

God's care over the man was wonderful. Again and again attempts were made to assassinate him. He was shot at through the windows of his home in Edinburgh, and again through a window in his church, while he was preaching, but the Lord's hand preserved him from harm. The castle in which he had taken refuge was captured by the French king, who was bent on putting down the Reformation in Scotland, and Knox was carried off prisoner. For nineteen months, loaded with chains, he rowed in the French galleys, and again and again his life was in danger from his brutal keepers. On one occasion an image of the Virgin Mary was brought to the boat in which Knox was toiling with other prisoners, and the wretched men were permitted to kiss it. When it came to his turn he asked what it was, and was told it was "Mary the mother of God." "Mother? Mother of God?" he cried, "This is no mother of God, this is only a painted board. It is fitter for swimming than being worshipped." And he threw the thing into the river. It was a dangerous thing to do, there and then; but Knox was protected of God and lived to return to Scotland and preach again the truth as it is in Jesus.

At times, as it was with Elijah, he hid himself for a short period, but when the violence of the storm was past, Knox was again at the front directing the movement which Queen Mary vainly attempted to suppress. Much is said in our day about the vulgar insolence with which the plebeian priest treated the refined and beautiful queen. But his speeches, read in the light of the circumstances and of the danger that menaced Scotland under Mary's rule, do not seem insolent. Knox was serving the King of kings, and he did not concern himself with the selection of courtly phrases and flattering speeches in delivering his message, but he spoke respectfully, though firmly. Mary had to be told in unequivocal terms that she was sinning against God, that in attempting to establish Romish idolatry in Scotland she was setting up rebellion against God, and Knox told her that, plainly and warned her of the consequences. He did not wish to see his country over-ridden by a horde of foreign ecclesiastics and his people seduced into error. With such a danger imminent, he stood up manfully against the Queen, thinking, doubtless, that it was better that she should weep than that his country should be enslaved. Hard, firm, inflexible as the great Hebrew prophet, he stood there for his God and the right, and God protected him. When in his old age he came to die he pointed significantly upward in response to the question, "Have you hope?" and with a smile he passed away. "He lies there," said the Earl of Morton, standing by the side of the open grave in which they laid the body of the brave servant of God—"He lies there who never feared the face of man."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THANKS AND CONGRATULATIONS.

ON this editorial page we wish to celebrate the prosperity of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

During 1890, tens of thousands of new subscribers have been added to our list and within the last few months we have witnessed an increase of circulation that has probably never been paralleled in the history of religious journalism. We have no words sufficient to express our gratitude to God and the people. So we enter the new year with high hope, and we ask all the friends of aggressive Evangelism throughout the world to join us in forwarding the best interests of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which has these many years been graciously blessed of God in its attempts to present the truth to the people. Truly the prospects are brightening by the hour. May all our pens and types, as well as our hearts and voices, be consecrated to God!

COLD EARS.

IT is cold, cold, fearfully cold! We see the people running along the street in seal-skin caps and big mittens. They come in blowing. They stand on the corners waiting for cars or stages. The thermometer tending to zero. They rub their stinging ears. They beat their arms around them. What do they do that for? To keep warm, they answer us sharply, as though we ought to know without asking. It is no spite that makes them seize the rims of their ears and pull and pinch and shake them. But as the process went on, we thought to ourselves: that is what is the matter with a great many people. They suffer from cold ears. We have seen people in church, both summer and winter, the atmosphere at most genial heat, sitting with frosted ears, yet making no attempt to warm them. There are your critics, with astonishing cold ears. They listen. They measure your words with an iron rod. They weigh them in brazen balances. Words of invitation or entreaty may go forth from you red-hot, but by the time the ardent utterances reach them, the warm message somehow gets cooled off. These critics sit in freezing imperturbability. Their tympanum is hung with icicles. They are congealing critics. They are dying of cold ears. What they want is friction. Our plan is first to get them good and mad. We never can do anything with such people till with some vigorous exhortation we have pulled their ears. Somehow you must get the circulation started.

Among the best saints in our Church are those whom we once made hopping mad by what we said about their worldliness, or greed. We could do nothing with them till by some hair-cloth denunciation we had cured their cold ears. By some recent physiological explorations we found out that every man had six ears. On each side the external ear, the middle ear, and the internal ear. That is the reason they get so awfully cold, there are so many of them exposed. Two ears are an embarrassment in such weather as that of to-day; but what to do with six is a still more absorbing question. Nature intended that we should have no excuse for dull hearing when she gave us six, the outer one defined by learned men to be a cartilaginous funnel, covered by the integument, serving to collect sonorous vibrations, and we suppose the others quite as tremendous. In every case school teachers and ministers must wake up these six ears appertaining to each individual, or fail. That was what made the school-master of our boyhood days (perish his memory!) pull our ears till he sometimes almost pulled them off. It was only a mean way of quoting a good precept, "He that hath ears to hear, let him hear." We would all be better off if we imitated yonder man at the street corner,—if, in church and lecture-hall and family and everywhere, by healthful and vigorous friction we tried to get rid of cold ears.

We noticed, however, that many of the people in this fiercest day of all the winter were more troubled with their hands than their ears; and they stood, some in one place and some in another, whacking their arms about their body till you could hear the thump a block off. Jack Frost had evidently attempted to shake hands with them, and, like some over-cordial people, gripped them too hard. There they stood pounding themselves, first throwing their arm around one way and then throwing their arm around the other way, until they seemed to be in quite a glow. Why did they not pound the brick wall, or the lamp-post, or some of the passers-by? Ah! they had found out that the best way to get themselves right was to smite themselves rather than somebody else. We all need some self-whipping. Much of the time we give for the chastisement of others we might better spend in chastisement of ourselves. When the Church is cold, instead of shaking others we had better do like the stage-driver while waiting on the corner on a winter morning, and begin to whack ourselves. The reason that the Pharisee did not get warm was because he trounced the Publican. The reason that the Publican did get warm was because he beat his own breast. We give our best oats of moral reflection to somebody else's horse, letting our own horse gnaw an empty manger. We pull away at the mote in our neighbor's eye while we have no anxiety about a beam in our own, large enough to keep a saw-mill busy.

At which cold-day considerations we drop our pen, wipe it carefully out, and lay it upon the rack, and taking our position in mid-floor, began to imitate the stage-driver; and having first rubbed our ears for a moment to get them in a pleasant glow, we hurl our right hand across our chest in one way, and our left hand across our chest in the other way, with rapid and emphatic stroke, not only chastising our own short-comings, but at the same time starting up lethargic circulation, and getting our hands warm, warmer, warmest.

A GREAT AWAKENING.

UNDER the sermon of Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage, D.D., which we publish to-day, there were marvellous scenes witnessed both in Brooklyn Academy of Music and the service under the auspices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in the New York Academy of Music. In Brooklyn between two and three hundred persons rose for prayers at the close of sermon. The reporters' table around which a dozen journalists were seated was the place of an unusual awakening. A reporter arose among the group of newspaper men and asked for prayers. A gentleman came up to Dr. Talmage, as soon as he had pronounced the benediction, and said, "Why did you preach that sermon?" The man trembling with emotion said he thought it was preached for him. A gentleman from Colorado said that for a long while he had attended no service, but that during this meeting he had quite decided to be a Christian. A large number of persons said that during the morning service they had been converted. The scene was again repeated in the New York Academy of Music in the evening. It was a very stormy night, but an immense throng of people (about 5,000) were present. There was a great rising for prayer and the room behind the stage was occupied by people who came after the benediction had been pronounced, for religious conversation and to take part in advising those who were seeking after religion. The whole day was indeed a great FORWARD MOVEMENT.

BRIEF NOTES.

The number of immigrants who landed at New York last year was 371,593, against 315,222 in 1889. Cabin passengers to the number of 99,189 also landed.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has accepted an urgent invitation to hold meetings this month in Providence, R. I. The churches in Philadelphia are hoping to secure him for a series of services in that city during February.

Professor and Mrs. D. B. Towner have just concluded a series of revival services at Monson, Mass. The meetings were well attended and a large number of converts were received at the concluding jubilee service.

At the January Meeting of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy on Monday last, the subject for discussion was "The Religious Future of Our Country." It was opened with a scholarly paper by Rev. E. L. Thompson of Bridgeport, Conn.

Evangelist J. H. Weber has commenced work at Bridgeton, N. J., in the new church just dedicated by Bishop Andrews. He has been laboring during the holidays at Waltham, Mass., in Emmanuel M. E. Church. Mr. Weber was there three weeks, during which one hundred persons made profession of faith. The movement commenced by him, in Atlantic City, N. J., in November last is still going on.

Contributions to the fund for supplying Colored Ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $43.25. They are from: Chesterville, Ont. Can., $1; Essex, Mass., $1; Fairfax, Que. Can., $4.25; Heislerville, N. J., $1; N. Y. City, N. Y., $2; Glen's Falls, N. Y., $1; E. Des Moines, Iowa, $6; Shenandoah, Iowa, $1; Watertown, N. Y., 50 cts.; St. Louis, Mo., $6; Philadelphia, Pa., $1; Delaware, O., $2; Rock City, Ill., $2; Norwood Park, Ill., $5; Syracuse, N. Y., 50 cts.; Warsaw, N. Y., $1; Detroit, Mich., $1; Washington, D. C., $7. On behalf of the ministers whose names this amount will enable us to add to our mailing list, we heartily thank our friends who have sent it. We have still many applications on hand which we hope it will yet be our privilege to comply with.

Rev. Thomas Harrison commences services in Seventeenth Street M. E. Church, New York, on Sunday next. The meetings he has been conducting in Meriden, Conn., have been wonderfully blessed. The crowds desiring to hear him were so large that Trinity Church would not hold them, and Delavan's Opera House was engaged. During the previous eight weeks he labored at New Haven, Conn. He had engaged to stay there ten days, but at the end of that time, so mighty was the work and its promises so rich, that he was induced to prolong his visit. This, as stated in these columns at the time, involved a disappointment for the friends in Seventeenth Street, but it was justified by the results in New Haven. During the services less than 638 persons knelt at the altar. Mr. I was assisted by many ministers and Christian. Among them were Mr. Willets, who led the Mr. Bowman, Railroad Superintendent, and B. Gus, who was the means of leading sixty-eight to the altar during the meetings, her own among the number.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Explorer Schliemann Dead—Parnell and O'Brien Meet—
Death of Gen. Spinner—The Indian War Spreading—Great Fires in London and New York.

In the Death of Heinrich Schliemann, the world loses one of the most distinguished archaeologists of any age. He was born at Ankershagen, in Mecklenburg, in 1822, his father being a Lutheran clergyman. While yet a mere child, he delighted to study history and philology, and when other lads of his own age were playing outdoors, little Heinrich buried himself in the poems of Homer and in Greek mythology. At fourteen he went off as a midshipman to Venezuela, but was shipwrecked. On returning home he studied languages, and in two years mastered English, French, Dutch, Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese. Sometime afterward he was sent to St. Petersburg by a commercial firm in Holland, and there he added Swedish, Russian, and Polish to his acquirements. In 1856 he began his travels, which have been the means of disclosing to the world many of the secrets of the ancient civilization which had till then lain buried. He went to China, India, Japan, and Greece, and settled down at Athens, where he married. With a force of workmen he excavated the ruins of ancient Hissarlik and dug up many of the treasures of prehistoric ages, lettered bricks, sculptures, arms, vessels of bronze, terra cotta, gold, and ivory. His discoveries enriched the world, and the "Schliemann Museum" of antiquities affords light on the days of Homer, King Priam, the wars of Ilium and Mycenae, and the arts, architecture, religion, social life and character of the people who lived in a stage of the world's history of which no previous records existed. Honors were showered on him and all the learned societies in Europe applauded the wonderful discoveries of the Mecklenburg boy, who had brought to life and light the ancient heroes and told the story of their great wars, their loves and their deaths. He wrote a number of books on his discoveries which are everywhere recognized as standards. His wife, who was his devoted companion and assistant in much of his work, is a woman of rare intellectual accomplishments and high Christian character.

The Greatest Fire London has Experienced in years visited that city on December 29th, consuming $2,000,000 worth of property in the business quarter, including engineering works, a large fur emporium, the Welsh Church, St. Benet's Church and many other valuable buildings in the district around Victoria and Thames Streets, near Blackfriars Bridge. Salvation Army headquarters narrowly escaped destruction. The steeple of St. Benet's Church was ablaze and, at great peril, the firemen mounted with ladders and extinguished it. At the same time another conflagration was raging at Hackney, a suburb of London, where thousands of gallons of spirits exploded, shaking five miles of buildings and causing terror in London.

One-half of Manhattan Island was Illuminated on the morning of December 3rd, when the Fifth Avenue Theatre and Herrmann's Theatre, on Broadway and Twenty-eighth Street, were destroyed by fire. During the evening smoke had been observed in the Fifth Avenue Theatre but it was not till after midnight that the fire broke out. It is believed to have been caused by a gas explosion which ignited some fireworks that are used in the play of "Cleopatra." Soon the whole building was a roaring sea of flames and Herrmann's play-house adjoining was also burning. The roof of the Sturtevant House caught fire from the flying sparks. The entire resources of the Fire Department were called into action but both theatres were destroyed. Six firemen perished in the flames. They had gone to the roof of Herrmann's Theatre and were about to apply the hose when a great wave of fire enveloped them and they were seen no more. Fully ten thousand people watched the fire. The loss on the Fifth Avenue Theatre was $200,000, on Herrmann's Theatre $65,000, and on the Sturtevant House $15,000.

Indian Treachery Led to a Sanguinary Fight, near Hermosa, South Dak., on the 30th of December, in which between two and three hundred Indians and 25 soldiers were killed. Big Foot's band of hostiles had surrendered and were being disarmed, when, on a preconcerted signal, they pulled guns from under their blankets, and opened fire on the troops at short range. Col. Forsythe, who was in command of the soldiers, at once gave orders to turn the Hotchkiss guns on the rebels, and when the firing, which lasted half an hour, was ended, there were 62 dead Indians on the field and as many more in the ravines to which they had fled. This action is believed to have wiped out the last of the old band of Sitting Bull. There is great excitement at Pine Ridge Agency over the battle, as it is feared that the 5,000 Indians there may be incited to revolt, in which case it would go hard with the handful of infantry at the Agency. A bold attempt was made by Two Strike, the leader of the hostiles, to ambush the Seventh Cavalry on the 30th. The Seventh had just repulsed an attack on their supply train, when word arrived at Pine Ridge that a Catholic Mission, a mile distant, had been fired by the Indians. The cavalymen were immediately dispatched to the scene and found that Little Wound and Two Strike, with some 1,800 redskins and hostiles, had planned a trap for the wearied soldiers, doubtless intending to massacre the entire regiment. About 300 Indians engaged the troops, the rest being concealed. Soon the soldiers were surrounded and had it not been for the timely arrival of the Ninth regiment, they might have fared very badly. The Indian police (see illustration in this column), of whom there is a considerable body at the Agency, have not been engaged since the fight in which Sitting Bull died, as it is feared that they may be won over to the side of the hostiles. Thus far, they have proved loyal.

Gen. Francis Elias Spinner, ex-Treasurer of the United States, and for many years one of the best known public men in the country, died of cancer at Jacksonville, Fla., on the evening of December 31. He was born in the township of Mohawk, N. Y., on January 21, 1802. After receiving a common-school education, he learned the trade of a confectioner and then that of a saddler. He was made Deputy Sheriff of Herkimer County, N. Y., in 1829, and was afterwards

Sheriff. He held various other offices and went into the banking business for several years, after which, in 1854, he was elected to Congress. He was an active Republican from the organization of the party until the day of his death. President Lincoln appointed him

Treasurer of the United States in 1861 and he held the office until 1875. Under his rule and by his suggestion women were first employed in the Government offices. His peculiar handwriting which was likened to "a string of eels," and was seen on every Treasury note and bill, was known all over the Union. After leaving office, his health gave way and he went to Florida where he has lived ever since. Under his control the United States Treasury became the greatest of American financial institutions. Hundreds of millions passed through his hands during the war and afterward, and yet when he retired there was only a discrepancy of a few cents in the books which he insisted on having investigated. The balance ultimately came out exact. He was a man of amazing energy and resources where finances were concerned. It is related of him that when a Confederate army threatened the National Capital, he got a large number of mail bags from the Post Office, packed all the money the vaults contained in them, and stood in readiness to take a tug and steam down the Potomac, all the other avenues of escape having been blockaded or destroyed. He obtained his military title from the fact that he was Major-General of Militia in New York. A portrait of Gen. Spinner is given above.

Parnell and William O'Brien met at Boulogne, France, on the last day of the year and conferred as to the proposed retirement of the former from the leadership of the Irish party. No definite result seems to have been reached and it was expected that the conference would last several days. Cablegrams were kept constantly flying between Paris and London and Dublin while the two men were closeted together. One rumor is to the effect that Parnell is willing to retire, provided the party unite in re-electing him to Parliament, thus preserving his prestige and enabling him to do voluntarily what he declines to do under compulsion. Parnell is said to favor O'Brien as his successor.

Holland has Signed the Anti-Slavery Act of the Brussels Conference, after a long delay which threatened to nullify the whole work of the Conference. According to the agreement the Congo State was to participate very actively in the putting down of slavery in Africa, and Holland was to establish new stations in the slave-catching centres, and to impose a heavy tax on spirits imported to the Upper Congo. A year ago, the Berlin Conference had established free trade on the Congo, and as unanimous consent was required to reverse any of the Berlin decisions, Holland was able if she so willed to block the later Conference at every point. She insisted upon the right of the Hague merchants to flood the Congo region with rum; but now she has yielded and the civilising work will go on.

Thirty Thousand Doses of Koch Lymph Arrived in this country by a single steamer a few days ago. Physicians just returned from Berlin assert that the demand in that city for the famous remedy is so great that robbery is resorted to by some who are determined to have it at all hazards. Meanwhile, there are evidences of a slight reaction in the general enthusiasm over the discovery, and the anti-Kochites, led by Professor Billroth of Vienna, the most distinguished surgeon in Europe, are pointing out the fact that cures are yet unheard of. On the other hand, German and American physicians have unshaken confidence in the lymph when tuberculosis is treated in its incipient stages. Experiments are now going on in many American cities, the outcome of which is being closely watched by the medical world.

CAMP LAW AND CAMP LIFE.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

The Law of Cleanliness—The Divine Presence in the Camp—I. An Instructive Comparison—The Church like a Camp—In Its Separation—In Its Posture of Defence—Of Aggression—On the March—A Temporary Rest—II. A Special Privilege—The Presence of Love—And Observation—III. Corresponding Conduct—Must Wear Uniform—Cromwell's Order—A Warning—A Promise.

"For the Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy; that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee."—Deuteronomy 23: 14.

GOD takes note of matters which persons who are falsely spiritual speak of as beneath their observation. If the Lord cares for such things, we must not neglect them. But oh, what condescension on his part that his Spirit should dictate to Moses concerning these grosser concerns! I bow before the majesty of a condescension to which nothing is too low. Observe, also, how it shows us the all-reaching character of the law of Moses. It overshadowed everything; it guided, arranged, restrained, or suggested all the acts of the people under its tutorship.

Dear friends, the great thing that I would bring out at this time is the spiritual lesson of the text—how the Lord would have his people clean in all things. The God of holiness commands and loves purity—

Purity of All Kinds.

He saith, "Be ye clean, that bear the vessels of the Lord." If cleanliness be next to godliness—and I am sure it is—it ought to be observed by those who profess godliness. Does not the same text which says "having our hearts sprinkled from an evil conscience," also say, "and our bodies washed with pure water?" The Christ who redeemed us did not redeem us that we should be covered with filthiness. He has redeemed the body as well as the soul, and he has made it to be the temple of the Holy Ghost; surely we must cleanse his temple, and not suffer it to be defiled. I like the idea of those sailors on board ship, who knew that the ship was going down, and therefore, put on their Sunday's best, that they might die as clean and neat as they could. I would not care to die in filth, or to live in it. Now, if God speaks about this matter of cleanliness, I am sure I may do so, and ought to do so.

Still, I pass on from that to the greater lesson of the passage. You will notice that the presence of God in the midst of his people was all-reaching and everywhere. No part of the camp was exempt from God's walking in it. Not merely in the holy place was God, or in the holy of holies between the cherubim, but he was everywhere in the streets of the canvas city, and in the outskirts thereof. When troops of Israelites went out to war, and consequently cast up temporary camps, they were to remember that God was still walking in the midst of them; and this was to be the great motive power of their lives—the presence of God. The high privilege of being a people near unto Jehovah involved continual watching that nothing might offend his sacred majesty. O sirs, every man, whether a Christian or not, ought to remember that God is everywhere, that there is no escaping from his presence, that even the shades of night furnish no veil under which we may sin with impunity.

I. First, then, here is

An Instructive Comparison.

The Church of God is in many respects comparable to a camp. It is a camp for separation. Men who are encamped are separated from the traders, householders, and others near whom they are tarrying. They are separated especially from the adversaries with whom they are at war. When you come near to a camp, you are challenged by the sentry, for you must not come there without warrant. In war-time a picket is sure to be in your path whichever way you come near to the camp; for during a campaign warriors are a separated people, and must keep themselves so. Such ought the Church of God to be. We are crusaders, and are separated from the mass for the service of the cross which we bear on our hearts. We are in an enemy's country, and we must keep ourselves to ourselves very much, or else we shall certainly fail of that holy military discipline which the Captain of our salvation would have us strictly enforce.

A Dreaded Reproach.

The reproach to-day, dreaded by feeble minds, is that of being narrow-minded, bigoted, strict, precise. Let us willingly take it up. It is his reproach: let us not attempt to escape it. Let it be our resolve that, as far as ever we can, we will be nonconformists to the ways even of worldly Christians. Let us not be conformed to this world, but transformed in the spirit of our minds. Ours be the holy dissidence of spiritual dissent from evil, the sacred separation of Separatists from error. Are we a camp, dear friends? The question might lead us to judge others: I will put it in the singular. Am I a soldier of the cross, a follower of the Lamb? If so, I must, as a soldier, live in my barracks, or abide in my lines. I must be separated.

Next, it is a camp, because it is on the defensive. As I have said before, we are marching through an enemy's country. The children of Israel marched through the wilderness, and the Amalekites frequently harassed them, and slew the hindmost of them; as the Amalekites harass us, and, alas! they slay the hindmost of us. It is not those that are to the front for their Captain, not those who follow close to the standard, nor those who go forth armed in his strength, that fall by the enemy. Those who play about in the rear, who gather up the stones of the desert, and hoard them up as a treasure—it is those upon whom the Amalekites pounce. I heard say of a certain clergyman, that he told his bishop, when he went to a ball, that he was "off duty"; but his bishop very properly replied, "When is a clergyman off duty?" I put the same question to a Christian:

When are You Off Duty?

Never. Brethren, we are soldiers at all times, and must never doff our regimentals. We must keep rank, and march in serried order, for every day is a battle to the Church of God.

It is a camp, too, especially, because it is always assailing the powers of darkness. It is carrying the war into the enemy's territory. That, no doubt, is the special intention of the words of our text. We have a world to conquer, and we cannot afford to loiter. We have a kingdom to set up for the Lord of Hosts, and we must not sleep, for the adversaries of the Lord are raging. We are an army, sworn to war against the Canaanites of error and sin, to cast down their walled cities, to break their idols, and to cut down their groves. The Church of God is the great army of peace, purity, liberty, love: she wars against sin, she wars against oppression, she wars against falsehood, uncleanness, intemperance, unrighteousness; and her fight has only yet begun. Do you not feel, my brethren, dwelling in this wicked city of London, that our appropriate description is a camp?

And next, dear friends, the Church of God is a camp because

We are On the March.

A camp is pitched in one spot for temporary purposes, for the army is moving on to-morrow, and then the camp will be in another place. The Israelites, especially, were not dwelling in the desert; they were only marching through it into the land that God had promised to them. It is well for us to recollect that we are ourselves in a movable camp, marching, marching onward, marching forward; but ever marching and moving. This is not our rest. We are not at home: we are on foreign travel. Alas! I am afraid that we do not realize this, but are like the children of Israel, who took forty years in the wilderness to perform a journey which, I suppose, might have been accomplished in forty days or less. It was not far, after all, from Egypt to Canaan; we should think nothing of it as a journey now; and even for that great mass of people, who necessarily travelled slowly, it needed not to have been a long passage; but they took forty years over it, because they marched this way and that way, in endless mazes lost, wandering rather than journeying towards a definite spot. Do you think that a great many Christian people are practising the same method of motion without progress? We ought to be advancing in grace, in knowledge, in earnestness, in holiness, in usefulness, and if not, we scarcely realize the figure of a camp.

Temporary Occupation.

Yet, once more, no doubt a camp, as formed for temporary purposes, was a token of the Church; for although the Church stands still and abides, yet in her individual members she is subject to the same law of decay, and death, and change, as the rest of the world. Soon shall the camp cease; and the soldiers become citizens, and the tents be exchanged for mansions. The Church is militant upon the earth for a season only. We are here to-day and gone to-morrow. O brethren, we are at present rather a camp than a city; for we pass away, and our brethren also, as the days fly by. To us also there remaineth a rest, but we recollect that here we have no continuing city, we seek one to come. We endeavor to make the camp as comfortable as the desert will permit; but it can never be a home. You can never reckon upon anything like steadfast abiding in one place when you are following camp life. Such is the life of the believer; camp life is his lot, and it is well for him to be prepared to rough it.

II. Secondly, I come to notice

A Special Privilege.

The text mentions a privilege specially promised to Israel, but I am sure, to a very high and real degree, enjoyed by ourselves. "The Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee." By this walking is intended a special presence of love. The Lord is present in his Church in a higher sense than in the world. The Lord walks in the midst of his Church as a man takes pleasure in the walks of his garden. The Church is the garden of the Lord, his paradise. "His delights are with the sons of men." The Lord, with unutterable care, is in the midst of his Church. Remember how he says, "I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment; lest any hurt it, I will keep it night and day."

God is present in the camp of his people with a special presence of observation. He sees all things; but his eyes are, in the first place, fixed on his Church. With burning glance he searches the very heart of professors. There is a discipline in the house of God which is carried on, not by Church officers, nor by the Church itself, but by the providence of God. Men die before their time, and others are sick who might be well; sick, I mean, through of God. Thus saith the apostle: "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep." If you are not my child I have nothing to say about your behavior: I leave you to your own father. But if you are my boy, my child at home, I must speak to you, I must correct you, for I bear a responsibility towards you. So it is with God. He will bear much from the ungodly which he will not endure from his own people. The Lord cries, "Be ye holy for I am holy."

Ill Behavior in the Church

Again, dear friends, the peculiar privilege of Israel is to have a special presence of salvation. "The Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp to deliver thee." God is with his people, to help them in their times of trouble, to rescue them out of danger, to answer their cries in their necessity, to save them in the hour of temptation. He is with us to deliver us in all things in which we require deliverance. Have we not found him so? Have you any troubles and difficulties, dear friend, and are you a child of God? Do you belong to Christ? Well, the Lord is with his people to deliver them. Should not this be a grand argument why the camp should be holy, for if he hears our prayers, we are bound to obey his precepts?

III. I have only to dwell for a minute or two upon the last point a little more distinctly—

A Corresponding Conduct.

Observe, then, that this rule, that the camp be holy, applies to the commonest places where-in we are found. "Therefore shall thy camp be holy." As I have already said, men generally think that they may take great license in a camp; but the Lord says, "Therefore shall thy camp be holy." Holiness is the ordained livery of a servant of God, and he that does not wear this garment has disgraced himself and his master. He is wearing, in fact, the livery of the King's enemies. Let him mind what he is at. If my memory does not deceive me, when Oliver Cromwell was first contending with the king, the soldiers who joined him were mostly gentlemen-farmers, and they wore their own buff jerkins; and as many on the other side were dressed much the same, mistakes were made; and, in a rough-and-tumble fight, they did not know cavalier from roundhead. So Cromwell said, upon a certain occasion, that all his soldiers must be dressed in a certain color, and not a man should be in his troop who did not come by such a day with such a coat on. Well, you say, why should they wear uniform? Some of them did not like it; but his orders were peremptory, that no man should be with him if he did not wear

The Regulation Dress,

since by their common array they knew each other, and could not be mistaken in a scuffle. Holiness is the white raiment of the believer; be sure that you put it on, because, otherwise, we shall not know you, and you will be mistaken for an enemy.

But now, notice this, too. While this holiness pertained to their commonest things, it was also ordered that every unclean thing was to be put from them. "That he may see no unclean thing in thee." This is an awful text. I will not preach about it, but I will just repeat it to you again: "That he may see no unclean thing in thee." Ah, me! We often see unclean things in ourselves, do we not? Yes; but we often overlook much uncleanness, and do not notice it because our eyes are dim. We have lost, perhaps the spiritual nostril that would smell the unclean thing. Our senses have become perverted by the foul world in which we live. But then, think of this—the pure and holy God—the thrice holy God—he speaks of himself in this sort, "That he see no unclean thing in thee." Brothers, sisters, what a house-cleaning this calls for! What hard sweeping this requires—that "he see no unclean thing in thee!"

A Terrible Warning.

Note well the fearful warning which is added. If there be in the camp an unclean thing tolerated and delighted in, and he see it—if it becomes conspicuous and grievous to him, then the worst consequences will follow—"Lest he turn away from thee." Oh! what would happen to us if the Lord were to turn away from us as a Church? Horror takes hold on me at the thought. The pastor will die in due time: that is a small matter, for the Lord can send another. But if the Lord were to pass away from us, what an overwhelming desolation! Ichabod would be written in large capitals across this house if the Lord were gone. And yet my wonder often is that he has not gone, when I remember the unclean things that I have to see and mourn over. I see very little compared with what the Lord sees, but I see enough to make me tremble. The Lord sees much about us that grieves him, even when we think there is nothing amiss. Let us pray that the Lord must not go from us.

I have done; but there is a little fragment that follows my text which I want some of you to get before I go. Read this. This follows the text. It is a curious thing that it should follow the text. "Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee: he shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him." I wonder whether any runaway has come into our place of worship to-night. Certainly there are some of Satan's slaves here. I would recommend you to run away from the devil, and not give him a moment's notice. Run away in a twinkling. If you do run away and get among the Lord's people we will never give you up to your old master. He may come here after you; but we know him, and are not to be deceived by him in this matter. He has come here after many; but we have not given up any of his runaways, and by God's grace we will never part with you, but to take you away. Jesus says, "Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out;" and so you see he will harbor you, and not return you to your master. Come, then, be free from Satan's power. Strike for liberty! Your tyrant lord has no right to you. I know you sold yourself, but you were not your own to sell; you were stolen goods. The devil can have no more property in you than you had in yourself, and that was nothing, for you are not your own. Though I have dealt faithfully with the uncleanness of professing believers, I now invite the vilest and foulest to come to Jesus for safety and liberty. Ransomed sinners may dwell among us, in whatsoever place they shall choose. Neither will we oppress them with hard questions or irksome duties, but we will bind them to be free, as we are ourselves bound to liberty, in the name of the Lord our God. May the blessing of the Lord rest upon you! If we do not meet again in this wilderness below, may we meet, when camp life is over, in the city above, to go no more out forever! The blessing of the Lord rest on you evermore!

Defy the Man-catcher

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Mr. Dodge's Conversion.*

THE Rev. Dr. Nettleton was in the midst of his evangelical labors. The young man heard him repeatedly. He was greatly impressed. Before turning to his home, he called upon the Rev. Dr. Hawes, pastor of the Centre Church, whom he knew, and who said as they parted:

"What, William! Going home, and taking that hard heart with you?"

That arrow hit the mark.

"I will exchange it for a heart of flesh," said he to himself. The opportunity soon came. In a night or two, a prayer-meeting was held over which his father's assistant, Mr. Erastus Hyde, an excellent man, presided. Presently a call was made upon those who would do so to rise for prayers. Instantly William was on his feet. His next younger sister Mary at once joined him. A dozen others did the same. It was the beginning of an interest which soon kindled the country. This was on Sunday evening, June 8th, 1821—a memorable date. On the first Sunday in May, 1822, William, with Mary at his side, made a public confession of faith; and the vow thus taken was kept to the end. Thus the cross marked on him by his mother's finger, was remarked by the Holy Ghost. He threw himself immediately and with characteristic ardor into Christian work and this, too, he never afterwards intermitted, not for one day.

A Scene at "Dodge Hall."

"Dodge Hall" was as full of good things during the Conference as a turkey on Thanksgiving Day. The house was largely given up to guests, and became (what it was quite in the habit of being) a free hotel. European celebrities abounded, gentlemen whom the Dodges had met abroad, like Sir Charles Reed, M. P., and the Rev. Dr. Stoughton, honored alike as a writer and a preacher. Mr. and Mrs. Dodge opened their doors on one memorable evening to the "Alliance," and received their guests to the number of eight hundred. The scene recalled the day of Pentecost. Here were Parthians, and Medes, and Elamites, and the dwellers in Mesopotamia, and in Judea, and Cappadocia, and Pontus, and Asia, Phrygia, and Pamphylia, in Egypt, and the parts of Libya about Cyrene, and strangers of Rome, Jews and proselytes, Cretes and Arabians—all speaking of the wonderful works of God.

In the midst of this orderly confusion, with the harmonious jangle of these cosmopolitan voices ringing through the rooms, some one remarked to Mr. Dodge that he had stayed his roof up with all the pillars of the church. "Yes," was the quick retort; "but I agree with my friend Mr. Moody, that the Church has too many pillars—we want more lights."

Sundays in London.

The Sundays in London were days of special delight. Mr. and Mrs. Dodge heard the pulpit celebrities, conformist and non-conformist, high church, low church, broad church and hazy. They admired the English style of preaching; and found it as a rule, more biblical and practical than the American. Pulpit and pew seemed wide awake.

"What hymn would you suggest to go with my sermon, Professor Park?" asked a young Yankee preacher.

"Well," was the reply of the Andover Jupiter, "I would suggest, 'Now I lay me down to sleep:'"

"What do you think of my train of thought?" queried another.

"Your train only needs a sleeping car," was the cruelly candid answer.

Morality in Business.

"If one would be a good salesman," wrote Mr. Dodge, "he must be all things to all men; and here permit me to say to you, my young friends, that open, frank, upright dealing with customers is the way to secure their confidence and trade. I sometimes almost desire those days back again, for then young men had opportunities that cannot be enjoyed by those of this day. Then business of all kinds was conducted on moderate capital, and the number of merchants doing business on their own account in proportion to the amount of business done, was far greater than now, and particularly in the dry-goods and hard-ware trades. Then, young men, if of undoubted character, starting with a very moderate capital, could command a fair credit, and, with very light rents and general expenses, could grow year by year into a large and better business. If economical, they could afford to begin house-keeping with fair prospect of success. Now, business is in comparatively few hands, with large capital and many clerks, with sales every month, yes, every week, amounting to what very few then reached in a year."

A Slave's Benediction.

There was a wayside inn just large enough for their accommodation. On Sunday morning, the New Yorkers held a service in the dining-room. Many negroes crowded to the door and windows, attracted by the singing. Some of these, when the meeting closed, asked Mr. Dodge to open the dining-hall to them for evening worship. He gladly consented and led the meeting. After a few remarks and prayer, he threw it open, and the blacks carried it forward in hallelujah measure. Their weird melodies, their forms swaying to the cadence of the music, their fervent prayers, broken in upon and emphasized by the "amens" and "bless de Lord's" of the sympathetic congregation, all made a picture which the memory framed and treasured. The emotional nature of the negro race leads them into affiliation with the more emotional churches. They love to be where they can explode their feelings in ejaculations. One old man, a Presbyterian elder, and the only one in the whole region, thus expressed it: "We's Methodists and Baptists by natur' and only Presbyterians by grace." Mr. Dodge quite won the hearts of these poor slaves by his unaffected kindness; and on Monday, when he and his party were about to take the train, an old colored aunty voiced the feelings of her people in a benediction:

* From William E. Dodge, The Christian Merchant, by Carlos Martyn; a volume of the Series of American Reformers issued by Funk & Wagnalls, New York. A biography of universal interest to Christians.

The Great Meeting in London in Aid of the Persecuted Russian Jews.

"De Lord bless yer, Mas'r Dodge, all de way from dis airth to heaven."

That blessing, trembling from those black lips, meant more and would go further than any mere pretentiousness.

How a Noble Heart Failed.

One day, while making a benevolent call with Mrs. Dodge, he was seized with violent pains, and returned to his home. The paroxysms yielded to treatment, but returned during the night and at intervals for several days. It was difficult to keep him housed, his habits were so active. The 7th of Feb., 1883, he passed into his library, attending to certain complicated work relating to his wife's estate, of which he kept a separate account. That night through overwork, his pains returned, but relief came, and he fell asleep. Upon arising the next morning, he looked reassuringly into the anxious face of Mrs. Dodge, told her that he felt much better, nearly completed dressing and asked her to fetch his wrapper. She started to get it, but was arrested by a startled call, and turning found him sinking to the floor. With his head upon her lap, he breathed feebly once or twice, opened his eyes, looked about in a dazed way, and closed them forever.

THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.

A Great Meeting in England to Express Sympathy with the Persecuted Race.

(See Illustration.)

WITH the beginning of 1891, the new Anti-Jewish law goes into effect in the Czar's dominions. It is a brutal and barbarous law, and adds heavily to the load of indignity and injustice that is already heaped upon the Hebrew by the Muscovite. Expressions of sympathy have already been publicly made in many large cities throughout the civilized world, New York included. A great meeting was held at the Guildhall, London, lately, under the auspices of the Lord Mayor, to represent "public opinion on the renewed persecutions to which millions of the Jewish race are subjected in Russia, under the yoke of severe and exceptional edicts and disabilities." Among the distinguished persons on the platform on that occasion were the Lady Mayoress, the Duke and Duchess of Westminster, the Earl of Meath, Lord Denman, the Marquis of Ripon, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Sir N. Fowler, M. P., and a host of others prominent in social, financial and ministerial circles. Speeches were made strongly urging that the government should take steps to remonstrate with the Russian government on the severity of the laws directed against the Hebrews and resolutions expressing the warmest sympathy for the oppressed people were adopted and directed to be forwarded to the Czar. The resolutions will be incorporated in a memorial and delivered by a special deputation to the Emperor Alexander in person.

In all the European capitals, outside of the Czar's own territory, a similar feeling of cordial sympathy exists. The present law reduces the Jews in Russia to the level of slavery in many respects, refusing them the humblest rights of citizenship, discriminating against them in privileges granted to other races in Russia, and forbidding them to hold or own real estate, besides depriving them of such property of that character as they now possess. These blows at their liberties added to the existing laws aimed at their religion, will go far toward driving them en masse from a land which has never afforded them shelter except grudgingly. An exodus of Hebrews from Russia may be looked for at no distant date, according to the expectations of influential compatriots in England and this country.

SHAVING WIDOWS IN INDIA.

ONE of the most cheering bits of evidence, says a writer in Our Day, of the growth of humanitarian ideas is contained in the action of the barbers of Bombay. They are 400 strong, and at a formal caste meeting, resolved that to shave the heads of Hindoo widows, as an outward sign of their degradation, was an act of sheer oppression, and that henceforth any member of the craft doing so should be expelled from the caste. The penalty insures the observance of the pledge and hereafter, in Bombay at least, widows will no longer be subjected to this cruelty, and a custom sanctioned by long usage, religious feeling, and social arrangements will be openly set at naught by one of the lowest trades in the country. It is true that similar improvements have been made by the English in India, such as abolition of the practice of suttee, the slaughter of female infants, and suicides at the festival of Juggernaut, but they have been accomplished under the pressure of law, and apparently without lessening the sanction of the people for such cruelties. In the present instance, however, one of the lowest castes has formally renounced a lucrative practice because they believe it to be cruelly oppressive.

DEATH OF A MOTHER IN ISRAEL.

(See Portrait on page 13.)

IN scarcely any town in this wide land could the sad news, which came from Florida on Christmas Day last, be told, without awakening a sorrowful response from some heart. Here and in all English-speaking lands there are thousands of Christian people to whom the name of Martha J. Inskip is peculiarly dear. For about forty years, her voice was heard helping, fostering, encouraging the work in which her husband was engaged, assisting him, and by her strong personal magnetism deepening the impressions his words had made. Since his death, nearly seven years ago, she has labored on alone, or with the band of friends whom he gathered around him, proclaiming the doctrines he taught, and testifying to the certitude of the experience which he declared to be attainable. Her living voice has fallen into silence now—the silence of the grave, but her words will never die, for they are living in the lives of multitudes who through God's blessing on her labors are walking on the heights to which she pointed them.

In the year 1836 there was what Mr. Inskip significantly describes as "a breeze" in the Conference to which he belonged. He, then a young man of twenty, had taken to himself a wife who was only seventeen years of age. That so very junior a preacher should have married, occasioned much comment among the older members and there was some shaking of heads and talk of juvenile imprudence. "Did you confer with the brethren?" asked one reverend member. Mr. Inskip replied in the affirmative. "Yes, I suppose you did, with George Hagany, a boy, like yourself," was the disgruntled comment. But the deed was done and the Conference, if it thought Mr. Inskip imprudent, did not visit upon him any penalty for the imprudence. Near the close of his long life of usefulness, Mr. Inskip said, "Matches are made in heaven, was a motto in use formerly, and perhaps was then more true than it is now. I fully believed it at the time, and as it appertained to myself I have never since doubted it for one moment. Forty years' experience has confirmed the conviction." The lady in question, who must have been gratified with this testimony from him after forty years association, was Martha J. Foster, of Cecil County, Maryland. She was one of a family of twelve children, only one of whom now survives her. She had been converted at a camp-meeting in her childhood, and had already given evidence of a very high degree of spiritual attainment. She at once entered heartily into her husband's life of usefulness and, as he joyfully acknowledged in after years, he owed to her, under God, more than any one else, his ministerial success. The life of the one was the life of the other, and in their labors and successes they were inseparable.

Mrs. Inskip's profession of the blessing of perfect sanctification preceded that of her husband. It was made at Sing Sing Camp-meeting, August 19, 1864. Nine days later, in his own church in Brooklyn, Mr. Inskip declared himself a seeker for the blessing. Then throwing off the backwardness he was feeling, he cried with eyes raised to heaven, "I am, O Lord, wholly and forever thine." That was the commencement of the special work to which both Mr. and Mrs. Inskip devoted all their future lives, and the revival that began that day, in that church, was only the beginning of a series that in this and other lands sprang up under their labors.

Since Mr. Inskip's death, in 1884, his widow continued the children's work in which she had been so wonderfully successful and was active in all the work of the National Holiness Association. A few months ago she went to Florida, and secured ten acres of land which she intended to devote to the use of a camp-meeting association. During her visit there she enjoyed the friendship and help of Dr. Bateman, to whom, in September last, she was married. The happiness which she naturally anticipated has been but short. A little before Christmas she was seized with peritonitis and on December 25, she entered into her reward.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

III. REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Continued from page 846.)

WHILE Nora's friends, the Appletons were concerned about her moral and spiritual state, her uncle had not been idle in the matter that concerned her temporal well-being. He was eager to see her mistress of the Hazelcroft estate, and was often in conference with Gabriel Grubb on the subject. He had not yet learned why that worthy was concerned in the matter, nor what was the exact nature of the "key" of the possession of which Gabriel had spoken. It may, however, help my readers to a better understanding of the situation, if they are informed of the facts that were so carefully concealed from Abram Hardale.

In the dark and gloomy office behind the Abbey Church at Settleworth, a little while before the rumors began to be rife concerning Nora Mansford and Gerald Towneley, and before the roses began to pale upon Nora's tearful cheeks, Gabriel sat rather closely closeted with a stranger, whose general appearance it becomes necessary to describe. He was a tall, well-formed man of middle age, and was apparently endowed with a good deal of strength and vigor. His hair was fast losing its original color of dark brown, and had assumed that indefinite hue which betokens the not distant approach of age, and which is conveniently described as iron grey. His well-trimmed whiskers and moustache were as yet comparatively untouched by the hand of time, and a close observer might have noticed that they were not exactly of the same color as the locks that grew upon his temples. The man had a furtive look in his brown eyes, a mixture of cunning audacity and fear.

The Late Mrs. Bateman (formerly Mrs. John S. Inskip).

(From a photograph by Stauffer.)

Long years ago this individual had been a close companion of Gabriel Grubb. Their childhood and youth had been spent in company, and with them in those bygone days consorted a third, like-minded with themselves. Their tastes were low, their conduct discreditable, and as they grew out of the school-boy life into manhood, they came to be known as the "three dis-graces of Settleworth."

Gabriel Grubb; sly, mean, and shift, became, as we have seen, a solicitor, and slid into a sort of conventional respectability, favorable to the pursuance of a life of chicanery and mal-practice just within cover of the law. Rupert Mansford, the least disreputable of the three, not innately either vile or low, but weak of will and basely moulded by his stronger chums, after a reckless sowing of wild oats, became, as we have also seen, a breaker of the law, a convict, who died in his brother's home at Ooramarr Farm, though he was supposed to be drowned at sea in the transport ship that took him out some years before. The third was Jasper Rawdon, who became an actor, and having remarkable histrionic abilities, might have climbed to the top of his profession. He was, however, a rogue ingrained, and following the bent of his own evil disposition, he soon slid down into criminal ways and among criminal classes—found Rupert Mansford in the big city, and dragged him down too. So they became partners in crime, partners in punishment, and after herding together in the Ooramarr convict settlement, escaped—the one to lose his life at the hands of a baser comrade, and that comrade, after a desperate course as a bush-ranger, to return to England, and resume his "friendship" with Gabriel Grubb. So it came to pass that Jasper Rawdon and Gabriel Grubb, sat and plotted amongst the cobwebs of the latter's "Grab'em shop," to use the suggestive name that Abram Hardale had bestowed on it.

"Now, then," said Rawdon; "I think you and I thoroughly understand each other, friend Grubb. One word from you could make things hot for me. But on the other hand, it would spoil your own little game to say it; and I've the power to say another word about you that would certainly send you across the herding-pond at Government charges, to bear me company."

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed Gabriel Grubb. "Just so, Jasper, just so. That's the straightest way of putting it. We might grow sentimental and talk about old acquaintance; and I won't deny, I am glad to have you back again. But that's neither here nor there when it comes to business like this. We've everything to gain by sticking to each other—"

"And everything to lose if we don't," said Jasper Rawdon; and Gabriel Grubb put on his crystal discs; looked hard at Jasper Rawdon, and said, "Just so!"

"Now to business. How do matters stand? Some of it, you've picked up. Some of it, I've picked up. Piece the two and there you are, you know."

Gabriel Grubb arose from his desk, opened a large iron safe, which stood at his elbow, and produced from a big bundle of old and dusty documents a parcel of deeds, on the back of which was written in large characters, "The Deeds of the Hazelcroft Estate."

"When Rupert Mansford gambled away this estate," said the solicitor, "it was not his own, but his elder brother Richard's, who sailed away from England in 18—and has never since been heard of on this side the water. Rupert Mansford could not produce a selling title, and being driven to his wits' end, he came to me, and asked my advice. He offered me a share of the purchase-money—"

"Cut it short, Grubb, cut it short," said Rawdon, impatiently. "You took me into your confidence, I was then an articled clerk in the office you had left. We forged the necessary papers which did the business for him, and Hazelcroft was sold into the Towneley family on the strength of it. That's how the matters stood until—"

"Until I found these papers in an old escritoire at Hazelcroft Hall," pursued Gabriel Grubb, taking up the thread of the story, "when we were searching for some papers belonging to the family. Now, how best to turn them into gold; that is the question."

"It can be proved," continued Jasper Rawdon, "that when Rupert Mansford sold the estate, the real owner Richard Mansford was living in Australia, so that the sale under any circumstances was null and void. It can be proved also that Rupert Mansford is dead, and that he died before his brother Richard, the true owner of the estate. It can be proved that Richard Mansford is now dead"—the wretch did not say who it was who shot him and did not know that he had recovered—"and therefore the true heiress and owner of Hazelcroft Estate is Nora Mansford his niece, the niece also of old Abram Hardale, an old villain, whom may the dogs—"

"Stop, my friend, stop! Don't get excited. We'll set Abram Hardale to rights, only wait a bit. He hasn't come into my 'Grab'em shop' for nothing. All in good time, my boy;" and as he spoke Gabriel Grubb rubbed his hands and chuckled with delight.

It was arranged that Rawdon should enter Grubb's employ under the name of Edwin Wilson as a sort of clerk, bailiff, and general help, so as to give a reason for his stay at Settleworth, though it was a part of the scheme that he should put himself in evidence as little as possible. Rawdon was not long in seeing "how the land lay," and in taking stock of his surroundings. His old theatrical experience helped him in the matter of disguise. He got himself up in the flashy style he admired, and took for his model in dress no less a person than Gerald Towneley.

The plotters soon found that they could not get the estate out of Squire Towneley's hands without a fight. The old squire had been greatly pleased with the possession of Hazelcroft estate. The hall itself was not large, but it was beautifully situated, and most attractive and inviting in its general appearance, and the few hundred acres that attached to it were well wooded, well watered, and were said to be unsurpassed in fertility in all the region round about. His eldest son would, of course, inherit Towneley Chase; his second son was provided for by lands which had come to him from his mother's family. If only his third son, Gerald could bring to a close that series of ruinous operations generally known as the "sowing of wild oats," Hazelcroft was just the place for him to settle down at, and take his proper place in "society." So, at any rate, his father thought, and even held out the pleasant bait to the young man, in the hope that it would tend to estrange him from his questionable comrades, and still more questionable habits.

It was therefore a disarrangement of this scheme, when, on behalf of the grim old carpenter, Gabriel Grubb officially challenged the Squire's title to the property, and claimed it on behalf of Nora Mansford, only child of Rupert Mansford, and sole heiress of Richard Mansford, the rightful owner of Hazelcroft, who survived his brother Rupert, and had never made any legal transfer of the property. It was clear therefore, Gabriel Grubb took pains to show, that Rupert Mansford had never any right to sell it, and that Squire Towneley's kinsman had no right to will it, the purchase being utterly invalid. Furthermore, it was affirmed that Richard Mansford had subsequently died in Australia; and having made no testamentary disposition of his property, Nora Mansford, the sole surviving relative, was the indisputable heiress of the family estate.

Of course Squire Towneley was not going to submit tamely to such a demand as this. He at once prepared himself by the aid of a lawyer, and being in possession of the property, had the proverbial nine points of the law on his side. So it was that with some reason for confidence, he ventured to engage in a law-suit.

Old Crusty had shrunk a little at first from attacking an opponent who wielded so long a purse. But then, Gabriel Grubb had made matters so clear, and was so sure and certain of success that he felt impelled to "burn his boats," that is to say, to let the lawyers burn them for him. Besides, the grim old cynic, displaying a weakness that cynics as a rule, one thinks, should be free from, was so thoroughly bent on making his niece "a lady" that he declared at last he would spend all he possessed to "gain the girl her rights."

It is easy enough to prophesy how this sort of thing would end. We know what is likely to befall the earthen pan when sailing down stream in company with the iron pot; but like hood becomes certainly when pan and pot clash against each other in contending currents; and no surer, speedier road to bankruptcy was possible to the carpenter than that on which he had now resolved to travel.

"Mr. Magrath," the tenant of the Hermitage seemed to be greatly interested in the important quarrel which was now assuming a very serious aspect. He was even known to have paid at least one visit to York, during the earlier proceedings in court. Law proceedings, however, especially where land is concerned, are slow proceedings, and our friend at the "Hermitage" ceased to take any interest in the gabble of the lawyers or the interpositions of the judge.

Mr. Magrath took to going to Towneley Chase instead. He and the squire seemed to "take" to each other as we say, and their speech with each other was of an interesting quality. What passed between them I will not now stay to tell; but after the first visit was ended, the Squire himself conducted his visitor to the door, shook hands with him with much warmth, and claimed a speedy renewal of his visit. Then following the bearded stranger with his eyes along the gravel drive until he was lost to view in the turning of the road, he retired to the library, saying aloud.

"Well, well, well! who would have thought it; can it be possible. The whole thing is as good as a novel."

Not long afterwards, a proposal was made to Abram Hardale to this effect; Squire Towneley would withdraw from any further litigation, with a view to save costs and trouble on condition that the claimants of the Hazelcroft estate should submit their proofs to a private and friendly examination by himself, his solicitor and a confidential friend.

This intimation was dispatched direct to Abram Hardale who received it with mingled feelings of surprise and triumph, not unmixed with curiosity as to how the change was brought about. He lost no time in taking the letter to the Grab'em shop.

"Grubb!" said he, "the enemy is about to capitulate. Here's the flag of truce!" and so saying he flung the letter on the desk, and relieved his mind by uttering his little, cackling laugh, dry, snappish, low, like the crumpling of parchment in a nervous hand.

Gabriel Grubb took off his crystal discs to read it. He read it again and again, and then said, "Just so. You'd better leave this letter with me. I must take time to think. Come over again to-morrow."

Abram Hardale rose, but before he could depart the lawyer interposed.

"I shall have to ask you to bring another payment on account; the costs are mounting up."

"Another?" groaned Abram, "why that will be the third this month."

After his client had gone, the "clerk" came out, and Jasper Rawdon, for it was he, and Gabriel Grubb set to work to take stock of the situation.

"What's this mean?" said Grubb, showing his confederate the letter Abram had brought. "Can they have got any inkling as to the forged title-deeds?"

"Who is this 'confidential friend?'" said Jasper Rawdon, looking glum and uneasy.

Neither of them had any answer for the other's question. For a few moments they sat in silence, looking at each other. Why should they be so thoroughly discomposed over a document that looked for all the world like full submission? They that live by fraud and falsehood must know that they have a volcano underneath them, and that the crust is thin. Eventually, however, they came to the conclusion that discovery of the forgery was simply impossible, and that the communication which had aroused their suspicion was in fact a confession that Nora Mansford's rights were unassailable, and that they were masters of the situation. Gabriel Grubb suggested that they should take a high stand, and not readily commit themselves to any change of policy until they could see a little more clearly how things were likely to turn.

"Meanwhile," said Rawdon, "it becomes necessary that we should care for our own finances, and old Hardale must hand over a few hundreds to keep the law in motion. We cannot afford to let it rest."

To this suggestion Gabriel Grubb had a ready answer. He nodded emphatically, and said, "Just so."

(To be Continued.)

IF you were to take a box-car nine feet wide and twenty feet long and fill it with 16 ESTEY ORGANS, it would take 12,500 box-cars to hold 200,000. Allow 20 cars to every engine and it would take 625 engines to pull the 200,000 ESTEY ORGANS. Allowing two feet of space between the cars for coupling, there would be a train of cars alone, not counting the engines, which would reach over 52 miles.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" sent free by E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass.

AGENTS WANTED
LADIES and GENTLEMEN
Send for Illustrated Circulars and Terms

Dyspepsia

Makes many lives miserable, and often leads to self destruction. Distress after eating, sick headache, heartburn, sour stomach, mental depression, etc., are caused by this very common and increasing disease. Hood's Sarsaparilla tones the stomach, creates an appetite, promotes healthy digestion, relieves sick headache, clears the mind, and cures the most obstinate cases of dyspepsia. Read the following:

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. In an hour after eating I would experience a faintness or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. Hood's Sarsaparilla did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced. It relieved me of that faint, tired, all-gone feeling. I have felt so much better since I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, that I am happy to recommend it." G. A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass. N. B. Be sure to get only

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass. 100 Doses One Dollar

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.

Dropped on Sugar, Children Love to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypophosphites Of Lime and Soda.

There are emulsions and emulsions, and there is still much skimmed milk which masquerades as cream. Try as they will many manufacturers cannot so disguise their cod liver oil as to make it palatable to sensitive stomachs. Scott's Emulsion of PURE NORWEGIAN COD LIVER OIL, combined with Hypophosphites is almost as palatable as milk. For this reason as well as for the fact of the stimulating qualities of the Hypophosphites, Physicians frequently prescribe it in cases of

CONSUMPTION,
SCROFULA, BRONCHITIS and CHRONIC COUGH or SEVERE COLD. All Druggists sell it, but be sure you get the genuine, as there are poor imitations.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Best & Goes Farthest."

Ask your Grocer for it, take no other. [63]

A Pointer for Teachers

Send your address and number of Scholars in your class, and a copy for each scholar will be sent you FREE of charge only Sunday School Paper printed ENTIRELY IN COLORS. Lessons illustrated in COLORS by Special Artists. Address Little Folks Paper, Albany, N. Y.

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school, science lessons, stories, game occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers and mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 161 LaSalle St., Chicago

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT PROF. RICE'S SELF-TEACHING SYSTEM. All can learn music without the aid of a teacher. Rapid, correct. Established 12 Years. Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, Harmony. Send stamp & Music Journal. Circulars free. Address G. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 243 State St., Chicago

A remarkable book on BIBLE PROPHECY THE ADVANCING KINGDOM: the Wonders of Foretold History. SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. Sells to EVERYBODY. American Publ'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston or St. Louis. MENTION PAPER

HOW BALZAC LOST 25,000 FRANCS.

BARON James Rothschild was always on excellent terms with Balzac, who dedicated more than one novel to him. Once, when Balzac was obliged to make a trip to Germany, and when, as often happened with him, he was in money difficulties, he went to the Baron, who, with his usual benevolence, advanced him £140, giving him also a letter of recommendation to his nephew in Vienna. The letter was unsold, according to custom. Balzac read it, found it cold, poor, and unworthy of him, and never took it to the nephew. Returning to Paris, he went to see Baron Rothschild. "Well," said the latter, "have you seen my nephew?" Balzac proudly answered that he had kept the letter. "I'm sorry for you," said the Baron; "have you got it with you?" "Yes, parbleu—here it is," "Observe this little hieroglyphic below the signature; it would have earned a credit of 25,000 francs (£1,000) if you at the Vienna firm." Balzac bit his nails and said nothing more. This somewhat resembles the action of many who, whilst professing attachment to the Lord Jesus, refuse compliance with his instructions, because they do not accord with their notions, and thus they lose the rich benefits Christ offers to them.

ESCAPE FROM A SERPENT.

A MISSIONARY named Dahne, who took his abode in the extreme west of Dutch Guiana in 1757, had his life threatened over and over again by roving Indians; he was instantly ill, yet he persevered in his noble labor for Christ. The account of the great danger in which his faith saved him from a terrible death, is best given in his own words: "One evening, being unwell, and going to lie down in my hammock, upon entering the door of my hut, I received a large serpent descending upon me from a shelf near the roof. In the struggle the creature stung or bit me two or three times in the head, and, pursuing me very closely, twined itself several times round my head and neck. Supposing that this would be the occasion of my departing this life, I, for the satisfaction of my brethren, wrote the cause of my death in a few words with chalk upon the table, 'A serpent has killed me,' lest they should charge the Indians with the deed. But on the sudden that promise of our Saviour to his disciples was impressed upon my mind, 'they shall take up serpents, and they shall not harm them,' and seizing the reptile with great force, I tore it loose, and flung it out of the hut. I then laid down to rest the peace of God."

FAITHFULNESS OF A KAREN SERVANT.

THE Rev. J. Hackney, missionary at Ungoo, when at a village called Toloh, was joined by a young Karen named Morsee, who wished to follow him from place to place, and help him in his work. For a few days he was taken ill, and had to be left behind in the care of a friend. Mr. Hackney went on to the next village, a place called Zaminee. While he was there, he was astonished to see Morsee staggering on Sunday morning. He was ill with fever; weak and weary he fell fainting at Mr. Hackney's feet. He had crawled after them the way, and at night he slept under a tree in the jungle. For the next twelve days he was quite delirious, and had to be watched night and day. Mr. Hackney doctored him regularly, and hired four men to carry him from village to village. He became so emaciated that he could not even stand up, and was quite delirious for days, during the utmost nonsense. Mr. Hackney's one desire was to get Morsee from the mine to the railway station as soon as possible, but could not do so. "At Ko en Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

en she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
en she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
en she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

Nya bor," writes Mr. Hackney, "I thought he would die, and that I should have to bury him on the road. He is now much better, and rapidly gaining flesh, and I intend preparing him for Catechist work."

AN AVARICIOUS MAN'S DEATHBED.

"GIPSY SMITH," a noted British revivalist, tells the following incident: "I can look back and see plainly the figure of a man with whom I was brought up. His whole ambition was to make money. Into the pursuit of wealth he entered with his whole heart and he was successful, but he was never satisfied. As he heaped riches upon riches he became more and more discontented, finding fault with, and grumbling at his wife and family and all around him. When I would have spoken to him about Christ and his soul, he only laughed at me and told me I was mad. But God put his finger upon that man; in the night-time he was taken seriously ill. The first word he said, as his friends crowded around him, were, 'Send for Smith!' What?' they said 'Send for a man you consider mad?' 'Yes,' He knew in his heart that it was he who had been mad to trifle with the things of eternity. I was sent for, and obeying the summons with all haste, was soon by his side; but when I again told him about Christ the only way of salvation, he did not seem to understand what I was saying. He had neglected God in the day of his strength, and now when about to enter into eternity, he had nothing upon which to lean, and without the guiding hand of the Spirit, he groped about in the dark and was unable to find Christ, the door of salvation. He died and his soul passed out into the night. He might have been saved, for he had at one time attended open-air meetings, and seemed to feel his need of pardon, but he had turned from Christ to the world and sinned away his day of grace."

RELEASED

FROM THE BONDAGE OF DISEASE, THE EXHILARATION AND GLADNESS ARE INDESCRIBABLE. YOU BEGIN TO DO WITH EASE WHAT HAS, FOR A DREARY LONG TIME, BEEN IMPOSSIBLE. BUT FIRST A STRONG HAND TO SET YOU FREE. HERE IT IS: THE

COMPOUND OXYGEN TREATMENT.

THIS POWERFUL REMEDIAL AGENT IS AN EXCESS OF OXYGEN CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY. IT SENDS A REVITALIZING GLOW OVER THE ENTIRE SYSTEM.

MAKES YOU STRONG. KEEPS YOU STRONG.

A BOOK OF 200 PAGES WILL TELL YOU WHO HAVE BEEN RESTORED TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY THE USE OF COMPOUND OXYGEN.

THE BOOK WILL BE SENT ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE TO ANY ONE WHO WILL ADDRESS

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.
120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. 58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.

NOTICE: ON LABEL OF Stewart Hartshorn AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN.

FIND OUT What it is like now, send address on a postal for free sample copy of PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL $1.50 a year, and list of books on Phrenology, Physiognomy, Health, Heredity, etc.

Address FOWLER & WELLS, 777 B'way, New York.

PHOTOGRAPHIC AGENTS WANTED.—$5 to $10 per day collecting small pictures for us to copy and enlarge. Satisfaction guaranteed and a $4 outfit free. Address A. DUNNE & CO., 58 Reade St., N.Y. Name Chas. H. Read

Pearline

At Home

January 1st to December 31st

Makes home cleaner, brighter and better. Cleaner—because it takes away what soap and other things leave. Brighter—because it does away with labor and hard work. Better—because it saves wear and tear on everything it touches, and nothing can be hurt by it.

Pearline "receives" every day. It gets blessing from millions of old friends—pleasant calls from a host of new ones. The best families welcome it. It goes everywhere. But it's "a stayer." When it once makes a call upon you, it stays forever—and you're glad to have it.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers will tell you "this is as good as" or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—Pearline is never peddled, and if your grocer sends you something in place of Pearline, do the honest thing—send it back. 245 JAMES PYLE, N.Y.

BAILEY'S

Compound light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS

A wonderful invention for lighting Halls, Churches, etc. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price list free.

BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.
708 Penn Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

METAL CEILINGS.

BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores and Residences.

H. S. NORTROP,
18 Rose Street, New York.

CHRISTMAS MUSICAL GIFTS.

Silent gifts please for a day.
Gifts of Music please always!

Suppose the gift should be a fine Mandoline, Guitar, Banjo, Violin or a Music Box! These, and all other Musical Instruments, may be obtained at the Ditson Company Stores in Boston, New York or Philadelphia, or of J. C. Haynes & Co., 33 Court Street, Boston.

| CHOICE SONG COLLECTIONS.         |           |
|----------------------------------|-----------|
| Song Classics. Vol. 1.           | 50 songs. |
| Song Classics. Vol. 2.           | 39 "      |
| Song Classics. Low Voices.       | 47 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos.             | 34 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos. Low Voices. | 40 "      |
| Classic Baritone and Bass.       | 33 "      |
| Classic Tenor Songs.             | 36 "      |
| Good Old Songs We Used to Sing.  | 115 "     |
| Rhymes and Tunes. Sweet Music.   | 115 "     |
| M. P. Osgood.                    | 108 "     |

| CHOICE PIANO COLLECTIONS.     |            |
|-------------------------------|------------|
| Piano Classics. Vol. 1.       | 44 pieces. |
| Piano Classics. Vol. 2.       | 31 "       |
| Classical Pianist.            | 42 "       |
| Sabbath Day Music.            | 38 "       |
| Popular Dance Collection.     | 66 "       |
| Popular Piano Collection.     | 66 "       |
| Classic Four-hand Collection. | 19 "       |
| Operatic Piano Collection.    | 19 operas. |

Churchill's BIRTHDAY BOOK of EMINENT COMPOSERS. A handsome and useful gift, $1.25.

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

Gospel Hymns No. 5.

By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN and STEBBINS, is conceded to be the best song book in existence for Religious Work and Prayer Meetings.

234 Songs with Music. $30 per 100. Words, $10.

Select Songs. By F. N. PELBOURN, D. D. 244 Hymns and Tunes chosen for use where only one book is desired for Prayer Meetings and the Sunday School.

Firmly bound in cloth. $40 per 100 copies.

Winnowed Songs. By IRA D. SANKEY, continuing to be the bairner Sunday School song book this season. 257 songs. $35 per 100. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Complete Catalogue & Specimen Pages sent on request.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
81 Randolph St., Chicago. 76 E. 9th St., New York.

WASTE Embroidery Silks.

Factory Ends at half price; one ounce in a box. All good silk and good colors. Sent by mail on receipt of 40 cts.; 100 crazy stitches in each package. Latest and best book on Art Needlework, only 10 cents. A beautiful assortment chenille and arrasene; 15 new shades in each for 50 cts. Send postal note or stamps to

THE BRINARD & ARMSTRONG SPOOL SILK CO., 625 Broadway, New York, or 621 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For the names and addresses of 10 ladies interested in Art Needlework we will send one book free.

Send for Rules for crocheting Gent's Four-in-Hand Neck Tie.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885, 1885-1886

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.

Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.

THE MCDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisement to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

THE HOUSEWIFE

4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address

CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

ASTHMA CURED

DR. TAFT'S ASTHMALENEB never fails, send to your address, we will mail trial bottle FREE

THE DR. TAFT BROS. M. CO., ROCHESTER, N.Y.

RETROSPECTION.

BY ANNA SHIPTON.

"Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee."—Deut. 8:2.
 "Cast not away, therefore, your confidence, which hath great recompense of reward."—Heb. 10:35.

He was better to me than all my hopes,
 He was better than all my fears;
 He made a bridge of my broken works,
 And a rainbow of my tears.
 The billows that guarded my sea-girt path,
 Carried my Lord on their crest;
 When I dwell on the days of my wilderness march
 I can lean on His love for the rest.

He emptied my hands of my treasured store,
 And His covenant love revealed,
 There was not a wound in my aching heart,
 But the balm of His breath hath healed.
 Oh, tender and true was the chastening sore,
 In wisdom that taught and tried,
 Till the soul that He sought was trusting in Him
 And nothing on earth beside.

He guided by paths that I could not see,
 By ways that I have not known,
 The crooked was straight and the rough made plain,
 As I followed the Lord alone.
 I praise Him still for the pleasant palms,
 And the water-springs by the way;
 For the glowing pillars of flame by night,
 And the sheltering cloud by day.

And if to warfare, He calls me forth,
 He buckles my armor on;
 He greets me with smiles, and a word of cheer,
 For battles His sword hath won;
 He wipes my brow as I droop and faint,
 He blesses my hand to toil;
 Faithful is He, as He washes my feet,
 From the trace of each earthly soil.

There is light for me on the trackless wild,
 As the wonders of old I trace;
 When the God of the whole earth went before
 To search me a resting place.
 Has He changed for me? Nay! He changes not,
 He will bring me by some new way,
 Through fire and flood, and each crafty foe,
 As safely as yesterday.

Never a watch on the dreariest halt,
 But some promise of love endears;
 I read from the past, that my future shall be Far better than all my fears.
 Like the golden pot, of the wilderness bread,
 Laid up with the blossoming rod,
 All safe in the ark, with the law of the Lord,
 Is the covenant care of my God.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla is due to the tremendous amount of brain work and constant care used in its preparation. Try one bottle and you will be convinced of its superiority.

For internal cramps and external chills, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment excels anything in use. No praise of ours can equal the sincere faith of those who know Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

Guaranteed and legal Investments a specialty. All marketable Bonds, Shares, Debentures, Mortgages, Certificates bought, sold, exchanged, Reports on Properties, Negotiations, Collections here and abroad. Best Current Rates Guaranteed. SAMUEL R. MACLEAN, 39 Broad St., N. Y., and London.

PREPARED BY
 F. W. H. & CO.
 LOWELL, MASS.
 MANUFACTURERS OF THE CELEBRATED HOYT'S
 GERMAN COLOGNE

ABSOLUTELY FREE FROM ALL INJURIOUS SUBSTANCES.
RUBIFOAM
 FOR THE TEETH.
 DELICIOUSLY FLAVORED.
 A PERFECT LIQUID DENTIFRICE.
 SAMPLE VIAL OF RUBIFOAM MAILED FREE TO ANY ADDRESS.

What is

CASTORIA

Castoria is Dr. Samuel Pitcher's prescription for Infants and Children. It contains neither Opium, Morphine nor other Narcotic substance. It is a harmless substitute for Paregoric, Drops, Soothing Syrups, and Castor Oil. It is Pleasant. Its guarantee is thirty years' use by Millions of Mothers. Castoria destroys Worms and allays feverishness. Castoria prevents vomiting Sour Curd, cures Diarrhoea and Wind Colic. Castoria relieves teething troubles, cures constipation and flatulency. Castoria assimilates the food, regulates the stomach and bowels, giving healthy and natural sleep. Castoria is the Children's Panacea—the Mother's Friend.

Castoria.

"Castoria is an excellent medicine for children. Mothers have repeatedly told me of its good effect upon their children."

DR. G. C. OSGOOD,
 Lowell, Mass.

"The use of 'Castoria' is so universal and its merits so well known, that it seems a work of supererogation to endorse it. Few are the intelligent families who do not keep Castoria within easy reach."

CARLOS MARTIN, D.D.,
 New York City.

Late Pastor Bloomingdale Reformed Church.

"Castoria is the best remedy for children of which I am acquainted. I hope the day is not far distant when mothers will consider the real interest of their children, and use Castoria instead of the various quack nostrums which are destroying their loved ones, by forcing opium, morphine, soothing syrup and other hurtful agents down their throats, thereby sending them to premature graves."

DR. J. T. KINCHELOE,
 CONWAY, Ark.

Castoria.

"Castoria is so well adapted to children that I recommend it as superior to any prescription known to me."

H. A. ARCHER, M. D.,
 111 So. Oxford St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

"For several years I have recommended your 'Castoria,' and shall always continue to do so, as it has invariably produced beneficial results."

EDWIN F. PARDEE, M. D.

"The Winthrop," 125th Street and 7th Avenue,
 New York City.

"Our physicians in the children's department have spoken highly of their experience in their outside practice with Castoria, and although we only have among our medical supplies what is known as regular products, yet we are free to confess that the merits of Castoria has won us to look with favor upon it."

UNITED HOSPITAL AND DISPENSARY, Boston, Mass.

ALLEN C. SMITH, Pres.,

The Centaur Company, 77 Murray Street, New York City.

THE OPEN WINDOW

A Monthly Magazine, issued by

The Shut-In-Society

for the benefit of invalids. The object of the Society is to relieve the weariness of the sick-room, by interchange of letters and other tokens of remembrance.

TERMS OF OPEN WINDOW: To Associates, $1.00 per year; 50 cents to invalid members. Send for sample copy, to Secretary.

MRS. H. K. MUNROE, Ashland, Mass.

Great men are like

SAPOLIO

They waste themselves to make the world brighter. Sapolio is a solid cake of scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Write to Ridge's Food Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

SUNDAY-SCHOOL PAPERS.

THE CHILD'S PAPER (Monthly). The best of juvenile periodicals: bright interesting reading illustrated with beautiful cuts. Ten copies, one year, to one address. $1; larger quantities at same rate. Single subscriptions, 25 cts.

MORNING LIGHT (Monthly), double sheet, can be used as a semi-monthly. Pure, wholesome reading, choice illustrations: suited for younger classes. Terms same as "Child's Paper."

APPLES OF GOLD, for infant classes, in weekly parts: beautiful pictures and printed in large clear type: a chromo picture each quarter. Single copy 50 cts. a year. Ten or more copies, to one address 35 cts. each per year.

AMERICAN MESSENGER (Monthly). Full of practical Christianity, having bright articles from the best writers: an old-time favorite in many thousand homes. Single subscription, or paper addressed with the names of individual subscribers 25 cts. a year: 5 copies to one address, $1; 20 copies $3.50; 40 copies, $6. Any number exceeding 40 at the latter rate.

Specimens of these periodicals mailed free.

AMERICAN TRACT SOCIETY,

150 Nassau St. and 304 Fourth Av., New York.

Boston, 54 Bromfield St. Philadelphia, 1512 Chestnut St. Rochester, 93 State St. Chicago, 122 Wabash Av.

Cincinnati, 176 Elm St. San Francisco, 735 Market St.

AGENTS Send for E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shot at Sunday Targets, by 1 magazine $2.50. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors edited by T. L. Cuyler. $3.75. 192,000 sold. 50000

Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail.

HOUSANNAS of the CHILDREN. Addresses and Talks to Children. By J. R. MacDUFF, D.D. 354 p. $1.50.

WARS of the HUGENOTS, their Trials and Persecutions. By Wm. Hanna, D.D. 344 p. $1.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF SACRED STORY. Lectures on the most attractive Characters in History. By M. B. Wharton, D.D. Illustrated. Two vols. each, $1.50.

THE BOW IN THE CLOUD; or, Words of Comfort for the Varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best authors, Prose and Poetry. By J. Sanderson, D.D. Price, $1.75.

DICTIONARY of CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITY, a continuation of Smith's Bible Dictionary, 2,000 double column pages. 600 Ill's. Two vols. 1/2 price of London Edition, each, $3.50. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed, is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

CARMEL SOAP is made only from sweet Olive Oil by a Mission Society in Palestine. Being ABSOLUTELY PURE and possessing the emollient properties of Olive Oil, it is unsurpassed for the Toilet and Bath, and superior to all other soaps for the Teeth and Hair. It is the only perfectly safe soap for the NERVOUS and Invalids. If your druggist or grocer does not keep it, send 10 cents for sample cake to the importer,

A. KLIPSTEIN, 52 Cedar St., New York.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 1/2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
 P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, by LOUIS KIOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 2.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 14, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

AN ORIENTAL ITINERANT SHERBET AND WATER VENDOR (From a photograph secured by Dr. Talmage.)

WORDS TO OUTSIDERS.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED LAST SUNDAY, JANUARY 11, 1891, AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE NEW YORK ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A Welcome to a Father's Orchard—A Boyhood Reminiscence—One Flock in Many Folds—The Shepherd Seeking His Sheep—Finding them Among Outsiders—A Clergyman in a Lifeboat—Deep Sea Fishing—Rejecters to be Brought In—The Testimony of the World's Great Men—Hope for the Slaves of Evil Habit—Gospel-Hardened Sinners—A Dying Nobleman's Lamentation.

"Other sheep I have which are not of this fold." John 10:16.

and there are bars to let down, and gates to swing open. In my boyhood days, next to the country school-house where I went, there was an apple orchard of great luxuriance, owned by a very lame man who did not gather the apples, and they went to waste by scores of bushels. Sometimes the lads of the school, in the sinfulness of a nature inherited from our first parents who fell through the same temptation, would climb over the fence and take some of these apples, and notwithstanding the fact that there was a surplus, and all going to waste, the owner of that orchard, reckless of making his lameness worse, would take after these lads, and shout, "Boys, drop those apples, or I'll set the dog on you!" Now there are Christians who have severe guard over the Church of God. They have a rough and unsympathetic way of treating outsiders. It is a great orchard into which God would like to have all the people come and take the richest and the ripest fruit, and the more they take the better he likes it. But there are those who stand with a hard and severe nature guarding the Church of God, and all the time afraid that some will get these apples when they really ought not to have them.

Have you any idea that, because you were baptized at eight months of age, and because you have all your life been surrounded by hal- lowed influences, you have a right to one whole side of the Lord's table, spreading yourself out so nobody else can sit there? You will have to haul in your elbows, for there will come a great multitude to sit at the table, and on both sides of you. You are not going to have this monopoly of religion. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

McDonald the Scotchman has on the Scotch hills a great flock of sheep. McDonald has four or five thousand head of sheep. Some are browsing in the heather, some are on the hills, some are in the valleys, a few are in the yard. One day Cameron comes over to McDonald and says, "McDonald, you have thirty sheep; I have been counting them." "Oh, no!" says McDonald, "I have four or five thousand." "Ah!" says Cameron, "you are mistaken; I have just counted them; there are thirty." "Why," says McDonald, "do you suppose that is all the sheep I have? I have sheep on the distant hills and in the valleys, ranging and roaming everywhere. Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

So Christ comes. Here is a group of Christians, and there is a group of Christians; here is a Methodist fold, here is a Presbyterian fold, here is a Baptist fold, here is a Lutheran fold, and we make our annual statistics, and we think we can tell you just how many Christians there are in the world; how many there are in the Church, how many of all these denominations. We aggregate them, and we think we are giving an intelligent and an accurate account; but Christ comes, and he says, "You have not counted them right. There are those whom you have never seen, those of whom you have never heard. I have my children in all parts of the earth, on all the islands of the sea, on all the continents, in all the mountains and in all the valleys. Do you think that these few sheep you have counted are all the sheep I have? There is a great multitude that no man can number. Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

The Shepherd and the Sheep-fold.

Christ, in my text, talks of the conversion of the Gentiles as confidently as though they had already been converted. He sets forth the idea that his people will come from all parts of the earth, from all ages, from all circumstances, from all conditions. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

In the first place, I remark, the Heavenly Shepherd will find many of his sheep among those who are at present non-church-goers. There are different kinds of churches. Sometimes you will find a church made up only of Christians. Everything seems finished. The church reminds you of those skeleton plants from which by chemical preparation all the greenness and the verdure have been taken, and they are cold, and white, and delicate, and beautiful, and finished. All that is wanted is a glass case put over them. The minister on the Sabbath has only to take an ostrich feather and brush off the dust that has accumulated in the last six days of business, and then they are as cold and beautiful and delicate as before. Everything is finished: finished sermons, finished music, finished architecture, finished everything. Another church is like an armory, with the sound of drum and fife calling more recruits to the Lord's army. We say to the applicants, "Come in and get your equipment. Here is the bath in which you are to be cleansed, here is the helmet you are to put on your head, here are the sandals you are to put on your feet, here is the breastplate you are to put over your heart, here is the sword you are to take in your right hand and fight his battle with. Quit yourselves like men."

There are those here, perhaps, who say, "It is now ten, fifteen years since I was in the habit, the regular habit, of church-going." I know all about your case. I am going to tell you something that will be startling at the first, and that is, that you are going to become the Lord's sheep. "Oh," you say, "that is impossible; you don't know my case: you don't know how far I am from anything of that kind." I know all about your case. I have been up and down the world. I know why some of you do not attend upon Christian services.

I go further, and make another announcement in regard to you, and that is, you are not only to become the Lord's sheep, but you are going to become the Lord's sheep this hour. God is going to call you graciously by his Spirit; you are going to come into the fold of Christ. This sermon shall not be so much for those who are Christians. I have preached to them hundreds and thousands of times. The sermon that I preach now is going to be chiefly for those who consider themselves outsiders, but who may happen to be in the house, and the chief employment of the Christian people here to-day will be to pray for those who are not accustomed to attend upon Christian sanctuaries.

When the steamer Atlantic went to pieces on Mars Rock, why did that brave minister of the Gospel, of whom we have all read, go out in the lifeboat? Why did he not stay and look after the passengers that got ashore, wrapping flannels around them, and kindling fires for them, and preparing them food? There was plenty of work to be done on the shore for those who had already escaped. Ah! that brave man knew that there were others who would take care of those, and so he said, "Man, the lifeboat! Pull away, my lads, pull away! Yonder is a man; there is a woman freezing in the rigging. Pull away!"

I see the oar-blades bend in the strong pull of the oarsmen. Then they come up to the wreck. The woman is frozen. She drops into the wave—alas! poor woman—and washes out to sea. But then Mr. Ancient says, "There is a man yet hanging to the rigging. Pull away, my lads! pull away!" They come up, and he says, "Hold now there five minutes, and we will save you. Steady! steady! Now give me your hand. Leap! Thank God he is saved! Thank God he is saved!"

So there are men now in the breakers. They have made a shipwreck of life. While we come out to save them, some are swept off—swept off before we can reach them—and there are others still hanging on. Steady there among the slippery places! Steady! Leap into this lifeboat! Now is your chance for heaven! This hour some of you are going to be saved. Far away from God, you are going to be brought nigh. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

Christ says that ministers of the Gospel are to be fishers for men. Now when I go fishing I do not want to fish in anybody else's pond. I do not want to go along Hohokus Creek, where there are ten or fifteen men fishing, and drop my line just about where they are dropping their lines. I should like to get in a Newfoundland fishing-smack and push out to sea fifty miles beyond the breakers. I do not think the Church of God gains a great deal when you take sheep from one fold and put them in another fold. It is the lost sheep on the mountains you want to bring back—the lost sheep on the mountains. And they are coming to-day.

You are now this hour in the tide of Christian influences. You are going to be swept in; your voice is going to be heard in prayer; you are going to be consecrated to God; you are going to live a life of usefulness, and your death-bed is going to be surrounded by Christian sympathizers; and devout men will carry you to your burial when your work is done, and these words will be chiselled for your epitaph: "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." And all that history is going to begin to-day. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

Again I remark, the Heavenly Shepherd is going to find many of his sheep among those who are now rejecters of Christianity. I do not know how you came to reject Christianity. I do not know whether it was through hearing Theodore Parker preach, or whether it was reading Renan's Life of Jesus, or whether it was through some sceptic in the store or factory. Or it may be—probably is the case—that you were disgusted with religion and disgusted with Christianity because some man who professed to be a Christian defrauded you, and he being a member of the Church, and you taking him as a representative of the Christian religion, you said, "Well, if that's religion, I don't want any of it."

I do not know how you came to reject Christianity, but you frankly tell me you do reject it; you do not think the Bible is the Word of God, although there are many things in it you admire; you do not think that Christ was a divine Being, although you think he was a very good man. You say, "If the Bible be true—the most of the Bible be true—I nevertheless think the earlier part of the Bible is an allegory." And there are fifty things that I believe you do not believe. Nevertheless they tell me in regard to you that you are an accommodating, you are an obliging person. If I should come to you and ask of you a favor you would grant it, if it were possible. It would be a joy for you to grant me a favor. If any of your friends came to you and wanted an accommodation, and you could accommodate them, how glad you would be!

Now I am going to ask of you a favor. I want you to oblige me. The accommodation will cost you nothing, and will give me great happiness. Of course you will not deny me. I want you as an experiment to try the Christian religion. If it does not stand the test, discard it; if it does, receive it.

If you were very sick, and you had been given up of the doctors, and I came to you and I took a bottle of medicine from my pocket and said, "Here is medicine I am sure will help you; it has cured fifty people," you would say, "Oh, I haven't any confidence in it; they tell me all these medicines will fail me." "Well," I say, "will you not, as a matter of accommodation to myself, just try it?" "Well," you say, "I have no objection to trying it; if it will be any satisfaction to you I will try it." You take it. Now you are sick in disquietude, sick in sin. You are not happy. You laugh sometimes when you are miserable. There come surges of unhappiness over your soul that almost swamp you. You are unhappy, struck through with unrest. Now will you not try this solace, this febrifuge, this anodyne, this Gospel medicine? "Oh," you say, "I haven't any faith in it." As a matter of accommodation, let me introduce you to the Lord Jesus Christ, the Great Physician. "Why," you say, "I haven't any faith in him." Well, now, will you not just let him come and try his power on your soul? Just let me introduce him to you. I do not ask you to take my word for it. I do not ask you to take the advice of clergymen. Perhaps the clergymen may be prejudiced; perhaps we may be speaking professionally; perhaps we may give you wrong advice; perhaps we are morbid on that subject; so I do not ask you to take the advice of clergymen. I ask you to take the advice of very respectable laymen, such as William Shakespeare, the dramatist; as William Wilberforce, the scoffing in regard to it. There are some things I believe that you do not; but there are some things that I believe and you do believe. You believe in love—a father's love, a mother's love, a wife's love, a child's love. Now let me tell you, God loves you more than all of them together; and you must come in, you will come in. Christ looks in all tenderness, with the infinite tenderness of the Gospel, into your soul, and he says, "This is your time for Heaven;" and then he waves his hand to the people of God, and he says, "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

Again I remark, the Heavenly Shepherd is going to get many of his sheep among those who have been flung of evil habit.

It outrages me to see how soon Christian people give up the prodigal. I hear Christian people talk as though they thought the grace of God were a chain of forty or fifty links, and when they had run out then there was nothing to touch the depth of a man's iniquity. If a man were out hunting for deer, and got off the track of the deer, he would hunt amid the bushes and the brakes longer for the lost game than he will look for a lost soul.

They say if a man has had the delirium tremens twice he cannot be cured. They say if a woman has fallen from integrity she cannot be redeemed. All of which is an infinite slander on the Gospel of the Son of God. Men who say that know nothing about practical religion in their own hearts. How many times will God take back a man who has fallen? Well, I cannot give you the exact figures, but I can tell you at what point he certainly will take him back. Four hundred and ninety times. Why do I say four hundred and ninety times? Because the Bible says seventy times seven. Now, figure that out, you who do not think a man can fall four times, eight times, ten times, twenty times, one hundred times, four hundred times, and yet be saved. Four hundred and ninety times! Why, there is a great multitude before the throne of God who plunged into all the depths of iniquity. There were no sins they did not commit; but they were washed of body, and washed of mind, and washed of soul, and they are before the throne of God now forever happy. I say that to encourage any man who feels there is no chance for him.

Good Templars will not save you, although they are a grand institution. Sons of Temperance will not save you, although there is no better society on earth. Signing the temperance pledge will not save you, although it is a grand thing to do. No one but God can save you. Do not put your confidence in bromide of potassium, or anything that the apothecary can mix. Put your trust in God! After the Church has cast you off, and the bank has cast you off, and social circles have cast you off, and all good society has cast you off, and father has cast you off, and mother has cast you off, at your first cry statesman: as Isaac Newton, the astronomer; as Robert Boyle, the philosopher; as Locke, the metaphysician; as Morse, the electrician. These men never preached—they never pretended to preach—but they come out, and putting down, one his telescope and another the electrician's wire, and another the Parliamentary scroll—they come out and they commend Christ as a comfort to all the people, a Christ that the world needs. Now I do not ask you to take the advice of clergymen. Take the advice of these laymen. It does not make any difference to me at this juncture what you have said against the Bible; it does not make any difference to me at this juncture how you may have caricatured religion. Take the advice of men who are prominent in secular affairs, as these men whom I have mentioned, and others who immediately occur to your mind. You see I do not scoff at scepticism. I never scoffed at scepticism. I had a good reason for not scoffing. I have been a natural sceptic. I do not know what the first word was that I uttered after entering this world, but I think it must have been "why?" There were times when I doubted the existence of God, when I doubted the divinity of Christ, when I doubted the immortality of the soul, when I doubted my own existence, when I doubted everything. I have been through the whole curriculum of doubt, and you can tell me nothing new about it. I have come out from a great Sahara desert into the calm, warm, sunshiny land of the Gospel. I know about the other land. I have been there. You can tell me nothing new about it; and I know all about the other condition of which you do not know anything—the peace, the comfort, the joy, the triumph of trusting in God, and in Jesus Christ whom he has sent. So I am not or help God will bend clean down to that ditch of your iniquity to help you out. Oh, what a God he is! Long suffering and gracious!

A Heroic Clergyman's Life-boat Experience.

A DEATH-BED LAMENT.

There may be in this house some whose hands tremble so with dissipation they could hardly hold a hymn-book. I say to such, if they are here, "You will preach the Gospel yet; you will yet, some of you, carry the Holy Communion through the aisles, and you will be acceptable to everybody, because everybody will know you are saved and purified by the grace of God, and consecrated man, wholly consecrated. Your business has got to come up, your physical health is to be rebuilt, your family is to be restored, the Church of God on earth and in heaven is to rejoice over your coming. "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold." If this is not the Gospel, I do not know what the Gospel is. It can scale any height, it can fathom any depth, it can compass any infinity. I think the reason why there are not more people saved is we do not swing the door wide enough open. Now there is only one class of persons in this house about whom I have any despondency and that is those who have been hearing the Gospel for perhaps twenty, thirty, forty years. Their outward life moral, but they tell you frankly they do not love the Lord Jesus Christ, have not trusted him, have not been born again by the Spirit of God. They are Gospel-hardened. The Gospel has no more effect upon them than the shining of the moon on the city pavement. The publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before they. They went through, some of them, the revival of 1857, when 100,000 souls were brought to God. Some of them went through great revivals in individual churches. Still unpardoned, unlesioned, unsaved. They were merely spectators. Gospel-hardened! After awhile we will hear that they are sick, and then that they are dead, and then that they died without any hope. Gospel-hardened. But I turn away from all such with a thrill of hope to those who are not Gospel-hardened. Some of you have not heard, perhaps, five sermons, in five years. This whole subject has been a novelty to you for some time. You are not Gospel-hardened; you know you are not Gospel-hardened. The whole subject comes freshly to your mind. I hear some soul saying, "O my wasted life! O the bitter past! O the graves I stumbled over! Whither shall I fly? The future is so dark, so dark, so very dark. God help me!"

Oh, I am so glad for that last utterance! That as a prayer, and as soon as you begin to pray, that turns all Heaven this way, and God steps in, and he beats back the hounds of temptation to their kennels, and he throws all around the pursued soul the covert of his pardoning mercy. I heard something fall. What was it? It was the bars around the sheepfold, the bars of the fence around the sheepfold. The Heavenly shepherd let them fall, and the hunted sheep of the mountain come bounding in, some with feet torn of the brambles, and others with feet lame from the dogs, but bounding in. Thank God! "Other sheep have I which are not of this fold."

God forbid that any of you should have the temptation of the dying nobleman who had had every opportunity of salvation but rejected it, and who wrote or dictated these words: "Before you receive this, my final state will be determined. I am throwing my last stake for eternity, and tremble and shudder for the important issue. Oh, my friend, with what horror do I recall the hours of vanity we have wasted together; but I have a splendid passage to the grave. I die in state, and languish under a gilded canopy. I am expiring on soft and downy pillows, and am respectfully attended by my servants and physicians. My dependants sigh, my sisters weep, my father bends beneath a load of years and grief; but Oh, which of these will answer my summons at the high tribunal? And which of these will bail me from the arrest of death? While some flattering panegyric is pronounced at my interment, I may be hearing my just condemnation at a supreme tribunal. Adieu!"

A BUDDHIST TEMPLE IN CEYLON.

(See Illustration on page 29.)

THE edifice depicted in the illustration on page 29 is the Bana Maduwa or Buddhist temple, at Pantura, in Ceylon. It was erected by pious laymen for the accommodation of travelling priests, who go from city to city collecting alms. Here the people might come to them with their offerings, and the priests could read to them Buddha's sacred precepts. Sometimes these readings are continued for several consecutive days and nights, one priest taking up the reading as another concludes.

The Late Mrs. A. R. Brown. (From a photograph by Fredricks, New York.)

On the left upper corner is shown the worship of a priest, a newly admitted child of ten or twelve, with his attendant behind him. He carries a begging bowl in which he receives the dole of food that the pious devotee offers. These candidates are admitted at the close of the readings, when they have to recite certain stanzas, renounce their relatives and worldly possessions, bathe, shave their heads and eyebrows, and put on the yellow robe which covers one shoulder and leaves the other exposed, after which they are carried in procession around the town. The full-fledged priests cover both shoulders (as shown in the right-hand panel of our picture).

Since 1795, when Ceylon became a possession of England, mission work has been carried on in the island. It was, however, only in 1814 that a really vigorous and organized effort was made to preach the gospel to the masses. In that year a band of Wesleyan missionaries arrived at Colombo and began earnest work among the people. Other denominations have also sent out Christian laborers who speak hopefully of the progress made. In 1870, especially, there was a remarkable work of grace in the island. It extended through all parts of the island and among the converts were Buddhist priests, Singhalese in the south, Tamils in the north and large numbers of natives in all the cities. Beside these, many merchants and clerks from Christian countries who were doing business in Ceylon were converted and worked with the missionaries among the people. The population of the island is about three millions.

THE LATE MRS. A. R. BROWN.

Superintendent of the New York City Mission and Tract Society.

A LIFE full of labor and Christian usefulness—a life of close following of the steps of him who "went about doing good" closed on January 2. It was that of Mrs. A. R. Brown, of New York, whose portrait (from a photograph by Charles Fredricks, 770 Broadway, New York), appears on this page. For nearly twenty years Mrs. Brown has been doing Christian work among the poor of the city, of the most beneficent kind. With a heart full of sympathy for the sick and suffering, the poor and "them that are out of the way," she helped them in their difficulties, and pointed them to him who invited the weary and heavy laden to come to him and find rest.

She was born June 6, 1826, and began her work in New York in 1873. Her place was at the head of the band of forty-five noble self-devoted women who form the corps of workers in the Woman's Branch of the City Mission. What the character of their work is, any one may see who leaves Broadway and the avenues in which the wealthy live and explores the streets near the rivers, and especially the miserable habitations on the East-side. There misery and destitution, and squalid poverty abound. To those poor families the visits of the City missionaries are like the visits of an angel of mercy, bringing with them not only spiritual consolation, but sympathy and material help. Mrs. Brown organized and directed this work, and she was well fitted for the task.

She had a keen faculty of reading character and her choice of workers was unerring. Always ready with advice to one in difficulty, ever willing to assist personally in a crisis, she was the life and soul of the blessed work. Directly and indirectly, she was a friend to everyone in trouble or in need whose case came under the cognizance of her helpers.

The institutions she started for the development of the work were many, and they bear the marks of practical wisdom. The Day Nurseries for the children of the poor were one of her conceptions. There the women, who have to earn bread for themselves and their families by daily labor, find a place where they can leave their little ones in safety, under kindly care while they are at their toil. The corps of trained nurses who minister by the bedside of the sick poor, was another of Mrs. Brown's kindly arrangements. Besides these, Mrs. Brown established and directed the Home for Christian Workers in this city, which has been a boon to many a toiling laborer in the Lord's vineyard. The Societies of Helping Hands for poor women and Sewing Schools for children were among her favorite enterprises. Her brain was continually at work devising some means for meeting the urgent needs of the poor which were disclosed by personal contact, and her hand was quick to carry out with vigorous energy the ideas that she had prayerfully planned.

On January 2, she laid down her work forever. She had none of this world's goods or honors, but she has gone into the presence of him who said: "I was a-hungered and ye gave me meat; I was thirsty, and ye gave me drink; naked and ye clothed me; I was sick and ye visited me; I was in prison and ye came unto me. . . . Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Warning Bell Silenced—A Curious Probate Suit—A Village Pest—The Collection of a Debt.

An Ingenious Device for an Automatic Bell buoy was on exhibition last week, in New York. These buoys are anchored over sunken rocks or on dangerous shoals, to give warning by night and day to mariners. Those now in use have a bell suspended over a saucer-shaped float. Underneath the bell is a ball which rolls to and fro as the float rolls with the waves, striking the bell, when unimpeded, at each motion. The new device has three tubes twelve inches long, at equal distances on the exterior of the bell and pointing to its outer surface. In each tube is a ball which when it rolls to the bell-end of the tube strikes the bell itself. The advantage of this plan is that the motion of the balls cannot be impeded. With the old shape it sometimes happened that weeds or driftwood would float under the bell and prevent the ball rolling, thus silencing the bell. This increases the danger which the buoy is set to prevent, because the mariner, knowing a buoy is placed over the perilous spot, is not apprehensive that he is near it when he hears no warning sound. A similar augmentation of danger occurs in the case of sinners who are in the habit of listening to unfaithful preachers. When the driftwood of worldliness and fear of offending wealthy pew-holders get into a preacher's heart, his silence on the subject of prevalent sin may involve the shipwreck of many souls. God says to such: "If thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand." (Ezek. 33: 8.)

A Schooner's Desperate Struggle for Life was witnessed from the New Jersey coast on Dec. 26. A terrific storm was lashing the sea into foam. The wind drove rain and hail in the faces of the people on shore, so that they could scarcely bear to look seaward. A group of men from the life-saving station was intently watching a large three-masted schooner which was being driven slowly but surely toward the shore. The crew had thrown out anchors, but they were evidently dragging a furrow along the bottom, unable to get a hold firm enough to bear the tremendous strain. The vessel rolled almost on her beam ends as the immense waves struck her sides, and the tops of her tapering masts described graceful curves against the dark background of the sky. One moment the whole of her deck was clearly visible from the beach, and her crew could be seen clinging to anything that would keep them from slipping into the sea; the next moment she rolled over until her keel could almost be seen. The crew sent up no signal for help, but seemed to be intent on saving the vessel. Foot by foot she was drifting nearer the fatal coast. At last one of her anchor chains parted and then her doom seemed inevitable. By that time the life-saving men had their rocket apparatus in position and the first shot sent a line into the rigging. The crew saw it and understood. They made it fast, and then one by one they took their places in the breeches-buoy and were drawn ashore. So high was the sea that in several instances the man in the buoy passed through the water on his way to the shore and was almost drowned. But all were saved. Would that it were possible to say so much for every man to whom the way of salvation through Christ is offered! Unhappily men do not realize their spiritual peril as they do physical peril, though it is infinitely more dreadful and the way of escape is so simple and sure. (Heb. 2: 3.)

A Remarkable Suit to Invalidate a Will is to be tried shortly in the courts of Boston, Mass. The will is that of a man who died last October in Revere. His estate was worth over a hundred thousand dollars. He had six children, to whom he left trivial sums. The balance of his property he bequeathed to various religious and philanthropic institutions. The children of the testator are opposing probate on the ground that the will must have been made while the man was under undue influence. They state, and they have witnesses to prove, that their father was an exceedingly wicked man, remarkable for his profanity and his contempt for religion. The expressions used in the will are those of a man of piety, and they are consequently taken as an indication that the testator was not of sound mind when he made it. It is probable, however, that his mind was sound enough. He may have had the idea that his bequests would atone for his wicked life. It is a foolish notion, but many entertain it, and a still greater number who are too well-informed to hope to purchase a place in heaven by a post-mortem money payment, show similar folly by thinking that after a life of sin they may enter heaven by offering to God in their dying hour a belated repentance. (II. Cor. 6: 2.)

The Disappearance of a Mischievous Bird has delighted the people of a village in Connecticut. Some months ago, a tame crow which located itself at Chaplin annoyed the citizens. It seemed to be possessed by a spirit of mischief. It would kill chickens, uproot flowers and pick the fruit off trees. If it saw a window open, it would fly into a room, peck at the pictures, tear books and papers to pieces, and if it noticed any light article that pleased its fancy, would carry it away and bury it. The loss of several valuable rings and sleeve-buttons was charged to the account of the crow. It seemed to have a particular fancy for following the village doctor, often to the good man's annoyance, as he did not deem it exactly proper to be followed about by a bird of ill omen when visiting sick people. Several times he has been obliged to turn about and drive home when he has seen the bird flying along with him, so sensitive were his patients to the presence of the bird. Last week a flock of crows flew over the village, and the pest of the village joined them on their way south. No more fervent wish has been expressed in the community in a long time than that the miserable mischief-maker may never find its way back again. Why the good people did not put an end to their annoyance by shooting the crow, does not appear. That would seem to have been the most simple and effective way of acting toward a bird "possessed by the spirit of mischief." The problem is more complicated when that spirit enters into a man. The best method in that case is for the community to pray that God will change his nature. We know that the Spirit of God can do that with the worst, even with those of whom Solomon said: "They sleep not except they have done mischief and their sleep is taken away unless they cause some to fall." (Prov. 4: 16.)

A Payment of Government Money has been delayed through the ignorance of the creditors. Some years ago, the Government became indebted to the Panama Railroad Company to the extent of $13,000 for the transportation of troops. The Company applied for the amount, but were informed that there was no money in the Treasury available for the payment. A special act of Congress would be needed to appropriate the money. The Company imagined that it would be necessary to send a man to Washington to arrange for such legislation and possibly to bribe members of Congress to pass the bill. At that time they were not prepared to take the matter up, and at length it was forgotten. After the lapse of several years the existence of this claim was recalled to the attention of the Company, and an agent was commissioned to go to Washington and arrange for the passage of a special appropriation. He was a foreigner and knew nothing of Congressional ways. He applied for advice to a gentleman whom he casually met, who happened to be file-clerk of the House. This gentleman said that he believed the House had already dealt with the claim. He searched the files and found that about four years ago an appropriation had been passed to pay the Panama Company's claim. Armed with this special statute and his power of attorney, the agent marched off to the Treasury, and was paid without demur. He expected to have to lobby a bill through Congress, and was astonished at the ease with which his business was done. Similar astonishment is often felt by awakened sinners when they realize the way of salvation. Expecting that they must do "some great thing," or go through some agonizing experience before they can be saved, they are surprised to learn that they have only to claim the salvation God has promised to all who believe on Jesus Christ. (John 3: 16.)

THE ORIENTAL SHERBET-SELLER.

(See Illustration on first page.)

A GROUP familiar to travellers in Palestine and other Oriental lands is pictured in the illustration on the first page of this journal this week. It is taken from a photograph secured by Dr. Talmage during his recent tour in the Holy Land. In Jerusalem, Damascus, and other cities, such a figure as that in the picture may be seen on any of the streets. He is generally an Arab, or of mixed race in which Arab blood preponderates. Strapped to his shoulders is a large bottle, or earthenware jar, or a goat-skin containing the means of assuaging thirst. In very dry seasons, he can find a ready sale for plain water, and when water is more plentiful, he fills his receptacle with sherbet or lemonade. He lengthens the spout of his jar by the simple contrivance of fixing a tube to it, and by bending his shoulders he can fill the cup without taking the jar from his back. The dexterity with which he performs this feat without spilling his stock-in-trade is extraordinary and is acquired only by long practice.

To the American traveller the spectacle of people so buying a drink of water or sherbet on the street is a strange one, and there are other scenes which indicate that now, as in Bible times, there is a scarcity of water that is an important consideration in Oriental life. Numerous Scriptural allusions acquire greater significance when this fact is realized. Evidently it was the custom in ancient times to fetch the water for the supply of the household from a considerable distance. Rebekah, though the daughter of a man of substance, was engaged in this occupation when Abraham's servant saw her. (Gen. 24: 16.) When Jesus sent his disciples to prepare the Passover they were told that they would meet "a man bearing a pitcher of water." (Mark 14: 13.) The possession of a well was then a matter of some moment as is proved by the formality with which Abraham had his ownership of a well attested. (Gen. 21: 30.) Isaac's contention about his wells (Gen. 26: 19-22.) is also an evidence of the same kind, and it is mentioned later on as a fact of special distinction about a man that he "had a well in his own court" (II. Samuel 17: 18.) To Oriental ears, therefore, a meaning we cannot fathom would be attached to such an invitation as that of Isaiah, "Ho everyone that thirsteth, come ye to the waters" and to the characteristic which John noted in the Celestial city that there was "a river of the water of life, clear as crystal." But in those lands, as in this more highly favored one, the blessing which water symbolizes, that living water whereof if a man drink he shall never thirst, is neglected and, though it is offered freely and without price, men will not drink of it.

ELIJAH ON CARMEL.

S. S. LESSON FOR JAN. 25, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
I. Kings 18 : 25-39; Golden Text, I. Kings 18 : 21.

Elijah's Period of Waiting and Learning—The Appointed Time—The Message to Ahab—Obadiah's Fear—The King Waiting on the Prophet—Executing His Orders—Elijah's Appeal to the People—The Test Proposed—The Scene on Carmel—The Answer by Fire—The Hour's Triumph Compensating for the Three Years' Discipline.

ELIJAH had learned the important lessons which were to fit him for an exceptional service. But he must learn also to wait God's time. God is never in a hurry, and "he that believeth shall not make haste." (Isa. 28 : 16.) A man who is sure of his God does not fear that he will lose the right opportunity for action. He knows that "to everything there is a season, and a time to every purpose under heaven" (Eccl. 3 : 1), and that he who always knew when his hour was come will not fail to fix the right moment for us in everything which shall happen. Unbelief can hurry, but faith can wait. It was only that "the word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year, saying, Go, shew thyself unto Ahab, and I will send rain upon the earth. And Elijah went to show himself unto Ahab." He had learned to trust consequences with his God. Elijah did not plan out his journey, or scheme in what way it would be best to approach the king—God had the plan, and Elijah had only to fall into it. In the way, he met Obadiah. When God's children learn to trust him, nothing which happens is accidental, they see God's hand in every meeting, in every accident. It was the most natural thing to send word to Ahab by his house-steward, "Go, tell thy lord: Behold Elijah is here." But he met with an unexpected difficulty; Obadiah, who had an office in Ahab's house was afraid to carry Elijah's message to the king, and Elijah, whom Ahab had sought for throughout his own and other lands, did not fear to meet him. How is this? The one man was a child of God and feared him. When he could serve him without great personal danger he would do so. He had hidden and sustained a hundred prophets of the Lord during Jezebel's persecution; but he could not trust the Lord. "What have I sinned that thou wouldst deliver thy servant into the hand of Ahab to slay me?" And he pictured to himself consequences which might arise, "Thou sayest, go, tell thy lord, Behold Elijah is here, and it shall come to pass as soon as I am gone from thee, that the Spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not; and so, when I come and tell Ahab, he shall slay me." Oh how many there are who do not dare to follow the Lord because of some possible consequences which after all may never happen. Obadiah knew that Elijah was God's servant, that he would not give him a direction which was not true and divine, but he shrank from possible consequences which were, after all, the result of imagination in a heart which did not really trust God, or believe in his care for his children.

"After Many Days,"

Elijah did not stay to argue with Obadiah;

Solemn Hours Were at Hand.

The supreme moment for which all his life had been a preparation was drawing on, and he only said, "As the Lord of hosts liveth before whom I stand, I will surely shew myself unto him to-day." So the timid man went his way to tell Ahab; "and Ahab went to meet Elijah," the king waited on the prophet; it was becoming that it should be so. Ahab met Elijah with the words, "Is it thou, thou troubler of Israel?" (R. V.) Elijah was a messenger, he spoke not his own words but, standing there in the presence of his God as his mouthpiece, with his life in his hand, he dared to speak all the words which God put in his mouth; "I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim. Now therefore send, and gather to me all Israel unto Mount Carmel, and the prophets of Baal four hundred and fifty, and the prophets of the groves (or Asherah) four hundred, which eat at Jezebel's table."

Who is this man that presumes to issue his commands to a king? A conscious messenger of him who is the King of kings. Elijah had seen the power of his God over death itself, which conquers kings, and he feared not Ahab, but his God. But who is this king that one day sets a price upon the head of the prophet, and seeks him in other lands; and now that he is present; instead of commanding his instant execution, obeys his orders as though Elijah were king, and he but a subject? Ahab could not do otherwise; the presence of the unseen God was with his servant, and Ahab must obey.

Ahab Obeyed;

how long it took to convoke all this people we know not—some days probably. When God has his messenger ready, he can use the enemies of his truth to advertise and to gather the meeting where their power is to be overthrown. Elijah's mission was one of words and of deeds also. "How long halt ye between two opinions? If the Lord be God, follow him; but if Baal, than follow him." Searching words; but the people remained unmoved. Deeds must follow, an indisputable proof of the reality of Israel's God must be given to the people. God must himself appear on the scene. Elijah was not at a loss; with his eye on his God all the time, and doing everything at his word, he makes another appeal, "I, even I only, remain a prophet of the Lord, but Baal's prophets are four hundred and fifty men. Let them therefore give us two bullocks, and let them choose one bullock for themselves, and cut it in pieces, and lay it on the wood, and put no fire under; and I will dress the other bullock, and lay it on the wood, and put no fire under; and call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the Lord; and by fire let him be God." Elijah was alone against eight hundred and fifty prophets, who had court patronage and public opinion on their side, but he had the living God. And so sure was he of his succor, that he would take no advantage. Let them choose their bullock; I will take whichever they leave me—only let no earthly fire kindle the sacrifice. The people now break silence; to their eye Baal's prophets had the advantage; they said, "It is well spoken." Then began the real battle; the preparation of the bullock was a little thing, but when it came to making a real prayer to an unreal God, the falsity of their position was discovered. Oh, put things to the test; God's truth can stand any real test. Eight hundred and fifty prophets unite in the cry, "O Baal, hear us!" Hour after hour passed by, the prophets worked themselves up into a frightful excitement, and prayed with all their might, they leapt around their altar, they cut themselves with knives until they bled, they did their part with all their physical strength. Oh, how many Christians pray like these heathen prophets, crying, striving, putting their whole energy into their prayer, as though the answer depended on the amount of energy which they could bring to bear upon God.

The God that Answereth

Does God Live?

Does God hear? Does God care? Can I be sure of an interview with God, and that he truly hears me? This is the line for a child of God to take. The prophets of Baal troubled themselves in vain, put to a real test all their religion broke down. Let us learn to wait God's hour, and do all we do at his word; he will know how to deal with those who oppose him. "There was no voice, nor any to answer, nor any that regarded." The prophets of Baal had had their chance, and it was only failure: now every eye was turned on Elijah. Baal had proved himself to be no God, he could not answer by fire. "Come near unto me" was Elijah's first word to the people. Elijah had nothing to hide; there were no occult mysteries in the service of Jehovah. "They came near, and he repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down" with twelve stones, representing the twelve tribes of Israel. He claimed Israel for God, and God for Israel; if Israel's God should appear on the scene, there must be a witness that Israel was his people.

Elijah did nothing to make easy the answer to his prayer. So sure was he of his God that he took what might have seemed unnecessary pains to make the answer as difficult as possible. He dug a trench about the altar, and, having arranged the wood, prepared his bullock, then commanded that four barrels of water should be poured over it, and not once only but three times, so that the bullock, the wood, the stones were saturated with water, and the trench also was filled. Fearless man, who has God assuredly on his side! And now the moment was come for the appeal for God to Answer by Fire.

Elijah knew God too well to prepare a prayer beforehand, he was not agitated or excited, like Baal's prophets. We may well believe that the silence was breathless, now that the clamor of Baal's prophets was stilled. "Lord God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, let it be known this day that thou art God in Israel." This was the burden of his heart. "And that I am thy servant and that I have done all these things at thy word." For himself he asks only the witness that he was authorized from on high thus to command the king, and to assemble Israel to this wondrous test. "Hear me, O Lord, hear me that this people may know that thou art the Lord God, and that thou hast turned their heart back again." This was all; but this was enough. "Then the fire of the Lord fell, and consumed the burnt sacrifice, and the wood, and the stones, and the dust, and licked up the water that was in the trench." God had answered by fire. God had triumphed. And the result? Was it worth the while for Elijah to remain so long in the school of God, apparently useless? Would this one hour show a greater result than if he had used all his time in preaching? "When all the people saw it, they fell on their faces, and they said, The Lord, he is the God, the Lord, he is the God." It was a national return to the living God. Elijah's schooling had been worth the while.

THE WILLEBROEK INTERVIEW.

A Story of the S. S. Lesson for January 25—Elijah and the Prophets of Baal.

ONE day in early spring a number of men were engaged in earnest discussion in a room at Willebroek, a village midway between Antwerp and Brussels. As it was, centuries before, on Mount Carmel, the whole future of a nation was hanging in the balance, and, as on that other day of supreme crisis, one man was standing up for right and truth and God, against many advocates of error and superstition. One man alone barred the way to the utter ruin of his country. He had been brought there as a last resort to undergo the pressure which the truly great and good always find the most difficult and painful to withstand—the loving, tender appeals of dear friends.

He had withstood the arguments of a bishop renowned for his diplomatic skill; a meeting had been arranged in which a deputation of the Knights of the Golden Fleece was to deal with him, but suspecting treachery he had avoided it. His king, the son of his powerful patron, had made special request of him, and the king's sister had exerted all her charming influence over him, but the man was inflexible. What was to be done with such a man, whom neither authority nor cajolery nor self-interest could win from the right and the true? Possibly, his private friends, the companions of his youth might influence him. This it was that was now to be tried. He had need of all his firmness, of all his strength of conviction when he consented to that interview, for he was a man of strong emotions, of warm attachments and of loving fidelity to his friends. It needed an Elijah-like faith to keep him true in such a crisis.

It was easy to see by the workings of that noble face, how fierce was the conflict going on in his soul. All that was required of him was his signature to a document to which his friends had already set their hands. If he signed, riches and honor and power, the friendship and favor of mighty potentates would be his. The ease and luxury to which he had been accustomed from childhood would be continued to him. Beloved men and women with whom he had long acted in concert, would rejoice, and association with them would still cheer and delight him. But if he signed, he knew that the favor of God would be withdrawn from him, and his country would be given over to the power of men who knew no mercy and felt no compunction. William of Nassau—for it was he—must have felt much as Elijah felt on Carmel when he saw all the power and prestige and influence in his country ranged against him. Philip, of Spain, was resolved on making Holland and Belgium Roman Catholic. The inquisition, that potent agent of propagandism, was to be introduced, heretics were to be hanged and burned, and William was asked to give his consent to the iniquity. Philip was determined to carry out his plans and if William resisted they were to be carried out in spite of him. Mansfield and Egmont, whom he loved, urged that William's resistance would exasperate Philip and make him more tyrannical and cruel and it would not save the Netherlands. Why not yield and trust to Philip's promises of clemency and moderation? To resist him was to wreck all his future life. William could expect nothing in the future but hopeless struggles against superior forces. He must resign peace and honors and pleasures, and become an exile in constant danger of death. Egmont pleaded hard with him, but William was immovable.

Then the tables were turned. In solemn, pathetic language William addressed himself to Egmont. The interview had been long and stormy. The crisis was now past. William had taken his stand and the voice of the one man pleading for God and the right was raised in solemn adjuration.

His love for Egmont had, in his own noble and pathetic language, struck its roots too deeply into his heart to permit him in this parting interview to neglect a last effort to turn him, even if his words were disregarded. He endeavored to show his friends on what a thin, trembling crust they were venturing when they placed confidence in the promises of the Spanish monarch. He pointed out how many times those promises had been ruthlessly violated, and how often trust in the king's clemency had been unavailing. But Egmont was all hope and sanguine in his expectations of royal favor.

"Alas, Egmont," answered the prince, "the king's clemency of which you boast will destroy you. Would that I might be deceived, but I foresee too clearly that you are to be the bridge which the Spaniards will destroy so soon as they have passed over it to invade our country." With these last solemn words he concluded his appeal to awaken the Count, for whom he felt a greater affection than for Mansfield, from his fatal security. Then, Mr. Motley tells us, as if persuaded that he was looking upon his friend for the last time, William of Orange threw his arms around Egmont and held him for a moment in a close embrace. Tears fell from the eyes of both at this parting moment and when this brief scene of simple and lofty pathos terminated, Egmont and Orange separated, never to meet again on earth.

Seldom has so much depended on the decision of a single man. The future prosperity and glory of the Netherlands was in his keeping, and the noble manner in which he fulfilled his trust has gained for him the love and veneration of patriots of all subsequent time.

For William there was no Carmel to which he could summon the people for ocular proof of the righteousness of his cause. His walk must be by faith and he must trust where he could not see. Yet he never wavered. Defeated in the field again and again, he remained true to his God and his country. Egmont fell as he had predicted. The land became a hideous spectacle. The charters of freedom all over the country were superseded by brute force! Its industries were suffering, a worthy intelligent population began to desert the land in droves as if the pestilence were raging, while gibbets and scaffolds were erected in every village and a sickening universal apprehension existed of still darker disasters to follow. Yet supported by his conscience and by the power of God, William held on, seizing every advantage that dexterity and the blunders of his adversaries placed within his reach, until at last he saw the independence of his country formally acknowledged and the tide of persecution and cruelty rolled back.

The noble Prince fell at last under the assassin's hand, but in his last moments how he must have been supported by the consciousness that, by his fidelity to God and the truth he had saved his country from the curse.

WHEN WILL JESUS COME AGAIN?

Reasons from Scripture why the Second Advent may be Expected Before the Millennium.

BY REV. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

THAT our Lord will come again in the glory of his royal Person is clearly taught in Scripture. As an article of faith it is reiterated in all the evangelical creeds of the Church from the beginning. That there will be a millennium of universal holiness on the earth is also definitely revealed in the prophetic Word, as it has been the anticipated hope of the Church universal. We now submit the following propositions as indicating the relations one to another, of these two events, viz.: The King and the Kingdom.

I. The present age is #### An Elective Age.

From the day of Pentecost till now, under the most faithful and powerful preaching, no one city or country has been wholly converted. The husbandman sowed wheat, but the enemy sowed tares. They grow together until the end. The tares never become wheat. They are not transformed by preachers, but gathered out at the end by angels, and burned with fire. The Son of Man and his mighty angels will introduce the Kingdom-age when the children of the wicked one, those who have not been regenerated, shall be rooted out. Then shall the true wheat be gathered into the heavenly garner. The same purposes are unfolded under the figure of the drag-net. When it was full they drew to shore, and gathered the good into vessels, but cast the bad away. Such is the picture of the end of this age, when the wicked shall be severed from among the just. The wicked are not absorbed into the just, but removed from them. There can be no millennium then till after the end of this age. There is no room for a converted world while tares mingle with wheat and bad fish are found in the same net with the good. The separation takes place when our Lord arrives from the distant country, who will therefore himself inaugurate millennial conditions.

The Church Opposed Till the End.

II. The Church is always represented in this age as a martyr. She is to be a faithful witness, and as such will bring opposition from the world against herself. Not for the beginning of the age only did our Lord declare, "In the world ye shall have tribulation." (John 16: 33.) Persecution is not a relic of barbarous ages. "All that live godly in Christ Jesus, shall suffer persecution." (II. Tim. 3: 12.) Let but a faithful Church antagonize a godless world and instantly will the hatred shown by Pharisees and Sadducees, Herodians, and Gentile rulers at the beginning intensify against every loyal disciple of the Master. Nor will this antagonism to the Christ-life in his Church be exhibited by Chinese Buddhists, or Hindoo Brahmins, by Turkish Mohammedans, or African Pagans alone, but also by the millions of Christianized, but not converted formalists of America, England and Continental Europe.

If then, this antagonism to Jesus by philosophers, scientists, men of letters, aristocrats, plebeians, money lovers; by the intemperate, the infidel, the sceptic, the unclean, and the formal religionist, as well as the cultured heathen, and cannibalistic pagan continues until the Lord shall come, where is there room for a period of universal righteousness, unselfishness, and practical brotherhood before his predicted arrival? Scoffers and unbelievers will certainly continue to the end until they are overtaken by judgments more terrific than those which overwhelmed the ante-diluvian world, or doomed the wicked city of Sodom.

If the world is converted, and all men are found righteous before our Lord's second coming, what means this awful Scripture, "The Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ: who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power—in that day." (II. Thess. 1: 7-10.) Will not our Lord find the wilfully ignorant and the consciously disobedient in the midst of their rebellion? As refusers of his grace now they will be the subjects of his wrath when he comes again. There will be no converted race to hail him, Lord of all. The same world which cast him out at first, and opposed his Church during the centuries will be found arrayed against him to the end.

The Advent and the Resurrection.

III. The resurrection of the righteous dead will surely precede the millennium. The unrighteous dead will also be raised, but not until after the millennial Kingdom—the thousand years reign of Christ and his saints. This is not a matter of interpretation, but of Scripture statement. (Rev. 20: 5.) Another Biblical statement declares that the first resurrection (viz.: the resurrection of the righteous dead), will take place immediately when Jesus comes (I. Thess. 4: 16.) This also proves beyond question the precedence of the Advent to the millennium. To plady, a man deeply learned in the Scriptures, and withal of fervent piety thus confessed his faith: "I am one of those old fashioned people who believe the doctrine of the millennium, and that there will be two distinct resurrections of the dead: first of the just and second of the unjust; which last resurrection of the reprobate will not commence till thousand years after the resurrection of the elect." To plady preferred to follow the Father and the Apostles, rather than the new-fashioned folk of whose pretended luminosity holy Manton wrote, "All new light is old darkness revived it is neither new nor light."

That the resurrection had been denied from the beginning we know from Paul's condemnation of Hymenæus and Philetus, who overthrew the faith of some by claiming that the resurrection had passed already. The Swedenborgian followers of Hymenæus and Philetus may well weigh the serious words of the late Prof. Christlieb: "Whoever denies the bodily resurrection should be honest enough no longer to speak of resurrection at all. Resurrection does not refer to the spirit, the continued existence of which the Scripture takes as a matter of course, but only to the body, and its issuing alive from the grave. Only that can rise again that has been laid down in the grave, and that is only the body not the spirit."

Remember, then, O my reader, that the resurrection of the believer is connected with the blessed hope of our Lord's return. When he manifested, we shall be manifested, and the too, one thousand years before the end of the millennial day. Let us triumph in this our hope "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." And let us rejoice then when Christ comes this second time in his personal glory, them also which sleep in Jesus will be given one to another.

CHRISTIAN HERALD AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

FACE TO FACE WITH GOD.

THERE is an art in everything. If, when the harvests are ripe, we should go into the fields, we would find that while one husbandman goes over the field, cutting down the grain with great exhaustion, halting at the end of the first swath before he has strength again to strike into the grain, another man goes for two or three hours without halting, save to sharpen his instrument—goes from one side of the field to the other without any special fatigue. What is the difference? In the one case the man knows how to swing the scythe, and in the other he does not. One man will go out with a fishing apparatus that has cost him fifty dollars, and catch absolutely nothing the livelong day; while another man, with an apparatus prepared with his own jackknife, will catch so many of the spoils of the water that his basket will scarcely hold them. What is the difference? In the one case, the man knows how to fish; in the other, he does not. We acknowledge that there is an art in everything. Is there any art in religion?

Why is it that one man starts out in the Christian life and makes rapid advancement? He seems to walk across the field, going from one degree of grace to another, getting stronger and mightier in the Christian life, with no especial drawback, his misfortunes and his trials becoming his coadjutors, so that at the end of thirty years he can look back and see that he has made one long, complete triumph; while another man will be thirty years in the Church of God and achieve nothing, standing where he was at the start, or having retreated, not really having so much faith or usefulness as the first year. Why is it that one man goes ahead and the other goes back? Is there any art in religion? There is. No man gets on in the Christian life by accident. There is no such thing as hap-hazard. If a man advance in the Christian life rapidly and mightily, it is because he employs certain means and does certain things in order to gain those achievements.

There is one great secret of advancement in religious experience, and that is secret prayer. It is very easy to come into a public assemblage, and stimulated by the hearty singing and by the cheerful faces of scores and hundreds of God's people, to bow our head and lift our hearts in prayer; but to have some secret place where, day by day, either at morning, or at noon, or at night, we kneel down before God, no one in the whole world listening, and to do that thing day after day, and month after month, and year after year, and for scores of years—that is not so easy a thing to do. It wants some perseverance, some high appreciation of duty, some grand Christian determination, some Almighty help. No one can pray in public his whole prayer. Take the best man in the world, and let him rise up before God in public assemblage, and tell all his temptations and sorrows and annoyances and grievances and deficits, and he would clear the room in ten minutes. People would say, "We didn't come into the house of prayer to-night to have our ears and hearts insulted." We knew an excellent Christian man who had the habit in prayer-meeting, of telling the most astounding things of what he used to do and where he used to go. We all believed in him as a useful man; but we all wished he would not go so much into particulars. It edified no Christian ear, it advanced no Christian heart. And yet there is a place where a man ought to be able to tell everything to his God, to review all his past life, to count up all the wonderful deliverances, and take all the annoyances and the grievances of the present moment before God; but if he has no closet of secret prayer, where shall he do that? There is no such thing as stalwart Christian character except that which grows in private, and which starts from secret communion with God—an out-and-out unlimited utterance such as a man cannot give in a public religious assemblage.

GOOD LETTERS.

WE notice that the change of postmasters still goes on. The right administration of their office has so much to do with the public welfare, that no good citizen can be indifferent. What vast strides since, in the fifteenth century, the butchers and drovers were the carriers of letters from place to place, and the reception of perhaps half a dozen letters was more than the average of a lifetime, until now, on cheap paper, with cheap pen and cheap ink, we may put all we have to say in an envelope, and with a two-cent stamp on the outside, and the name and residence of our friend or correspondent on the back of the envelope, we may commit it for lightning travel to its place of destination! Let this blessing be rightly appreciated by all the people, and all attempts to injure the postal system, by blackmailing, the transmission of the dishonest and unclean, come to exposure and imprisonment. What a day we live in! Through what quick and confidential modes the world is brought together in sympathy! May all these agencies, postal, telephonic and telegraphic, be consecrated to God and the world's betterment, and all we say, and all we write, and all we do, be productive of usefulness! But nothing will ever take the place of the letter. It has a privacy that never belonged to the telegram; it has a voice which never dies. Some of us have such letters stuck away among our valuables, and though the hand that wrote them long ago has turned to dust, the written words are to-day as warm with sentiment and love as the hour they were posted. A letter of Christian advice, a letter of kind admonition, a letter of condolence, is potent beyond the spoken word, and will live after the hand that wrote it has forgotten its cunning. Claudius wrote a letter to Felix; David wrote a letter to Joab; Mordecai sent letters to the Jews; Paul carried letters to Damascus; but all these have less meaning for you than the last letter written you by your departed father, or mother, or brother, or sister, or child. May we all have the grace of Christian correspondence! May our lives instead of being misdirected letters in the dead-letter post-office, be living epistles read and known of all men!

BRIEF NOTES.

The Customs duties collected at the port of New York last year amounted to $163,235,263.

The amount collected in the churches, in London, on Hospital Sunday was $210,000. This was $5,000 more than in any previous year.

There is a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor in the Wisconsin State Prison which has more than a hundred members and is doing good work.

The returns so far received of the Hospital Sunday collections in New York show an increase over former years. At Grace Episcopal Church the collection amounted to $1,450.

Two thousand women of India, have signed a petition to the Queen of England, asking that restriction may be put on child-marriages by raising the marriageable age of girls from ten to fourteen years.

Young Men's Christian Associations are being organized in Jerusalem, Ramleh and Lydda. Mr. Hind Smith who is engaged in the work has secured the co-operation of the Bishop of Jerusalem.

Rev. Thomas Harrison received a warm welcome at Seventeenth Street M. E. Church last Sunday. The services have opened with the best prospects of success.

Rev. C. E. Andrews, the pastor of the Congregational Church, at Somerville, Mass., is successfully carrying on the revival work in the Windsor Avenue Church, Hartford, Conn., which was begun by E. W. Bliss of Chicago, a few weeks ago.

Rev. E. P. Telford, after finishing his labors in Grace Church, Jersey City Heights, has commenced a series of meetings in Trinity M. E. Church, Boston, Mass. After three weeks in that city he hopes to return to Jersey City to labor in Hedding M. E. Church.

Mr. George Grenfell the eminent missionary explorer, whose portrait and life we recently published, has returned home for a brief rest after his extensive journeys. He says that although he has travelled more extensively in the Congo Basin than any white man, he has never had occasion to fire a shot at a native.

Rev. C. H. Yatman has been holding meetings for a month past, in Akron, O. All the churches in the city united in the work, which was carried on under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. Eleven hundred cards were handed in by inquirers, of whom many have already united with the Churches.

Dr. George F. Pentecost has had a prosperous voyage to India and has commenced his labors in Calcutta. Large numbers of invitations from other cities have been sent to him. He says that the mission stations are deplorably under-manned and begs that Christian people in this country will pray that more missionaries may enter the field, and that God will bless his work in India.

Rev. Jacob Freshman has just issued the ninth annual report of the work of the Hebrew-Christian Mission, 17 St. Mark's Place, New York. It is a record of a year of prosperous work which inspires gratitude to God for all that has been wrought in this important mission. During the year another installment of 5,000 has been paid, leaving now only $5,000 to be raised to free the edifice from debt.

A warning against Zenana workers in India, has been issued by the Mohammedans of Lahore. It cautions Moslems throughout India, against allowing Christian women to enter their homes, and against sending children to Christian schools. It threatens all who disregard the warning with public exposure. It is feared that this circular will close many avenues of usefulness which have been opened by devoted Christian ladies in India.

Mr. S. H. Hadley issues an earnest appeal for financial help in carrying on the old Jerry McAuley Mission in Water Street, New York. We published, in April last, a description of the work there and of the good Mr. Hadley is doing in the rescue of outcasts and the deprived of both sexes. The institution is now sadly crippled by lack of funds and its philanthropic efforts are curtailed just at a time when they are most needed. Gifts of money or clothing would be gratefully received by S. H. Hadley, 316 Water Street, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Fisheries Dispute—Ex-Attorney-General Devens Dead—A Massacre in the Carolines—Work in Congress—Mrs. Fogg's Noble Bequests for Charity—The Indian Troubles—A Chilian Revolution.

All the Correspondence between Lord Salisbury and Premier Blaine on the Fisheries question has been sent to Congress by the State Department. The point in contention involves the right of the United States to forbid all foreign vessels from cruising, or fishing within twenty marine leagues of the islands of St. Paul and St. George, between May 15 and October 15, each year. The violation of this right by Canadian vessels from 1886, till now, has resulted in the partial destruction of the seal fisheries. In his letter, Mr. Blaine shows why England's offer to arbitrate had been declined, and claims essentially that the jurisdiction of the United States over these waters is as well defined as that of England over the river Thames. He announces that the President will ask Britain to agree to a distance of twenty marine leagues, within which no ship shall hover around the seal-breeding islands between the dates mentioned. In conclusion, Mr. Blaine repudiates the statement that this country demanded at any time that Behring's Straits should be a closed sea, except for the purpose and period described. There are now hopes that the entire matter will be settled by arbitration. Sir Julian Pauncefote, the English Minister at Washington, believes that a peaceful solution is exceedingly probable and there may be a suspension of sealing for a time—the number of the animals having been perilously reduced by over-zealous sealers.

Peace and War Alternately Hover Over the republics of South America. Buenos Ayres dispatches record the outbreak of a revolution in Chili, the result of the long struggle between President Balmaseda and the majority in Congress. Ever since the close of the war with Peru, Chili, though victorious in that struggle, has since been in internecine trouble. The Chilians demanded the enactment of reform measures by the Congress, but the President refused to summon that body. The financial inflation of the war period has been followed by a general shrinkage and exchange with Chili is lower than in many years. American merchants dealing with that republic do not anticipate any serious outcome of the revolution beyond a temporary hindrance to business. Jose Manuel Balmaseda, whose portrait is given in this column, is fifty years of age, and has, since 1864, held many high offices in the Chilian Government. He visited this country twenty-four years ago in an official capacity. At the breaking out of the war between Chili and Peru, he was sent as Minister plenipotentiary to the Argentine Republic, to pledge it to non-intervention, and he succeeded. After filling the post of Minister of the Interior from 1882 till 1885, he was rewarded for his services by being elected to the Presidency.

Charles Devens, Jurist, Soldier and Orator, Died in Boston, of heart failure, on the 7th inst, at the age of seventy. Judge Devens was United States Marshal for Massachusetts when the war broke out and he went to the front at once. Major of the 3rd Battalion of Infantry, he was wounded at Ball's Bluff and was then made Brigadier-General. He was in the battles of Antietam, Fredericksburg and Fair Oaks being disabled at the latter engagement, and again at Chancellorsville where he led a division of the Eleventh Corps. Despite all his wounds, he was the first at the head of his troops to occupy Richmond. After the war, he was appointed to the Supreme Bench, and in 1877, resigned to accept the Attorney-Generalship under President Hayes. At the close of his term, he was again appointed to the bench. Judge Devens was a man of singular force of character, and exemplary Christian conduct. His decisions on the bench were as sound and upright as his bravery on the field was admirable.

The International Monetary Conference met in Washington last week, and was called to order by Mr. Blaine. Peru, the Argentine Republic, Bolivia, Chili, Ecuador, Hayti, Hawaii, Honduras, Mexico, Nicaragua, Venezuela and the United States were represented. A number of very interesting addresses were made. Senor Romero, of Mexico, was chosen as President of the Conference. In view of the non-arrival of several delegates, the Conference adjourned without action, subject to the call of the chair. It will reassemble shortly when action will be taken looking to legislation placing all the countries in the Conference on a footing of monetary reciprocity.

Returns from Three Hundred and Sixty-Eight districts of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of the vote on the question of changing the Constitution of the Church so as to admit women as representatives to the General Conference, have been received. From these it is seen that 196,928 were cast in favor and 117,674 against the proposed amendment, the ladies having a majority of 76,254. These districts comprise about three-fifths of the entire country, so that if this ratio holds, the ladies will have about 100,000 majority on the great question at issue.

A Few Weeks ago, "The Christian Herald" published a statement describing the serious condition of affairs at Ponape, in the Caroline Islands, where, owing to the interference of the Spanish Jesuit priests, the natives had risen in revolt against Spanish rule. Mr. Herbert Rand, of Carthage, Ills., the recently appointed U. S. Consul, has just received letters from his brother who has been a missionary to the Carolines for the past eighteen years, which contain startling accounts of outrages committed by the natives against their white oppressors. Since the beginning of the revolt, three hundred foreigners have been killed, including one hundred and ninety Spanish soldiers and many officers. The houses of all the missionaries at Ponape have been raided, looted and gutted, little else being left of the structures than a mass of ruins. The whole trouble has arisen from Jesuit interference, with the view of driving out the Protestant missionaries. The Catholics for a time succeeded, but their plots have now recoiled upon themselves.

The Leading Features in Congress, thus far, during the present session were the death of the Election or "Force" bill and the great Silver debate in the Senate. By a vote of 34 to 29, the Election bill was displaced on January 5, the Financial bill coming up instead. Seven Western Republicans: Jones, Houp, Stanford, Teller, Washburn, Wolcott and McConnell voted with the Democrats to shelve the "Force" bill, and it is generally understood that there are exceedingly faint hopes of its resurrection during the present session. When the debate on the Financial bill opened, Mr. Stewart (Nevada), moved to amend by adding a free coinage clause, which would remonetize silver and restore it to the place it occupied before it was excluded from the mints of the United States and Europe. The debate promises to take a wide range, and to occupy the attention of the Senate almost exclusively for a considerable time.

Parnell Still Maintains the Fight for Political life and prestige. He and William O'Brien again conferred at Boulogne on the 6th inst. John J. Clancy and John Redmond, two members of the Irish Parliamentary party, being present. The decision reached points to the choice of John Dillon as the leader of the party instead of either Justin McCarthy or William O'Brien. This arrangement, it is said, will heal all the differences in the party, and facilitate the retirement of Parnell. It is again asserted that Mr. Gladstone, who has been greatly shaken by the Parnell episode, contemplates early withdrawal from public life. He wrote to a friend recently that he "feared his end had come, so far as public life and politics are concerned." He has published a letter declaring that he made no offer of office to Parnell at any time, and that when he spoke to Mr. Morley of Parnell's retirement it was not of a temporary but an immediate retirement, leaving the question of permanency undiscussed.

All Indications Point to a Big Battle Between the hostile Cheyennes and Sioux and the troops under General Brooke (see portrait), before the present troubles in South Dakota are ended. There are still about 4,000 Indians camped at different points in the Bad Lands, and Gen. Miles is endeavoring to surround them by a strong military cordon, so as to compel surrender. He has about 8,000 available troops. Occasional brushes with the enemy during the week have increased the alarm at Pine Ridge, and there is talk of the Indians being determined to burn the agency buildings and massacre the small garrison, but this Gen. Miles declares improbable. Col. Forsythe, who commanded at the Wounded Knee Creek battle, has been suspended on charges of unsoldierly conduct, and responsibility, for the deaths of over 60 squaws and children found on the field after the fight. Army officers have already superseded several Indian Bureau Agents by the President's orders, and the entire Sioux reservation is now under military control. The big hostile camp is on White Clay Creek, near the White River, where it is almost impossible for them to be surprised or stampeded by the troops, although they can be shelled out. Lieutenant Casey, of the Twenty-second Infantry, commanding a scouting party, advanced too near the enemy, and, although warned by friendly Ogallalas, was shot dead by a treacherous Brule Sioux. The Ogallalas in the hostile camp quarrelled with the other Indians over the assassination, and a hot fight ensued, which was heard miles away.

One of the Most Liberal Bequests to Educational and charitable institutions in late years was that of Mrs. Elizabeth Perkins Fogg, who died lately, and whose will has just been filed for probate. Harvard University receives $200,000 for an art museum; Yale $40,000 for the aid of students in the theological department; $50,000 is given for a library in the testator's native town of South Berwick, Me.; the Union Theological Seminary receives two bequests of $20,000 each, the income to be loaned or given to deserving students, as the trustees may decide; $100,000 more is divided equally among nine charitable and benevolent institutions in New York City, one being the Young Women's Christian Association, which receives $10,000. This lady, who so nobly dispensed her wealth where it will certainly do great good, was the widow of William H. Fogg, a wealthy New Yorker, and belonged to a leading New England family.

A MAN WHO COULD NOT SAY "NO."

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SURGEON.

An Easy-going King—Easily Persuaded—I. Modern Types of the Man—Choose a Fashionable Religion—Make no Public Profession of Religion—At Peace with Both Sides—Apt to Yield—II. The Cause of the Evil—General Softness of Character—Love of Ease—Cowardliness—Without Fear of God—A Hamburg Burgomaster's Threat—III. Where the Softness Leads—Loss of Self-Respect—Dishonor of Station—Palissy's Answer to the King of France—IV. The Cure.

"Then Zedekiah the king said, Behold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you." Jeremiah 38: 5.

PUT not your trust in princes." Zedekiah professed to be a friend to Jeremiah; but when the princes sought permission to put the prophet to death, Zedekiah's friendship was not worth much. He said, "He is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you." Instead of protecting his friend and adviser, he gave him over at once, and left him as a lamb at the mercy of wolves.

Zedekiah was a gentleman of a sort wonderfully common nowadays. A good-natured, easy man; his nobles could get anything they liked from him. He would not act amiss of his own self, but he would follow the lead of others, wherever that might lead him. He had a great respect for the prophet; he liked to visit him, and know what message he had received from God. He did not wish to have it known that he did consult him; but still he liked to steal away in private, and have a talk with the man of God. He much respected the man so sorrowful, and yet so heroic. But when the princes came round him, though he was an autocratic king, and could have snuffed out those gentlemen at once, yet half-a-dozen of them, all very glib of speech, most easily persuaded him, he did not want to have any bother: he would do ## Anything for a Quiet Life.

"The king is not he that can do any thing against you." As much as to say: "I cannot say 'No' to you, if you wish it. I am sorry; I think you are wrong, but I will not insist upon my own idea. You may take the prophet and, if you like, you may put him into a dungeon, where he will die. I think you are too hard on a good man, for whom I have a great respect; but at the same time, gentlemen, I am not a man that can stand out against you; and so take him, and do as you please." This is that king Zedekiah: he does not rule, but is ruled by the princes whom he ought to command. "Oh," says one, "you do not mean to insinuate that we have any Zedekiahs about now?" I shall not insinuate anything, but boldly declare that these soft, molluscous beings make up a large proportion of the population, and I think it is highly probable that some of them are here now.

I. I am going, first of all, to describe the like of this man Zedekiah; that I may deal plainly with such. This softness of character takes different shapes, but it is the same base metal, the same worthless dross, in every case. In some it takes the form of inquiring into

What Religion is Fashionable when they settle down in a district. They have a pretty good idea of what truth is. They were taught it by their parents; they have read it in God's Word; they have made up their minds with some distinctness as to what is the correct thing according to Holy Scripture; but they waive their judgment, and prepare to compromise. You see, if you want to get on in business, the best thing is to join with those religious people who are the wealthiest, and most respectable, and fashionable. If you have prospered in business, and saved money—well, the girls want to be married, and the family requires to get into "society," whatever that may mean; so the best thing is not to inquire, "Who preaches the Gospel in this district?" but, "Where will it be best for our commercial advantages, or best for our position in society, and most eligible for the girls?" and there let us go. Children of Judas, thus you sell your Master for forty pieces of silver, and perhaps for less! Is-cariot's tribe is a large one. Not that they want to be wrong, they would prefer to be right: not that they wish to take up with false doctrine, they would much rather take up with right doctrine: but, you see, they must be "respectable." Sound doctrine in preference, but good society at any price. Did you never meet with such folk? I have met them frequently. I know that soft fellow, Zedekiah: I have seen him a great many times.

Another one is of this kind. He is a Christian: at least he hopes that he is; and, on examining his own heart, he trusts that he is; but he has because, you perceive, if you make a profession, then you are distinctly coming out from the world, and declaring yourself to be on the side of Christ and holiness, and a great deal will be expected of you. This may involve you in a good deal of trouble. Is there not an easier path than this? Why should you choose an unpopular way which will cost you many a friendship, and a good deal of enjoyable company? If you openly follow the narrow way, you will be pointed at: people will expect you to be so very careful and so very holy, and this will cost a deal of painful self-denial. Do you hope to be allowed to sneak into heaven by a back door? Take heed to yourselves, lest you be deceived in this.

Never Made any Profession:

Another form of Zedekiah is not uncommon. It is the man who is on both sides. A Christian? Yes, by all means. He takes a class in the Sunday School. "Certainly, sir. Would you not have me active in the cause of Christ?" Of course. He talks to others about the necessity of being found in Christ, and of the excellence of Christian endeavor. We like this young man. But to-morrow night there will be an entertainment of a loose character, and he will be asked to go. Will our virtuous young gentleman yield to the invitation of his worldly friends? Assuredly he will; for he is like putty, and you can mould him at will. "Well," he says, "you know we must not be too strict;" and he goes. Another time there will be sung, in his presence, a song which is a little lewd; and others laugh, and he laughs, too. He says he did not quite like it; yet I do not hear any difference between his laugh and the laugh of others. He is a gentleman who is whatever the company that he gets into. A most genial man is he not? Do you not know the gentleman? You know him, but you do not esteem him. Who could? To me he is a frequent sorrow. God deliver us from duplicity!

"Hail Fellow, Well Met!"

Then, we have another class of Zedekiahs who are of a better sort, but none too good. I trust that they wish to be true at heart, but they are very weak, and apt to yield. If they live in a godly family they will be pleased to be there, and they will be happy and develop into something very good in its way. But if in the order of providence, they should be cast in a family where there is no religion, certainly they will not attempt to alter the state of things, except it be in the mildest, half-hearted manner. The family will be still without religion though they are there. And if they happen to move to a circle openly opposed to godliness—well, it will grieve them very much at first, and they will be rather restless. It will not grieve them quite so much by and-by; and after a while they will themselves become as much opposed to the thing they now admire as the rest of the folks. These are the prey of wolves in sheep's clothing. They have no stamina, no backbone, no inward root. Be you not of this sort.

II. Now, very briefly, let me search out

The Cause of this Error.

which spoils the character of Zedekiah. Maybe, we may put our finger on an evil which may be cured by grace. It is not always the same in everybody, but with some there is a general softness of character. I do not say that they have a soft place in their head. Possibly I may not say the whole truth if I suggest they have a soft place in their heart; but they are soft altogether; fine material for a potter to work upon. You can cast them into any shape you choose. I will tell you what has often happened in this Tabernacle. A man has come into this place and stood in the aisle, hating the very thought of true religion, with a heart like a flint; and when I have been busy with my hammer, by God's grace I have come down on that flint, and the flint has gone to pieces in a minute, broken to shivers. But others are here who are india-rubber men, and when I am hammering they yield to each blow. I can mould them as I please, but when the sermon is done, they always get back into the old shape. There is a vast difference between the honest obstinacy of the one, and the trivial submission of the other.

Another reason for this softness is a selfish love of ease. Sluggards are by no means an extinct race. Many will pay any tax if they may but dwell at ease. Beware of this in your personal character. A man says, "I admit that I ought to have spoken right out, and denounced evil." "Why did you not?" "Well, you see, I

Do not like Offending People."

Lazy lover of yourself! That is all it comes to. His wish to please his fellows is only a phase of his desire to please himself. The coward wishes to save his precious carcass from trouble, and let himself go sauntering along the road of pleasure without distressing exertion, so he says, "Yes, sir. Yes, sir. Well yes, sir," to everybody. He destroys his soul for the sake of taking things easy. Do I not speak to a great many here who are of this kind.

Some others, I must say, are if possible, even more contemptible than these. They are cowards. Are there not some here that have thought about eternal life, and would long ago have given serious consideration to their souls' affairs, but they are afraid of—well, I will not mention him; you know who it is that you are afraid of? But so it is the world over. I have known a man afraid of his daughter; I have known many more daughters afraid of their father; many a wife afraid of her husband, and some husbands afraid of their wives, their employers, their brothers, their friends. Soldiers in the barrack-room are often fearful of their messmates; and workmen down at the shop are alarmed because there is one sharp fellow in the room who is an infidel, and would give them no peace if they made an avowal of their faith. It would demean a great many if we were to expose their petty cowardices. Are you not ashamed of yourselves, if it be so?

The bottom of all is, however, that when a man is thus timid about doing right, and can be easily persuaded to do wrong, there is a want of the fear of God in him. He that fears God is under no necessity to fear anybody else. True godliness infuses courage into the heart; in this respect also "perfect love casteth out fear." If we had a sense of God's presence everywhere, we should not dare consent to sin, whoever it was that bade us do so. I remember in the life of my dear friend, Mr. Oncken, of Hamburg, when he began to baptize people in the Alster, contrary to the law. He was brought up and that worthy magistrate put him several times in prison. At last Mr. Burgomaster said, "I tell you what it is, Mr. Oncken; the law must be obeyed. Do you see that little finger of mine? As long as that little finger will move, I will put you down in your illegal baptisms." "Well," said my brave old friend, "Mr. Burgomaster, with all respect to you, I do see that little finger of yours; but do you see that great hand of God? I am afraid that you do not see it as I do. But, as long as that great hand of God is with me, you cannot put me down." I opened Mr. Oncken's chapel in Hamburg some years afterwards, and I had most respectable audience gathered together to hear me preach the Gospel, and in the centre of that audience sat the Burgomaster. He was far more rejoiced to be there than to be carried ing out an oppressive law. His little finger had ceased in its movements against the Baptists, and there he sat to show what the power of God's right arm could do; for he was listening to the Word of God from a Baptist preacher, in a meeting-house built by the man whom he had been called upon to put down. Oh, why are we afraid of men!

Before the Burgomaster,

III. I want, in the next place, to show you

Where this Softness Leads.

When a man is like Zedekiah, who cannot say anything against the princes, but must let them have their own way, what comes of it? Certainly nothing that is good. First, I think that such an easy-going creature dishonors his own self. Does yonder young man confess that he cannot say "no": that he must do as he is asked, and cannot stand out against even a wicked request? Then I am sorry for him. Is he a man? Is he not lowering himself beneath the dignity of manhood? I do not know, dear friends, what you think about the opinions of others; but I have always felt that if I could keep a good opinion of myself, so far that my conscience could not accuse me of doing wrong, I was not particularly anxious about what anybody else's opinion of me might be. "But," said one to a good man, "if you do that one pleasant thing nobody will know of it, and to you will not be disgraced in the eyes of anybody." "No," said the good man, "but I should be disgraced in my own eyes if I did it, and I have more respect for my own judgment of myself than I have for other people's opinion of me." This is not egotism, but uprightness of heart.

Palissy's Retort.

Again, dear friends, such trimming brings dishonor upon one's position. Only think of his. "The king—the king," he says, "The king is not he that can do any thing against you;" and further on we read, "Zedekiah the king said, I am afraid." Pretty king that! His kingship was defiled, his crown was stained, when he came into that condition of bondage. "Call him 'slave.'" Think of a king saying, "I am afraid;" but that is what the French king said to Bernard Palissy, the potter. As nearly as I can remember the story, the monarch said, "Palissy, you must go to mass." "That I never will," said Palissy. "Then I am afraid that I shall have to give you up to be burnt." "There," said Palissy, "your majesty could not make me say such a word as that with all the power you have. I am no king, but only a poor potter, but nobody ever made me say, 'I am afraid.'" Oh, what fear of men, that dread of ridicule!

Shall I tell you what this will still further add to? Well, you will demean yourself, and degrade your position, and then the day will probably come when you will give up all religion. I have seen it actually done. Yes, I have seen a young man, who has been, at home, most all that you could desire, and he has come to London and dropped into a warehouse where there was no Christian feeling; and at last he has gone to a place of worship. But after a while has gone wandering out for a little excursion on the Sabbath, and by-and-by he has become a ringleader among those who are to laugh at sacred things. One has a power of observation here, and sees sad sights perpetually. Little by little every gracious habit is trampled on through fear of man. The weak young man slides down, down, down. His easy descents his life-vessel has glided down the rapids with the current, till at last, he that was fair for Heaven, shoots over the dread Niagara of everlasting ruin. I am afraid, young man, that your easy compliance with bad companions will ultimately lead to your giving up religion. I pray you, pause.

The Cure.

IV. I will finish with this. I would labor to free men from this complaint. I would labor to free them from it by the grace of God. First, I would say to you, remember, dear friend, if you continue in this undecided, yielding condition, you will miss your way altogether. You must grow firm, for without it you cannot be a Christian. It is necessary, in order to obey Christ, that you should take up your cross and follow him. He will never number you amongst his disciples if you say "yea," and yet do "nay"—if you call him Master and Lord, and yet try to please the world. "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." You must come out on the Lord's side. The promise is, "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean thing; and I will receive you, and will be a Father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty." You cannot be Christians without being decided, without having your minds made up for righteousness and faith in Christ.

Do not make any mistake about it. Whatever you seem to gain in personal ease, by halting and hesitating now, it

Will Cost You Dear in the End.

If a man firmly takes his stand, and says, "I am a Christian," it is the best thing to do in the great battle of life. If you yield a little you will have to yield more, and, having yielded more, you will have to yield altogether. If ever the Spirit of God should fetch you out to be clear and decided, it will be awfully hard work to escape from the nets and traps which you are creating by your present yielding. To say "No," however difficult, is an easier thing than to trifle and to hesitate, and almost comply. You lose even when you seem to gain, if you let the tempter have his way.

Do not think, dear friend, that you are gaining anyone's esteem by sinful compliance, for you are doing the reverse: you are lowering yourself before the Philistines. Your example is ruined; your influence is destroyed; you are doing harm, and not good. The men that the world thinks most of are the men that stand up, stand straight, stand firm.

He Wins Respect

who, knowing his mind, and having his mind fixed on Christ and divine truth, becomes a voice for Christ, and speaks plainly and boldly. Men despise you else. If you have no manliness, how can you have any godliness?

In the next world, what must be the doom of the man who was ashamed of Christ, when the Lord himself will say, "I am ashamed of him! I am ashamed of him!" The Lord Jesus is not ashamed of the penitent drunkard: for he cleanses him. He is not ashamed of the repenting harlot, but permits her to wash his feet with her tears. But in that day he will be ashamed of all those who have been ashamed of him. He cannot own us if we deny him.

May God bless this word of mine! I have not so much preached the Gospel as shown you your need of the grace of God to make you decide for Jesus. May that grace be sought and found at once, for his dear sake! I have worn out all my strength in pleading with you. May the Lord himself take you in hand! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

*A Child of Nature.

FATHER FLYNN was a child of nature, of rustic feeling and rugged frame. He loved horses and dogs; the bishop loved neither. When his own comfort was advanced through their agency, he showed some little interest in them. He had no objection to the fine hare killed by the priest's famous grey-hound Nancy, when presented to him by Nancy's master. He was even seen to pat the priest's horse Music, after conveying him twenty miles on an important visit. But the bishop was extraordinarily good-natured on that day, going far beyond his niggard disposition, inquiring even into Music's pedigree and value. The bishop had horses of his own, but he thought of them only as so much machinery, like his carriages. Weightier matters of the law in relation to Church and State engrossed the thoughts of this consequential dignitary; why should he give his attention or affection to animals—or to human beings either?

* Father Flynn, by George C. Needham. The story of a Catholic priest's conversion to Christ. James A. O'Connor, Bible House, New York, Publisher.

He would hunt a heretic to the death, and never paused to question conscience when he set his traps for Protestant "gentry."

The Priest Resigns and Gives his Reasons.

MY LORD BISHOP . . . . . It often goaded me nigh to madness, and drove me to the verge of despair, to observe the scheming, lying, dishonesty, and immorality practiced by leading ecclesiastics in the name of the Church. How often have I heard you say that you hated Protestants for the glory of God! Were I not an Irishman I would possibly have become an infidel. Mercifully has God preserved me from this hell on earth by permitting me to hear and believe the simple Gospel of Jesus Christ. I now read the Bible; I believe its inspired statements, accept its gracious invitations, and trust implicitly in its assuring promises. I must believe that Christ, my divine Lord, is an all-sufficient Saviour. The blood of the adorable Redeemer is now my plea; His cross is my glory; his absolution is my salvation. I wish to follow him fully; to be free from every influence which would prevent me from the study of the Bible; to guard my conscience from falsehood and my life from insincerity. You know I could not be a sincere follower of Christ while a priest of Rome; you, on knowing my purpose to give God's Word to the people, would be the first to weave a net around my feet from which I could not escape; every Jesuit agent under your instructions would hound me to death. The chapel, rectory, and other property of the Church will be found duly cared for; my housekeeper will resign the keys to your messenger.

Thought They Saw the Priest's Ghost.

"God be good to us all," said Jimmy McBride, as he gave his version of the story to a questioning group of the emigrants on the ship. "He was drowned in a lake, an' he came up through the say. There must be a big tunnel under the world."

"Did you see him, Jimmy?" inquired Patsy Dineen.

"Faix, that I did," replied the lying Jimmy, who began to feel self-important in the eyes of his eager listeners, and in order to maintain his newly acquired fame gave free reins to his fevered fancy and Irish tongue. "You see," continued the imperturbable Jimmy, "Father Flynn was a great angler, an' bein' fond of sport he went out with his rod to Lough Coppel. Well, he made a cast, when in a minute a bouncer of a salmon le'p'd for the tail fly. 'Bedad! he missed,' says the priest; 'but I'll get you yet, me boy,' says he, as he threw again as purty a cast as you ever saw over the swirl where me whopper struck the surface. 'Aha, maybe I'll get you,' says a voice out in the lake. The priest hadn't a chance to cross himself, his two hands being on the rod, and he being that anxious to hook the salmon, threw again, when, tare an' ages! the rod was whipped out of his hands, and he was dragged down into the pool, and that was the last seen of him till to-night."

A Warm Welcome.

Father O—— (another converted priest) took the weary Father Flynn to his home, where he was bidden sweet welcome for Christ's sake. When presented to Father O——'s queenly wife, she gave him the tender welcome of a warm Christian Irish heart. During the hours which followed he seemed like a man enjoying a delightful dream with the fear haunting him that it was only a dream, soon to melt away. He heard from Father O—— of several priests who had recently fled from Leo to Jesus; how that many of them had been fed, sheltered, and counselled by Father and Mrs. O—— until suitable employment was found for them. He heard with additional wonder that in New York and its vicinity several hundreds of Roman Catholics were converted from idols to serve the living and true God; that a great movement was going on among them throughout the country, and that priests and people were inquiring the way of salvation. "Yes," broke in Mrs. O——, "and Jesus saved you, Mr. Flynn, that you might be his witness."

Mount Carmel. (From a photograph brought from the Holy Land by Dr. Talmage.)

There are thousands of our countrymen waiting for the opportunity, and you must co-operate with my good husband in preaching to the Irish Catholics the Gospel of God's grace."

MOUNT CARMEL. (See Illustration.)

WHILE many of the traditions identifying certain places in the Holy Land with events recorded in Scripture are apocryphal, there are some which are evidently well-grounded. Among the latter is the tradition identifying Mount Carmel. The visitor noting the position of the mountain now pointed out, its configuration and surroundings, can have no doubt that it is the veritable mountain, on which occurred that memorable scene in Israel's history which is described in 1. Kings 18. During his recent visit to the Holy Land Dr. Talmage secured a photograph of the mountain, which is reproduced on this page.

Carmel stands on the southern side of the Bay of Acre, running out boldly almost into the Mediterranean and extending almost in a straight line inland for about twelve miles, when it terminates suddenly in a bluff corresponding to its western end. It is a range of hills rather than a mountain and varies considerably in height. At the Mediterranean end it is six hundred feet above the level of the sea, while its eastern end is 1,600 feet high. At one point about four miles from its eastern extremity its head is 1,728 feet in height. Its name signifies park or garden, and it is justified by the surprising fertility of its soil. Hyacinths, jonquils, anemones, etc., grow wild upon it. A recent traveller says, "There is not a flower that I have seen in Galilee, or on the plains along the coast that I do not find here on Carmel still the fragrant, lovely mountain that he was of old." This description, however, only applies to the eastern part of the ridge. Nearer to the Mediterranean, vegetation dwindles, the sides of the mountain are steep and rocky and support only a few dwarf shrubs, and aromatic herbs and a few scattered trees. Its structure is of the soft white limestone with veins of flint, which is common in Palestine. Caves abound; one traveller reports finding as many as two thousand and among them were some of great length. There are also deep fissures so filled with dense jungle as to be almost impenetrable. It is probable that the caves of which Obadiah spoke (1. Kings 18:13), in which he hid the Lord's prophets, were on Carmel. To the present day, monks and hermits make their homes in these recesses.

Upon the northwest summit is the old monastery of Carmelite monks. It was founded about 1156, A.D., by Berthold, Count of Limoges, but the monks claim that their Order originated with Elijah himself. They spread to Europe, where they established houses in England, France, and Italy.

The gathering of the thousands of Israel, which King Ahab summoned at the command of Elijah, and must have been held at the eastern extremity of the ridge. It had evidently been previously regarded as a sacred place, for Elijah did not make an altar, but "repaired the altar of the Lord that was broken down." There was abundant room for an enormous assemblage at the foot of the mountain in the plain that stretches away to Mount Gilboa. From thence the two altars on the hill-side would be in full view. The people could see the eight hundred and fifty priests of Baal clamoring to the idol for an answer to their prayers and cutting themselves in their frenzied despair when no answer came. Then in the twilight they would see the fire descend at Elijah's petition, and the great cry went up, "The Lord he is the God; the Lord he is the God."

Elijah, we are told, went up to the top of Carmel, after that great day. He sent his servant to see if there were any signs of coming rain, and bade him look toward the east. The Mediterranean is not visible from the summit of the eastern bluff, but a few minutes would bring him to a crag from which the wide expanse of blue waters can be seen. Over there on his seventh journey, he saw the cloud the size of a man's hand, which eventually spread over the sky and dissolved in the rain for which the people had been longing for three weary years.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

BY REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Continued from page 14.)

SYNOPSIS OF THE STORY.

[THE scene of the story is in the village of Settleworth where Abram Hardale, better known as Old Crusty, carries on business as a carpenter. His assistant is George Appleton, a Christian young man of studious habits, the only son of a godly widow. Ira Mansfield, Old Crusty's niece, is the daughter of his deceased sister, who married Rupert Mansford, an aristocratic scapegrace. She was formerly engaged to Rupert's elder brother, Richard, and when she married Rupert, Richard went away broken-hearted to Australia where he engaged in farming and grew rich. Rupert became poor, committed crime, and was sent to Australia as a convict. There he was shot by another convict, and died in his brother Richard's house. Richard returned home incognito to look after his brother's widow and her daughter Nora. He assumes the name of Magrath, goes to Settleworth and hires The Heron, an old cottage, reputed to be haunted. He hears that Nora is in the habit of meeting Gerald Towneley, a young squire of dissipated habits. George Appleton, who is in love with her, has also suspected her of being intimate with him, and persuades his mother to warn her against him. Her uncle, Abram Hardale, hears she is heiress of an estate in the neighborhood called Hazelcroft, which formerly belonged to her uncle Richard Mansford, but which her father took possession of when Richard disappeared and was supposed to be dead. A lawyer named Gabriel Grubb who has an convict, named Jasper Rawdon, for his clerk, induces Ahram Hardale to commence suit on behalf of Nora for the estate. From this point the story proceeds.]

[T was necessary to Jasper Rawdon's scheme that he should become personally acquainted with Nora Mansford. He therefore arranged to have a short note conveyed to the unsuspecting girl, informing her that he had a vital secret to impart to her, requesting an interview; giving her the choice of a public or a private one, with witnesses or without; and that, as the secrets of other people besides himself were involved, the first meeting had better be private. The whole tenor of the letter led her to think that George Appleton was involved—so readily do our likings and our interests shape our thoughts and plans. Thus it was that her great grand and vital mistake was made—a mistake that blighted her life with sorrow. She chose a private meeting for the sake of the "other ones" who were said to be involved.

"I am very thankful that you have consented to this meeting, Nora Mansford," said the clever attorney, when they met, "as you will well judge when I tell you that I have come thousands of miles across the sea to get a look at your face. Look at me," he continued, brushing away, or seeming to, the tears, speaking in tremulous and broken tones, which told of feelings almost too deep for speech. "Look at me, dear, and try to remember whether you have seen my face before."

There was a peculiar sinking, a nameless pang at Nora's heart as she peered into the stranger's tender-looking eyes and endeavored unsuccessfully to call his features to remembrance.

"O Nora, Nora!" he cried, in anguish of distress, "I had hoped that in spite of the awful trials that have come and gone since I held you in my knee, and listened to your childish prattling you would have remembered me. Look on me. O my God! let the recognition come. Ah, Nora, I am your father!"

"My father!"

Hush, hush, my Nora, hush! My life and my very life are hanging on a thread. No living mortal may know I am here. I hoped to see my precious Anice, too—to say to that dear patient child, 'Anice, forgive me.' But that is forbidden. She is at rest! She sleeps!"

At Nora was speechless. That first shock gripped her, stifled her, and would not let her go. She gazed at his bronzed face, then began to tremble in every limb. "My father?" she said, slowly, as if talking to herself.

"Why, I understood he was drowned at more than twenty years ago."

"I thought to be, my darling. And now," he continued, sobbing sadly. "I wish to God I had, for Anice is dead without forgiving me; and Anice's Nora, shuts her heart against me." A dead weight fell on Nora's soul, and as if to drive the unwelcome truth away, she put out her hands before her and cried aloud:

"No, no, no! It cannot be true!"

"True!" he exclaimed, wringing his hands in despair, "O, heavens! I did not think of this. If she doubts me, what shall I do?"

"Straightway he told her, briefly, concisely, all she knew of her childhood, of their family affairs, of the wreck of the convict ship, of his desperate escape from Australia; his desperate escape from a view to find his wife and child. As he spoke, the conviction was "borne in on her" that the man was her father—a man with a price on his head, a man of evil life and fame, a man to whom she owed all the bitter sorrow of her life, a man whose very memory was a shame and a disgrace, but still—her father.

A Buddhist Temple at Pantura, near Colombo, Ceylon.

She stood aghast, irresolute, as one in a dream, saying to herself, "What shall I do?"

Then voices were heard and approaching steps. The man placed his finger on his lips.

"Promise me two things, Nora. That you will keep absolute silence. That you will meet me again on Saturday at the same hour in the paddock behind the garden."

She hesitated. He drew a dagger from within his vest, looked wildly round, and said, "Then I'll die at your feet, and have done with it."

The play of the dagger was something eloquent in its terribleness, and Nora said, "I promise!"

It was a sad thing she did; but I am inclined to think that more than a dozen out of every twenty would have done the same. The poor "father" was more grateful than words can tell. He kissed her hand in passionate excess of feeling; he kissed it again and again. "O, my darling," said he, "your poor father's life is in your hands. But it is safe there."

Then our clever rascal suddenly sped away, leaving Nora Mansford dazed, sick at heart, and miserably unhappy, to return alone to her uncle's house. Rawdon strode exultantly along the pathway, twirling his stick and stroking his moustache in self-gratulation. As he passed the gate of "The Hermitage," he saw two keen eyes, a grey beard and a Tam o' Shanter cap peering over the gate. He shrunk into the shadow and wondered whom they belonged to. Had he but known, it might have interfered with his plans a little. George Appleton, who with his tool bag was treading close upon Rawdon's heels, scowled at him, and would gladly have seized the cane he twirled so vigorously to swing it after another fashion, but then he was thinking of Gerald Towneley, whose manner and dress Rawdon had copied with the skill he had learned on the stage, and George was easily deceived; for the night was dark, and there was no moon.

For a few days after Nora's interview with Rawdon, she was altogether too distracted and overcome to determine what best to do. She had vowed that she would keep the matter secret; indeed, if she had not, she did not see how she could dare to make it known. There was something awful in the thought of being the means of driving her father, though he never could be, she felt, a father to her, back again into a hell of bondage, worse than death.

Now and again the thought would occur to her that it could not be true, and that it was all a deception. But this was followed by a calling up of all the agitation and anguish; the love and penitence displayed by her unwelcome companion in that secret interview, and of all the things he told her that could only be known by the parent who had cost her mother such trouble and tears.

Before the Saturday came on which she was again to meet the stranger, all her doubts were scattered, and again she was compelled to come to the conclusion, willy, nilly, that she had been listening to an old true tale, and that he was her father, an escaped convict, and that his fate was sealed if his secret was discovered.

This conviction was forced upon her by an interview with Gabriel Grubb, the lawyer, who concluded that it would be wise, to corroborate the statements of his fellow-conspirator. Accordingly he sent a note to Nora begging her to come to his office, privately, as he had information of great importance to give her. Nora went immediately, wondering what it could be.

Grubb having first pledged her to secrecy, told her that he had learned that her father was not dead as she supposed. That up to a recent date he was serving out his sentence in Australia, but had now made his escape, and the Government was searching for him. Grubb expressed the opinion that the convict, being free, would be sure to try to find Nora, and cautioned her if he should do so, not to make the fact known. He said he had sent for her to warn her of the consequences of doing so, as she might not know them, and might inadvertently put the officers of the law on her father's track. Afterward, when she saw him manacled and dragged off, she might never forgive herself if she had heedlessly contributed to bring such a doom on her own father.

"I have nothing to get and nothing to lose in connection with the matter," said Gabriel Grubb in conclusion. "I tell it you as a friend, if you will allow me to call you so. All the advice I offer you is, if such a thing should be, and it might, that your unfortunate relative should come to you, it will be very advisable, very, to keep the matter as secret as the grave; to render him what help you can, that of course you will do; hang the law, say I, when one's blood relations are in peril; and facilitate his departure to some safer and less suspicious quarter as much as possible. That's all I need to say; we quite understand each other; I shall never interfere further. Perhaps he may never come to see you at all. If he does, you know now what to do."

Nora trembled as she listened. She dare not tell Grubb that her father had already appeared. Grubb saw her agitation, and being satisfied with the result of his communication, with a gallantry unusual with him, guided her faltering footsteps to the street.

It was very needful that he should, for Nora Mansford staggered as if about to fall. Faint and ill, she stood awhile lifting her face to the breeze, and then with a film over her eyes, and a suffocating feeling at the heart, she managed to reach her chamber and her bed. There she lay silent for hours, literally more dead than alive. Of course all she had to do was to put this and that together, and come to the conclusion, "Yes, it's true. He has come, and I am the only living being in the world who knows it. Oh! I wish I could die!"

Now my readers can understand how sweet Nora Mansford came to be enmeshed, entangled, in a horrible sort of bondage. Rawdon acted his part so well that, although love to her father was out of the question—that was a dead thing, and could not come back to life—yet pity, yearning pity, took its place; and she made up her mind that she would die sooner than put her father's life in peril by the utterance of a single word. Through all the awful trial she had held to that.

During the interviews which took place between Rawdon and his dupe he had prepared her for the line of action she was to pursue when the time came. Her Uncle Hardale was sure to win in the case of "Hardale vs. Towneley, re the Hazelcroft Estate," and when he did, she was to insist on the sale of the property, and with that money she could dismiss all her fears, for her "father" would immediately repair to America, and rid her of her trouble for evermore. Of course, he was the real heir to the property, but in the eyes of the law he was a dead man. All his hopes were in her, his "darling Nora, his sainted Anice's precious child."

There were naturally many interviews between Nora and her supposed father, and they were always secret ones. He represented, and she could readily understand, the danger of meeting him openly in the day light. He told her that, if they were seen, and he was recognized, he would surely be arrested. That accounted too for his disguise. So every one who saw them together in the dusk in retired places, thought that Nora had fallen into the toils of that wicked young man, Gerald Towneley. Nora was obliged to let them remain unenlightened lest her father should be traced. She kept the secret well until as narrated in a previous chapter, Mrs. Appleton put the question directly to her whether the trouble she was evidently bearing was connected with Gerald Towneley.

"With who?" said Nora, startled out of all heed for grammar by the question. There was a world of wonder in her voice and in her look, and dear Widow Appleton already felt guilty and condemned.

"With young Squire Towneley, Nora. You know that you and he have often been talked of, don't you? And people have seen you together at times that might well have raised a suspicion in their minds as to—"

"Mrs. Appleton," said Nora stoutly, and with more spirit than she had exhibited for many a day, "they never, never did. It was a wicked, wicked, wicked story. Why should people talk of me and him? Has George said so?"

That short question, with the soul-look that shone from out the speaker's eyes, was a revelation to Mrs. Appleton; but the mystery seemed now to be growing more mysterious than ever. What could it mean?

"Nora, dear, you must let me speak freely and plainly about all this now. I am sorry I did not press you about it before. If this secret trouble of yours has nothing to do with the young Squire, then it is high time, and more than that, for your own sake that the truth should be known. You have been seen in company with Mr. Gerald Towneley in the lane by the trout stream; at the gate of the paddock behind your uncle's garden; even in the wood on the side of the Settle—"

"Who dares to say so?" exclaimed Nora, standing up with flashing and indignant eyes. "My secret, as you call it, is hard to bear, because it affects the life and liberty of another. What you are now talking of affects myself, and I say it is a wicked, wicked lie."

Poor Nora's store of adjectives and expletives was not large, much to her credit. Having expended her vocal stock of indignation, there was nothing left but to lapse into silence and into tears.

"Does George believe it?" asked Nora suddenly, again with her heart on her lips and in her eyes, the while she spoke.

Mrs. Appleton was about to say "Yes," but she was stopped by that tone and that look. "George isn't one to believe lightly where evil is concerned," she said, a little diplomatically; "and I am persuaded that nothing in the world could convince him you could be guilty of doing so foolish and unwise a thing unless he was to see it with his own eyes."

"And that he never did, and never will," Nora answered. "Does he think he did see it with his own eyes? Does he think so meanly of me—?"

Nora could not sail on that tack any longer; a gust of feeling came without any warning and she collapsed.

"Nay, nay, my dear, you must not think ill of George because his eyes misled him," said the widow, fairly compelled to own the truth. "He did see, or thought he saw—he could be mistaken, I suppose, like other people—Mr. Gerald Towneley in your company at untimely hours, and parting company when surprised. It has filled him with grief and trouble, because he says he knows what young Towneley is—"

"Never mind saying any more dear Mrs. Appleton, I see now what it all means," Nora exclaimed, "I have been thinking all the time that George really did know something of the awful grief that has come into my life. I find now that I was mistaken, and that he knows nothing about it. He thinks I could do what you say! He thinks I— I'll go now, please. You can tell him he is mistaken. No don't do that; he won't believe it. His own eyes are good enough witnesses for him. Kiss me, and let me go!"

Mrs. Appleton read her lovable and winsome visitor through and through. She read that in her heart she loved her son with all the strength of womanhood. She read that she had no care for all that rumor said, but that George's want of faith in her had sunk into her heart like lead, and that she was going forth with an added load, a burden heavy as death.

As the old lady thought upon her son, her strength and joy, and of his deep, true love for this dainty lassie, as she looked at the girl, whom she fondly loved, and thought of her passing out into the desolate night alone, with her heart-break, and that look of resigned despair upon her white face, she could not bear it. She rose and cast her arms around Nora's neck, and as her own tears fell plentifully down the unaccustomed channel of her cheeks, she said, "I daren't tell George how you've gone away from me. It will break his heart, and you and he are all I have in the world to love."

"Oh, no," said Nora with a sickly smile, "George's heart will never break for me. It would have broken already else, when he knew me to be such as his eyes saw me to be. Oh, keep my secret for me or I shall die. Here let me whisper it into your ear."

She clasped her arms round the widow's neck; put her white lips to her ear, and in a whisper that was louder in its intensity than any shout, speaking slowly, clearly, word by word, "The man whom George saw me with in uncle's paddock was an escaped convict—my own father!"

Then followed an exceeding great and bitter cry, and while yet the widow stood rooted to the ground in silent horror and astonishment, Nora had snatched her bonnet, and had passed with her dreadful trouble into the dark, dark night.

(To be Continued.)

SCROFULA

eczema, tetter, boils,
ulcers, sores,
rheumatism, and catarrh, cured
by taking

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

It purifies, vitalizes, invigorates,
and enriches
the blood.

Has Cured Others will cure you.

200,000

of our patent Registering Banks sold in one year. Money is registered when deposited, and cannot be removed until required amount is saved. Best plan to save money. Send for circular.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
301 Broadway, New York.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

AGENTS WANTED
LADIES and GENTLEMEN
Send for Illustrated Circulars and Terms Boston or St. Louis. MENTION

What is Scrofula

It is that impurity in the blood, which, acting in the glands of the neck, produces slightly lumps or swellings; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, causing blindness or deafness; which is the cause of pimples, cancerous growths, or many of the manifestations usually ascribed to "humors." It is a more formidable enemy than consumption or cancer alone, for scrofula combines the possible features of both. Being the most general of all diseases or affections for very few persons are entirely free from it.

How can it be cured? By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the cures it has accomplished when other medicines have failed, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. For all affections of the blood, Hood's Sarsaparilla is unequalled, and some of the cures it has effected are really wonderful. It suffers from scrofula in any of its various forms, be sure to give Hood's Sarsaparilla a trial.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Wives! Sons! Daughters!

We will send you for three months FREE! For the best poultry paper, if you send us ten names of persons who keep hens, (few or many), also 25¢ for one pack of Sheridan's Condition Powder.

POULTRY for PRODUCE or 15 cts. if you mention this paper, FREE! POULTRY, a 20 page magazine, six months for one pack of Sheridan's Condition Powder. Sample copy free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston.

NOTHING ON EARTH WILL MAKE HENS LAKE LIKE SHERIDAN'S CONDITION POWDER

Highly concentrated. Dose small. In quantity less than one-tenth cent a day per hen. Prevents all diseases. If you can't get it, we will send it post-paid. One pack 25c. Five $1. 2-1/2 lb. cans $5. Express paid. Testimonials free. Send stamps. Farmers' Poultry Guide (price 25c.) free with orders or more. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston.

The Cod That Helps to Cure The Colds
The disagreeable taste of the COD LIVER OIL is dissipated in

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil with HYPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA. The patient suffering from CONSUMPTION, BRONCHITIS, COUGH, COLD, WASTING DISEASES, may take remedy with as much satisfaction as would take milk. Physicians are prescribing it everywhere. It is a perfect emulsion and a wonderful flesh producer. Take no other.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nervous System
VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA
"Once Tried, Always Used"
Ask your Grocer for it, take no other.
Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" free by
E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell.

What Uncle Sam and Aunt Columbia think of WASHINGTON and Seattle its Metropolitan City. Eschelman, Ellwell & Co., San Francisco.

A remarkable book on BIBLE PROPHECY THE ADVANCING KINGDOM the Wonders of Foretold the SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. SEND TO THE American Publishing Co., Hartford, Boston or St. Louis. MENTION

DR. TALMAGE'S NAMESAKE.

Two days ago, Dr. Talmage, entering the offices of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, was warmly greeted by a young man who, with his son, a bright, intelligent boy of about fifteen years, waiting there to pay a subscription. The gentleman was a stranger to Talmage, but the story he had to tell showed that the Doctor was no stranger to him. Indeed, so well known and so highly esteemed at the youth bore the name of Talmage, given in the Doctor's honor.

H. Talmage Ross is his full name, and he had just arrived from New York from St. Kitts, in the Indies, in charge of his father, a well-known Christian worker in the adjacent islands.

About twenty years ago," said Talmage, "I was a sinner without God and without God in the world. I put it into the heart of William (now Bishop) Taylor to go to the West Indies on a missionary tour. I heard him, and it was God to apply the word to my heart, and I was brought out of darkness into the marvellous light. I went to study the Word of God, and I took for my sheet-anchor the rule of my future life, the golden rule, 'Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all things shall be added unto you.' I looked about for opportunities to labor for the Master, and for him whenever I could find an opening. About five years after my conversion I was married, and still trusted the Lord for the future, and not curtail my work in the world, though my expenses increased. I trusted in him and provided for all our necessities. Our first child was born and we named it as a clear answer to the Lord. We had promised the Lord that we would give us a son we would consecrate him wholly to his father, as Samuel was consecrated to his father and taken to minister in the Tabernacle.

Shortly after my conversion, I began reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and took particular interest in its articles of Dr. Talmage's sermons. I determined with a great deal of profit to name our boy after the famous preacher, whom, I had never seen, I had heard of to honor. Accordingly we named him publicly baptised with the name of Daniel Hope Talmage. The boy made excellent progress. He was twelve years old he was examined in the Cambridge Junior examination, held at Antigua, W. I., his papers were sent to England, and he passed. I now brought him to New York to continue his studies, and it is my greatest hope that he will live to the Lord in the Christian service.

When I am going back to St. Kitts to my work, I belong to the island body, and have been a teacher for a long time. I go from one island to another doing missionary work. I have a little to it while I am away on my missionary tours. I am now in robust health. Three years ago I was afflicted from a painful disease which had afflicted me for many years. I had been under the care of our local physicians, but had derived but little benefit. In the fall of 1887, I came to New York and was led to visit the Gospel Tabernacle, where I heard of Jesus as the Saviour from sickness as well as from sin. I claimed the promise and was anointed by Rev. A. B. Simpson, according to James 5:14. The Lord healed me and I have continued in good health ever since. Bless the Lord!"

GAVE UP SMOKING FOR CHRIST.

AN English evangelist relates the following: "When I was in Chester, a man came up to me and asked if I could tell him where he could get some Gospel tracts for the purpose of distributing. 'I shall be very pleased to give you some for that purpose,' I replied. 'But,' he hastily added, 'I do not want my tracts for nothing, I am willing to pay for them.' 'I am very glad to hear that,' I answered. 'It is refreshing to meet a man who is willing to pay for what he wants in these days when the desire of so many seems to be to get all they can for nothing.' 'Well,' continued the man, 'I was a smoker once but I gave it up, and now I spend the money which I used to spend for tobacco on tracts.' I afterward enquired of the vicar of the parish concerning that man and was told that he was one of the best workers in the district. He taught and took a deep interest in a large class in one of the lowest parts of the town. Are there not many among us who in their unconverted days, spent much on themselves in drink, tobacco, and theatre-going, who now use that money in some other selfish way? Would it not be well to consecrate some of it to the Lord's service?"

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.

When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.

When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.

When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

TYPEWRITERS.

Largest like establishment in the world. First-class Second-hand Instruments at half new prices. Unprejudiced advice given on all makes. Machines sold on monthly payments. Any Instrument manufactured shipped, privilege to examine. EXCHANGING A SPECIALTY. Wholesale prices to dealers. Illustrated Catalogues Free.

TYPEWRITER { 70 Broadway, New York.
HEADQUARTERS, { 144 La Salle St., Chicago

A Pointer for Teachers.

Send your address and number of Scholars in your class, and a copy for each scholar will be sent you FREE of the only Sunday School Paper printed ENTIRELY IN COLORS. Lessons illustrated IN COLORS by Special Artists. Address—

Little Folks Paper, Albany, N. Y.

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school, science lessons, stories, games, occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers and mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 141 La Salle St., Chicago.

AGENTS of every kind. Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly. Should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PURCHASING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address. CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. FOR A DISORDERED LIVER TRY BEECHAM'S PILLS.

THE LIMITED

WILL BRING YOU A BOOK OF 200 PAGES FREE! THAT IS: THE BOOK COSTS YOU NOTHING, AND THE POSTAGE IS PREPAID. IT IS FILLED FROM COVER TO COVER WITH THE NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF MEN AND WOMEN WHO HAVE BEEN RESTORED TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY THE USE OF DR. STARKEY & PALEN'S COMPOUND OXYGEN.

MANY WELL KNOWN MEN AND WOMEN TESTIFY IN ITS PAGES. IN EACH CASE THE INDORSEMENT IS SIGNED. YOU CAN FIND EVERY MAN AND WOMAN WHO HAS BEEN CURED. YOU CAN CORRESPOND WITH THEM, IF YOU LIKE, AND GET THEIR OPINION OF COMPOUND OXYGEN—NOT OURS.

COMPOUND OXYGEN IS A CONDENSATION OF NATURE'S OZONE. IT IS CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY. INHALED TO THE LUNGS IT SENDS A REVITALIZING GLOW ALL THROUGH THE SYSTEM. THEN A DELIGHTFUL SENSE OF RETURNING VITALITY AROUSES THE DESPONDING INVALID TO RENEWED EXERTION. BEST OF ALL—THE STRENGTH THUS AROUSED DOES NOT DISAPPEAR WHEN THE USE OF THE OXYGEN IS DISCONTINUED. IT REMAINS TO ERADICATE DISEASE. FOR STRENGTH IS NATURE'S BEST SPECIFIC.

IF YOU WANT THE BOOK, ADDRESS

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

CHRISTMAS MUSICAL GIFTS.

Silent gifts please for a day.
Gifts of Music please always!

Suppose the gift should be a fine Mandoline, Guitar, Banjo, Violin or a Music Box! These, and all other Musical Instruments, may be obtained at the Ditson Company Stores in Boston, New York or Philadelphia, or of J. C. Haynes & Co., 33 Court Street, Boston.

CHOICE SONG COLLECTIONS.

|                                 |           |
|---------------------------------|-----------|
| Song Classics. Vol. 1.          | 50 songs. |
| Song Classics. Vol. 2.          | 39 "      |
| Song Classics. Low Voices.      | 47 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos.            | 34 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos. Low Voices | 40 "      |
| Classic, Baritone and Bass.     | 33 "      |
| Classic Tenor Songs.            | 36 "      |
| Good Old Songs We Used to Sing. | 115 "     |
| Rhymes and Tunes. Sweet Music.  |           |
| M. P. Osgood.                   | 108 "     |

CHOICE PIANO COLLECTIONS.

|                               |            |
|-------------------------------|------------|
| Piano Classics. Vol. 1.       | 44 pieces. |
| Piano Classics. Vol. 2.       | 31 "       |
| Classical Pianist.            | 42 "       |
| Sabbath Day Music.            | 38 "       |
| Popular Dance Collection.     | 66 "       |
| Popular Piano Collection.     | 66 "       |
| Classic Four-hand Collection. | 19 "       |
| Operatic Piano Collection.    | 19 operas. |

Churchill's BIRTHDAY BOOK of EMINENT COMPOSERS. A handsome and useful gift, $1.25.

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

Gospel Hymns No. 5. By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN and STEBBINS, is conceded to be the best song book in existence for Religious Work and Prayer Meetings. 234 Songs with Music. $30 per 100. Words, $10.

Select Songs, By F. N. PELLOUBET, D. D. 344 Hymns and Tunes chosen for use where only one book is desired for Prayer Meetings and the Sunday School. Firmly bound in cloth. $40 per 100 copies.

Winnowed Songs, By IRA D. SANKEY, continues to be the banner Sunday School song book this season. 257 songs. $35 per 100. Sent by mail on receipt of price.

Complete Catalogue & Specimen Pages sent on request.

THE BICLOW &amp; MAIN CO.

81 Randolph St., Chicago. 76 E. 9th St., New York.

MUSICAL.

METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY.

Best private instruction in all branches, also surrounds pupils with superior advantages in Class Work, Lectures, Concerts, and the Languages. Refined boarding privileges for lady pupils. Dudley Buck and Albert Ross Parsons heading departments. Opens Sept. 15. Pupils received at any time. Book sent free. 19 and 21 East 14th St., New York.

FIND OUT What it is like now, send address on a postal for free sample copy of PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL $1.50 a year, and list of books on Phrenology, Physiognomy, Health, Heredity, etc. Address FOWLER & WELLS, 777 B'way, New York

FLORENCE Knitting Silk. Soft Finish. If you wish to secure beauty, durability and economy, you will buy this Silk for Knitting, for Crochet, for Tatting, for Netting, or for Embroidery. Florence Home Needlework for 1890 teaches you how to make from this Silk those Washable Crocheted Four-in-Hand Scarfs—which are the new thing for gentlemen, and are also worn by ladies. This book will be mailed on receipt of six cents. NONOTUCK SILK CO., Florence, Mass.

A Handsome &amp; Useful Present.

ALWAYS IN SEASON.

"4-IN-HAND" NECK TIE, Crocheted with Brainerd & Armstrong's FAST COLOR CROCHET SILK.

"WASHABLE."

Used by all Art Schools, and for sale by all first-class dealers in Embroidery Materials.

BRAINERD & ARMSTRONG CO., 625 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Send for printed rules for crocheting Gents' Four-in-Hand Neck Ties.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY. DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1895 1885-1896 No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use. Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.

Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

OVER THE RIVER.

OVER the river they beckon to me—
Loved ones who've crossed to the further side;
The gleam of their snowy robes I see,
But their voices are drowned in the rushing tide.

There's one with ringlets of sunny gold,
And eyes the reflection of heaven's own blue—
He crossed in the twilight gray and cold,
And the pale mist hid him from mortal view.

We saw not the angels that met him there;
The gate of the city we could not see—
Over the river, over the river,
My brother stands waiting to welcome me!

Over the river the boatman pale
Carried another—the household pet;
Her brown curls waved in the gentle gale—
My darling child! I see her yet!

She crossed on her bosom her dimpled hands,
And fearlessly entered the phantom bark—
We watched it glide from the silver sands,
And all our sunshine grew strangely dark.

We know she is safe on the other side,
Where all the ransomed and angels be;
Over the river, the mystic river,
My childhood's idol is waiting for me.

For none return from those quiet shores,
Who cross with the boatman cold and pale;
We hear the dip of the golden oars,
And catch a glimpse of the snowy sail.

And lo! they have passed from our yearning hearts,
They cross the stream and are gone for aye;
We may not sunder the veil apart
That hides from our vision the gates of day.

We only know that their barks no more
Will sail with us o'er life's stormy sea;
Yet somewhere, I know, on the unseen shore,
They watch, and beckon, and wait for me.

And I sit and think, when the sunset's gold
Is flushing river, and hill, and shore,
I shall one day stand by the water cold,
And list for the sound of the boatman's oar;

I shall watch for a gleam of the flapping sail;
I shall hear the boat as it nears the strand;
I shall pass from sight with the boatman pale,
To the better shore of the spirit land;

I shall know the loved who have gone before,
And joyfully sweet will the meeting be—
When over the river, the mystic river,
The Angel of Death shall carry me.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

In Lowell, Mass., where Hood's Sarsaparilla is made, there is more of this medicine sold than of all other blood purifiers. This is certainly a valuable home endorsement.

Every bruise, every sore muscle, should be freely bathed in Johnson's Anodyne Liniment.

"The doctor said my faith in Johnson's Anodyne Liniment was correct," writes a lady friend.

A DEFIANT INFIDEL CONVERTED.

SEVERAL years ago, at a series of evangelistic services in Lebanon, Tenn., writes Rev. E. Payson Hammond in the Christian at Work, Mr.
Dixon C. Williams began his work as an evangelist in a small way. Quite a remarkable scene occurred at one of the evening meetings. A lady in Nashville had asked me when I went to Lebanon to interest myself in behalf of the proprietor of one of the hotels. I therefore made an effort to see him soon after my arrival.
He attended the meetings, and within three days professed conversion. He spoke in a morning meeting in a manner that touched every heart. I was asked to talk with one of his friends, a law student, an avowed infidel. He manifested decided hostility. At the last meeting

I preached a solemn sermon, urging every one at once to flee from "the wrath to come." I felt the moving of God's spirit upon my own heart, and saw its effects upon others.
Towards the close of the inquiry meeting one of the students from the college in Lebanon approached me and said, "There are two men who have been converted within a few days who will tell their experience if you wish it." I at once requested them to do so.

After they had finished I started for the platform, intending to close the meeting as the hour was late and many had left the hall. When passing one of the pews I discovered the young infidel, and said to him in a low voice, "If your infidelity is better than our religion, why don't you stand up and urge your fellow students to embrace your views?" He at once said in an excited manner,
"I will discuss the subject with you."
I replied, "This is no place for a discussion, but if you wish to say a word you can do so,"—never imagining that after a solemn meeting like that he would dare to flaunt his sceptical ideas. As I moved towards the platform he said, "I will do it," and followed me. I then said this young man has a word to say. He replied, "I came up here for a discussion." I replied, "I did not promise to discuss with you." "What do you believe?" he asked. I answered, "I believe that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners." He then sprang up in an excited manner, saying, "You cannot prove what you have said." Before he had uttered three more sentences the few who were remaining in the hall, to show their disgust at his insolence, arose to leave. He asked, "Why I did not hold the audience?" I replied, "I did while I was speaking, but they do not believe a word you say," and looking him in the face I added, "You do not either." He then left the hall.

My heart was recently rejoiced to receive from Mr. Williams a full account of the conversion of this infidel, and of his work in the ministry.
When he wrote me, this regenerated sceptic was preaching the Gospel in Winnipeg, Manitoba, in the demonstration of the spirit and in power.

THE PIOUS BAKER BOY.

"WHERE'S Alick?" asked a minister of a baker, as he stepped into his store. "Alick is below, sir, in the bakehouse," replied the man of bread. "May I speak with him?"
asked the minister. "Certainly, certainly, sir," said the baker; "walk below, sir." As the minister went down the stair leading to the bakehouse, he heard a voice saying—"Lord, help me to serve thee! Lord, keep me faithful! Lord, make me a great preacher!" The voice was Alick's; and when the minister reached the bakehouse, he found the lad, with his shirt-sleeves rolled up to his shoulders, kneading dough with all his might, and praying as earnestly as he was working. Unquestionably he was pleased to find the youthful preacher so well employed. No doubt he felt that the appointment which he wanted Alick to fill would be well supplied. The Lord soon called Alick from the bakehouse to the pulpit, from which he fed thousands of hungry souls with the bread of life. The young man carried the working and praying spirit which he had in the workshop into the ministry. The result was, that God made him a useful and honorable man, for our Alick was no less a personage than Alexander Mather, one of the Presidents of the Wesleyan Conference.

The largest mail-order business in the world is now done in

MAULE'S SEEDS

They are recognized as the Amer. Standard of excellence by more than 175,000 of the most successful gardeners in the United States, who have planted them for years, who consider them the best they have ever sown, and to whom alone we are indebted for A BUSINESS SUCCESS THAT HAS BEEN UNPRECEDENTED IN THE AMERICAN SEED TRADE.

From the Atlantic to the Pacific, from the Great Lakes to the Gulf of Mexico, in every county in the U. S., they are equally popular, so much so that they have been supplied direct to customers at more than 33,000 Post Offices.

Our Catalogue for 1891 is pronounced absolutely the best seed and plant book issued;
printed in good legible type, on good paper, it excites the admiration of all. 664 varieties
of Vegetables, Flowers, Flowering Plants,
Small Fruits, Fruit- and Nut-bearing Trees, etc., are beautifully illustrated, as many as 38 of them being in colors. This catalogue is mailed free to all who ordered in 1890; but as the postage on the book alone is five cents, we must ask all others who are not customers, desiring a copy, to send us twenty-five cents in stamps for it; and in addition to sending our catalogue, we will also mail you, without extra charge, a packet of the wonderful BUSH
LIMA BEANS, THE MOST VALUABLE VEGET-
TABLE NOVELTY INTRODUCED IN YEARS;
AND A PACKET OF THE NEW MARGUERITE
CARNATION, THE FLORAL WONDER OF
1891. These two packets of seeds are worth
25 cents; so it virtually means the same thing as mailing our catalogue free to all who answer this advertisement. Address

WM HENRY MAULE,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

"Ignorance is the mother of all evil."
Are you ignorant of the uses of

SAPOLIO?

Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap.
Try it in your next house-cleaning.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes can Pamphlet free. Write to
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

YOU MAY BELIEVE IN

FREE TRADE

If so you will be pleased to know
The tariff on seeds has not increased
But you must admit that

PROTECTION

To the interests of Farm and Garden
Demands the use of GOOD SEED
If you want the Best write for

Burpee's Farm Annual

With honest descriptions and illustrations
Rare Novelties in Vegetables and Flowers

W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

GRAND NEW FLOWER

The Wonderful Manetia Vine most magnificent flowering vine in cultivation—price 20c. Fuller's new Fancy Seed, 10 packages, magnificent, 25c. Selection of 12 choice ages of flower seeds, 25c.; 12 packages of vegetable seeds, 25c.; Fuller's New Seedling Gladioli, 12 fine bulbs, 20c. The Excelsior Pearl Tub spikes of pure white, double flowers, great fragrance. Large bulbs, 2 for 40c. Beautiful Catalogue sent for 40c. J. ROSCOE FULLER &
Floral Park, N. Y.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue
Send for new books. Shots at Sun-Targets, by 1 Alma
$2.50. Quick sales.
Also, Mothe
Home & Heave
400 best authors. Eby T. L. Cuyler, 192,000 sold. 50c

Curiosities of Bible $2. By Mail.
ECSANNAS of the CHILDREN. Addresses and Talk
Children. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. 354 p. $1.10
WARS of the HUGENOTS, their Trials and Persecutions. By WM. HANNA, D.D. 344 p.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF SACRED STORY. Lectures on most attractive Characters in History. By M.
WHARTON, D.D. Illustrated. Two vols. each, $1.10
THE BOW IN THE CLOUD; or, Words of Comfort for Varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best authors. Prose and Poetry. By J. SANDERSON, D.D. Price, $1.10

DICTIONARY OF CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITY, a continuation of Smith's Bible Dictionary, 2 vols. double column pages. 600 Ill's. Two vols. 1/2 price of London Edition, each, $3.50. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York

MEXICO

Contributions in aid Christian work in Mex-are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed the address of
BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEAT
43 Bible House, New York.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's time to get orders for our brated Teas, Coffees, and Bling Powder, and secure a tiful Gold Band or Moss
China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss
Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Wter's Dictionary. 3 1/2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York

THE BEST!!!
WILSON
Adjustable Chairs.
Sole Manufacturers,
WILSON BROTHERS.
823 BROADWAY, NEW YORK
Send for Catalogue.

THE OPEN WINDOW

A Monthly Magazine, issued by The Shut-In-Socie

for the benefit of invalids. The object of the Sis to relieve the weariness of the sickroom, by change of letters and other tokens of remembrance. TERMS OF OPEN WINDOW: and Subers, $1.00 per year; 50 cents to invalid members.
for sample copy, to Secretary.

MRS. H. K. MUNROE, Ashland, Mass.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 3.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 21, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

REV. FRANCIS PENZOTTI, THE AGENT OF THE AMERICAN BIBLE SOCIETY, IN HIS PRISON IN CALLAO, PERU. (See page 26)

"COME!"

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED LAST SUNDAY MORNING, JANUARY 18, 1891, AT THE BROOKLYN ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

A Royal Word—Used for Good and Evil—Opens the Door of the Heart—Young Men Overcome by It—A Wife's Reproach to a Liquor Seller—The Word Harnessed for Good—Its Boundless Capacity—A Life-Saver's Lament—A Mother Waiting for a Meal—Lost at Midnight on the Prairie—How the Sinner may Come to God—The Celestial Chimes—Welcoming the Herald of Peace in the Russian Camp.

"Come." Gen. 6 : 18. "Come." Rev. 22 : 17.

MPERIAL, tender and all-persuasive is this word "Come." Six hundred and seventy-eight times is it found in the Scriptures. It stands at the front gate of the Bible as in my first text, inviting ante-diluvians into Noah's ark, and it stands at the other gate of the Bible as in my second text, inviting the post-diluvians of all later ages into the ark of a Saviour's mercy. "Come" is only a word of four letters, but it is the queen of words, and nearly the entire nation of English vocabulary bows to its sceptre. It is an ocean into which empties ten thousand rivers of meaning. Other words drive, but this beckons. All moods of feeling bath that word "Come." Sometimes it weeps and sometimes it laughs. Sometimes it prays, sometimes it tempts, and sometimes it destroys. It sounds from the door of the church and from the scraglios of sin, from the gates of heaven and the gates of hell. It is confluent and accrescent of all power. It is the heiress of most of the past and the almoner of most of the future. "Come!" You may pronounce it so that all the heavens will be heard in its cadences, or pronounce it so that all the woes of time and eternity shall reverberate in its onesyllable. It is on the lip of saint and profligate. It is the mightiest of all solicitants either for good or bad.

To-day I weigh anchor, and haul in the planks, and set sail on that great word, although I am sure I will not be able to reach the further shore. I will let down the fathoming line into this sea and try to measure its depths, and, though I tie together all the cables and cordage I have on board, I will not be able to touch bottom. All the power of the Christian religion is in that word—"Come." The dictatorial and commandatory in religion is of no avail. The imperative mood is not the appropriate mood when we would have people savingly impressed. They may be coaxed, but they cannot be driven. Our hearts are like our homes; at a friendly knock the door will be opened, but an attempt to force open our door would land the assailant in prison. Our theological seminaries, which keep young men three years in their curriculum before launching them into the ministry, will do well if in so short a time they can teach the candidates for the holy office how to say with right emphasis and intonation and power that one word—"Come!" That man who has such efficiency in Christian work, and that woman who has such power to persuade people to quit the wrong and begin the right, went through a series of losses, bereavements, persecutions and the trials of twenty or thirty years before they could make it a triumph of grace every time they uttered the word "Come."

You must remember that in many cases our "Come" has a mightier "Come" to conquer before it has any effect at all. Just give me the accurate census, the statistics, of how many are down in fraud, in drunkenness, in gambling, in impurity, or in vice of any sort, and I will give you the accurate census or statistics of how many have been slain by the word "Come." "Come and click wine-glasses with me at this ivory bar." "Come and see what we can win at this gaming table." "Come, enter with me this doubtful speculation!" "Come with me and read those infidel tracts on Christianity." "Come with me to a place of bad amusement."

Wreck of the Princess Alice.

"Come with me in a gay bout through underground New York." If in this city there are twenty thousand who are down in moral character, then twenty thousand fell under the power of the word "Come." I was reading of a wife whose husband had been overthrown by strong drink, and she went to the saloon where he was ruined, and she said: "Give me back my husband." And the bartender, pointing to a maudlin and battered man drowning in the corner of the bar-room, said: "There he is; Jim, wake up; here's your wife come for you." And the woman said: "Do you call that my husband? What have you been doing with him? Is that the manly brow? Is that the clear eye? Is that the noble heart that I married? What vile drug have you given him that has turned him into a fiend? Take your tiger claws off of him. Uncoil those serpent folds of evil habit that are crushing him. Give me back my husband, the one with whom I stood at the altar ten years ago. Give him back to me." Victim was he, as millions of others have been, of the word "Come!"

Now we want all the world over to harness this word for good as others have harnessed it for evil, and it will draw the five continents and the seas between them, yea, it will draw the whole earth back to the God from whom it has wandered. It is that wooing and persuasive word that will lead men to give up their sins. Was scepticism ever brought into love of the truth by an ebullition of hot words against infidelity? Was ever the blasphemer stopped in his oaths by denunciation of blasphemy? Was ever a drunkard weaned from his cups by the temperance lecturer's mimicry of staggering step and hiccough? No. It was: "Come with me to church to-day and hear our singing;" "Come and let me introduce you to a Christian man whom you will be sure to admire;" "Come with me into associations that are cheerful and good and inspiring;" "Come with me into joy such as you never before experienced."

With that word which has done so much for others I approach you to-day. Are you all right with God? "No," you say, "I think not; I am sometimes alarmed when I think of him; I fear I will not be ready to meet him in the last day; my heart is not right with God." Come then and have it made right. Through the Christ who died to save you, Come! What is the use in waiting? The longer you wait the further off you are and the deeper you are down. Strike out for heaven! You remember that a few years ago a steamer called the Princess Alice with a crowd of excursionists aboard, sank in the Thames, and there was an awful sacrifice of life. A boatman from the shore put out for the rescue, and he had a big boat, and he got it so full it would not hold another person, and as he laid hold of the oars to pull for the shore, leaving hundreds helpless and drowning, he cried out: "Oh, that I had a bigger boat!" Thank God I am not thus limited, and that I can promise room for all in this Gospel boat. Get in; get in! And yet there is room. Room in the heart of a pardoning God. Room in heaven.

I also apply the word of my text to those who would like practical comfort. If any ever escape the struggle of life, I have not found them. They are not certainly among the prosperous classes. In most cases it was a struggle all the way up till they reached the prosperity, and since they have reached these heights there have been perplexities, anxieties, and crises which were almost enough to shatter the nerves and turn the brain. It would be hard to tell which have the biggest fight in this world—the prosperities or the adversities, the conspicuities or the obscurities. Just as soon as you have enough success to attract the attention of others, the envies and jealousies are let loose from their kennel. The greatest crime that you can commit in the estimation of others is to get on better than they do. They think your addition is their subtraction. Five hundred persons start for a certain goal of success; one reaches it and the other four hundred and ninety-nine are mad. It would take volumes to hold the story of the wrongs, outrages and defamations that have come upon you as a result of your success. The warm sun of prosperity brings into life a swamp-full of annoying insects. On the other hand the unfortunate classes have their struggles for maintenance. To achieve a livelihood by one who had nothing to start with, and after a while for a family as well, and carry this on until children are reared and educated and fairly started in the world, and to do this amid all the rivalries of business and the uncertainty of crops and the fickleness of tariff legislation, with an occasional labor strike and here and there a financial panic thrown in, is a mighty thing to do, and there are hundreds and thousands such heroes and heroines who live unsung and die unhonored. What we all need, whether up or down in life or half-way between, is the infinite solace of the Christian religion. And so we employ the word—"Come!" It will take all eternity to find out the number of business men who have been strengthened by the promises of God, and the people who have been fed by the ravens when other resources gave out, and the men and women who, going into this battle armed only with needle or saw, or axe, or yardstick, or pen, or type, or shovel, or shoe-last, have gained a victory that made the heavens resound. With all the resources of God promised for every exigency, no one need be left in the lurch.

A MOTHER'S FAITH REWARDED.

I like the faith displayed years ago in Drury Lane, London, in an humble home where every particle of food had given out, and a kindly soul entered with tea and other table supplies, and found a kettle on the fire ready for the tea. The benevolent lady said: "How is it that you have the kettle ready for the tea when you had no tea in the house?" And the daughter in the home said: "Mother would have me put the kettle on the fire, and when I said 'what is the use of doing so, when we have nothing in the house?' she said, 'my child, God will provide; thirty years he has already provided for me through all my pain and helplessness, and he will not leave me to starve at last: He will send us help though we do not yet see how.' We have been waiting all the day for something to come, but until we saw you we knew not how it was to come." Such things the world may call coincidences, but I call them almighty deliverances and, though you do not hear of them, they are occurring every hour of every day and in all parts of Christendom. But the word "Come" applied to those who need solace will amount to nothing unless it be uttered by some one who has experienced that solace. That spreads the responsibility of giving this Gospel call among a great many. Those who have lost property and been consoled by religion in that trial, are the ones to invite those who have failed in business. Those who have lost their health and been consoled by religion are the ones to invite those who are in poor health. Those who have had bereavements and been consoled in those bereavements are the ones to sympathize with those who have lost father or mother or companion or child or friend. What multitudes of us are alive to-day and in good health and buoyant in this journey of life, who would have been broken down or dead long ago but for the sustaining and cheering help of our holy religion! So we say—"Come!" The well is not dry. The buckets are not empty. The supply is not exhausted. There is just as much mercy and condolence and soothing power in God as before the first grave was dug, or the first tear started, or the first heart broken, or the first accident happened, or the first fortune vanished. Those of us who have felt the consolatory power of religion have a right to speak out of our own experiences, and say—"Come!"

What dismal work of condolence the world makes, when it attempts to condole! The plaster they spread does not stick. The broken bones under their bandage do not knit. A farmer was lost in the snow-storm on a prairie of the far West. Night coming on and after he was almost frantic from not knowing which way to go, his sleigh struck the rut of another sleigh and he said, "I will follow this rut, and it will take me out to safety." He hastened on until he heard the bells of the preceding horses, but, coming up, he found that that man was also lost and, as is the tendency of those who are thus confused in the forest, or on the moors, they were both moving in a circle and the runner of the one lost sleigh was following the runner of the other lost sleigh round and round. At last it occurred to them to look at the north star, which was peering through the night, and by the direction of that star, they got home again. Those who follow the advice of this world in time of perplexity are in a fearful round, for it is one bewildered soul following another bewildered soul, and only those who have in such time got their eye on the morning star of our Christian faith can find their way out, or be strong enough to lead

"But," you say, "there are so many things I have to believe and so many things in the shape of a creed that I have to adopt, that I am kept back." No; no! You need believe but two things; namely, that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners and that you are one of them. "But," you say, "I do believe both of those things!" Do you, really, believe them with all your heart? "Yes." Why, then, you have passed from death into life. Why, then, you are a son or a daughter of the Lord Almighty. Why, then, you are an heir or an heirless of an inheritance that will declare dividends from now until long after the stars are dead. Hallelujah! Prince of God, why do you not come and take your coronet? Princess of the Lord Almighty, why do you not mount your throne? Pass up into the light. Your boat is anchored, why do you not go ashore. Just plant your feet hard down and you will feel under them the Rock of Ages. I challenge the universe for one instance in which a man in the right spirit appealed for the salvation of the Gospel and did not get it. Man alive! Are you going to let all the years of your life go away with you without your having this great peace, this glorious hope, this bright expectancy? Are you going to let the pearl of great price lie in the dust at your feet because you are too indolent or too proud to stoop down and pick it up? Will you wear the chain of evil habit when near by you is the hammer that could with one stroke snap the shackle? Will you stay in the prison of sin when here is a Gospel key that could unlock your incarceration? No; no! As the one word, "Come," has sometimes brought many souls to Christ, I will try the experiment of piling up into a mountain and then send down in an avalanche of power many of these Gospel "Comes." "Come thou and all thy house into the ark;" "Come unto me, all ye who labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest;" "Come, for all things are now ready;" "Come with us and we will do you good;" "Come and see;" "The Spirit and the Bride say 'Come' and let him that heareth say 'come' and let him that is athirst come." The stroke of one bell in a tower may be sweet, but a score of bells well tuned and rightly lifted and skillful-others with an all-persuasive invitation. "But," says some one, "you Christian people keep telling us to 'come' yet you do not tell us how to come." That charge shall not be true on this occasion. Come believing! Come repenting! Come praying! After all that God has been doing for six thousand years, sometimes through patriarchs and sometimes through prophets, and at last through the culmination of all tragedies on Golgotha, can anyone think that God will not welcome your coming? Will a father at vast outlay construct a mansion for his son, and lay out parks white with statues, and green with foliage, and all a-sparkle with fountains, and then not allow his son to live in the house, or walk in the parks? Has God built this house of Gospel mercy and will he then refuse entrance to his children? Will a Government at great expense build life-saving stations all along the coast and boats that can hover unhurt like a petrel over the wildest surge, and then when the life-boat has reached the wreck of a ship in the offing not allow the drowning to seize the life-line or take the boat for the shore in safety? Shall God provide at the cost of his only Son's assassination escape for a sinking world, and then turn a deaf ear to the cry that comes up from the breakers?

Lost at Midnight on the Prairie.

ly swung in one great chime fill the heavens with music almost celestial. And no one who has heard the mighty chimes in the towers of

A MESSENGER OF PEACE.

Amsterdam, or Ghent, or Copenhagen, can forget them. Now it seems to me that in this Sabbath hour all heaven is chiming, and the voices of departed friends and kindred ring down the sky, saying, "Come!" The angels who never fell, bending from sapphire thrones, are chanting "Come!" Yea; all the towers of heaven, tower of martyrs, tower of prophets, tower of Apostles, tower of evangelists, tower of the temple of the Lord God and the Lamb, are chiming, "Come! Come!" Pardon for all, and peace for all, and heaven for all who will come.

When Russia was in one of her great wars, the suffering of the soldiers had been long and bitter and they were waiting for the end of the strife. One day a messenger in great excitement ran among the tents of the army shouting, "Peace! Peace!" The sentinel on guard asked, "Who says 'Peace?'" And the sick soldier turned on his hospital mattress and asked, "Who says Peace?" and all up and down the encampment of the Russians went the question, "Who says Peace?" Then the messenger responded: "The Czar says, 'Peace.'" That was enough. That meant going home. That meant the war was over. No more wounds and no more long marches. So to-day, as one of the Lord's messengers, I move through these great encampments of souls and cry, "Peace between earth and heaven! Peace between God and man! Peace between your repenting soul and a pardoning Lord!" If you ask me, "who says Peace?" I answer, "Christ our King declares it:" "My peace I give unto you!" "Peace of God that passeth all understanding!" Everlasting Peace!

PERSECUTION IN PERU.

THE EXPERIENCES OF REV. FRANCIS PENZOTTI, A PRISONER FOR THE TRUTH.

How the American Bible Society's Agent at Callao was Hounded and Finally Arrested at Priestly Instigation—Penzotti's Little Church—A Barbarous Law Against Religious Liberty—Declared Innocent by One Court yet Held a Prisoner—His Christian Fortitude—The War of the Catholics Against the Bible Society and for the Suppression of the Scriptures.

(See Illustration on first page.)

WHEN the glorious roll of those who have suffered for their religion—and borne up under severe trial and persecution with the heroism of martyrs—is made up in heaven, there will surely be found written upon it, the name of Francis Penzotti. Mr. Penzotti was converted years ago under the influence brought to bear upon him by Rev. A. M. Milne, then as now agent of the American Bible Society in South America, and subsequently entered the Society's service as a colporteur. In company with Mr. Milne he afterwards went around the continent of South America, visiting all the republics and arousing great interest by his fervid address and earnest piety. His evident fitness for the work influenced the society to place him in charge of the distribution of Bibles along the western coast of South America. For the last three years he has been in Peru actively engaged in Bible-selling, having charge of all the publications issued by the Society. He established a headquarters at Callao and secured the services of a corps of assistants, all young men of marked ability and earnest Christians.

From the outset of his work for the Society, Penzotti encountered the enmity of the Romish priests. Wherever he went, their malign influence followed him. At Arequipa, at Cochachra, and at Callao, they were unrelenting in their attempts to stop the enthusiastic young agent of the Bible Society from selling Bibles, but more particularly from holding services of a religious character. According to the Peruvian Constitution, the recognized State religion is Roman Catholicism, and the public preaching of any other doctrine is made a crime and expressly forbidden. There is, however, no prohibition forbidding the private exercise of any religious form of worship. Mr. Penzotti and a number of his fellow-Christians in Callao held regular services at Penzotti's little hall on Colon Street, (a picture of the exterior of which is given in this number.) The hall is in a long, low, one-storied adobe building, and was formerly used as a warehouse. He fitted it up plainly with benches, and a small platform for the preacher, and there, with doors closed, the good missionary would hold services, morning and evening on Sundays, and Thursday evenings, having as auditors about sixty devout people, many of them natives who had no opportunity in that priest-ridden land of hearing the Gospel except by stealth. The exercises were invariably conducted in a quiet and orderly manner; there was no shouting or loud declamation. On the street, the voices of the worshippers could not be heard, and not a man, woman or child in Callao ever complained of being annoyed. A psalm or hymn, an opening prayer, a reading of Scripture, an exhortation, simple yet earnest addressed to the heart rather than to the ear, and a closing appeal to the Throne—these were the services in that little retired meeting-house. But even there, with the hall tightly shut against the outer world, and with no possibility of annoying the public or in any sense conducting other than a private service, the crafty priests interfered. Occasionally they would peer in at the door, or endeavor to force it, and by trick and stratagem make their way in among the little assemblage and attempt to break it up in disorder. These tactics, however, failed of their purpose, for Mr. Penzotti continued the meetings and the number of his hearers increased.

In many other ways, too, this persecution was manifested. When Penzotti's colporteurs went out on their work, the local priests would follow them and brutally set the mob against them. On one occasion, when two of Mr. Penzotti's

Two of his assistants were also taken and the books and outfit of all three confiscated. In open violation of the laws and Constitution of the country, these men were kept in prison for nineteen days being released on the intervention of the Italian Minister at the capital, Hon. David Segres. On being liberated, they were informed that their books had been burned; but this proved untrue, for, on the authorities being notified that they would have to pay for the volumes, the latter were miraculously resurrected somehow, and sent to Mr. Penzotti.

Although for more than twenty years there has been a Protestant Church at Callao, and no instance of special molestation during that period, the Catholic authorities, stirred up by Mr. Penzotti's activity and by the success he met in his work for Christ, changed their policy of tolerance to one of rabid persecution and subjected him, his family and assistants to a series of malicious and bigoted attacks. Last year the persecution reached a climax, when, on July 25th, Mr. Penzotti was again arrested and thrown into jail, the scene of his incarceration being the "Carcel Publica," where all prisoners sentenced to death were formerly confined. Here he was thrown into a dark and filthy cell, almost entirely unventilated and where he had as companions the lowest outcasts in the country. Nearly forty of them were convicts who had been found guilty of flagrant crimes. In the daytime he was allowed to exercise in the yard of the prison, and was even permitted to see his family and friends, who called to sympathize with him and to give him such words of cheer as they could; but for twelve hours out of the twenty-four he was doubly a prisoner in his noisome cell, whose damp earthen floor and hideous smell made it a place of acute torture. The charge against him was "conducting publicly and with extraordinary frequency a religious service contrary to the laws of the country." An accusation entirely unsubstantiated.

In this dungeon (see illustration on the first page), he lay for weeks before the case came to a hearing. Finally when he had almost lost hope of having a trial accorded him, the Inferior Court heard the case and there was such a showing of reputable citizens in his behalf that it had no hesitation in acquitting him. But in Peru, unlike most other countries claiming to be civilized, a man who is found innocent of crime does not gain his freedom by such a verdict. The law compels all such cases to go before the Superior Court, or higher tribunal where they must be revised and confirmed. The delay of Peruvian law is beyond all precedent. Weeks passed and still the man who had been pronounced guiltless lay in jail, the companion of common convicts. All the papers in Penzotti's case were sent to the higher court and influential parties appeared in his interest, but the wheels of justice refused to move. With the patience and fortitude of a true Christian, he set about making the best of his doleful position, and did agents were at work in Arequipa, one of them—J. B. Arancet—visited Cochachra and was attacked by the pere of the village who set the mob on him. He was only saved from death by stoning by the timely appearance of the local magistrate, who took him to his own house and afterwards sent him away safely.

Rev. Mr. Penzotti's Chapel on Colon Street, Callao.

In January, 1889, Penzotti was arrested in the streets of Arequipa, while selling Testaments; this, too, by order of the Catholic bishop of that place, who happened to be passing at the time and ordered the policeman to make the arrest.

what evangelical work he could among the hardened criminals by whom he was surrounded. Indeed, they grew so to like him and his gentle ways, that a number of them petitioned the prison authorities to grant Penzotti permission to preach to them; but this was ungraciously refused.

Meanwhile the American Bible Society was not idle. Through the Secretary of the Society, the Rev. Edward W. Gilman, D. D., Secretary Blaine was communicated with, and, although Penzotti is not an American citizen, yet the fact that he represents the interest of American citizens in Peru, and that these interests have been injuriously affected by the action of the Callao authorities, was deemed by Mr. Blaine to be sufficient reason for action. Accordingly he communicated with the Peruvian government through Hon. John Hicks, the American Minister at Lima. Bail had been refused, as usual in ecclesiastical cases, and every effort by Mr. Penzotti's lawyer, Dr. Jose Maria Vivancio, to secure his freedom had been abortive. Everything that could be done in his interest was submitted in the hope of moving the stolid Government and the inflexible Superior Court to action, but in vain. The little chapel at 214 Colon Street, where the private services had been held, and which at most could seat no more than one hundred and fifty people, remained open, however, and services were still held there. The door and walls were defaced by vile inscriptions, written by Catholics instigated to the work by their priests. "Mueran los Protestantes," (Death to Protestants) "Muera Penzotti," (Death to Penzotti) were among the least offensive of these inscriptions.

At Penzotti's home, too, the same bitter persecution had raged even while the father and husband was in jail. His family lives in the depository of the American Bible Society, 119 Colon Street, (see illustration), on the ground floor. Scarcely a day has passed in which the members of his household have not been insulted. The walls of the building were defaced with foul writings, of a character similar to those on the walls of the little church on the same street. His two daughters, aged sixteen and eighteen, have been sent to Santiago, in Chili, to be out of danger, as the menacing attitude of the Popish partisans and their insults on the streets became so annoying that they could no longer be borne. A Catholic priest, named Vedal, incited his school boys to stone the house and church, and it became dangerous for the missionary's family to show their faces at their own door.

During the progress of the case a consignment of eight boxes of Scriptures, which had been sent to Mr. Penzotti from New York, was seized by the Custom House, with threats of confiscation; but upon representation made by the American Legation that the act was entirely unwarranted, the books were released.

Notwithstanding his long imprisonment, Penzotti's faith in the ultimate triumph of his principles in Callao has not been shaken, nor has his zeal for Christ been diminished. Many of the best citizens of Callao have espoused the cause of the persecuted preacher, and his case has been the theme of excited conversations at many gatherings in the city. He is very generally respected, and among his visitors at the Casa Mata, popularly called Death-House Prison are some who rank among the best families in the town. The Italians in Callao, the Free Masons, the shipping merchants and many others have taken up Penzotti's cause with much warmth, but the priestly influence is too strong to be overcome. One thing that has undoubtedly impaired Penzotti's chances of release is the lukewarmness of his own government, which apparently accepts the Romish interpretation of the Peruvian Constitution.

Mr. Penzotti, whose portrait is seen behind prison bars on the first page, has been twenty-five years in South American countries. He is a strong, eloquent and persuasive preacher, an indefatigable worker for Christ, and his patience under persecution is such as reminds us of that of Bunyan when he lay in Bedford Jail. A cell cannot stop his activity in the good cause. His last letter to the American Bible Society in New York, received a few days ago, says: "I am yet in prison, and I cannot tell you now when I shall be at liberty. Matters go on very slowly, but effort is not wanting to hasten the conclusion. My family are much afflicted by the prolongation of my imprisonment. I remember frequently what the Psalmist says: Sorrow endureth for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

It breathes the Christian spirit that animated the ancient martyrs. What he most regrets is his absence from the services in his little church the doors of which had to be securely chained, while the band of devout brothers and sisters met there in private, as the faithful did in Rome centuries ago, to worship the living God.

Penzotti's Home in Callao.

Christians everywhere will join Penzotti in the aspiration that the day may soon come which will witness the birth of religious freedom in Peru—a day in which every man and woman in that priest-ridden land will be permitted to serve God without molestation and persecution.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Nicaragua Canal Company will Have the assistance of the United States Government in completing its undertaking, if a bill, favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, becomes law. It appears that the much-needed engineering achievement is liable to be delayed, if it does not fail altogether, through financial or other causes. It is proposed, therefore, in view of the great public advantages that the cutting of the canal will confer, that the Government should guarantee the payment of the Company's obligations, principal and interest. This will enable the Company to raise all the money it needs to carry out the work. The credit of the United States stands so high that capitalists who might be chary of trusting the company, and, if they lent at all, would charge high rates of interest, will, if they have the guarantee of the United States, lend readily and on easy terms. It is believed that the guarantee will also secure the canal when completed from being closed by any political revolution in the States through which it passes, and will insure its being always at the service of travel and commerce. So much the guarantee of the Government may do to inspire confidence. It is much to be wished that similar confidence were inspired in sinners under conviction, in that "new and living way which Christ has consecrated for us through his flesh." God has given his guarantee, and "he is faithful who has promised." (Heb. 10: 20-23.)

A Physician's Recovery from Accidental Poisoning was described at a meeting of medical men in New York last week. It appears that the hero of the incident lived some five years ago in a country district in Sullivan County, New York. He had occasion to prepare a poisonous lotion and, being hurried, he stirred it with his lead-pencil. Not long afterward, in a fit of abstraction he put the pencil in his mouth and, as his habit was, when lost in thought, he chewed the end vigorously. A strange sensation ensued and the doctor realized what he had done. He knew that he would need skillful treatment or his life would be lost, and he knew, too, that he would soon be in a condition in which he would be mentally incapable of directing the treatment. There was no other physician in the village but there was one seven miles off who could be trusted. Summoning a hack, the doctor told the driver to take him as quickly as possible to the house of his medical friend. The poison took effect quickly. The doctor fell asleep and lay on the floor of the hack. During the latter part of the journey the road was very rough, and the sleeping man was jolted about until he was wide awake, though his senses were so benumbed by the poison that he did not know where he was. On his arrival, the proper remedies were administered and he recovered. But both doctors agreed that his recovery would have been impossible if he had continued to sleep to his journey's end. The jolting over the rough road had saved his life. Yet the poisoned man remembered how he bewailed the disturbance and longed with agonizing desire for quiet sleep. It is often so with the awakened sinner. He would gladly shake off the fears that are distressing him, but when he has come to Christ and been saved from eternal death he is thankful that he was prevented from sinking back into spiritual somnolency. (Ps. 78: 33-35.)

A Remarkable Astronomical Discovery is Reported in a scientific journal. It states that in the group of stars known as the Pleiades, a nebula has been found the existence of which no one had ever suspected. Its discovery was not made by the telescope but by the camera. In taking a photograph of that part of the heavens, for the completion of an astronomical map, the plate was accidentally left exposed much longer than was intended. On examining the photograph a well defined nebula was perceived in the constellation of the Pleiades. The reason that the nebula appeared in the photograph, though the telescope failed to reveal it, is explained by the fact that the camera can accumulate impressions—that is to say, it is able by continued exposure to obtain an image of an object which may be so faint that a shorter exposure would give no image. This is a power that the eye does not possess. It is equivalent to being able to see plainly by long gazing what cannot be seen at all by a brief inspection. A significant feature of this discovery is that astronomers are convinced of the existence of the nebula by the testimony of the camera though they cannot see it. It is much to be wished that there was a similar readiness to believe in the existence of spiritual things which are not perceptible to the natural eye but are spiritually discerned. (1. Cor. 2: 14.)

Genuine Devotion is Being Manifested by a husband to an injured wife in Bellevue Hospital, New York. The wife is under treatment there for an injury received on December 26th. She was in a steam laundry on that day, and, while standing at an open window, the wind blew her hair near some belting which was revolving rapidly over a shaft. Suddenly the belting caught her hair and dragged the whole scalp from her head. The doctors in the hospital tried to get the scalp to unite again, but after three weeks of persistent effort they have to confess failure. Her husband, who has been to see her every day since the accident, was informed on Thursday last that nothing could save his wife but grafting skin over the wound. He promptly offered his own skin for the operation. A piece three inches long and one inch wide was taken from his thigh and laid on the raw flesh of his wife's head. In a day or two another piece will be applied, and so, on until the wound is covered. He was quite cheerful under the painful operation and seemed concerned only about his wife's recovery. He will bear the scars as long as he lives. They will be honorable scars—marks of self-sacrificing love. What would be thought of that wife if, when she recovers through her husband's devotion, she should despise and neglect him? Yet men who would unhesitatingly condemn her if she showed such ingratitude, hear without emotion how Christ laid down his life to save them and treat his offer of salvation with contempt! (Heb. 10: 29.)

ELIJAH AT HOREB.

S. S. LESSON FOR FEB. 1, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
I. Kings 19: 1-18; Golden Text, Gen. 26: 24.

The Prophet in Seclusion—Humiliation After Victory—Patient Waiting for the Fulfillment of the Promise—Jezebel's Threat—Elijah's Flight—Discouraged by Self-Contemplation—His Reply to God's Question—The Revelation of the Deity—In the Still Small Voice—Reassured as to a Successor—The Lesson of Trust.

THE prophet Elijah was still upon the mountain, and there remained work for him to do, not in testimony, but in prayer. Only an intense communion with God, in which he was conscious of his presence, moment by moment, would have sustained Elijah on Mount Carmel. But God's promise was not yet fulfilled, "Go, show thyself unto Ahab; and I will send rain upon the earth." "Elijah said unto Ahab, Get thee up; eat and drink, for there is a sound of abundance of rain." Ahab must not be a witness of what should now take place; eating and drinking was more in accordance with the life he lived—earthly, sensual, devilish.

Elijah Was Alone

in a greater presence than that of assembled Israel, with king, and elders, and prophets. Before them he could stand unflinchingly; now he casts himself upon the earth, and puts his face between his knees. He must not look at "the things which are seen;" he has to do with his unseen God. Many a blessed victory for the cause of God has ruined the instrument used, because, after seeing the glory of God, he has gone up to eat and to drink with some Ahab, has heard his name spoken of as a wonderful man of God, and self-consciousness has shut out the consciousness of God's holy presence, so that the instrument had to be humbled by seeing his power decline, by failure of health or some other cause.

Elijah, nevertheless, claims the promise of his God. He sends his servant: "Go up, now, and look towards the sea. And he went up, and looked, and said: There is nothing." Elijah's servant must go up and look towards the sea seven times. Why? God does not always give a reason for what he does. Let us learn to know his will and do it, and when we get better acquainted with him he will show us what we should not have understood if he had told us earlier.

Elijah Could Wait God's Time.

"And it came to pass at the seventh time that he said, Behold, there ariseth a little cloud out of the sea like a man's hand." Elijah had not even seen it, but with his eye upon God he recognized the answer to his prayers, and was so sure of it that, without waiting to see for himself, he sent his servant to Ahab to say to him, "Prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain stop thee not." The heaven was black with clouds and rain, but Elijah must witness what took place in Jezreel. The hand of the Lord was on his prophet; "he girded up his loins, outstripped Ahab's horses, and ran before Ahab to the entrance of Jezreel."

Might he not expect that Ahab's testimony and that of his people, would be enough to convince and overcome the wicked Jezebel, and that once again the court of Israel, purified from idolatry, might uphold the worship of Jehovah? Would it not be natural that Ahab in such a case should turn to Elijah for help and counsel?

Elijah had to be bitterly undeceived. Ahab told his wicked queen all that had happened, but this wicked woman was in no mood to yield to the claims of Jehovah, the God of Israel. Out of all whom Elijah had called to Carmel, Jezebel had refused to come. After all the unanswerable testimony of God on Mount Carmel, after the verdict of the assembled people, Jezebel still withstood God and his prophets, and Ahab had not courage or power to restrain his wicked queen from sending a message to Elijah: "So do the gods to me, and more also, if I make not thy life as the life of one of them

(the slain prophets of Baal), by to-morrow about this time. And when he saw that, he arose and Went For His Life."

The same bold, fearless Elijah, who had stood in the presence of his God, and been his champion on Mount Carmel, now trembles, and flees before one wicked woman! Did he fear to die? Never; but things turned out so differently to his expectation. He had waited so long, and in his waiting time his life was one of miracle all throughout; God had always been true to himself, and now Jezebel seem to have it all her own way again, as though God's witness on Carmel had gone for nothing! All looks dark. Is it for this that he has so closely followed his God through these years, apart from and misunderstood by men?

Elijah is perplexed. There is one only way out of his trouble—he must be alone, he must get to the wilderness. Passing Beersheba, he left his servant there, the crisis was too grave, no human presence would be supportable while he came to understand his God. At all times, God's prophets instinctively seek intercourse with God alone, but there are times when it is absolutely indispensable. Once alone, he sat down under a juniper tree, and began to let out his heart, "It is enough; now, O Lord, take away my life; for than my fathers." Elijah had expected more from God, but also more from himself, as God's prophet, and he was sorely disappointed. One moment of looking away from God to self leaves us open to discouragement. The question was once for all settled upon the cross that nothing is to be expected from ourselves—from the flesh which was nailed to the cross of Jesus. In his sorrow, Elijah slept. God had not forgotten his child; an angel came and touched him, and he had proof that the same God who had sent him bread and meat for so long by the ravens, had been providing and preparing food for him here in the wilderness while he slept. Then he was not forgotten. It was a ray of light, but the darkness was not yet past; he lay down and slept again. A second time, the angel came and touched him, and said, "Arise and eat, because the journey is too great for thee." "And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went in the strength of that meat forty days and forty nights unto Horeb, the mount of God." When a human body is fully surrendered to God, God can make it, in exceptional circumstances, independent of natural law.

"I am Not Better

The solution of the questions which burdened Elijah did not come in a moment. Men who will get answers from God must learn to wait upon the Lord. He sees the moment when our spirits are still enough to take in what he has to communicate to us. The prophet's instinct was to get into a cave and lodge there. Self is a very narrow place; it sees things and persons in relation to its own little world; it is like a dark, damp cave. God's word came to him in his cave, "What doest thou here, Elijah?" His answer shows that he is still in the dark, that he has no light on the point which troubles him, "I have been very jealous for the Lord God of hosts; for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even I only, am left, and they seek my life to take it away." As though to say, thy cause has been bound up with me, and now, when everything seemed to be gained, is there nothing come of it but that they seek after my life as they did before Carmel? If there is nothing gained, although I have sacrificed all for thy cause, why should I live any longer?

God did not explain: As long as the eye of his children is on themselves, they cannot understand; our eye must meet his to understand him. "Go forth, and stand upon the mount before the Lord," out of thy cave, out of thy narrow view of things, out of the thoughts which give the color of thyself, of what thou art, and hast been, or yet may be, to circumstances; get into a purer, truer atmosphere, "upon the mount before the Lord." It was the very mount from which God had spoken to the children of Israel when he gave the law. And now God draws away Elijah's vision from himself by a revelation of himself. "A great and strong wind rent the mountains and brake in pieces the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the wind; and after the wind an earthquake: but the Lord was not in the earthquake; and after the earthquake, a fire; but the Lord was not in the fire." All these things went before the Lord, made ready the way of the Lord; but after these came

"A Still Small Voice."

It is not in spiritual agitation, violent emotion, tremendous struggles, that we learn to know God. All those may tend to exhaust the energy of the flesh, and so make ready his way, but the Lord is not in them. It is when God can find his way to "the hidden man of the heart, in the incorruptible" (1. Peter. 3: 3, R.V.), that he can truly reveal himself; not in the thunders of the law, but in the grace of Jesus Christ, the Word of God. Elijah knew the voice, and came and stood in the entrance of his cave, and hid his face. God repeated his question, but Elijah was not free yet; he repeated his former answer. But he could listen. The journey had not been in vain. "Go, return," said his Lord, and on thy way anoint Hazael over Syria, Jehu over Israel, and Elisha the son of Shaphat to be prophet in thy room. Yes, Elijah, thou art mistaken, thou seest not all which I am doing; thou hast seen only the outskirts of my ways, I have another prophet ready to take thy place, thou art not the only one. Hazael and Jehu must do their part in the destruction of Baal, but thy life of prayer has not been in vain. "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and every mouth which hath not kissed him." Yes, Elijah, and thou shalt yet live to see schools of prophets from among that seven thousand, and although the court may remain corrupt, there shall be a band of witnesses which shall maintain the testimony for thy God in Israel.

THEODORE SPRINGER'S TRIAL.

A Story of the Golden Text, for February 1. "Fear not for I am with thee, and will bless thee." Gen. 26: 24.

MRS. SPRINGER sat in the nursery with her youngest child in her arms, humming a soothing lullaby. There was a visitor in her husband's study, his wealthiest lady parishioner, and ever and anon through the closed doors there came the voices of the two as if a very exciting subject was being discussed.

Mrs. Springer's thoughts wandered back to the time when she and her husband came to the village of Ashton—a mining town in Pennsylvania. The congregation was very small and most of their salary was paid by the Home Missionary Society. There were only two families of wealth in the place—the Starbucks and the Towners—and both were irreligious. A short time before, the Towners decided to build a public hall, which they did with a grand flourish of trumpets. Mr. Starbuck died at this juncture, and his widow wishing both to erect a memorial to her husband and to out-do the Towners, offered to build a church for the poor little congregation that was worshipping in a bare uncomfortable room over a stable. It was Mr. Springer's earnest desire that his church would accept half enough for the building and raise the rest themselves, so as to feel more independent, but he could not bring his people to feel as he did. They resisted his urgent pleadings. "Oh, she would not feel it," they said, "if she should build twenty churches, and we are so poor that it may be years before we could raise the money." "Why should we hinder God's work by refusing to accept offered help?" asked others. Some men would have left a parish where their counsel was unheeded, but Theodore Springer was a faithful, loyal soul. He loved his poor congregation, and though he realized they were taking a wrong step in regard to accepting so much from a worldly, unprincipled woman, he decided to remain with them and fight and labor and pray. It was bitter, up-hill work, especially after the church was built, and Mrs. Starbuck demanded to be made a member. "If I've done as much as this for you," she argued, "I guess you can do as much for me as to take me in!"

Mr. Springer made repeated exhortations as to the necessity of change of heart, but she replied, "Don't talk to me as if I were a heathen. I am a better Christian than most of your people. By their fruits ye shall know them, I say. And what better fruit can you have than building a church."

"Why, Theodore, what is the matter?" asked Mrs. Springer soon after she heard the front door closing on the visitor, and she opened her husband's study and found him with his head in his hands in an agony of sorrow.

"Oh! there's no use struggling any more, Lucy," the poor man exclaimed, trying to compose himself. "I have about made up my mind that we had better leave this place."

"But, Theodore, that would be running away from duty. God is blessing your labors wonderfully, and now you are being made so useful how can you think of leaving? See how large a number of new members you are to receive next Communion!"

"That is the trouble with Mrs. Starbuck. She has heard of it and she wants to be received, too. She referred to one and another, and asked me was she not as fit as they. She seems absolutely incapable of apprehending spiritual truth. She insists on becoming a member of the church, and cannot understand why I refuse. But I have refused and I fear there will be trouble. I think I had better resign."

"What! quit the work to which God has called you, and desert your post at the bidding of a worldly woman! When Elijah did that don't you remember how God asked him, 'What doest thou here, Elijah?'"

"But I am all alone; the deacons and the church do not think with me. I cannot fight the battle single-handed."

Mrs. Springer took her husband's trembling hand, and tears came into her eyes as she saw his careworn face and eyes with deep circles under them telling of sleepless nights.

"There, there!" she said, "you are all tired out, else you would be the bold soldier that you always have been. My advice is, defer your Communion service for a couple of weeks, and take that time to go up to Aunt Martha's in Vermont, and let her feed and strengthen you. Remember that counsel given by a godly man: If at any time you feel that you cannot bear the burdens of life, do as Elijah did, flee into the silence of solitude and sit under, not the juniper tree, but under that tree whereon the Incarnate Son of God was made a curse for you! God will surely open a way out of your difficulties when you return."

Theodore Springer took his wife's advice, and when kissing her good-by he thanked God for such a treasure.

He could not have gone to a better place than Aunt Martha's. She had cured many a weary, tired out man of God. But his two weeks had not wholly passed away before he received this telegram from his wife: "Come at once, Mrs. Starbuck is ill and wants to see you."

The next train bore him away from his quiet haven of rest, and at the Ashton depot he found his brave little wife, who said:

"I'll take your bundles and you can go immediately to Mrs. Starbuck's."

He found that lady anxiously expecting him. She held out a trembling hand to him as he entered. "God bless you for your faithfulness," she said. "I am very ill and I know I am going to die. I should have died in a false peace if it had not been for you. As I lay here I thought of what you had said. You did not think me fit for the Church and how could I hope God would accept me? And my conscience tells me you were right. Now Mr. Springer sit down and tell me what I must do to be saved."

Never did a man enter on a work more thankfully. It was not easy; for worldliness and pride had eaten into the woman's soul. But the Holy Spirit had prepared the way, and the pastor followed where he had led. He visited her many times during the days of her journey to the dark river. At the last, he stood by her bedside and caught the feeble murmurs of her dying words: "A poor sinner pleading the blood of the Saviour."

"Theodore," said his wife, when he had told her all, "are you not glad now that you were faithful to your post and to God? It has come true as he promised: 'Fear not for I am with thee and will bless thee.'"

THE ORDER OF FUTURE EVENTS.

The Rapture of the Waiting Saints, The Great Tribulation and Millennial Reign of Christ.

BY REV. B. PHILPOT.*

LOOKING at prophetic events in the character and succession in which we believe them to be revealed, we may expect the Second Advent to be preceded by a circle of fiery judgments through the whole ten kingdoms of the fourth monarchy (Luke 21: 25, 26), and Matt. 24: 29.) These will constitute the beginning of the great tribulation.

Many of the righteous will be taken from the evil to come, and they which remain will be upheld under it by special strength, and by the latter day outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon them. These troubles will go on increasing till the seventh trumpet sounds, and the sign of the Son of Man be seen in the heavens. After the Lord has appeared and gathered all his saints up to him in the air, the tribulation on earth will grow yet more dark and dreadful.

When Jesus appears on his shekinah throne in the air, he will bid his "dead body" of Sleeping Saints to Arise, and his living Church be changed. Then shall the righteous dead "hear his voice and come forth," and all believers which are alive will find their "earthly house of this tabernacle" suddenly clothed upon with "their house which is from heaven;" and both will be "together caught up to meet their Lord in the air."

It is important to mark this distinction between the appearance of our Lord, on his ap-proach to the earth, and his subsequent personal coming, or actual arrival on Mount Olivet. Observe, also, that the saints are said to come with Jesus from heaven; therefore to heaven they must first have gone to him. One event is recorded in Zech. 14: 5; Rev. 19: 14; the other 1. Thess. 5: 14-18. The rising to meet him in the air when he appears, and the coming down with him to Jerusalem, are two distinct events, and between them the judgment of the saints will take place.

Whether the exodus of the dead and living saints will be understood by the ungodly world, is, in some degree, doubtful. Probably their sudden absence from the earth will excite only a passing expression of wonder as to where those meddlers are gone. They, meanwhile, are safe in the ark of their Lord's presence; and then will commence the first act of

A Purely Remunerative Judgment.

This decision will affect the saints only, and award them their places in the kingdom, according to the use they have made of the talents entrusted to them. It is expressly said, that this remunerative judgment will be according to their work. Saved as each will be by sovereign grace, and "justified by faith without the deeds of the law," yet the place assigned to each in the kingdom, will depend on the diligence and self-denial, and painstaking zeal and love, with which each has laid out his talent. The righteous Judge will give to each as his work has been.

* From his article in The Prophetic News, edited by Rev. M. Baxter. The January number contains, beside this article, papers on "Allied Kings in 1892;" "Approaching Judgment Day of Nations," by Dr. Horatius Bonar; "The King's Daughter;" "The Ready and Unready at Christ's Advent," etc. Price, six cents; seventy cents a year. May be had from Rev. George A. Sparks, 92 Bible House, New York.

This adjudication of rewards will continue till the set time is come for the deliverance of Jerusalem, and the full execution of ### Vengeance on the Gentile Confederacy.

During the great tribulation, which begins just before, and goes on through the whole time that Jesus is in the air with his saints, the Jews will have quietly and almost unobservedly gathered together in their own land. They will have rulers of their own and great wealth. The lust after their riches will bring down upon them the armies of the north, and countless masses of the ungodly, led on by the infidel and Papal Antichrists, and the man of sin, who is an incarnation of Satan. For a season they are permitted to oppress mightily the people and city of David. From these, however, a bitter cry reaches the ear of their kinsman Redeemer; and the Mighty One "girds his sword upon his thigh," and "rides forth in his majesty;" and the armies of his saints follow him, and "his arrows are in the heart of his enemies."

We now turn with animating assurance to the blissful reign of Jesus with his saints on earth. The whole creation will, by degrees, be delivered "from the bondage of corruption," into the glorious liberty of the children of God." Judea, for various reasons, will probably be the fairest and foremost in this

Bright Revival of Creation.

The new plains, caused by the earthquake at the descent of the Lord and his hosts will be fertilized by the streams that flow from the cleft of the mountain. The purified atmosphere, and perhaps also the contiguity of the holy city of light, the wondrous abode of Jesus and his saints may all prove agencies in the hand of the Lord for great improvement in the material earth. This renewal of the earth to perfect beauty will not be complete till the close of the Millennium. Then there will be "no more sea" (Rev. 21: 1), probably no more rain; but, as at first, a mist, or gentle dew, will descend and refresh the earth.

There remains one more series of judgments, and one other form of rebellion, wherein the odiousness of sin and God's infinite hatred of it will be fully manifested. We read that numbers will be found, at the close of that period of blessedness, combining for evil, as soon as the tempter shall be permitted to try them. The cause is not revealed; but it seems probable that it will spring from a jealousy of the family of Abraham, and of their holy peace, and magnificent city and temple; and of the special favor of the Lord, which, according to his covenant promise, will rest nationally upon them.

I venture to ascribe this

Last Rebellion.

to a growing envy of the Jews, because the first act of this confederate host is to compass the beloved city and the holy place. But the Lord will remember his covenant, and quickly "send fire from heaven to devour them all;" as in the days of Lot, when he destroyed the guilty cities of the plain.

Then comes, in order of narration, the judgment of the great white throne. It stands in connection with many events which could not be pre-millennial, and is clearly identified with the final and general judgment of "the rest of the dead." (Verse 5.) If it be not referred to them we have no intimation of their judgment at all.

This is the last recorded act of the Son of Man, simply as Judge. All have received their sentence. "The enemy and the avenger are stilled;" and the whole creation reposes in heavenly rest, completely renewed into the perfection of God's handiwork. The tree of life no longer forbidden to man, will continually furnish the nations with new sources of enjoyment. The holy city of ineffable light and beauty, which seems to be the last and fullest manifestation of Jehovah's glory to man, will descend nearer to our earth, so that "kings will bring their glory into it," and the post-millennial generations will walk in the gladsome light of it, and hold constant and happy intercourse with its inhabitants.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

HEART AS WELL AS HEAD.

THERE is much eulogy of mental culture as though that were enough without moral and religious culture, but the more a man knows the worse for society, if he be a bad man. What does the capacity of a man to read amount to if he reads bad books? What does a man's capacity to write amount to if he writes bad sentiments? Better not be able to read or write at all. Knowledge is power for good if sanctified. Knowledge is power for evil if unsanctified. Robespierre, and Rousseau and Byron were illustrations of what men with magnificent mental endowments will do when they have no moral restraint. Those men might better have been born, and lived, and died on the lowest round of ignorance, than to have risen and cursed the world with their cruelties and nastiness. The youth of this country need something besides reading and writing and arithmetic in order that they may be prepared for good citizenship. The great pest of this country to-day is the educated villains. They know enough. They know too much. They know everything. There is no machine more useful than a locomotive. Here I see one standing. Piston-rods, cranks, axles, cylinders, driving-wheels, throttle-valve, all perfect. A good engineer gets on that locomotive, fastens it to a long train of cars, drags an immense value of freightage or life across the continent. He does well. A reckless engineer comes up to that same locomotive, gets on it, and puts it at the rate of fifty miles an hour; comes near a dangerous curve, leaps off, while the train goes on into shrieking and death. That is just the difference between educated mind without moral principle, and educated mind with moral principle. In either case it is a powerful engine. In the one case it drags a long line of good influence across the earth. In the other case, Christian principle jumps off, and moral restraint jumps off, leaving the train to go into terrific demolition. Ignorance is bad, but intelligence is worse, if immoral. Almost everybody talks about the days of Greece and Rome. They had so much intelligence, so many orators, and painters, and poets, and thinkers. No doubt about it. But how about the morals of Greece and Rome? Why is it that when a gentleman is travelling with his family in Europe, and he comes to the museums containing the relics of ancient art, the janitor taps him on the shoulder and says: "Only gentlemen will pass in there." Why? It is because the paintings and the sculpture of ancient Greece and Rome were abhorrent to all decency, and splendid Corinth and magnificent Pompeii were worse than the Five Points in the worst days of the Five Points. Intelligence, art, eloquence, without the Christian religion is defamation, ruin, disaster, woe.

STEP-MOTHERS.

WE have often wondered why it is that the novels and romances always made the step-mother turn out so very badly. She always dresses too much and bangs the children. The authors, if writing out of their own experience, must have had a very hard time. In society it has become a proverb "cruel as a step-mother." We are disposed, however, to think that while there may be marked exceptions, step-mothers are the most self-sacrificing beings in all the world. They come into the family scrutinized by the household and the relatives of the one who used to occupy the motherly position. Neighborly busybodies meet the children in the street, and sigh over them, and ask them how their new mother treats them. The wardrobe of the youngsters comes under the severe inspection of outsiders. The child having been taught that the lady of the household is "nothing but a step-mother," screams at the least chastisement, knowing that the neighbor's window is up, and this will be a good way of making publication. That is called cruelty which is only a most reasonable, moderate, and Christian spanking. What a job she has in navigating the whole nursery of somebody else's children through mumps, measles, whooping-cough, and chicken-pox! One of the things that we rejoice over in life is, that it is impossible that we ever become a step-mother. In many cases she has the largest possible toil for the least reward.

Blessed be the Lord who setteth the solitary in families, that there are glorious exceptions. The new mother comes to the new home, and the children gather the first day around her as the natural protector. They never know the difference between the first and second mother. They seem like two verses of the same hymn, two days of the same summer, two strokes of the same bell, two blessings from the same God.

She is watchful all night long over the sick little one, bathing the brow and banishing the scare of the feverish dream. After awhile those children will rise up to do her honor, and when her work is done, she will go up to get the large reward that awaits a faithful, great-hearted Christian step-mother in the land where the neighbors all mind their own business.

WAKE UP!

THE Church needs a change in quality as well as quantity of membership. One-half of the professed Christians amount to nothing. They go to church. They pay pew rents. They have a kind regard for all religious institutions. But as to any firm grip of the truth, any enthusiastic service for Christ, any cheerful self-denial, and over-mastering prayer, any capacity to strike hard blows for God, they are a failure. One of two things these half-and-half professors ought to do—either withdraw their names from the Church-roll or else go so near the fire as to get warm. Do you know that your present position is an absurdity?

You profess to be living for God and heaven, but all the world knows you are lying. Wake up! Do something before you are dead. Either help pull the Lord's chariot, or get out of the way. We want more old-style holiness, the kind they had before railroads, steamboats, and telegraphs. A consecrated heart is momentum for all Christian work. Your gun is well enough, but the gun-carriage is rickety, and so unfit for the Lord's battery. The Lord give us all a higher life, a deeper life, a broader life! We cannot do much toward saving others till we ourselves are more surely saved. We cannot pull others out of the surf when our own feet are slipping on the rock. More purity, more faith, more consecration will be more momentum.

BRIEF NOTES.

Subscribers and friends of this journal will be glad to learn that the new year has brought an enormous increase in circulation, passing far beyond our most sanguine expectations. Though this pressure of business was unforeseen, we confidently hope that there have been few cases of delay and scarcely any errors. Should, however, any friend have cause for complaint, the fact that our mail has averaged over a thousand letters a day must be our excuse for any temporary oversight there may have been, and it will be promptly rectified on our attention being called to it.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is sincerely thankful to be able to report evidences of God's blessing on the services being held in the Academy of Music, New York. On the last three Sunday evenings fully six hundred persons have risen on the invitation of Dr. Talmage to ask the prayers of God's people for their salvation and have remained after the service for special prayer. It is now four months since THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by hiring this large building in the centre of the city, has given the people of the metropolis an opportunity of hearing Dr. Talmage's arousing sermons every Sunday evening. The extent to which they have used the opportunity has been marvellous; at every service they came in greater numbers than the Academy (which holds nearly six thousand persons) could accommodate. Though many were doubtless led there by curiosity, the events of the past few weeks show that the deeper feeling, which the Holy Spirit awakens, has been produced.

The Wesley Evangelists are conducting services in the M. E. Church, South Third Street, Brooklyn, E. D., Rev. S. Smith, pastor. Mr. Cannon reports a very cheering work of grace, and says that many souls are being saved.

Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, in presiding at the Fifteenth Anniversary of the Railroad Branch of the Y. M. C. A. in New York, on January 13th, said that the membership had now grown to 1,273. During the past year there had been an attendance of 116,926. Ninety-five such branches are now organized, and they are maintained at an annual cost of $140,000. Fourteen of these branches own their buildings.

The New York Society for the Suppression of Vice, celebrated its Seventeenth Anniversary yesterday in the Y. M. C. A. building on Twenty-third Street. During the past year the Society has seized over three tons of contraband matter, among which were the plates of several obscene books and other articles used in the fiendish work of corrupting the morals of the community. The energy and activity of the Society in the public interest are beyond praise, and they merit the hearty support of every Christian citizen.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has commenced a series of services in the Young Men's Christian Association Building, in Providence, R. I. The Providence Journal says that at the meeting for men only on January 11, the hall was filled in every part and large numbers were unable to gain admission. When all those who were already Christians were requested to rise, less than one-third of those present stood up. Later on, when an invitation was given to any who were desirous of quitting sin and beginning a Christian life to come forward, over one hundred and fifty men and youths complied. A most hopeful work has evidently commenced.

The services the Rev. Thomas Harrison is holding in the Seventeenth Street M. E. Church, New York, are growing in interest and blessing day by day. They are marked by prayerfulness, hopefulness and power. Fifteen young men were among the converts in the early days of last week and there were many other remarkable conversions. An efficient choir, led by Mr. Johnson, conducts the singing, and many Christian workers from New York and Brooklyn have been active in the after-meetings. Mr. Harrison speaks most hopefully of the promise the beginning of these meetings has given. He believes that it indicates a rich harvest of souls.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Revolution in Chili End of the Indian Troubles in Dakota—New Wonders in the Heavens. An Approaching Royal Wedding The Silver Bill and Congress—Disgraceful Scenes in the Colorado Legislature.

The Revolution in Chili, which was announced in last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD, is now fairly under way. President Balmaceda's official term ends on September 1, 1891, and under the Constitution he is ineligible for re-election. During his administration he has been regarded till now as the friend of progress, and he has carried many liberal measures of reform into effect; but he allowed himself to be persuaded into advocating the election of Don Augustin Edwards, a man of great wealth but most unpopular, and in consequence he is now opposed by the very factions and journals that were formerly his warm supporters. Besides, he has opposed the passage of a new election law and refused to recognize delegates who were appointed to the national convention to be held in February. All these matters, and the fact that the administration has enforced the law preventing army and navy officers from participating in politics, have operated to excite feeling against him. This discontent has been encouraged by Senor Edwards, who, it is said, has been the prime mover in the present revolt. The latest phase of the revolution is the defection of the two warships, Almirante Cochran and Magell, which are now engaged in blockading the ports from Coquimbo to Iquique. No provisions can now be sent into Iquique, and it is the purpose of the rebels to prevent the nitrate trade, the chief source of revenue of Chili, from being carried on while the present troubles last.

Seven Thousand Hostile Indians Surrendered to the troops under General Brooke and came into the Agency at Pine Ridge, S. D., on the 15th inst. For some time the Indian camp in the hills had been surrounded by the soldiers who occupied three points of a triangle, making escape impossible. There was a long and quarrelsome consultation among the hostiles as to a surrender, and many of the young bucks wanted to stay out and fight; but wiser counsels prevailed, and Brules, Ogallalas and others broke camp, and with squaws, ponies and children trailing behind them in a vast, scattered procession, came over the hills to the Agency. Kicking Bear, the famous chief of the Brules, was the first to turn in his rifle to the soldiers, and his example was followed by the other chiefs in rapid succession. This practically ends the trouble in the Sioux country, for although the Indians at the Agency far outnumber the whites, any attempt at treachery would be instantly punished by a general slaughter. The leading chiefs are coming East to Washington to state their needs, and there is now a chance that the wrongs, which have been largely the cause of driving them to war, may be righted without the intervention of the sword. Dishonest agents and the rum bottle are said to be responsible for much of the troubles in South Dakota.

Recent Photographs of the Heavens, taken with more powerful lenses than were ever before applied to that task, reveal new wonders such as the astronomers never dreamed of. Harvard, which leads all the American colleges in this interesting science, reports that one of its members, Mr. Bailey, has taken during the year, one thousand three hundred views at Corsica, representing nearly the entire heavens, from twenty degrees south of the Equator to the South Pole and these have been mapped off into charts which show stars of the fourteenth magnitude and the spectra of those of the eighth magnitude. Hundreds of new and brilliant stars of various magnitudes have been discovered, some of them bright and steady in their light, while others are variable. In one series of pictures taken by a lady—Mrs. Fleming one hundred and ten new spectra have been discovered. Another lady—Miss Mauny—has discovered a second and unknown star in Beta Aurigae which revolves around the central planet every four days. The closer man gets to God's handiwork, the more he is impressed with its infinitude and its beauty, and the supreme wisdom of that intelligence which has created and directs all thing in the universe.

The next Royal Wedding Abroad Will be that of Princess Louise, of Schleswig-Holstein, one of Queen Victoria's numerous grandchildren, and Prince Aribert, the third surviving son of the Duke of Anhalt-Nassau. The young pair were betrothed at Berlin recently, with the usual simple ceremony peculiar to Germany, in the presence of Emperor William. Princess Louise is in her nineteenth year, having been born on August 12, 1872. She is the younger daughter of Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and Princess Helena of Great Britain. Her full name is Franziska Josepha Louise Augusta Marie Christiana Helena. Prince Aribert Joseph Alexander von Anhalt, a "Serene Highness," born at the summer palace of Worlitz on June 18, 1864, is the third and youngest son of the reigning Duke Frederick of Anhalt (comprising the reunited Duchies of Anhalt-Dessau, Anhalt-Koethen, and Anhalt-Bernburg.) He is a lieutenant of the 1st Dragoon Guards, of which regiment the Queen of England is honorary colonel. The bride is a charming girl, of a most lovable nature, and the groom is said to be a manly, conscientious fellow, happily far different from many of the princes that surround the European thrones.

PRINCESS LOUISE AND PRINCE ARIBERT.

One of the most Important Acts of Congress during the present session was the passage by the United States Senate, on the 14th inst., of the Silver Bill, introduced by Senator Vest. It is a free-coinage measure pure and simple, free from all the National Bank and bond legislation contained in the Financial Bill, and is almost identical with the bill passed by the Senate a year ago. It provides that the unit value in the United States shall be the dollar of four hundred and twelve and a half grains of standard silver or twenty-five and eight-tenths grains of standard gold; these coins to be a legal tender all over the country. Owners of silver or gold bullion may deposit the same at any United States mint to be coined into dollars or bars without charge; silver and gold certificates from $1 to $100, redeemable in coin, are provided for, and these also are declared to be a legal tender. The prospects of the Silver Bill in the House are considered good.

A Disgraceful Quarrel took Place in the Colorado State House at Denver, on the 15th. In the House of Representatives or Assembly are two factions whose warfare has been very bitter. One is headed by Jesse B. White, the other by Speaker Hanna. The White men, being thwarted in the selection of a Speaker, held a meeting in the chamber for the purpose of organizing a rump legislature. Speaker Hanna, hearing of this, secured a number of officers to guard his seat and to protect the official records. As he entered the chamber, at 11 A. M., he was shot in the head by a White factionist, the bullet wounding his left cheek. Police Inspector Hawley, hearing the firing, rushed in and was shot in the head by a White factionist, the wound being mortal. Policeman Norris who came to his superior's aid was also shot by the same assassin. The Assembly building was then surrounded by a cordon of police with drawn revolvers. Two companies of State militia were ordered on duty to repress further disturbances. The Legislature adjourned, and meetings are being held all over the State for the purpose of requesting the riotous members to resign.

The Church Army Social Scheme for "Darkest England," introduced into Great Britain twelve months ago, is an adaptation of the German Labor Home Colony System, which is based on personal religious influence. It was also the first to propose the farm and over-sea colony as supplementary to the city labor home colonies. All the other parts of General Booth's scheme have long been, to a large extent, effectually carried out by existing Church and other agencies. They also can effect great economy in funds and power by using the already existing machinery—mission halls and schoolrooms all over the country, now rarely used except on Sundays, will make excellent workshops and sleeping quarters. Ninety thousand pounds have now been given to General Booth for his Social Scheme. He has also received three or four months ago £25,000 from the Self-Denial Fund of London. Nevertheless, Commissioner Smith has had to resign the management of the Social Scheme, for, he says, "I had to face, day by day, the clamoring of destitute and starving crowds. There were not sufficient funds in my hands at any one time to pay the ordinary accounts for goods supplied to the food and shelter depots, the work-shops, and other departments. We were actually summoned for our local rates in several cases as a consequence of our straitened circumstances. If this does not point to pecuniary starvation, it certainly comes very close to it."

Baron Georges Eugene Haussmann, who died of apoplexy at Paris, on January 12, was, in an architectural sense, the father of modern Paris. Of his 82 years of life, fifty were passed in the public service. Under the third Napoleon, Baron Haussmann carried out many great works of public improvement which made his name famous all over Europe. He beautified the Bois de Boulogne, extended many of the leading streets and avenues, straightened out the boulevards in old Paris, and constructed public gardens, squares, Halles Centrales, bridges, barracks, asylums and hospitals. He expended on these works over five thousand million francs, employed thousands of the most skilled workmen in Europe,—designers, architects and sculptors, and made Paris the most beautiful city in Europe and the world. The formation of the great avenues, was specially designed with a view to controlling a possible revolution, while a pretence was made of adorning the city. After the fall of the Empire, he left France, but returned when there was a prospect of a restoration of the Napoleonic dynasty. The Republic paid him the distinguished compliment of allowing the name of the Boulevard Haussmann to stand, at a time when all the marks of the old Empire were being obliterated.

At last Professor Koch, Yielding to Great public pressure, has disclosed the secret of his wonderful lymph discovery. The substance is obtained from the tubercular bacilli, with the aid of a forty to fifty per cent. solution of glycerine, in other words a glycerine extract derived from the pure cultivation of tubercle bacilli. Into this extract there passes a certain quantity of mineral salts, coloring matter and other unknown substances, which are easily removed, but the effective substance itself is insoluble even in absolute alcohol. It is possible to obtain from the extract a colorless, dry substance, which would contain the effective principle in a much more concentrated form than the liquid. While he admits that in its effects there is as yet much that is speculative and experimental, he declares it is a positive specific in cases of tuberculosis or consumption. This conclusion is reached after many experiments on animals and observations of its effect on human beings. The revelation of Dr. Koch's secret is already reviving the interest taken in the discovery, whose virtues many distinguished physicians were beginning to doubt.

SIN FORGIVEN.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

Men Who Think Lightly of Sin—The Effect of the Spirit's Enlightenment—I. Apt to Deem Pardon Impossible—On Account of Specially Gross Sins—Of the Multitude of Sins—Of their Being Wilful—Of Being Backsliders—Of the Injury Wrought on Others—II. God's Thoughts Superior to Man's Thoughts—In Nature—In Providence—III. His Thoughts of Pardon—Long-Suffering—Complete—Forgives and Forgets—IV. Unlimited Grace.

"He will abundantly pardon. For my thoughts are not your thoughts neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." Isaiah 55 : 7-9.

At first, men have very low ideas of sin. It is a trifle, a mere mistake, a failure of judgment, a little going aside; but when the Holy Spirit begins to deal with them, sin grows to be an intolerable burden, a fearsome thing, full of horror and dismay. The more men know of the evil of sin, the more astounded they are that they ever should have found any pleasure in it, or could have made any excuse for it. Now, it is well when men begin to see the truth about themselves; for even if that truth breaks them into pieces, and grinds them small as the dust of the threshing-floor, it is well that they are delivered from the dominion of falsehood.

At this time, however, while the thought of sin becomes clear, the thought of pardon is not at first so clear. Sin is great, and for that reason the sinner thinks it cannot be pardoned, as if he measured the Lord by his sin, and fancied that his sin was greater than the mercy of God. Hence our difficulty with men who are really awakened, is to raise their thoughts of God's mercy in proportion to their raised idea of the greatness of sin. While they do not feel their sin, they say that God is merciful, and talk very flippantly about it, as if pardon were a trifle. But when they feel the weight of sin, then they think it impossible that sin should be forgiven. In our text God helps the sinner to believe in pardon by elevating his idea of God. Because God is infinitely superior to man, he can abundantly pardon. "For my thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways, saith the Lord. For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts." He can abundantly pardon, because his nature is not on our level.

Self-Condemed.

I. Your own thoughts judge pardon to be impossible. Let me show you why. To some it seems impossible that there can be forgiveness for them, because of some special, secret, gross, and grievous sin. Most persons, when they remember their past lives, see a certain spot blacker than the rest. Perhaps more light falls upon that spot than upon any other, but certainly the eye of memory constantly returns to it; and when they take a view of their lives, they are overwhelmed by the remembrance of certain enormous transgressions. In conversing with inquirers, it has been my painful lot to hear many an awful story, which will never be repeated by me. They weep over sins inexcusable, sins foul and terrible; but oh, it has always been a delight to me to be able to say, "All manner of sin and blasphemy shall be forgiven unto men!" I have never heard in secret of any special action that has seemed to me—even seemed to me—to be beyond the reach of grace. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin."

Those convicted of sin, who think their cases heinous beyond all others, are sometimes astonished when we tell them that many such have been forgiven, and remind them how the apostle, after he had mentioned all manner of enormities, says, "And such were some of you; but ye are washed." They fancy Christ only came into the world to save saints; but he came into the world to save sinners. They imagine that he saves those who think themselves sinners, and are not truly such; but it is not so. Jesus did not come to save sham sinners, but those that have committed real sin, and ought to be ashamed of what they have done. Jesus died for the guilty. Thinkest thou that the ransom paid in his blood on Calvary was for trifling offences? Nay, verily, the infinite One died because enormous sin was to be put away. Believe, then, in

A Great Saviour for Great Sinners!

To others the difficulty of pardon seems to lie not so much in some special offence, as in the number of their sins, and the long continuance of them. In your room the air seems clear and pure enough till you let in a beam of sunlight through a hole in the shutter. Look! look! look! Why, dancing up and down in that ray of sunlight there are myriads of objects. So, within the action which appears quite innocent, there may be myriads of evils which are discovered to us by the light of God when the eye of conscience has the scales taken from it. To have lived in sin for twenty, forty, sixty, or eighty years, appears to the awakened conscience to be a very dreadful thing; and a dreadful thing it is. It is cruel to provoke a person for five minutes; to go on provoking him for an hour is abominable; but to provoke God year after year, as sinners do, is a tremendous crime, which might seem to be beyond mercy. So the heart feels, and hence the need for such a text as mine.

Others have been grievously oppressed with the idea that they could not be pardoned because of the wilfulness of what they have done. "I did, on such and such an occasion," says one, "distinctly prefer sin to righteousness. I sinned against great light. Certainly this is a very grievous evil. To sin wilfully is dangerous to the last degree. Wilfulness is the very damnablest of sin."

Sin Committed of Malice

aforethought, against light and against knowledge, is sin indeed. I do not wonder that you think it impossible that you should be forgiven; but I would have you remember that your judgment is nothing as compared with God's Word, and God's Word declares that if you forsake your way and turn to the Lord, "he will abundantly pardon."

"Sir," says one, "I sinned with a great falsehood and treachery of heart; for I was baptized and joined a church. I professed to be a follower of Christ, and I have broken my covenant. I did know something of the salvation of Christ, and I sinned against it. I did rejoice at one time in the light of God's countenance, and I wickedly went astray from him." Yes, this is very, very, very grievous. But there is a text that says; "Return, O backsliding daughter;" and I cannot go further until I have sounded it in your ear. May the spirit of God send it into your heart! "I will heal their backsliding, I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from them." "He will abundantly pardon;" for as high as the heavens are above the earth, so are his ways higher than your ways.

Tempters of Others.

I hear one say, "But, sir, there is about my sin this peculiar heinousness, that I have injured myself and others by my sin." Many a man has to carry in his bones the sins of his youth and though the physical consequences may not be averted, yet I would have him trust in Christ, that the guilt is, notwithstanding, blotted out. We may lead another into sin, and that other may perish; and yet, amazing grace, we may be saved. When David was forgiven, he could not restore Uriah to life, who had been slain through his wicked device. Worst of all, we may have led another into hell. "Oh," says one, "if I have damned another, can I yet be saved myself?" Yes, yes; but as I say it, I feel inclined to stop and ask you to sing,

Who is a pardoning God like thee,
Or who hath grace so rich and free?

We cannot undo the mischief of our ungodly lives. The drunkard may become as sober as he pleases, but he cannot bring back those young lads whom he taught to drink. The man who was an unbeliever, and who spoke against God and his Christ, may turn and repent, and be a faithful follower of Jesus: but the wicked things he taught may still linger in many minds, and go on poisoning them to their destruction. Sin is a spreading plague. It is a horrible evil; and were it not for the cross, it would be a despairing business to talk with sinful souls; but the cross, the cross, it rises high above all the hills of sin, and they that look to it shall find that God doth abundantly pardon.

II. But, secondly,

God's Thoughts

of other things are far above yours. I am not going to keep you long on that. It is quite certain that the best thoughts—the most logical thoughts, the most original thoughts, the most correct thoughts you have ever had—are not worthy to be compared with God's thoughts. Now, look in nature. Did you ever think such thoughts as God has thought in creation? You take the wing of a fly, an insignificant thing, and simple enough; but you put it under a microscope and you see it to be a fabric of great beauty, of exquisite delicacy, and of marvellous adaptation to the end for which it was made. Many a person who has looked in a microscope has been overwhelmed with wonder. You put a needle under it, and it is a rough bar of iron; but you take any of the works of God, and magnify them as much as ever you will, you never detect any roughness. Nothing can be better finished than God's little things; even in minute matters his thoughts are not as your thoughts. You fancy that you are so insignificant that he will not forgive you. Oh, but he that spend infinite wisdom upon the wing of a fly will care for you, and spend infinite thought upon you, that he may forgive you.

In Providence.

God's thoughts in providence—how wonderfully they are above ours! You read history, and everything seems to be tangle. The stories of the nations look like "confusion worse confounded"; and yet, before you have read through the chapter, you see in it a plan and a method—

From seeming evil still educing good,
And better still, and better still,
In infinite progression.

God works wonderfully in providence, in ways that we look not for. His thoughts are above our thoughts.

It has even been so in your own mind as to the future. Read the prophecies, and see what is yet to be. God's thoughts about a new heaven and a new earth—how far above ours! The book of Revelation, which gives us parts of God's thought about the future, is not to be understood by us as yet. We have to wait till facts explain it; for God's thoughts are above our thoughts. Why, take a simple matter like the resurrection of the dead. We bury the departed, and their bodies are dissolved. God's thought is that they shall rise again. The seed shall become the flower. God's thoughts are far above any thought that can arise in your soul.

III. I merely throw that in as an interjectory head, to come to this—that are above yours. God's ways of pardon are far above anything you can ever compass. Look at yourself. Are you not slow to forgive? Some are sadly slow! It is a long time before they can get over an injury. God forgives readily. Through the death of his dear Son he is able, without the violation of his justice, to forgive at once, freely, readily. There are no compulsions with him: "He delighteth in mercy." It is his very self to pardon; for God is love. Do not judge God's heart by that hard heart of yours. He is a God ready to pardon.

His Thoughts About Pardon

You come to an end of your forgiveness before long. After being offended seven times, you do not go on to seventy times seven. If you did so, surely you would make a great wonder of it, and think that you deserved great praise. But God goes on to seventy times seventy times—on, and on, and on, and never comes to the end of pardoning mercy so long as a soul cries to him for forgiveness.

Some things you find it hard to forgive. You say, "Well, now—now, this is really provoking I am of a forgiving spirit, and I have overlooked offences a great many times, but you do not expect me to endure such treatment as this? Surely nobody can expect me to be always trodden on." No, nobody does expect it of you, and if he did he would be disappointed. God does far more in the way of pardon than we ask, or even think.

God Forgetting.

I am afraid I must say of some of you that you forgive, but you do not forget. Now, God promises to forget our iniquities. It is more than omniscience can do to forget; and yet God declares that he does forget. "I will cast all their sins behind my back," saith he. "I will cast their iniquities into the depths of the sea. They shall not be remembered against them any more forever."

Dear friend, I do not slander you when I say that you are not very eager to pardon. Are you? When you have been offended, you think a good deal of yourself, if, after persuasion and humble apology, you are ready to give your hand to the aggressor, and end the dispute. You are not pining to forgive; but God is. It is he, the offended one, who seeks the offender, and proposes to make peace with him. It is he that cries, "Hold," and bids transgressors come to him; yea pleads with them—"Be ye reconciled to God." "As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live."

Do you think that any of us would suffer much for the sake of being able to forgive another? "No," you say, "I do not see that I ought to suffer for his wrong. I will forgive him if I can do so freely; but I could not consent to be a loser thereby." Should there be a very serious difficulty in the way, so that you cannot rightly forgive without some atonement being made, would you make the atonement yourself? You exclaim with astonishment, "I make the atonement! How can you propose such a thing?" Some time ago, a case did occur in which I and did so with a measure of success. Two brethren had greatly grieved each other. One had acted very shamefully. I entreated the other to forgive him, and as he did not feel willing to do so, I said, "There are certain consequences involved in what he has done. I will bear all those consequences, and you may regard me as the guilty party if you please." Well, he said he could not be angry with me, because I had done no wrong. However, I did bear the consequences of the wrong action, and thus I made peace between the two. The aggrieved brother was able, by my interposition, to overlook the injury, and yet to keep his word; but he regretted that I should be the scapegoat, until I assured him I was pleased to do it, that I might bring them together again. It would not have been wise for me to ask the offended brother to suffer himself the consequences of the other's offences; but this is what God has done. The consequences of our sin he bears; and Jesus dies because our sin involved death. Miracle of mercy!

Tried to Imitate the Saviour,

His Thoughts of Grace.

IV. I might finish here, but I wanted to say, had there been time, that God's thoughts are above yours in all things which concern his grace. Would you mind reading the chapter through again? Just see the very first verse as to the freeness of his grace. Your thought is that you can get nothing without paying for it: God's thoughts are, "Come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy, and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price." But you think that if God were to save you he would perform it in second-rate style. Not he! He will have no niggard salvations. If he supplies his people, it shall be most richly and freely. You that are the guiltiest may come to Christ, and be among the happiest hand the best of his saints. Nobody would ever imagine that a sinner could ever enter into covenant with God—that God should strike hands with guilty men, and pledge himself to grace. I remember under a long sentence, he was so violent that he was put into a solitary cell. The chaplain had done all he could as to bringing him to repentance; but one day he read to him this verse: "I will make an everlasting covenant with you." The man said, "I never heard of such a thing. Can God make a covenant with such a wretch as I am? Sir," said he, "it will break my heart"; and it did break his heart, and he became a new man in Christ Jesus under the power of that amazing thought, that God would enter into covenant with such a wretch as he was.

A Man Shut up in Prison,

"Ah, well!" says one, "I will go home, and cry to God for mercy." That is your thought. Listen to God's thought. "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near." Breathe a prayer to him now. Look to Jesus with the eye of faith at once! The Lord help you so to do! Your thought is that salvation is to be won through months or years of labor and prayer. But pardon is given as quick as a lightning flash. The sin is there! The sin is gone! The dead soul lives!

The Lost Soul is Saved!

Ah! still you think, "How can I be pardoned?" Listen to this: "Let the wicked forsake his way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts: and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon." Read the rest of the chapter, and say to yourself, over each verse, "This was not my thought; this was not my way." End all your doubts with the last verse: "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off." Ah, my God! this is not my way, and this is not my thought.

Who is a pardoning God like thee,
Or who hath grace so rich, and free?

The Lord bring all of you, who are not saved as yet, to believe unto eternal life! And you that are his people, I beseech you, pray God to bless this word for his name's sake. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

The Second Isaiah.*

WE see that there is no evidence in the book of Isaiah to prove that it was all by himself, but much testimony that points to a plurality of authors; that from the fortieth chapter to the sixty-sixth there is nowhere any assertion that they are by Isaiah, and that there is no other well-grounded claim of Scripture or of doctrine on behalf of his authorship. We see that the prophecies from the fortieth to the forty-eighth chapter do not only present the exile as if nearly finished and Cyrus as if already come, while the fall of Babylon is still future; but that it is essential to one of their main arguments that Cyrus should be standing before Israel and the world, as a successful warrior on his way to attack Babylon. That leads us to date these chapters between 555 and 538 B.C. Turning then to other evidence—the local color they show, their language and style, and their theology—we find nothing which conflicts with that date, but, on the contrary, a very great deal, which much more agrees with it than with the date, or with the authorship of Isaiah. . . . We are therefore justified in coming to the provisional conclusion, that the Second Isaiah is not a unity, in so far as it consists of a number of pieces by different men, whom God raised up at various times before, during, and after the exile, to comfort and exhort amid the shifting circumstances and tempers of his people; but that it is a unity in so far as these pieces have been gathered together by an editor very soon after the return from the exile, in an order as regular both in point of time and subject as the somewhat mixed material would permit.

The Captives.

The exact numbers of the first captivity of the Jews it is impossible to determine. The annalist sets the soldiers at seven thousand, the smiths and craftsmen at one thousand; so that, making allowance for other classes whom he mentions, the grown men must, alone, have been over ten thousand; but how many women went, and how many children—the most important factor for the period of the exile with which we have to deal—it is impossible to estimate. The total number of persons can scarcely have been less than twenty-five thousand. More important than their number was the quality of these exiles, and this we can easily appreciate. The royal family and the court were taken, a large number of influential persons, the mighty men of the land, or what must have been nearly all the fighting men, with the necessary artificers; priests also went, Ezekiel among them, and probably representatives of other classes not mentioned by the annalist. Jeremiah remained in the city and the house of David and a considerable population, and although Jeremiah himself held a higher position in public esteem since the vindication of his word by the events of 598, yet he could not be blind to the unchanged character of the people, and the thorough doom which their last respite had only more evidently proved to be inevitable. Gangs of false prophets, both at home and among the exiles, might predict a speedy return. All the Jewish ability of intrigue, with the lavish promises of Egypt and frequent embassies from other nations might work for the overthrow of Babylon. But Jeremiah and Ezekiel knew better. Across the distance which now separated them they chanted, as if in antiphon, the alternate strophes of Judah's dirge.

The March.

It is remarkable how completely the sound of the march from Jerusalem to Babylon has died out of Jewish history. It was an enormous movement. Twice over in ten years ten thousand Jews at the least must have trodden that way; and yet, except for a doubtful verse or two in the Psalter, they have left no echo of their passage. The roads which the exiles traversed were of immemorial use in the history of their fathers; almost every day they must have passed localities the names of which for at least two centuries had rung in the marketplace of Jerusalem. . . . Crossing the Euphrates by one of its numerous passages, the caravans must have turned south across the Habor, and then have traversed the picturesque country of Aram-Naharaim, past Circesium and many other ancient places mentioned in the history of the Patriarchs, till through hills they reached His—that marvellous site which travellers praise as one of the great view-points of the world—and looked out at last upon the land of their captivity, the boundless, almost level tracts of Chaldea, the first home of the race, the traditional Garden of Eden. But of all that we are told nothing. Every eye in the huge caravans seems to have been as the eyes of the blinded king whom they carried with them—able to weep, but not to see. By the route sketched above, it is at least seven hundred miles from Jerusalem to Babylon—a distance which, when taking into account that many of the captives walked in fetters, cannot have occupied less than three months. We may form some conception of the aspect of the caravans from the transportations of captives which are figured on the Assyrian monuments. From these it appears as if families were not separated, but marched together, mules, asses, camels, ox-wagons, and the captives themselves carried goods. Children and women suckling infants were allowed to ride on the wagons. At intervals, were fully armed soldiers, walking in pairs. If we would construct for ourselves some more definite idea of that long march from Judah to Babylon, we might assist our imagination by the details of the only other instance on so great a scale of exile by administrative process—the transportation to Siberia which the Russian Government effects (it is said on good authority) to the extent of eighteen thousand persons a year. Every week throughout the year marching parties, three to four hundred strong, leave Tomsk for Irkutsk, doing twelve to twenty miles daily in fetters, with twenty-four hours rest every third day, or three hundred and thirty miles in a month.

* From the Expositor's Bible: The Book of Isaiah, Vol. II., by George Adam Smith, M. A. This volume covers the period of the history of Israel from Isaiah to the Exile, a period of sorrow and humiliation for the nation, but one rich in literature and poetry, to which belong some of the most treasured passages of the Bible. Pp. 474; Price $1.50. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

DAVID JAMAL, THE DRAGOMAN.

READERS who have followed with interest the narrative given in these pages of Dr. Talmage's tour in the Holy Land will be glad to see the portrait, which appears on this page of David Jamal, who acted as guide or dragoman to the Talmage party.

David Jamal is a native of Nazareth. He was born in 1851, and is therefore now forty years of age. His parents were Greek Catholics, but during the residence in Nazareth of Mr. Robert Spillman, the American missionary, they made his acquaintance, and were brought under his ministrations to a knowledge of the truth. They removed shortly afterward, with their four children to Jerusalem, where David, then a boy of eight years, was sent to Bishop Gobat's school. He remained seven years in this school, making excellent progress both in English and Arabic. He was so remarkable for his intelligence, that when an application was made to the school for an advanced student to travel with the Duke of Connaught, the son of Queen Victoria, Jamal was selected, and during the trip of thirty days he acquitted himself to the entire satisfaction of the party. This experience had an important influence on the young man's future. He thought the life of a dragoman, with daily horse-back rides and the society of men of rank and refinement, much more enjoyable than student life; and he determined not to return. "Having debarassed myself," David says, "from the school's yoke, I took up the celebrated course of a dragoman."

He succeeded excellently. Some very distinguished parties visited the sites of the Holy Land under his guidance and all were delighted with his courtesy and intelligence. He was fully occupied and was fairly prosperous. In 1876 he came to America to see the Centennial Exhibition, and while here, gave several addresses on the Holy Land at Sunday School meetings. Two years afterward he again left his native country for a trip to Europe when he saw the Paris Exposition and paid a visit to England. He resumed his profession on his return and, soon afterward, the value of his services was recognized by Messrs. Cook and Son, the famous tourist agents; who appointed him a regular dragoman for their excursion parties—an appointment which he still holds.

David Jamal's life has not been without its dangers and adventures. On one occasion, while conducting a party, of which Canon Tristram was the head, through the country east of the Jordan, the whole caravan was captured by the Bedouins and was not released until a ransom of $400 had been paid. On another occasion, near the south end of the Dead Sea, some two hundred armed Bedouin robbers surrounded the party which he was conducting, and fired seven or eight shots to scare the travellers. The party had an armed escort, but it was composed of Bedouins, and was just then safely in the rear. David charged the gang single-handed; but a small stream ran in the way, and his horse, in leaping it, struck an overhanging bank, which, giving way, precipitated rider and horse into the water. Scrambling out, David, nothing daunted, continued his course on foot, and going up to the sheik, who was leading the robbers, boldly seized the reins of his horse. David had a gun in his hand at the time, and he thinks it cy that in his not kill the "a calm feel- took him the sheik friendly con- the end the "heaps of was suffered without further molestation. David says, he is "very sure that the daring deed was a strong factor both to arouse their admiration and at the same time to tame their roguish spirits, as it really did."

David Jamal, the Oriental Dragoman.

David holds many certificates and substantial testimonials which have been given to him as marks of appreciation by American and English travellers and has a most excellent record. Dr. Talmage speaks in the highest terms of his efficiency and courtesy.

A JEWISH SCHOOL IN CAIRO.

(See Illustration on page 45.)

A SURPRISING mixture of races is to be found in the famous Egyptian city which is the largest in all Africa and the second in size under Mohammedan rule, Constantinople being the largest. Cairo has a population comprising also representatives of all creeds, though, of course, the Mohammedans are in the majority. Jews and Christians have their places of worship and schools in the city. The aspect of all of the latter is much alike, though in the schools of the different creeds the course of instruction differs radically. The children sit around on the floor and con their lessons under the eye of the teacher. The school depicted in the accompanying illustration is Jewish and the teacher is a Rabbi. The scroll of the Law is the great text book which the Rabbi reads and explains to the pupils.

In the Mohammedan schools nothing is taught but the Koran. Dr. Z. T. Sweeney, our excellent Consul at Constantinople, recently spent a day in Cairo visiting the great Mohammedan school. The largest, called El Azhur, is now one of the chief centres of education for Mohammedan priests. It contains students of all ages from five to fifty. "The students," Dr. Sweeney says, "were seated on the bare floors in little clusters around their teachers, engaged in memorizing the Koran. As soon as they know it by heart they are given a diploma entitling them to teach it. All other teaching in the University is subsidiary to the great object of learning the Koran. When we entered the school our guide warned us to beware of pick-pockets, as they abounded among the students." As Dr. Sweeney observes, the fact that such a warning was given to visitors to a theological seminary was somewhat startling.

The Christian schools especially those established by Miss Whately, are more general in their instruction though the Bible is read and studied there and prayers are offered in Christ's name. In Cairo and in outlying districts an effort is being made to maintain the work Miss Whately so well commenced, but the loss of her influence is severely felt.

Miss Whately's wonderful work in Cairo began in 1860, when her physician advised her to try the Egyptian climate for her health. Settled in Cairo for the winter she missed her Sunday School work. She went out into the streets near the house she had hired, and persuaded some poor mothers to let her have their neglected daughters for an hour a day. She taught them sewing and reading and made them learn by heart two texts: "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth," and, "Jesus said I am the way, the truth, and the life." In 1862 she was back again in Cairo and her dozen girls were eager to come again, more girls wanted to come and Miss Whately welcomed them all. She added a boys' school, too, and when she died in March, 1889, she had more than five hundred children under her charge.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

BY REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Continued from page 30.)

THE rumors current in Settleworth about Nora's twilight walks and talks with Gerald Towneley reached the ears of that young man's father and those of Abram Hardale about the same time. Both were moved by the news, and each decided to have a word about it with Mr. Gerald himself. Squire Towneley's "word" was soon spoken. He had seen Nora, was pleased with her appearance and intelligence and had made up his mind to encourage Gerald to marry her. Mr. Gerald was accordingly summoned into the library where his father was waiting for him.

"No," said the young man, when the Squire had told him of the current reports, "there is nothing in it. I've noticed the girl and flirted with her a little, but I don't mean to marry her. I only wanted a little fun. I could not afford to marry."

"But suppose the money were provided."

said the Squire, significantly.

"I should be glad of the money but not of the wife," answered Gerald.

"Well, think it over," the Squire said, in a disappointed tone. "It would be a better match than you think, and I would help you with money for I want to see you settle down."

"Well, I'll think it over," Gerald said, the thought crossing his mind that perhaps if he pretended to fall in with the scheme, he might get his father to advance a little money, which he needed desperately. His way of thinking it over was to stroll down to the village inn where he hoped to find some one who would drink with him and play billiards.

He had not walked far before he met Abram Hardale, who, with a bag of tools over his shoulder was on his way to the Towneley mansion to do some small job of repairs.

"Good morning, Hardale," said the young man, "trade must be brisk when you have to help with it yourself. I thought that journeyman of yours attended to out-of-doors business."

"That journeyman has gone about his business," said Old Crusty suddenly. "Till I get another I shall have to attend to the work myself. It will be all the better done."

"Well I'm glad he's gone," said Towneley, very sincerely, "I never like him. He seemed always above his business and I thought he was too familiar with that pretty niece of yours. Nice girl, that, how is she?"

"Sick," said Abram solemnly and it seemed to Towneley almost menacingly. "Sick in body and sick in mind, and I'm not sure that you have not had something to do with it, Mr. Gerald Towneley. You've been hanging about my place a good deal lately. I've heard o' your being seen together. There's no knowing what notions a girl will get into her head when a young man like you follows her around." Abram had worked himself up into a temper by this time and he flung his basket of tools to the ground, much as George Appleton had done on a previous occasion, and said, "I want to know what you mean."

"What I mean?" repeated Towneley. "Oh, nothing but what is honorable. I was coming to see you about it."

"Well, you come to-night then. I don't mean to have any nonsense, so the sooner you speak out the better. I'll expect you to-night." Abram shouldered his tools again and walked away, leaving Gerald meditative in the road. The young man, more depressed than ever, then resumed his walk toward the inn.

He had to pass the "Hermitage" and he was surprised as he did so to see its tenant, Mr. Magrath, in a handsome dog-cart, with George Appleton by his side. They were evidently settling out for a drive together.

George Appleton had manifested such ability in connection with the repairs at the "Hermitage" that Mr. Magrath felt justified in employing him in a matter of far greater importance. Accordingly, that morning George received a request from his new employer that he would accompany him on a short journey of some six or seven miles on a matter of business. Nothing loth, George was speedily at the gate of the "Hermitage" where the dog-cart was standing. Mr. Magrath waited for George to mount, and they at once drove off at a brisk pace in the direction of Towneley Chase.

A Jewish School in Cairo.

Conversation between the two turned on the Towneleys, whose lands they were skirting.

"That Squire Towneley seems to be a fine old man," said Mr. Magrath.

"A real specimen of the gentleman," said George. "Yes, sir. Squire Towneley will pass his examination with credit."

"By the way, it is noised abroad that young Towneley has fixed covetous eyes on Miss Mansford, your old master's pretty niece. Is there anything in that report, do you think?"

"I hope not," said George, sharply.

"Rather a flirting lassie," continued Magrath, "I'm afraid. Will she angle successfully, do you think, and land her fish?"

"Indeed, sir, you are altogether mistaken in the estimate you have formed of Nora Mansford. She's as good as gold. For all she does she has good and honest reason. I'll stake my life on it. As for young Gerald Towneley, I wouldn't credit him with any such idea as honest matrimony, and if he had any such design it would be much better for her to die than to be linked for life to any such a man as he."

"Stake your life, would you?" said his companion, looking him full in the face. "Are you not then aware that she has been seen under circumstances more than once that would warrant caution in staking a sixpence on her prudence, and not much more on her care for her own character?"

George writhed somewhat under this plain and pointed question. He knew to what his companion was referring; and, alas, had no explanation to offer; but faith, full faith in Nora had banished doubt, and he had the courage of his opinions.

"Nothing is more deceptive or dangerous than to argue from appearances," he replied. "I dare say I know what you refer to. But I say this, Nora Mansford is as good as she is beautiful; as pure and upright in thought and intention as any maiden under heaven, and if anybody suggests the contrary—he lies!"

As he said this, George looked as if, for two words, he would hurl his comrade out of the dog-cart. It was quite as much as Mr. Magrath could do to prevent himself from angering him still further by laughing outright at the blunt energy he displayed.

"Do you know anything of Gabriel Grubb?" said he, willing enough to change the subject.

"Yes," said George, still ruffled, and showing it in tone and words. "I know that Grubb describes him a good deal better than Gabriel, and I am strongly of the opinion that Abram Hardale will find it out to his cost. He'll grab him up by the roots if he doesn't take care."

"How's that?" Mr. Magrath inquired, simply.

"Why Abram's got the idea somehow that Gabriel Grubb can make Nora Mansford out to be the heiress and owner of Hazelcroft. I don't believe a word of it; but the old man's got the bee in his bonnet, and it'll buzz him out of his senses, or at least his money before he's done with the law, I'm afraid."

"But I thought that Rupert Mansford sold that estate," said his companion, quietly. "How then can it possibly come back to his daughter?"

"That's just what I say," said George; "but it is said that when Rupert Mansford, who was a sad spendthrift, sold Hazelcroft to pay his gambling debts, his elder brother, Richard, to whom it really belonged was still living, so that the transfer was illegal. They say, too, at least some folks do, that Squire Towneley's relation, who bought it, deceived Rupert in the purchase money, and that he himself was deceived in the parchments. It is a miserable story altogether, and I'm quite sure that Nora Mansford, even if it could be secured for her, would be none the better, but all the worse for a heritage about which there is so much fraud and falsehood."

"But what of Richard Mansford—did you call him Richard?—the elder brother, I mean? What if he were to turn up and claim the property?"

"I wish to heaven he could," said George, warmly, "for to this day his name is held in true respect and regard; and everybody who knows the whole sad story speaks of the cruel way in which he was served. Besides, if he were to return, Nora would have a protector—one who could preserve her, either from the pursuit of moneyed selfishness or vice. But they say he's dead—more's the pity."

"Dead is he?" said Mr. Magrath, with the ghost of a smile playing round his lips. "Then that puts him out of court effectually, of course. But if that happened to be a false report, and he did ultimately come back, there would be very little hope of anybody who hadn't money, and rank, too, getting the handsome heiress, especially if he should bring with him a fortune, too."

All the while he spoke his keen grey eyes were fixed on George, whose eyes were fixed on some unknown vision straight before him, and heart and mind were alike absorbed. This last sentence spoken seriously and slowly seemed to pierce him like an arrow.

"True," he said. "It is said that nobody smiles, but there is some body to weep for it. I wish from my heart he were alive and here. Nora would be safe and happy, and that is the main thing, after all."

So saying he heaved an unconscious sigh, and was himself startled into consciousness. He lifted his eyes to the face of his bearded neighbor. That worthy gentleman was thinking of the tone, tender and true, in which George had spoken. "This young fellow, he thought, is deep in love, and his love is sterling gold."

There was a deep silence, during which the mare bore them along the shady byways, past field and wood, and stream and copse. It was a beautiful region; a sort of fairyland, George thought, as he wondered if they neared the journey's end. At length Mr. Magrath pulled up at a somewhat dilapidated gateway, which opened into a grass-grown carriage drive. "Here we are," said the tenant of the "Hermitage," "this is the end of our journey;" and so saying he leaped from the dog-cart with more vigor and alacrity than might have been expected of a man with a beard so white. George kept his seat a moment in surprise. He thought there must be some mistake.

"Why, this is Hazelcroft," said he, half dazed, "the very place we have been talking about."

"All right," was the response, "didn't I tell you? Never mind, come along, come along."

A man who had charge of the hall—it was otherwise without a tenant—came forward, and took the dog-cart round to the stables. Then the two men strolled along the gravel-road, between well-grown trees which grew thickly on either side, and whose leaves were just beginning to don their autumn apparel of red and gold.

"I did not tell you," said Mr. Magrath, "that I am a distant connection of the Townleys, and was still better acquainted with the poor widow to whom this estate belonged. Nay, you need not look confused, you have said nothing about them which is not patent to any observer. The old squire's hands are full, what with county business and one thing and another. His eldest son, you know, is abroad, and Mr. Gerald—well, you have your own opinion of him, you know. So he asked me to come and look at the old place, and see what repairs are necessary before he can advertise for a tenant. Of course, you know that it is now his property, and, like yourself, I don't think that Abram Hardale is likely to get possession of it either for himself or his niece. Ha, ha, ha, the old simpleton! To be led by the nose by Gabriel Grubb."

George had never seen Hazelcroft before, only as he had passed the gate. There was much about its quaint architecture, its old-fashioned angles, gables, and general "auld-world" appearance, that would at any time have deeply interested him; but its connection with Nora Mansford, however slight and shadowy, now made him doubly observant. It was a fine old place, situated on a slope which commanded one of the most delightful landscapes in the county, and his quick and cultured eyes told him what a lovely spot it might become. The tenant of the "Hermitage" himself seemed to regard it with a sad and wistful look.

"I'm afraid it will be hard work," he said, "very hard work, to repair it so that it shall be what it was, Appleton. What do you think?"

"It would be vandalism, and nothing short of it," said George, "to make it anything else. I would undertake, though I'm no architect, to handle it so tenderly that not one mellow mark of the former time shall be lost, only that it should be more beautiful than ever. But it would require money."

"I happen to know," said Mr. Magrath, "that it is the owner's intention to spend any amount of money on it that may be required. Money really is no object; but only on condition that the dear old place is dealt with tenderly and lovingly, so that when it is completed, it shall be the Hazelcroft of thirty years ago." The stranger stood awhile in thoughtful silence; his eyes were fixed, with a far-away look in them, on the boughs filled with beech-nuts; and a sigh, a long, long deep-drawn sigh escaped him before ever he was aware.

They walked through the house together, making notes as they went. Every now and then Mr. Magrath lingered a little, and tenderly touched its quaintly carved wainscot, as if he had difficulty in passing it. At last the dog-cart was brought round. The sun had long since set in a crimson sky, and the darkness was gathering thickly round. The wife of the care-taker had supplied them with an evening meal, and the hours of the night were far advanced when the wheels of the dog-cart crunched along the gravel drive, and went spinning along the by-road that led on to the Settleworth high-road. The night was misty, and the atmosphere was heavy as if it was going to rain. The journey was continued in comparative silence. Each of the two travellers had gathered much material for thought. The tenant of the "Hermitage" was indulging in tender recollections of the long ago; and George was turning over in his mind the events of the day, and wondering much concerning his somewhat mysterious companion, who, though a stranger, had such intimate knowledge of his surroundings, and was in some way connected with the great people of Towneley Chase.

Suddenly a scream was heard, loud, long, and burdened with fear and pain. The driver checked his horse; George started upright in his seat. That voice, although so strained and so unnatural, made his thoughts revert to the fair and sorrowful girl who was always in his heart and almost always in his thoughts.

"What in the world is that?" said Mr. Magrath, evidently very much alarmed. "Somebody in trouble, and no small trouble, too," replied George, filled with an apprehensive terror, that half stopped the beating of his heart. "Drive on, for the love of Heaven, drive on!" he continued, excitedly. "The scream came from the direction of Settleworth. Maybe we shall be able to help."

As if to endorse the young carpenter's suggestion, there came a second cry, a third, and the young man half beside himself with excitement, laid his hand upon the arm of his companion as if to urge him to greater speed.

The very horse seemed to think that the time had come for putting forth its greatest speed, and with its hoofs ringing on the hard highway, it answered quickly to the unusual call upon its powers.

"Halt!" shouted George, at length. The horse, suddenly restrained, was thrown back upon its haunches, and at some peril to himself the young fellow leaped from the still moving dog-cart, and plunged into the misty night. His keen eye, quickened by the thought that had taken possession of him had caught sight of a female form. His distress may be imagined when he saw the sad face of Nora Mansford, her two hands upon her breast, and her tresses, fallen from their foldings, lying dank and wet upon her shoulders.

"Why, Nora!" said the young man, his voice tremulous with unmistakable love and pity. "Whatever are you doing here?"

(To be Continued.)

CONSUMPTION

in its early stages can be cured by the prompt use of

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

It soothes
the inflamed tissues,
aids expectoration,
and hastens
recovery.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.
Lowell, Mass.

200,000

Estey Organs have been sold in the last fifty years.

An enormous number! No other Organ has been so popular. No other Organ has had such a sale.

We want to secure the best conception of 200,000 Organs. We ask some reader of this paper to give us an illustration of the number 200,000 which will show how great it is.

Here is one specimen illustration.

"If those organs were placed singly upon teams, and started 35 rods apart, the first team would have gone around the earth before the last team left the factory."

This is a good illustration. Perhaps you can do better. Will you not try?

ESTEY ORGAN CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

Branch Offices: 159 Tremont Street, Boston. 831 Broadway, New York. 18 North 7th Street, Philadelphia. State and Jackson Streets, Chicago. 916 Olive Street, St. Louis. Marietta and Broad Sts., Atlanta, Ga.

An interesting Book of Facts (containing 24 pages with 46 illustrations) entitled, How Large is 200,000, will be mailed free; one copy to one address.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING" SOFTENS THE GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

AGENTS WANTED

LADIES and GENTLEMEN

Send for Illustrated Circulars and Terms Boston or St. Louis. MENTION PAPER plait, catarrh, rheumatism, etc. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla, which is peculiar to itself.

Hood's Sarsaparilla sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.

Dropped on Sugar, Children Love to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES of Lime and Soda is endorsed and prescribed by leading physicians because both the Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites are the recognized agents in the cure of Consumption. It is as palatable as milk.

Scott's Emulsion is a perfect is a wonderful Flesh Producer. It is the Best Remedy for CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, Bronchitis, Wasting Diseases, Chronic Coughs and Colds. Ask for Scott's Emulsion and take no other.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

The Original--Most Soluble.

Ask your Grocer for it, take noother. [65]

A Pointer for Teachers

Send your address and number of Scholars in your class, and a copy for each scholar will be sent you FREE of charge only Sunday School Paper printed & TIRELY IN COLORS. Lessons illustrated in COLORS by Special Artists. Address Little Folks Paper, Albany, N. Y.

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school science lessons, stories, games, occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers & mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Allice B. Stockham & Co., 161 LaSalle St., Chicago.

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT

PROF. RICE'S SELF-TEACHING SYSTEM. All can learn music without the aid of a teacher. Rapid, correct. Established 12 Years. Notes, Chords, accompaniments, Harmony. Send stamp Music Journal. Circulars free. Address G. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 243 State St., Chicago.

A remarkable book on BIBLE PROPHECY "THE ADVANCING KINGDOM" the Wonders of Foretold History SUPERBLY ILLUSTRATED. SEND TO EVERYWHERE AMERICAN PUBL'G CO., Hartford, C

THE RETURN OF THE JEWS.

It is interesting to watch the development of the land of Palestine. Work has been progressing with some rapidity on the railway from Jaffa to Jerusalem, and very soon the harbor of Jaffa is to be improved, thus rendering travel to the city of Jerusalem convenient and comfortable. It is a little remarkable that the early and later rains are again visiting this country, a thing which has not happened for several generations. As a consequence, agricultural interests have revived. Many of the important building sites of Judea, it is said, have been secured by the Russians, who are manifesting a wonderful interest in affairs in Palestine. But this interest, viewed in connection with their persecution of the Jews, does not seem to indicate any prophecy of good to them from their domination in Palestine.

The immigration of the Jews into the Holy Land, though less than that of the Greeks into the north of Asiatic Turkey, is nevertheless proportionately large, and is spread over the following cities: Jerusalem, Safed, Tiberias, Jaffa, Hebron, Sidon, Haifa, Acre, Nablus (or Sichem) and Gaza. The number is 35,000, and if smaller settlements which are spread all over the land, are included, the whole number would probably amount to 45,000, so that Jewish population has quadrupled within the last twenty-five years. The colonists show themselves to be able farmers. At the colony known as the Remembrance of Jacob, near Samaria, their vineyards contain 500,000 vines, besides young shoots, 3,000 olive and 3,000 almond trees. All the people are hard at work, and mean to succeed. The Russian Jews have chiefly settled in Judea, and the Roumanian in Galilee. Jerusalem is now growing at a remarkable rate. New buildings are rising daily. Churches, gardens, and institution of various kinds are filling up the formerly desolate neighborhood to a distance of half an hour's walk beyond the limits of the city. The Jews are to the front as builders. Germans, Greeks and Armenians are also at work. The Russians have built a tower on the Mount of Olives, from whose summit the Mediterranean and the Dead Sea can both be seen.

BREWER'S STRANGE CONVERSION.

MR. THORNE relates: "Some years ago, I was asked to go to a public-house to see a poor girl who was dying. As the message was so imperative I hurried off at once, indeed with such haste did I go that I forgot my Bible. When I arrived there I asked the parents of the girl for the loan of a Bible, but the publican ruffly replied, 'I have no need of a Bible and I don't want one, indeed there is not one in the house.' As I thought that this would be my opportunity to speak to either them or their dying daughter, I knelt down and prayed for the three, entreating that all might be brought to Christ. I then went home but had not been long there when a message arrived from the publican, saying, 'Come back.' I at once complied with his request, and found him waiting for me. 'Go in and talk to her,' he said, 'you can do her no harm if you do her no good.' I read the Bible and prayed with the invalid, and day after day returned to do the same. On one of my visits I noticed that the face of the father was lighted with a new joy. 'Oh,' he exclaimed, 'I have got it!' 'What have you got?' I asked. He could scarcely speak, but pointing to the wall said, 'It is all there.' I looked as he indicated, but could see nothing in particular. 'Ah, you do not see it; you must look closer,' and he pointed to a picture of a brewer's card. You see the motto? 'In God is our trust,' that is what caused the change. I saw the motto last night. I have seen it hundreds of times before but it never seemed to have the same meaning as last night. I saw that unless a man's trust was in God he was trusting in something which would be sure to fail him.' So that man and ultimately his family were led to God partly by means of a brewer's card."

MENTION MADE OF THEIR MALADIES. IT IS ONLY WHEN WE HAVE SPECIFIC PERMISSION THAT WE PUBLISH ANY SIGNED INDORSEMENTS IN OUR QUARTERLY REVIEW OR BOOK. IN SUCH INSTANCES WE ARE GLAD TO GET THE INDORSEMENT. IT HELPS US--IT HELPS YOU--IF YOU NEED ENCOURAGEMENT.

WE HAVE DISPENSED COMPOUND OXYGEN FOR NEARLY 21 YEARS AND OUGHT TO KNOW WHAT WE ARE ABOUT. OUR PATIENTS SAY WE DO. GET THE BOOK AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELF.

COMPOUND OXYGEN IS A SALUTARY EXCESS OF OZONE. IT IS CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY. INHALED TO THE LUNGS IT SENDS A VITALIZING GLOW THROUGH THE SYSTEM. STRENGTH GRADUALLY RETURNS. BETTER STILL IT REMAINS.

SEND FOR THE BOOK. RETURN MAIL WILL BRING IT TO YOU ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE. ADDRESS

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.
120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. 58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

HOW OLD IS MY BABY?

Russell Publishing Co., 36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

"'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis, 'tis true." Some people still clean house without

SAPOLIO.

Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

Behind the times—the woman who doesn't use Pearline; behind in her work, too, both in quantity and quality. With Pearline, work is easier and better. Clothes can be washed without being worn out; cleaning can be done without scouring and scrubbing. All that it does is done without danger; the only danger is in getting something else.

Beware of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them. PEARLINE sells on its merits, and is manufactured only by
JAMES PVLE, New York

DROP US A POSTAL

IN RETURN WE WILL SEND YOU OUR BOOK OF 200 PAGES FREE. THIS BOOK IS FILLED FROM COVER TO COVER WITH THE NAMES AND ADDRESSES OF MANY WELL KNOWN MEN AND WOMEN WHO HAVE BEEN RESTORED TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY THE USE OF OUR COMPOUND OXYGEN.

THE QUESTION HAS BEEN RAISED: "DO YOU PUBLISH THE NAMES OF ALL OF YOUR PATIENTS?" CERTAINLY NOT. WE HAVE NEARLY 60,000 SEPARATE RECORDS OF CASES, AND THE LARGE MAJORITY OF THE INVALIDS CONCERNED DO NOT CARE TO HAVE ANY PERSONAL MENTION MADE OF THEIR MALADIES. IT IS ONLY WHEN WE HAVE SPECIFIC PERMISSION THAT WE PUBLISH ANY SIGNED INDORSEMENTS IN OUR QUARTERLY REVIEW OR BOOK. IN SUCH INSTANCES WE ARE GLAD TO GET THE INDORSEMENT. IT HELPS US--IT HELPS YOU--IF YOU NEED ENCOURAGEMENT.

WE HAVE DISPENSED COMPOUND OXYGEN FOR NEARLY 21 YEARS AND OUGHT TO KNOW WHAT WE ARE ABOUT. OUR PATIENTS SAY WE DO. GET THE BOOK AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELF.

COMPOUND OXYGEN IS A SALUTARY EXCESS OF OZONE. IT IS CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY. INHALED TO THE LUNGS IT SENDS A VITALIZING GLOW THROUGH THE SYSTEM. STRENGTH GRADUALLY RETURNS. BETTER STILL IT REMAINS.

SEND FOR THE BOOK. RETURN MAIL WILL BRING IT TO YOU ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE. ADDRESS

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.
120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. 58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

HOW OLD IS MY BABY?

Russell Publishing Co., 36 Bromfield Street, Boston.

"'Tis true, 'tis pity, and pity 'tis, 'tis true." Some people still clean house without

SAPOLIO.

Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

THE NEW INDIA SILKS.

We have just received several cases of new and elegant designs in Rich Printed and Jacquard India Silks, our latest importations, and have opened them for immediate sale.

A noticeable feature of the assortment is the large number of Black Grounds, figured in flowered patterns of most beautiful colorings; and of Light Grounds, with designs of bud, vine, or spray, in choicest and most delicate half tones.

The newest fabric, Drap de Noct, is unexcelled for durability and gracefulness in drapery.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St., NEW YORK.

WASTE Embroidery Silks.

Factory Ends at half price: one ounce in a box. A good silk and good colors. Sent by mail on receipt of 40 cts.; 100 crazy stitches in each package. Latest and best book on Art Needlework, only 10 cents. A beautiful assortment chenille and arrasene: 15 new shades in each for 50 cts. Send postal note or stamps to THE BRAINARD & ARMSTRONG SPOOL SILK CO., 625 Broadway, New York, or 621 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa. For the names and addresses of 10 ladies interested in Art Needlework we will send one book free. Send for Rules for crocheting Gent's Four-in-Hand Neck Tie.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY. DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses. Patented 1879-1885 1885-1886 No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City. We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS
Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
AUTOGRAPH OF Stewart Hartshorn OF HARTSHORN
THE GENUINE

BAILEY'S
Compound light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass
REFLECTORS
A wonderful invention for lighting Churches, Halls,
etc. Satisfaction guaranteed.
Handsome designs.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.,
708 Penn Ave. Pittsburgh, Pa.

METAL CEILINGS. BEST for Churches, old or new: for Schools, Stores and Residences. ARTISTIC.

H. S. NORTROP,
18 Rose Street, New York.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.
If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. For a DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

A CRY.

"Behold I stand at the door and knock: If any man hear my voice and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me." Rev. 3: 20.

SWEET Guest, dear Guest, no more
I lock the low, dim door,
Where long with patience sweet
I have strayed Thy weary feet;
Withdrawing bolt and bar,
I set it now ajar.

It is a poor, dark place,
Unworthy of such grace;
For through its pane, dust-deep,
Only the shadows creep,
And thick have spiders spun,
Nor left space for the sun.

And here no rich banquet
Befitting Thee is set;
Not even bread is mine;
I have no food, no wine,
No damask fine, no silver cup;
How, then, with me canst thou?

Oh! that it were but clean!
For canst Thou really mean
To come and sup wherein Only foul guests have been—
A dusty dwelling where
All empty is and bare?

Sweet Guest, dear Guest, if Thou
In such canst go, come now!
O come! hungry I wait
Longing, repentant, late,
Withdraw each bolt and bar,
And set my door ajar.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike) will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

Salt-rheum, with its intense itching and burning, is cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Many who were formerly severe sufferers have reason to thank "the peculiar medicine" for cures effected.

An old family physician first recommended Johnson's Anodyne Liniment for colds, coughs.

Almost a century ago, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, a noble remedy, was first made known.

REVERENCE FOR THE SABBATH.

STONEWALL JACKSON laid down a law for himself of the utmost severity on this question, from which he never afterward swerved. He never posted a letter without calculating whether it would have to travel on Sunday to reach its destination, and if so he would not post it until Monday morning. His own letters he would not read on the Sabbath, but rose with the sun on Monday morning to read them. He owned at one time a considerable amount of stock in a Northern railroad, which did as much business on the first day of the week as any. As soon as he discovered this, he sold out all his shares, and took stock from another company whose dividends were far inferior, because they did not indulge in this amount of Sunday traffic.

A BRAHMIN SAVED BY A SINGLE VERSE.

At a missionary meeting a speaker stated that the Rev. D. Corrie, afterward Bishop of Madras, was one day sent to visit a dying Brahmin. He went, and was surprised to find the man a true believer in Christ rejoicing in the hope of heaven. Mr. Corrie inquired how he had been brought to the knowledge of the truth. "Do you remember," said the poor man, "distributing verses of the Scripture at this place?" naming the village where he lived. "You gave one to me, and the verse was 'For God so loved the world, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' That verse was the means of my conversion." At the same meeting another speaker related an anecdote of a little boy who having heard it said that for every penny subscribed a verse of Scripture might be translated into a foreign language, went home and begged that he might subscribe a penny, and be the means of translating a verse; "and," said the little fellow, "I should wish it to be that verse: 'For God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

SAVED IN AN ATLANTIC STORM.

SOME years ago, Margaret F— was crossing the Atlantic Ocean as an Irish emigrant to the United States. One night, when the ship in which she sailed was far out at sea there arose a violent storm. The passengers were filled with alarm. Margaret shared the general fear, not that she dreaded death itself so much as to die "unshrived," there being no priest on board—no one there through whom in the last hour, she could secure the absolution of her sins—filled her with agony. The storm abated and passed by, and they arrived safely at their destined haven. Margaret got a situation with a lady to whom with tears she described what she passed through on that stormy night. "What could I do?" she said, "I sat there alone, nobody noticed me—nobody to do anything for me. Oh, if I could only have had a priest there I should have been willing for the ship to have gone down the next hour, but there was not one. Then there came a voice and it said to me, 'Maybe Jesus Christ will be your priest.' I was afraid, but I had no one else to go to. I asked him to forgive my sins himself, and he did, and made it known to my heart. I never was so happy in my life before, so full of peace, as I was when thinking the ship might go down every minute. I did not care whether it sunk or sailed then, for I knew that Christ had pardoned me, and I found him the best priest in the world."

HONEST NORMAN'S PURSE.

NORMAN, a poor charcoal-burner's child, was sitting under a tree in the forest, sobbing. A nobleman in a green coat, who was shooting, saw him, and said, "Boy, what are you crying about?" "Oh!" said Norman, "my father sent me into the town to buy some medicine at the druggist's for my mother, who has been ill a long time, and I have lost the purse and the money on the way." The nobleman spoke aside to the keeper that was with him; he then pulled a small red silk purse out of his pocket, which contained some gold, and said, "Perhaps this is your purse!" "Oh, no," replied Norman; "mine was very shabby, and there was very little money in it." "Perhaps this is it!" exclaimed the keeper, as he produced an ugly little leather purse. "Oh, yes, that is it!" cried Norman, joyfully. The keeper gave it back to him. The nobleman said, "And I will give you this one with the gold pieces in it, as a reward for your honesty."

CLEANSES

PRESERVES

BEAUTIFIES

Sample Vial of RUBIFOAM TO ANY ADDRESS MAILED FREE

RUBIFOAM

FOR THE TEETH
DELICIOUSLY FLAVORED.
PREPARED AND GUARANTEED BY E. W. HOYT & CO.
MANUFACTURERS OF HOYT'S LOWELL MASS.
THE CELEBRATED HOYT'S GERMANY COLOGNE.

MOST WORTHY BOOKS FOR PURCHASE.

Choice and Popular Alto Songs.

33 songs—each one a Gem. Price, $1 in heavy paper, $1.25 in bds., and $2 in gilt binding.

The Songs of Ireland.

A new and carefully revised collection of the best and most celebrated Irish songs. Some of the best melodies in existence, and bright, spirited words. 66 songs. Price, $1 in heavy paper, $1.25 in bds., and $2 in gilt binding.

CHOICE SONG COLLECTIONS.

|                                  |           |
|----------------------------------|-----------|
| Song Classics. Vol. 1.           | 50 songs. |
| Song Classics. Vol. 2.           | 39 "      |
| Song Classics. Low Voices.       | 47 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos.             | 34 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos. Low Voices. | 40 "      |
| Classic, Baritone and Bass.      | 33 "      |
| Classic Tenor Songs.             | 36 "      |
| Good Old Songs We Used to Sing.  | 115 "     |

CHOICE PIANO COLLECTIONS.

|                            |            |
|----------------------------|------------|
| Piano Classics. Vol. 1.    | 44 pieces. |
| Piano Classics. Vol. 2.    | 31 "       |
| Classical Pianist.         | 42 "       |
| Popular Dance Collection.  | 68 "       |
| Popular Piano Collection.  | 68 "       |
| Operatic Piano Collection. | 19 operas. |

Churchill's BIRTHDAY BOOK OF EMINENT COMPOSERS. A handsome and useful book, $1.00.

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

Gospel Hymns No. 5. By SANKEY, McGRANAHAN and STEBBINS, is conceded to be the best song book in existence for Religious Work and Prayer Meetings. 234 Songs with Music. $30 per 100. Words, $10.

Select Songs, By F. N. PELoubET, D. D. 344 Hymns and Tunes chosen for use where only one book is desired for Prayer Meetings and the Sunday School. Firmly bound in cloth. $40 per 100 copies.

Winnowed Songs, By IRA D. SANKEY, continues to be the banner Sunday School song book this season. 257 songs. $35 per 100. Sent by mail on receipt of price. Complete Catalogue & Specimen Pages sent on request.

THE BIGLOW &amp; MAIN CO.

81 Randolph St., Chicago. 76 E. 9th St., New York.

If You Play the Organ

Send 10 cts. for copy of "THE ORGAN." Contains 24 pages choice MUSIC, also suitable for Piano. Each book complete. Published bi-monthly at $1 a year. 15 EASTER ANTHEMS (Samples) for 20c. 5 CAROLS and Services 10c. G. Molineux, 10 E. 14th St., N. Y.

China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 x 2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

TRACTS! TRACTS! TRACTS!

We have a large stock of Booklets, Tracts and Books imported from British publishers, suitable for Y. M. C. A., Sunday School, Mission and Evangelistic workers. Catalogues and sample packet free on receipt of a stamp for postage.

BIBLE, BOOK AND TRACT DEPOT, ORILLIA, CANADA.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Paraphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

New Temperance Publications.

THE NATIONAL TEMPERANCE SOCIETY publishes 1,853 different publications, among which are the following: The National Temperance Almanac AND TEETOTALER'S YEAR-BOOK FOR 1891. By J. N. Stearns. 10

This has pictures, stories, puzzles, calendar pages, and something useful for every man, woman, and child.

Pen and Pencil; OR, PICTURES, PUZZLES, AND SHORT STORIES FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. By Edward Carswell. Square 8vo, 80 pages. Paper, 25c; boards, 50

A handsome book well illustrated, most of the pictures being designed by Mr. Carswell. Just the thing for a gift-book.

Readings and Recitations No. 8. Prepared by Miss L. Penney. Board covers, 50 cts.; paper, 25

A new collection of choice articles in prose and verse, many of which were written especially for this book, suitable for reading or reciting in schools and all public gatherings, as well as at home.

Address,
J. N. STEARNS, Publishing Agent,
58 Reade Street, New York.

AGENTS: E. B. TREAT'S Catalogue of new books. Shots at Sundry Targets, by 1 image $2.50. Quick sales. Big pay. Also, Mother, Home & Heaven, 400 best authors E. B. T. L. Cuyler, $2.75. 192,000 sold. 5000

Curiosities of Bible $2 by Mail.

ROSANNAS of the CHILDREN. Addresses and Talks to Children. By J. R. MACDUFF, D.D. 354 p. $1.50.

WARs of the HUGUENOTS, their Trials and Persecutions. By WM. HANNA, D.D. 344 p. $1.

FAMOUS WOMEN OF SACRED STORY. Lectures on the most attractive Characters in History. By M. B. WHARTON, D.D. Illustrated. Two vols. each, $1.50.

THE BOW IN THE CLOUD; or, Words of Comfort for the Varied Afflictions of Life. By 200 best authors. Prose and Poetry. By J. SANDERSON, D.D. Price, $1.75.

DICTIONARY OF CHRISTIAN ANTIQUITY, a continuation of Smith's Bible Dictionary, 2,000 double column pages. 600 ill's. Two vols. 1/2 price of London Edition, each, $3.50. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY

DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

CHRISTIAN WORK —IN—Mexico.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the address of Bishop H. C. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH.

43 Bible House, New York.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 4.
Bibles, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 28, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

The Restaurant.

Superintendent's Room

In the Parlors.

The Chapel Corridor.

THE MARGARET-LOUISA HOME, PRESENTED JAN. 19, BY MRS. SHEPARD TO THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION OF NEW YORK

"BABYLON!"

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED LAST SUNDAY, JANUARY 25, 1891, AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE NEW YORK ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

The Magnificent City—Its Bridges, Palaces and Hanging Gardens—A Night Scene—The Feast in the King's Palace—The Sumptuous Carousal—The Orgie Interrupted—A Sight of Terror—Daniel Deciphers the Inscription—The Scene of Slaughter—God's Writing Should be Read—A Monarch Reproved—The Opening and Close of the Banquet of Sin—Death Interrupting the Banquet—Destruction Often Sudden.

"In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans slain." Daniel 5:30.

AFTER the site of Babylon had been selected, two million of men were employed for the construction of the wall and principal works. The walls of the city were sixty miles in circumference. They were surrounded by a trench, out of which had been dug the material for the construction of the city. There were twenty-five gates of solid brass on each side of the square city. Between every two gates a great watch-tower sprang up into the heavens. From each of the twenty-five gates, on either side, a street ran straight through to the gate on the other side, so that there were fifty streets, each fifteen miles long, which gave to the city an appearance of wonderful regularity. The houses did not join each other on the ground, and between them were gardens and shrubbery. From house-top to house-top bridges swung, over which the inhabitants were accustomed to pass. A branch of the Euphrates went through the city, over which a bridge of marvellous structure was thrown, and under which a tunnel ran. To keep the river from overflowing the city in times of freshet, a great lake was arranged to catch the surplus, in which the water was kept as in a reservoir until times of drought, when it was sent streaming down over the thirsty land. A palace stood at each end of the Euphrates bridge; one palace a mile and three-quarters in compass, and the other palace seven and a half miles in circumference. The wife of Nebuchadnezzar, having been brought up among the mountains of Media, could not stand it in this flat country of Babylon, and so, to please her, Nebuchadnezzar had a mountain, four hundred feet high, built in the midst of the city. This mountain was surrounded by terraces, for the support of which great arches were lifted. On the top of these arches flat stones were laid; then a layer of reeds and bitumen; then two rows of bricks, closely cemented; then thick sheets of lead, upon which the soil was placed. The earth here deposited was so deep that the largest trees had room to anchor their roots. All the glory of the flowery tropics was spread out at that tremendous height, until it must have seemed to one below as though the clouds were all in blossom, and the very sky leaned on the shoulder of the cedar. At the top an engine was constructed which drew the water from the Euphrates, far below, and made it spout up amid this garden of the skies. All this to please his wife! I think she must have been pleased.

In the midst of this city stood also the tem-

The Handwriting on the Wall.

THE PASSAGE OF THE RED SEA.

room to anchor their roots. All the glory of the flowery tropics was spread out at that tremendous height, until it must have seemed to one below as though the clouds were all in blossom, ple of Belus. One of its towers was one eighth of a mile high, and on the top of it an observatory, which gave the astronomers great advantage, as, being at so great a height, one could easily talk with the stars. This temple was full of cups, and statues, and censers, all of gold. One image weighed a thousand Babylonish talents, which would be equal to fifty-two million dollars. All this by day, but now night was about to come down on Babylon. The shadows of her two hundred and fifty towers began to lengthen. The Euphrates rolled on, touched by the fiery splendors of the setting sun; and gates of brass, burnished and glittering, opened and shut like doors of flame. The hanging gardens of Babylon, wet with the heavy dew, began to pour, from starlit flowers and dripping leaf, a fragrance for many miles around. The streets and squares were lighted for dance, and frolic, and promenade. The theatres and galleries of art invited the wealth, and pomp, and grandeur of the city to rare entertainments. Scenes of riot and wassail were mingled in every street; godless mirth, and outrageous excess, and splendid wickedness came to the king's palace, to do their mightiest deeds of darkness.

A royal feast to-night at the king's palace! Rushing up to the gates are chariots, upholstered with precious cloths from Dedan, and drawn by fire-eyed horses from Togarmah, that rear and neigh in the grasp of the charioteers; while a thousand lords dismount, and women, dressed in all the splendors of Syrian emerald, and the color-blending of agate and the chasteness of coral, and the sombre glory of Tyrian purple, and princely embroideries, brought from afar by camels across the desert, and by ships of Tarshish across the sea.

Open wide the gates, and let the guests come in. The chamberlains and cup-bearers are all ready. Hark to the rustle of the robes, and to the carol of the music! See the blaze of the jewels! Lift the banners. Fill the cups. Clap the cymbals. Blow the trumpets. Let the night go by with song, and dance, and ovation; and let that Babylonish tongue be palsied that will not say, "O, King Belshazzar, live forever!"

Ah! my friends, it was not any common banquet to which these great people came. All parts of the earth had sent their richest viands to that table. Brackets and chandeliers flashed their light upon tankards of burnished gold. Fruits, ripe and luscious, in baskets of silver, entwined with leaves, plucked from royal conservatories. Vases, inlaid with emerald, and ridged with exquisite traceries, filled with nuts that were threshed from forests of distant lands. Wine brought from the royal vats, foaming in the decanters and bubbling in the chalices. Tufts of cassia and frankincense wafting their sweetness from wall and table. Gorgeous banners unfolding in the breeze that came through the opened window, bewitched with the perfume of hanging gardens. Fountains rising up from inclosures of ivory, in jets of crystal, to fall in clattering rain of diamonds and pearls. Statues of mighty men looking down, from niches in the wall, upon crowns and shields brought from subdued empires. Idols of wonderful work, standing on pedestals of precious stones. Embroideries stooping about the windows, and wrapping pillars of cedar, and drifting on floor inlaid with ivory and agate. Music, mingling the thrum of harps, and the clash of cymbals, and the blast of trumpets in one wave of trans-

DEATH OF ANANIAS.

wine. Let foam and bubble kiss the rim. Hoist every one his cup, and drink to the sentiment: "O King Belshazzar, live forever!" Bestarred head-band and carcanet royal beauty gleam to the uplifted chalices, as again, and again, and again they are emptied. Away with care from the palace! Tear royal dignity to tatters! Pour out more wine! Give us more light, wilder music, sweeter perfume? Lord shouts to lord, captain ogles to captain. Goblets clash; decanters rattle. There come in the vile song, and the drunken hiccough, and the slaving lip, and the guffaw of idiotic laughter, bursting from the lips of princes, flushed, reeling, bloodshot; while mingling with it all I hear, "Huzza! huzza! for great Belshazzar!"

What is that on the plastering of the wall? Is it a spirit? Is it a phantom? Is it God? Out of the black sleeve of the darkness a finger of fiery terror trembles through the air and comes to the wall, circling about as though it would write, and then, with sharp tip of flame, engraves on the plastering the doom of the king. The music stops. The goblet falls from the nerveless grasp. There is a thrill. There is a start. There is a thousand-voiced shriek of horror. Let Daniel be brought in, to read that writing. He comes in. He reads it: "Weighed in the balances and found wanting."

Meanwhile the Medes and Persians, who for two years had been besieging that city, took advantage of that carousal and came in. I hear the feet of the conquerors on the palace-stairs. Massacre rushes in with a thousand gleaming knives. Death bursts upon the scene; and I shut the door of that banquetting-hall, for I do not want to look. There is nothing there but torn banners, and broken wreaths, and the slush of upset tankards, and the blood of murdered women, and the kicked and tumbled carcass of a dead king. For "in that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain."

I go on to learn that when God writes anything on the wall, a man had better read it as it is. Daniel did not misinterpret or modify the handwriting on the wall. It is all foolishness to expect a minister of the Gospel to preach always things that the people like, or the people choose. Young men, what shall I preach to you to-night? Shall I tell you of the dignity of human nature? Shall I tell you of the wonders that our race has accomplished? "Oh! no," you say; "tell me the message that came from God." I will. If there is any handwriting on the wall, it is this lesson: "Accept of Christ, and be saved!" I might talk of a great many other things; but that is the message, and so I declare it. Jesus never flattered those to whom he preached. He said to those who did wrong, and who were offensive in his sight, "Ye generation of vipers! ye whited sepulchres! how can ye escape the annation of hell!" Paul the apostle preached before a man who was not ready to hear him reach. What subject did he take? Did he say, "Oh! you are a good man, a very fine man, a very noble man?" No; he preached of righteousness to a man who was unrighteous; of temperance to a man who was the victim of bad appetites; of the judgment to come to a man who was unfit for it. So we must always declare the message that happens to come to us. Daniel must read it as it is. A minister preached before James I. of England, who was James VI. of Scotland. What subject did he take? The king was noted all over the world for being unsettled and wavering in his ideas. What did the minister preach about to this man who was James I. of England and James VI. of Scotland? He took for his text James 1:6. "He that wavereth is like a wave of the sea, driven with the wind and tossed." Hugh Latimer offended the king by a sermon he preached: and the king said, "Hugh Latimer, come and apologize." "I will," said Hugh Latimer. So the day was appointed; and the king's chapel was full of lords, and dukes, and the mighty men and women of the country, for Hugh Latimer was to apologize. He began his sermon by saying, "Hugh Latimer, bethink thee! Thou art in the presence of thine earthly king, who can destroy thy body. But bethink thee, Hugh Latimer, that thou art in the presence of the King of heaven and earth, who can destroy both body and soul in hell-fire," earth. It has crowned itself. It has spread a banquet. It invites all the world to come to it. It has hung in its banquetting-hall the spoils of all kingdoms, and the banners of all nations. It has gathered from all music. It has strewn, from its wealth, the tables and the floors, and arches. And yet how often is that banquet broken up; and how horrible is its end! Ever and anon there is a handwriting on the wall. A king falls. A great culprit is arrested. The knees of wickedness knock together. God's judgment, like an armed host, breaks in upon the banquet; and that night is Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain.

Here is a young man who says, "I cannot see why they make such a fuss about the intoxicating cup. Why, it is exhilarating! It makes me feel well. I can talk better, think better, feel better. I cannot see why people have such a prejudice against it." A few years pass on, and he wakes up and finds himself in the clutches of an evil habit which he tries to break, but can not; and he cries out, "Oh, Lord God! help me!"

It seems as though God would not hear his prayer; and in an agony of body and soul he cries out, "It biteth like a serpent, and it stingeth like an adder." How bright it was at the start! How black it was at the last!

Here is a man who begins to read corrupt novels. "They are so charming," says he; "I will go out and see for myself whether all these things are so." He opens the gate of a sinful life. He goes in. A sinful sprite meets him with her wand. She waves her wand, and it is all enchantment. Why, it seems as if the angels of God had poured out phials of perfume in the atmosphere. As he walks on, he finds the hills becoming more radiant with foliage, and the ravines more resonant with the falling water. Oh! what a charming landscape he sees! But that sinful sprite, with her wand, meets him again; but now she reverses the

The Capture of Babylon.

Then he preached with appalling directness at the king's crimes.

Another lesson that comes to us: there is a great difference between the opening of the banquet of sin and its close. Young man, if you had looked in upon the banquet in the first few hours, you would have wished you had been invited there, and could sit at the feast. "Oh! the grandeur of Belshazzar's feast!" you would have said; but you look in at the close of the banquet, and your blood curdles with horror. The King of Terrors has there a ghastlier banquet; human blood is the wine, and dying groans are the music. Sin has made itself a king in the wand, and all the enchantment is gone. The cup is full of poison. The fruit turns to ashes. All the leaves of the bower are forked tongues of hissing serpents. The flowing fountains fall back in a dead pool, stenchful with corruption. The luring songs become curses and screams of demoniac laughter. Lost spirits gather about him and feel for his heart, and beckon him on with "Hail, brother! Hail, blasted spirit, hail!" He tries to get out. He comes to the front door where he entered, and tries to push it back, but the door turns against him; and in the jar of that shutting door he hears these words, "This night is Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain." Sin may open bright as the morning. It ends dark as the night!

LATIMER REPROVING THE KING.

I learn further from this subject that Death sometimes breaks in upon a banquet. Why did he not go down to the prisons in Babylon? There were people there that would like to have died. I suppose there were men and women in torture in that city who would have welcomed death. But he comes to the palace; and just at the time when the mirth is dashing to the tiptop pitch, Death breaks in at the banquet. We have often seen the same thing illustrated. Here is a young man just come from college. He is kind. He is loving. He is enthusiastic. He is eloquent. By one spring he may bound to heights toward which many men have been struggling for years. A profession opens before him. He is established in the law. His friends cheer him. Eminent men encourage him. After awhile you may see him standing in the United States Senate, or moving a popular assemblage by his eloquence, as trees are moved in a whirlwind. Some night he retires early. A fever is on him. Delirium, like a reckless charioteer, seizes the reins of his intellect. Father and mother stand by and see the tides of his life going out to the great ocean. The banquet is coming to an end. The lights of thought, and mirth, and eloquence are being extinguished. The garlands are snatched from the brow. The vision is gone. Death at the banquet!

We saw the same thing, on a larger scale, illustrated at the last war in this country. Our whole nation had been sitting at a national banquet—North, South, East, and West. To prepare that banquet, the sheepfolds and the aviaries of the country sent their best treasures. The orchards piled up on the table their sweetest fruits. The presses burst out with new wines. To sit at that table, came the yeomanry of New Hampshire, and the lumbermen of Maine, and the Carolinian from the rice-fields, and the Western emigrant from the pines of Oregon, and we were all brothers—brothers at a banquet. Suddenly the feast ended. What meant those mounds thrown up at Chickamauga, Shiloh, Atlanta, Gettysburg, South Mountain? What meant the corn-fields gullied with the wheels of the heavy supply-train? Why those rivers of tears—those lakes of blood? God was angry! Justice must come. A handwriting on the wall! The nation had been weighed and found wanting. Darkness! Darkness! Woe to the North! Woe to the South! Woe to the East! Woe to the West! Death at the banquet!

I have also to learn from the subject that the destruction of the vicious, and of those who despise God, will be very sudden. The wave of mirth had dashed to the highest point when that Medo-Persian army broke through. It was unexpected. Suddenly, almost always, comes the doom of those who despise God, and defy the laws of men. The Red Sea was divided. The Egyptians tried to cross. There can be no danger. Forward, great host of the Egyptians! Clap the cymbals, and blow the trumpets of victory! After them! We will catch them yet, and they shall be destroyed. But the walls begin to tremble. Suddenly destruction came. One half-hour before they could not have believed it. Destroyed; and without remedy.

I am just setting forth a fact, which you have noticed as well as I. Ananias comes to the apostle. The apostle says: "Did you sell the land for so much?" He says, "Yes." It was a lie. Dead! as quick as that! Sapphira, his wife, comes in. "Did you sell the land for so much?" "Yes." It was a lie; and quick as that she was dead! God's judgments are upon those who despise him and defy him. They come suddenly.

Are there any here who are unprepared for the eternal world? Are there any here who have been living without God, and without hope? Let me say to you that you had better accept of the Lord Jesus Christ, lest suddenly your last chance be gone. The lungs will cease to breathe; the heart will stop. Nothing will be left but Death, and Judgment, and Eternity. Oh! flee to God this hour! If there be one in this presence who has wandered far away from Christ, though he may not have heard the call of the Gospel for many a year, I invite him now to come and be saved. Flee from thy sin! Flee to the stronghold of the Gospel! Now is the accepted time: now is the day of salvation.

Good-night, my young friends! May you have rosy sleep, guarded by him who never slumbers! May you awake in the morning strong and well! But oh! art thou a despiser of God? Is this thy last night on earth? Shouldest thou be awakened in the night by something, thou knowest not what, and there be shadows floating in the room, and a handwriting on the wall, and you feel that your last hour is come, and there be a fainting at the heart, and a tremor in the limb, and a catching of the breath—then thy doom would be but an echo of the words of the text: "In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain."

The Young Women's Christian Association, New York.

Hear the invitation of the Gospel! There may be some one in this house to whom I shall never speak again, and therefore let it be in the words of the Gospel, and not in my own, with which I close: "Ho, every one that thirsteth! Come ye to the waters. And let him that hath no money come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price." "Come unto Me, all ye who are weary and heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Oh! that my Lord Jesus would now make himself so attractive to your souls that you can not resist him; and that, if you have never prayed before, or have not prayed since those days when you knelt down at your mother's knee, then that to-night you might pray saying:

Just as I am, without one plea
But that thy blood was shed for me,
And that thou bid'st me come to thee,
O Lamb of God, I come!

But if you can not think of so long a prayer as that, I will give you a shorter prayer that you can say: "God be merciful to me, a sinner!" Or, if you can not think of so long a prayer as that, I will give you a still shorter one that you may utter: "Lord save me, or I perish!" Or if that be too long a prayer, you need not utter one word. Just look and live!

A NOBLE GIFT TO WOMEN.

"THE MARGARET-LOUISA HOME" FOR THE TEMPORARILY UNEMPLOYED.

Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard's Generosity Aids the Young Women's Christian Association of New York to Solve a Difficult Problem—Pure Surroundings and Christian Safeguards for Young Girls who are Strangers in the Great Metropolis.

TO one who has never lived in a great and populous city, it is almost incomprehensible that, amid so much wealth and grandeur, there could be multitudes in misery. Yet in every large centre of population there are thousands who suffer from enforced idleness and the privations it brings. Christian effort has done much to mitigate the trials of the unemployed, and to afford them comfortable and respectable quarters while they are searching for work. But strangely enough, in a majority of cases, the provision has been made mainly for men; the women, although they are sharers in the hardships that follow in the train of idleness, have been left largely to shift for themselves. In Berlin, London and New York, there have been reared elegant edifices for the accommodation of young men who are in search of employment in these great cities. These places are among the best substitutes for a genuine home, supplying all the safeguards needed to keep the youth from contracting the habits and vicious tastes that come from bad company.

On the 19th of January, there was opened and publicly transferred to the Young Women's Christian Association of New York City, the first home of this character for young women ever opened in this country. It comes as a solution to the problem where to place young women who are temporarily in the city looking for occupation—women and girls of good character, but who, if subjected to the severe trials and temptations of city life under circumstances of penury, might very quickly drift into a vortex from which recovery would be almost hopeless. It is to save these innocent ones from sin and danger, that the Margaret-Louisa Home has been so generously established and given to the care and trusteeship of the Young Women's Christian Association, by Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, whose sympathy for her less fortunate sisters has taken this most practical and valuable turn. She has purchased the building and lot at No. 14 East Sixteenth Street, and erected thereon a spacious, six-story building, 50 feet front and 150 feet deep, and fittingly furnished it throughout. The Home—a picture of which may be seen on the first page of this issue—is one of the most conspicuous structures in the neighborhood, and is connected with the Young Women's Christian Association building on Fifteenth Street, by a corridor running through the block. Its parlors, offices, restaurant and laundry, are ample for a large hotel, and there are, besides, 92 beds for the accommodation of the guests. The rooms are rented at a nominal figure. In the restaurant, which is exclusively for women, meals are served a la carte and table d'hôte, and the fare is plain and wholesome.

This noble gift, which is the recognition by Mrs. Shepard of a long-felt want of the Young Women's Christian Association, was privately turned over to the officers of that organization on January 8th, when the deeds were transferred. Mrs. Shepard, who is a lady of wealth in her own right, and a leader in society, is the wife of Col. Elliott F. Shepard, editor and proprietor of the New York Mail and Express. She is a woman of many secret charities. The new Home has been named for her two daughters, Louisa and Margaret. It cost about $300,000. On January 19, a brief service of consecration was held, prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. David Greer, of St. Bartholomew's Church, and an address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. John Hall, his auditors filling the chapel connecting the two buildings, and listening with the deepest attention. The only condition imposed upon him, he said, was that he should pronounce no eulogy upon the donor of this munificent gift. He would respect these instructions, because he recognized the spirit in which they had been given. Even while she had been planning the gift, she had striven to keep it so that her left hand should not know what her right hand did. Regarding the object of the Home, he said the new addition was something that had been long lacking in the great work of the Association. Girls from the country, homeless and strangers in the city, might here have a temporary abiding-place, a safe and inexpensive retreat, till they had time to look about, and either find a permanent boarding-place or good employment. The Home was not meant to destroy their self-respect or their self-reliance. After a month's residence, they were expected to make room for others. Any one who had ever come into contact with this class of girls, would know just how much needed such a Home as this was. Girls come here, and would fall into wrong hands and, in their innocence, it might be into evil hands. He would advise all girls who had country homes, to remain there, though they might have less chance of advancement. But if they would come to the cities, it was the duty of good Christians to provide for their safety and well-being, as far as possible. Closing, he spoke in warm commendation of the moral and social safeguards surrounding the tenants of the Home, and the benefits they must derive from constant contact with the pure influences of the Young Women's Christian Association, with its system of Bible teaching and its steadfast dependence upon God.

It is just six years since the foundation stone of the Young Women's Christian Association building, on East Fifteenth Street, was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The building, which is of the Queen Anne style of architecture, five stories high, with a facade of rough-hewn stone and pressed brick, covers a plot of ground twenty-five by one hundred and three feet. Its elegant and spacious appointments including a dining-room, employment office, and educational and the industrial class-rooms, have already been fully described in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Without unnecessary adornment, and the most attractive at all points, it is one of the most substantial buildings ever erected in New York for a philanthropic purpose. A picture of the building is given on the preceding page. The scope and influence of the organization are actually unbounded, and the rapid growth of its various departments has shown how much needed it was in a community where but little attention had been paid to the moral and intellectual wants of young women outside of the churches. Besides, the philanthropy has been the widest and most practical sort; the great object has been to aid the needy to help themselves.

There is to-day no busier, more popular, and more useful place in the Empire City than the Young Women's Christian Association, and the good it has done, and will do in the future, is endless. It has won the confidence and support of many wealthy Christian people and a new addition to its field of usefulness, which has been placed at its disposal through the kindness of Mrs. Shepard, will go far toward making it a perfectly organized and equipped agency for the elevation of woman for her spiritual and temporal progress, which should endear it to mothers, sisters, daughters and wives all over this broad Republic.

THE LATE GEORGE BANCROFT.

Sketch of the Career of America's Greatest Historian.

(See Portrait on page 61.)

ON another page appears a tribute from the pen of Dr. Talmage to the memory of the great historian, scholar and statesman, whose recent death the nation mourns. It is therefore unnecessary to do more in this place than summarize the events of his long life.

George Bancroft was born at Worcester, Mass., Oct. 3, 1800, and was consequently in his ninety-first year, when he died on January 17, last. He was the son of Dr. Aaron Bancroft, a distinguished Congregational minister, who in his young days, had served as a volunteer in the battles of Lexington and Bunker Hill. The minister carefully supervised his son's education, and must have been delighted with his progress, for at the age of thirteen, the boy was sufficiently advanced to enter Harvard. He took the four-years' course, and graduated with honor at the age of seventeen. Both he and his family appear at that time to have regarded the pulpit as the natural occupation of his future life. In view of his youth, and mental gifts, a further course of study was deemed advisable as a preparation for his work. He therefore went to Germany, where he spent some time at the University of Goettingen, and gained the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. Subsequently he studied at Heidelberg, and made the acquaintance of the greatest scholars and writers of the day, including Goethe, Eichhorn, Hereen, Benecke and Bunsen.

In 1822 Mr. Bancroft returned to the United States. For about a year he was Professor of Greek at Harvard, but he withdrew from that position to organize the celebrated Round Hill School at Northampton, Mass. His study of American history and his enthusiastic admiration for the Constitution led to his delivering several orations at national anniversaries and these brought him under the notice of politicians. He was elected to the Legislature of Massachusetts without his consent, and he declined to serve. He continued, however, to take a deep interest in political life, though making literature his chief occupation. In 1823 he published a volume of poems and the next year he brought out a translation of Hereen's Politics of Ancient Greece. He also commenced his preparations for the production of the great history, the work with which his name will in the future be chiefly associated. He had the highest conception of the duty of an historian, as is proved by the painstaking and laborious search for original records and for any contemporary documents which shed light on the subject. The first volume was published in 1834. He had withdrawn four years previously from the Round Hill School that he might give his undivided attention to his book. His original design, as explained in the preface, was to write the history of the United States from the discovery of the continent down to his own time. Although he wrote twelve large volumes and was still at work upon the history in his eighty-fourth year he did not get beyond the period of the adoption of the Constitution.

His interest in the politics of his time also contributed to prevent the achievement of the task to which he had set himself, though incidentally it furnished him with opportunities for gaining the accurate information which renders his history intrinsically precious. After serving as Collector of the Port of Boston, by the appointment of President Van Buren, he accepted the portfolio of Naval Affairs in the Cabinet of President Polk. His term of office was signalized by the establishment of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, by the seizure of California under his orders, and the occupation of Texas. In 1846, he left the Cabinet to become Minister to England. During the three years of his residence there, beside efficiently performing the duties of the office, he made a minute search of the papers in the Government archives relating to the Revolution, which the British Cabinet courteously placed at his disposal. The material he thus accumulated, was embodied, on his return, in five more volumes of the history. He divided his time between his home in New York and his country residence at Newport, R. I., laboring uninterruptedly on his gigantic undertaking.

The year 1867 found Mr. Bancroft again in Europe, this time as envoy at Berlin. He was first accredited to the Court of Prussia, but during his seven years of service the King of Prussia became Emperor of Germany, and Mr. Bancroft became United States Minister under the new regime. He was in high favor with the aged Emperor and with Bismarck, and used his influence in the settlement of the vexed question of the liability of German Americans to military service. In 1874 he returned to America, and resumed his labors on the history. His twelfth and last volume was published in 1885.

Of late years much of Mr. Bancroft's time was spent in Washington, where he had many friends. His face and figure were familiar to the citizens as he went for his daily rides on horseback in all weathers. He attributed his vigorous health and long life to regular habits. It was his custom to rise at five or six and work until about one and then give the rest of day to exercise and amusement. A carriage accident in 1878, caused him his first serious illness and two years ago he was again laid aside by a severe attack of sickness from which it was feared he would not recover. Last October, however, he reappeared in Washington apparently in his usual health and spirits. Soon after New Year's he contracted a cold, but continued his usual walks and rides. He did not take to his bed until Thursday, January 15, but the following day he became unconscious and on Saturday he died. His son, Mr. John C. Bancroft, who, with his wife, had kept house for the historian since the death of Mrs. Bancroft, in 1886, watched him tenderly and affectionately to the end. His funeral took place on January 20. President Harrison, Secretary, Blaine and other members of the Cabinet, Chief Justice Fuller and a distinguished company of Senators and Foreign Ministers attended the ceremony in Washington, whence the remains were taken for interment to his native town of Worcester, Mass.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Missing Marriage Certificate would be worth a large sum to a citizen of New Haven, Conn., if it could be recovered. He and his children have become entitled to the estate of his wife's brother, who died recently in Germany, worth over fifty thousand dollars. He has been notified that his claim will be admitted on the production of the necessary documents. He is unable to comply, because he has no certificate of his marriage, and that is a fatal flaw in the chain of evidence, which will prevent his getting the estate. It appears that he was married thirty years ago in Germany. He was then a young man about to emigrate to America. The girl to whom he was engaged, consented to marry him only on the eve of his departure. As he was to start early the next morning, they went late at night to the house of a minister, who, having retired for the night, rose from his bed to marry them. The minister gave them a certificate, but omitted to enter the marriage on the church books. He is now dead, and there is therefore no evidence of the marriage but the certificate. The man lost that some years ago, when his pocket-book containing it and other documents was stolen from him. He did not trouble to procure a duplicate, as his wife was dead and he did not think it of much importance. He now perceives that it was worth a fortune and deeply deplores its loss. The time will come when similar unavailing regret will be felt by multitudes. They will grieve, not that there is no record of their union with Christ, but that they did not enter into union with him. It seems a matter of small importance to them now, but then it will be the one indispensable condition of eternal happiness. (Mark 16: 16.)

THE SECOND ADVENT.

Christ to Come in Person Raising the Righteous Dead and Transforming Waiting Believers.

BY JAMES STEPHENS, M.A.

WHEN our Lord Jesus was about to leave his disciples, he said, "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself." (John 14: 3.) This utterance is often referred to as if it were fulfilled whenever a believer is taken out of this world by death. But, when our Lord spoke of coming again to take us to himself, he meant he would come in his own person, and not merely that he would send a servant to fetch us to be with him in heaven. This is evident if we look at Acts 1: 11. When the astonished disciples were looking after Jesus, who had been taken up from them into the cloud, two men in white apparel stood by them and said, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." If death were the coming of the Lord, it could not be said that he shall so come in like manner as he went, for he went in his own person. The coming of our Lord Jesus, then is

A Personal Coming.

The Lord's coming is a coming to take his people to himself. When he comes the bodies of his people shall be redeemed. We, even now, are the redeemed of the Lord, but we look for the day of complete redemption. We know (1. Thess. 4: 16, 17) that "the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout . . . and the dead in Christ shall rise first." This is not a general resurrection, but a resurrection merely of saints—of the dead in Christ. Further, "we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air." In 1. Cor. 15: 51, we find that those who are alive on the earth at the Lord's coming, and are thus caught up, are changed in body. "Behold, I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." In keeping with this we read in Phil. 3: 20, "Our citizenship is in heaven, from whence also we wait for a Saviour, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall fashion anew the body of our humiliation, that it may be conformed to the body of his glory." Then shall take place the adoption for which we have waited, to-wit, the redemption of our body. (Rom. 8: 23.) "This corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality." We have a suggestion of what the body of Jesus' glory (to which ours shall be conformed) shall be like in what the three disciples saw on the Mount of Transfiguration. "We shall bear the image of the heavenly," and "then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory."

When Jesus comes his people shall be made manifest before his judgment-seat. "Made manifest" is the true rendering, rather than "appear," in II Cor. 5: 10. This is not the judgment of the great white throne recorded in Rev. 20: 12. That takes place at the second resurrection. This is the Lord

Reckoning With His Servants.

When Jesus comes he will make manifest not only the works of our hands, but the very counsels of the heart. How cheering and encouraging for those who, by reason of physical weakness and infirmity, have been able to do but little! You know how God said to David when he was forbidden to build the temple, "It was well that it was in thine heart to do it." God regarded the desire of his heart. Many may, like him, have been hindered providentially from active work, and yet may have praise. When the Lord reckons with his own he will put things in the true light, and the faithfulness of the servant of God, however hidden previously, will be acknowledged. Faithfulness in the bearing of trial will be duly owned. At the same time the one who has been privileged to do actual work shall have his faithfulness graciously brought to light and rewarded. "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear the elders who have fed the flock and taken the oversight, not as lords, but rather as ensamples, shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." The winner of souls shall see the fruit of his labor, even as Paul says when writing to the Thessalonians who have been brought to Jesus through his instrumentality. "What is our hope, or joy or crown of rejoicing? Are not even ye in the presence of our Lord Jesus at his coming? For ye are our glory and joy."

The coming of our Lord Jesus for his saints is the necessary step toward the manifestation of the sons of God. "When Christ who is our life, shall be manifested, then shall ye also be manifested with him in glory." (Col. 3: 4.) "Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father." Then "they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." If we suffer with him we shall also reign with him.

The coming of our Lord is a coming in his kingdom. He has, presently, gone to receive for himself a kingdom; and, having received it, to return. Then shall come to pass what is written by the prophet, "The God of heaven Shall Set up a Kingdom which shall never be destroyed." This kingdom shall displace the kingdoms of the earth—they shall become "like the chaff of the summer threshing-floor." (Dan. 2: 35.) Men speak as if this were the spiritual kingdom which arises in the present dispensation through the preaching of the Gospel. But the Gospel does not displace the kingdoms of the earth; it permeates them. The kingdom yet to be set up is one before which no place shall be found for others. "It shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms." The Lord Jesus is looking for his coming, expecting till his enemies be put under his feet, and the kingdom set up which "shall stand forever."

When our Lord comes in his kingdom, he will come to be manifested in glory. Once he came in lowly form. "He came to his own, and his own received him not." The world that was made by him knew him not. He is coming again in the glory of his Father, with all his holy angels. "Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him."

The coming of the Lord seems to be set before the Church as one that may take place at any time, at any moment. The word spoken of the Thessalonians (1. Thess. 1: 9, 10) sets forth that there is nothing necessarily between us and the coming of the Lord: "Ye turned to God from idols to serve the living and true God; and to wait for his Son from heaven." Their business was to serve God and to look for Jesus. Similarly in 1. Cor. 1: 7 we find the apostle exhorting the believers to "come behind in no gift, waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Their attitude was clearly that of looking as for an event which

Might take Place any Day

and any hour. Now, let it be remarked here that there are events which must take place before our Lord comes to set up his kingdom on the earth; but these, so far as we know, may take place after the Lord has descended to the air for his saints and taken them to himself. The first stage in the Lord's coming is simply a descent to the upper air. "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord." He is not coming to the earth then, but to the air. Afterward, as Jude tells us, "The Lord cometh with ten thousands of his saints to execute judgment." When he comes to the air he will gather his saints to himself, and then, in his further progress toward judgment on earth and setting up his kingdom, his saints are with him.

"The day of the Lord," referred to in II. Thess., seems to refer to the time when judgment shall begin to be executed, and so to a time subsequent to the coming of the Lord to the air for his saints. There might be time, then, for the great apostasy to manifest itself between the time of the gathering of the saints to meet the Lord and the inauguration of the day of the Lord. May not the believer, then look for the Lord's coming at any time? When ever it is "we shall all be changed in a moment in the twinkling of an eye."

AHAB'S COVETOUSNESS.

S. S. LESSON FOR FEB. 8, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
I. Kings 21: 1-16; Golden Text, Luke 12: 15.

Ahab in Trouble—An Enemy's Arrogant Demand—Ahab Yielding is Subjected to Increased Humiliation—Provoked to Resistance—Israel's Victories—God's Message to Ahab—The King Heavy and Displeased—His Desire for Naboth's Vineyard—Annoyed by his Failure to Obtain it—Jezebel's Crime—The Sentence on Ahab.

WHILE God was educating and perfecting his prophet-child, Elijah, he was also engaged in seeking after the soul of the wicked Ahab. God's patience within this wicked king is a wonderful revelation of his love, and unveils to us much of the unseen workings of God with sinners which shall fully come to light in that day when the hearts of all men shall be revealed.

God allowed Ben-hadad, king of Syria, to come up against Ahab. With all the insolence of a man of the world who knows that he has the advantage of his enemy, the king of Syria makes an audacious claim upon Ahab's silver and gold, his wives and children. Ahab, in his cowardly supineness, with no well-known Almighty God to succor him, meanly yields to those imperious demands, and now Ben-hadad's exactions know no bounds, so that at last the king of Israel is roused, and to the withering, sarcastic boast of Ben-hadad, "The gods do so to me, and more also, if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that will follow me," Ahab answers, "Let not him that girdeth on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off." Neither of these kings set God before their eyes. But God could not forget the seed of Abraham, his friend: idolatrous as they were, they were still his people; and just at the crucial moment, when Ben-hadad had given orders to set his enormous host in battle array, God appears upon the scene. Ahab's heart had not been changed when the fire had fallen from heaven on Mount Carmel, but he knew, in the depths of his heart, that God was true. And now God remembers him, and sends a prophet to the man who does not so much as pray to him!

"Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thine hand this day, and thou shalt ## Know that I am the Lord."

If the manifestation of my power has not conquered thee, I will shew thee my love. To the great surprise of the Syrians, they were thoroughly routed by the army of Israel. The miserable man, instead of yielding himself up to the God who had dealt in such long-suffering with him, made use of his victory to nurture his own pride, utterly regardless of the fact that he was in trust for God! Self was really his god. Ahab spared Ben-hadad in order to justify the scheming flattery of the Syrians and God sent a prophet to him with the message, "Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore thy life shall go for his life, and thou shalt be for his people." (20: 42.)

"The king of Israel went down to his house heavy and displeased;" after all the dealing of his God with him, Ahab did not know the Lord; he lived for himself still, and whatever did not fall out as he wished it, caused him to be pettish and sulky. "Let them also that love thy name be joyful in thee." (Ps. 5:11.) Ahab knew no such joy as this.

"Heavy and Displeased."

What a picture of a man living without God, when anything crosses his will! What a picture, alas! of some who profess to know God, but who live still to themselves, when they are thwarted in their plans and disappointed in their hopes! It is only such as live in a close relationship to their good Shepherd, that can look out upon an upset plan, a crossing of their purposes, an apparent failure in what seemed to be of God, and say with confidence, "The Lord is my Shepherd; I shall not want." "I know that all things work together for good to them that love God." "Heavy and displeased!" While Ahab was fighting the battles of the Lord, he had from time to time communications from God by his prophets, he had not yet lost all the impressions made on him on Mount Carmel: Jezebel, too, his evil angel, was away from him. But "heavy and displeased," he was peculiarly open to new temptation, and the little drawing towards a better life, towards knowing that God was the Lord, would soon cease to influence him.

Satan had a distraction ready for him. If Ahab had humbled himself and owned his vanity, and repented, he would not so easily have fallen into the trap laid for him. But self-indulgence makes self our master. Naboth, the Jezreelite, had a vineyard situated in the very spot which would make a most convenient vegetable garden for Ahab. He coveted it, and offered Naboth to exchange it, and give him a better vineyard, or to purchase it of him for money. But Naboth had strong views about family property, and said: "The Lord forbid it me that I should give the inheritance of my fathers unto thee." It may be that he feared the taint of Ahab's idolatry and saw that the family inheritance where God had been honored by his forefathers would be defiled by the worship of idols and false gods, if it were to come into Ahab's possession. And Ahab, who had never sorrowed because of his own sin, gave himself up to sulk, and took to his bed, and would not so much as eat, because he could not have his way, and possess Naboth's vineyard.

"Unkingly King!"

The unscrupulous Jezebel was at hand. This wicked, designing woman wanted no God who should rule the conscience and the will; a religion which would minister to her ambition, to her self-gratification, and the priests and prophets of which should be her tools, this satisfied Jezebel. She came to her husband and said, "Why is thy spirit so sad that thou eatest no bread?" And when Ahab told her the reason, she replied, "Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel? Arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry; I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite." With Jezebel, might was right, and the only right she cared for was her own. Truth was unknown to this prophetess of Baal. She wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, to proclaim a fast, to "set Naboth on high among the people," to spare no expense in hiring men as unscrupulous as herself to bear witness against him, "Thou didst blaspheme God and the king," and then, after this mock trial, to carry him forth out of the city and stone him! There were plenty of the followers of Jezebel who could be found to carry out this deed of darkness. Jezebel's money was sure, they would curry favor with her, and she ruled her husband. Thus Naboth died a martyr. "How can God permit such deeds of darkness?" many ask. If there were no hereafter where the wrong things on earth can be put right, it were indeed difficult to understand; but, thank God, a time is coming when the souls under the altar will be heard (Rev. 6:9-11), and God's judgment shall be justified.

Jezebel, as soon as she heard the first news of his infamous execution of a righteous man, went to Ahab, and congratulated him that the confiscated vineyard of Naboth was now his property, and the depraved conscience of the King would try to quiet itself that Jezebel, and not he, was the instigator of this foul murder. But the righteous Judge, the true and faithful witness, was looking on. Ahab went down to the vineyard to take possession. But an unexpected intruder was first upon the spot. The man of all in his kingdom who might have been the greatest blessing to him if he had made him his counsellor, the prophet Elijah was there. "Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?" said the prophet to the king. "Thus said the Lord, in the place where dogs licked up the blood of Naboth, shall dogs lick up thy blood, even thine." "Hast thou found me, O mine enemy?" said the king to the prophet. "I found thee," was the rejoinder, "because thou hast sold thyself to work evil in the sight of the Lord." Ahab was king, Jezebel's deed was his deed and he must not, could not, shirk the responsibility of the murderer. God foretold the utter destruction of all his family: the generation of such a man could not be suffered to live! A father cannot sin without bringing evil upon his house; those who live with us are too much bound up with us to be unaffected by the lives we live. And Jezebel, the wicked Jezebel, who stirred up her husband until he sold himself to work in wickedness; what of her? "The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel." The climax of their wickedness was their sin against Naboth.

For the first time in Ahab's life, there was evidenced a real brokenness of spirit. "When Ahab heard these words he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and went softly." But would God take heed of any sign of humility in such a man? Yes; even in such a man! So wondrous is the mercy of our God! There was but one heart in all Israel who would understand this mercy of God to such a worthless, depraved sinner. A prophet who lives in the presence of God can come the nearest to a sinner. To Elijah, he said, not to Ahab himself, "Seest thou how Ahab humbleth himself before me?" Only Elijah, who had been so broken on Mount Horeb, would appreciate the grace and tenderness of God towards such a man. "Because he humbleth himself before me, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in his son's days will I send the evil upon his house."

A WASTED AFTERNOON.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for February 8. "Take heed, and beware of covetousness." Luke 12: 15.

"WHERE is Charles?" Mr. Barbour asked of his wife as he came in from his office and seated himself at the table on which the evening meal was spread.

"He came in early," Mrs. Barbour replied, "and went straight to his own room. He did not seem well, I thought. He was out skating in the afternoon and I did not expect him till late but I suppose he had enough of the ice, for he came in looking tired and cross."

The bell was rung as usual at meal-time and several children came in and took their seats at the table. Charles came last and his face still wore the cloud his mother had noticed earlier in the day.

"What is the matter, my boy?" Mr. Barbour asked.

"Nothing, papa, I'm tired, that is all."

"Been skating too long?" the father asked.

"No, I did not skate at all. I went down to the lake but I did not stay."

"Nothing more was said then, but after the meal was over Mr. Barbour went into the room where the children prepared their lessons for the next day, and spoke to his son. Charles was sitting with his algebra before him, but his abstracted, gloomy look showed that he was not studying.

"Charles," said his father, "what is wrong? Are you in any trouble? Tell me what worries you, my boy? What are you thinking about?"

"Nothing worries me, Papa. I was wishing I had a pair of skates like Reginald Wharton's. You should just see them. They are nickel-plated, and have the new patent grip. He says they cost more than ten dollars. His uncle sent them to him for a present. They're splendid."

"Your skates looked quite shabby compared with them, I expect."

"Yes, I hated to put them on. They're old fashioned, too. I wish I had skates like his, I can skate better than he can."

"So you came away in disgust and would not go on the ice at all? Was that it?"

"Yes, Papa; I did not feel like going on with my old skates. Couldn't you buy me a pair like those? I know just where they came from. I would be a good boy and do everything you wanted me. Oh, I wish you would."

"Don't your old skates answer the purpose? You seemed to me to go along pretty well the other day, I noticed, when I was down at the lake."

"Oh, yes; I can use them, but the others look so much nicer and they are easier to fix on. I should so like them."

"Well I suppose I could buy you a pair, but you know we are not very well off. I promised your mother a new sack next week, but she might do without it. She would have to do without it, if I bought the skates, for I could not afford both. Will you ask her and settle, it between you?"

"O Papa I could not do that. Mamma needs the sack."

"Well, then, my boy, you will make your old skates do, will you? I thought you loved your mother well enough to deny yourself for her sake. Now don't you think you were foolish to lose an afternoon's pleasure?"

"I suppose I was; but I could not help it. I felt disgusted to see that boy who can't skate a bit with such a nice pair of skates."

"Oh, yes; I can understand it. The feeling is in all of us more or less, and it makes men, as well as boys, miserable. You will save yourself a good deal of misery if you learn to control such feelings. If you indulge them and give way to them they will get the mastery over you, and unfit you for the duties of life. You can conquer them easily now, but in a few years they will not be so easy to overcome if they are allowed to have their way. Now if you had put on your old skates this afternoon and had an hour or two of exercise, you would have come home happy instead of being disgruntled and miserable. Your enemy had his way in the little kingdom of your mind, which you ought to rule yourself, and he has caused you suffering. Put him down, my boy, for your own sake. When you grow to be a man, you will be always repining if this spirit grows with you. It leads to mischief, too. Sometimes a man dwells so long on things that others have, and he has not, that he is tempted to take them. An undisciplined mind gets weak and helpless. Its principles of right and honesty and justice are defeated by this usurper, who has no right to rule, but has grown strong by being fed and pampered. Wars have been caused by it, when the demon of covetousness holds sway in the heart of a king. One of the most destructive wars of the last century, in which thousands of men lost their lives, resulted from the covetous desire of King Frederick of Prussia to get Silesia from Austria. People call him Frederick the Great, but there was no greatness in him. Overcome it, my boy; try to get on in life, but do not waste time and strength and peace of mind in coveting what does not belong to you. Remember, "a man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesses."

"The Christian Herald" Binder.— Numerous Applications have been received from readers of this journal for a case in which the copies of the paper, as they are received, may be placed and kept clean for binding at the end of the year. To meet this demand, a stock of such covers has been prepared, and they are now on sale at this office. Each cover is made of strong cloth, with the name of the journal stamped in gilt letters on the outside. It is large enough to hold fifty-two copies, and is fitted with the new patent apparatus for holding the papers securely; A cover will be sent, postage paid, to any address in the United States, on the receipt of one dollar.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1.00 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

GEORGE BANCROFT.

WHEN, last Tuesday, through one door of St. John's Church, Washington, the procession of the boys' choir clad in white, marched in, chanting a funeral hymn, and from the opposite door the casket containing the body of George Bancroft entered followed by the Supreme Court of the United States, and the President and his Cabinet and representatives of many governments, it was one of the most impressive scenes I have witnessed. Who was it to whose memory the nation made such solemn obeisance? A Congregational minister's son, he had started from among New England hills and had risen by his own industry and exaltation of moral character until Lamartine, and Guizot, and Humboldt had recognized him as friends, and at the Courts of St. James and Berlin he had been received as Minister Plenipotentiary, and in the Presidential Cabinet of his own country, he had been honored as both Secretary of the Navy and Secretary of War.

At ninety-one years of age he puts down a pen which had saved from obliteration the early history of this American continent and produced a library of its own—a pen that began its work when the opinion on the other side the sea was thoroughly established that American literature was an impossibility. Foreign nations might hang up in their museums specimens of our Indian tomahawks and scalping-knives, and the taxidermist might surprise the world with the size of our bears and eagles stuffed and preserved, but that the American brain could produce a paragraph worth reading or chime a canto worth hearing was not to be thought of. Then to demolish this prejudice came Washington Irving with his essays, Longfellow and Bryant with their poems, and Emerson with his epigrams, and George Bancroft with his history, and all the world is reading them and among the most exquisite sculpture of Westminster Abbey is the form of Henry W. Longfellow and last Tuesday the most significant garland on the casket of Bancroft was that placed there amid the solemnities of the occasion by the hand of Count Arco Valley, the German Minister, at the command of his emperor, telegraphing from Berlin.

About such a life and such a departure as this of George Bancroft, there is something supremely beautiful. To have done so much for the intelligence and happiness of the world, and then to go up to join her who five years before had ascended, charges and surcharges his name with glory and splendor everlasting. The only time I saw the illustrious historian and diplomat and Christian, was on the reviewing platform at Washington, on the day when the armies of the Union, at the close of our Civil War, were marched through Pennsylvania Avenue, a spectacle that eclipses in my memory all other grandeurs. But now he too has passed in review, marching on in that great procession that moves upward through pearly gates and amid shining ranks and before golden palaces and is now giving account for the use he made of the brilliant faculties with which he had been entrusted. Into the mighty company of the historians has he passed, the men who by their genius embalmed the ages: Herodotus, Thucydides, Xenophon, Josephus, Rollin, Prescott, Macaulay, Bancroft.

WHO OWNS IT?

BEFORE Columbus and the one hundred and twenty men embarked on board the Santa Maria, the Pinto and the Nina, on their eventful voyage, what did they do? Took the Sacrament of our Lord Jesus Christ. Coming in sight of land, what song goes up from all three decks? "Gloria in Excelsis." What did they first do stepping from shipboard to solid ground? All knelt in prayer, consecrating the New World to God. What did the Huguenots do, landing in the Carolinas; and the Hollanders, landing in New York; and the Puritans, landing in New England? With bent knees, uplifted faces and heaven-beseeching prayer, they took possession of this Continent for God. How did they open the first American Congress? With prayer in the name of Christ. Beside that, see what God has done for us. Open the map of our North American Continent, and see how the land was shaped for immeasurable prosperities. Behold the navigable rivers, greater and more numerous than any other land, running down to the sea in all directions—prophecy of large manufactures and easy commerce. Look at the great ranges of mountains, timbered with wealth on the tops and sides, and metallized with wealth underneath; 180,000 square miles of coal; 180,000 square miles of iron. The land so contoured that extreme weather seldom lasts more than three days. For the most of the year the climate is bracing, and favorable for brawn and brain. All fruits, all minerals, all harvests. Scenery which displays an autumnal pageantry which no other land pretends to rival. No South American earthquakes. No Scotch mists. No English fogs. No Egyptian plagues. No Germanic divisions. The happiest people on the earth are the people of the United States. The poor man has more chance, the industrious man more opportunity. How good God was to our fathers! How good God is to us and our children! To him, blessed be his mighty name, to him of the Cross and the triumph, to him who still remembers the prayers of the Pilgrim Fathers and Huguenots and Holland refugees, to him this land shall be consecrated.

THE DUELLO.

WE see here and there an attempt to revive what was called the "code of honor," which was only another mode of assassination. Two men offended at each other's words propose to settle the difficulty by the exchange of pistol-shots. Let such behavior be laughed to scorn and the law treat such offenders as criminals. This is too late in the world's history to restore the old modes of polite and gentlemanly murder. This nation had enough of that in the old days when North and South could not agree on the slavery question. If two such brilliant men as Alexander Hamilton and Aaron Burr could not make the duello right, no two upstarts of our time can lift that which is despicable into righteousness.

BRIEF NOTES.

The twelfth triennial conference of the Young Men's Christian Associations of all lands is to be held next August in Amsterdam, Holland.

The American Congregational Union reports last year as the most prosperous one in its history. Its income was $155,530, $76,300 of which came from churches and individuals.

Union revival services, under Evangelist B. Fay Mills, were begun in Evanston, Ill., January 22. Extensive preparations were made for the work, and the people are entering into it with prayerful energy.

Miss Ella I. Newton, of the Foochow Mission, addressing the Woman's Board of Missions, at the recent annual meeting said there was great need of more workers in China, and no limit to the opportunities for work.

The Congregational Year-Book gives 4,730 as the number of Congregational churches in the United Kingdom, and 711 in the colonies. The churches in England and Wales return 2,732 ministers, 2,115 of whom have charges, and sittings for 1,647,500 persons.

The welcome news comes from Ionia, Mich., that as a result of God's blessing on the services recently held there by Dr. L. W. Munhall, more than two hundred persons have been received into the churches, and, one of the pastors says: "There are many more to follow."

Rev. Somerset Gardner has closed his services at Paterson, N. J., after three weeks of blessing. The Rev. Thomas Hall, the pastor of the church in which the meetings were held, speaks in strong terms of the interest awakened and the conversions which followed. The special meetings held by Mrs. Gardner were also remarkable for their interest and power.

Messrs. Hunter and Crossley report excellent results from their recent tour in Manitoba. At Sault Ste Marie they remained four weeks with much success. They also visited Port Arthur and Portage La Prairie, and in each place there were crowded meetings and many converts. They are now in the midst of a blessed revival in Portland.

A new Presbyterian Church has been organized in Newark, N. J., recently. For some time past a cause has been growing up in connection with Park Presbyterian Church in that city. It has been known heretofore as Park Chapel, but has now been regularly constituted by the Synod in regular organization, as North Park Presbyterian Church.

Messrs. Brown and Buell are laboring at Canton, Ill., in the Baptist Church. The Canton Daily Register expresses its surprise at the large congregations attending in spite of the fact "that a Comedy Company is playing every night in the Opera House at popular prices." It may be inferred that the citizens have found something in Mr. Brown's preaching and Mr. Buell's singing which the Comedy Company cannot supply.

Rev. J. H. Weber writes from Bridgeton, N. J., that at the meetings he is holding in that town there have been "over three hundred seekers in less than two weeks. About 250 converted. 150 the last four nights. From one hundred to one hundred and twenty-five seekers every night. Church too small. Hold meetings in the factories at noon. The whole town stirred. All classes coming." Mr. Weber himself vouches for these astonishing figures.

Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son, the famous managers of tours and excursions are arranging for the trip of a large party through the Holy Land, to start on March 11. Dr. Talmage and the publisher of this journal willingly bear testimony to the perfection of the arrangements which Messrs. Cook & Son make for the comfort of the travellers who journey under their conduct. Any reader desiring to join this party may obtain particulars by addressing Messrs. Cook & Son, 261 Broadway, New York.

The congregations at Seventeenth Street M.E. Church, New York, are increasing daily. Mr. Harrison manifests all his old-time energy and power. The work is advancing beyond the highest expectations of the church and the evangelist. Two services are held every day. During last week 140 knelt at the altar. These are chiefly outsiders, many of whom have come from Brooklyn, Jersey City and Harlem, on the invitation of friends in the church who are anxious for their conversion. One hopeful sign is the large number of young men who have been brought in during the meetings.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Death of King Kalakaua—Senatorial Elections last Week—The Perturbed Southern Republics—A Great Bank Failure—Europe's Siberian Winter.

David Kalakaua, King of the Sandwich Islands, died at the Palace Hotel, San Francisco, on January 20. This civilized monarch of a once savage country has for a number of years been a figure of considerable importance in the commercial and diplomatic world. He was born in Hawaii in 1836, and was related to the royal family, although that fact alone did not give him the throne, as the Hawaiians elect their king whenever the succession is not provided for by the reigning monarch. King Lunalilo died without an heir, and Kalakaua was chosen by the people. On ascending the throne, he named his sister, Princess Liliouokalani, as his successor, and when he visited this country and Europe, she acted as Regent. Since the beginning of his reign in 1874, great material progress has been made in the Islands, which although very rocky and volcanic, are unusually fertile in certain parts. He fostered commerce, increased the exports of the kingdom, and added largely to the royal revenues. England tried on several occasions to secure control of Hawaii, but the interests of Americans have thus far predominated. Soon after Kalakaua's reign began, a revolution sprang up at Honolulu, the capital, the object being to enthrone Emma, the wife of a former king. American and British marines supported Kalakaua and the rebellion was quickly crushed. Kalakaua, accompanied by his spouse, Queen Kapiolani, made a tour around the world in 1881. Soon after his return the administration of public affairs became so wasteful and extravagant that the Islands fell back through poverty and loss of trade into many of the old barbaric customs, and paganism and slothfulness were everywhere. The king obtained heavy loans of gold and squandered it recklessly, paying as high as $75,000 for a birthday celebration and $60,000 for a funeral. At last the foreign capitalists interfered to save the little kingdom from financial ruin. The conservative party called on the king to dismiss his corrupt ministry and particularly his adviser, a man named Gibson, and in 1887, a new ministry and constitution were secured, William L. Green, an American planter, being at the head of the new Cabinet. Since that time the progress of the Islands has been uninterrupted. At the funeral ceremonies in San Francisco on the 22nd, one hundred thousand persons lined the streets through which the cortege passed on its way to the wharf. The body was placed on the warship Charleston and taken to Hawaii for interment.

The Future of the Negro in America is a topic which seems to attract a great deal of attention in England at present. A few days ago the London Times published a sensational article in which it warned Americans that the black man was fast overtaking the white in the race of population, and would, in another twenty years, outnumber him in the South. Reconstruction, it declared, has been a failure and the negro will yet have to be sent back to Central Africa by this Government as the only means of solving a problem which is expanding in proportions every year. The article attracted but little attention on this side of the Atlantic, where the situation is thoroughly understood and where the strong English prejudice against yielding the colored man his rights, socially and legally, does not exist.

Like other European Rulers, John Bull is prone to getting up an occasional war excitement for the diversion of his subjects. Just now he is amusing them by a show of activity in naval circles, which he claims to be justified in consequence of the attitude of this country on the Behring Sea affair. The fact that the United States has a considerable naval force in Pacific waters furnishes a pretext for talk in London official circles about the mobilization of an American fleet in Behring Sea, although Mr. Blaine has repeatedly explained that the force now there is no greater than it has been in any season for a number of years past, being five ships with 31 guns and 856 men, instead of a great fleet with 118 guns and 3,000 men, as the London Times represents. Meanwhile our own State Department is somewhat sensitive over the fact that England, in sending out invitations to the different governments to the World's Fair at Jamaica, West Indies, has either purposely or through inadvertence omitted to invite the United States. Secretary Blaine regards it as an intentional snub.

The Failure of the American National Bank of Kansas City, the largest institution in Missouri, on the 19th, occasioned a feeling of uneasiness in the Southwest during the week. The capital stock of the bank was $1,250,000, and when the Clearing House Association took action in the case, the bank offered as security collateral representing over $1,000,000, which was declined, and this precipitated the failure. Bad business methods were at the bottom of the trouble, and it has been brought out in the investigation that the institution was kept afloat for months by other banks, in Kansas City, which could not afford to have it close its doors. Its officers had hypothecated all its most valuable securities, made loans amounting to $800,000 and called for $1,000,000 more, which alarmed the conservative bankers of the State. There was a heavy run on the bank for some days before it closed its doors.

The Past Week has been One of Unusual Agitation among the South American Republics. In Peru, a strong opposition to the administration of President Remigio M. Bermudez, has developed which may at any time break out in open rebellion. Bermudez, who was born at Tarapaca, in 1836, succeeded President Caceres, and during his administration the country has seen the most prosperous period it has enjoyed since the war with Chili. Bermudez has had a military training and after leaving the army, held the post of Prefect of the Department of Trujillo. During the war with Chili he did good service in the field. A portrait of the President is given in this column. From Chili the news comes that the revolution in that country is still spreading. A portion of the army has made common cause with the insurgents. Britain, France and America have each ordered war vessels to Chilean waters to investigate and to protect their interests there. Three of the largest Chilean ironclads are now controlled by the rebels and the principal ports are either blockaded or in the hands of the revolutionists. President Balaceda has issued a manifesto, asserting his authority, but it has produced little effect. It is not believed that the rights of foreigners will be seriously interfered with, although for a time commerce may be at a standstill.

The Chief Political Interest during the Week has centered in the Senatorial Elections. In New York, Governor David B. Hill was chosen as successor to Senator William M. Evarts, having on joint ballot 81 votes, and Evarts 79. This is regarded by many as effectually putting him out of the category of Presidential candidates, for 1892, at least. A portrait of the new Senator is given in this column. Governor Hill, who took office when Governor Cleveland resigned to assume the Presidency in 1885, and who was elected in the following year, has been in politics nearly all his life. He has been famous of late years as a rival to Mr. Cleveland for the Democratic Presidential nomination, and represents the wing of the party opposed to the latter's renomination. The other significant results of the elections were the defeat of Ingalls in Kansas, the re-election of J. Donald Cameron, in Pennsylvania; Daniel W. Voorhees, in Indiana; Mitchell, in Oregon; Vest, in South Carolina, and Teller, in Colorado. In the other States the elections were without excitement.

Peace again Reigns at Pine Ridge, the Seat of war during the recent Indian trouble. All the hostiles have submitted and handed in their weapons, although many of the young bucks have retained their Winchesters and turned in old and useless muzzle-loaders to the army officers. Abundant rations are being doled out, and there is now a prospect that the farmers and settlers will enjoy a season of comparative peace. In consequence of the representations of Gen. Miles, the Government is considering the matter of disarming all the Indians in the western country, and forbidding them the use of Springfield and Winchester rifles, as they do not need these weapons for game, and only carry them for purposes of war.

Europe is Experiencing a Siberian Winter, and the rigor of the present season is such that in London, many deaths from freezing and starvation have occurred; in France, wolves have overrun a large part of the outlying northern districts, and killed several children. The olive crop is ruined; the Pyrenees are cut off from the world by a great snow blockade; Mediterranean steamers are coming into port covered with snow and ice; in Spain, wolves driven from the forests by hunger, are killed in the streets of the cities; and even in Algiers—where the climate is semi-tropical—a great part of the country is covered with snow. A similar condition of affairs prevails at Tunis.

European Kings and Princes are Looking forward with a good deal of interest and some little anxiety to the forthcoming Memoirs of Bismarck, which it is now settled will be published in Hamburg within a few months. Emperor William tried every means to persuade the old Chancellor to forego certain portions of these memoirs but in vain; Bismarck will let them see the light as a matter of self-vindication. They contain hundreds of autograph letters from distinguished persons which are introduced in fac-simile to verify certain statements made by the author. It is asserted that at the last moment the Emperor may see fit to resort to other measures than persuasion, but if so publication would doubtless be only so delayed, not prevented.

THE CITY'S GLORY.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

A Text that Tests—Does a Man Seek or Avoid God's Presence?—I. The Glory of the Most Glorious Place—Appearances in Early Times—God's Dwelling in the Tabernacle—In the Temple—In the Catacombs—In the Modern Church—In the Millennial Age—II. The Glory of the Church—God's Presence Assures Sound Doctrine—Purity—Vitality—Happiness—III. The Glory of Any Place—The Home—In Pain—In Labor—Conversions in a Workshop.

"The name of the city from that day shall be, The Lord is there [or in the Hebrew 'Jehovah-shammah.']" —Ezekiel 48 : 35.

THESE words may be used as a test as well as a text. They may serve for examination as well as consolation. It is esteemed by the prophet to be the highest blessing that could come upon a city that its name should be, "Jehovah-shammah the Lord is there." Even Jerusalem, in its best estate, would have this for its crowning blessing: nothing could exceed this. Do we reckon the presence of the Lord to be the greatest of blessings? If in any gathering, even of the humblest people, the Lord God is known to be present in a peculiarly gracious manner, should we make a point of being there? Very much depends upon our answer to these queries.

Doubtless many would be greatly pleased if there were no God at all; for in their hearts they say, "No God." God is not to them a father, a friend, a trust, a treasure. If they were to speak from their hearts, and could hope for a satisfactory answer, they would ask, "Whither can I flee from his presence?" If a spot could be found wherein there would be no God, what a fine building speculation might be made there! Millions would emigrate to and would feel quite at ease as soon as they trod its godless shore. There they could do just as they liked, without fear of future reckoning. Now, friend, if you would fain escape from the presence of God, your state is clearly revealed by that fact. There can be no heaven for you; for heaven is where the Lord's presence is fulness of joy.

"No God's Land,"

Will you permit these thoughts to saturate you for a little space? I have spoken them with the desire that each one of us may ask himself, "Is the presence of God my delight?" If so, I am his, and he will be with me. On the contrary, is the presence of God a matter of indifference, or even of dread? Then my condition is one of guilt, disease, and danger. May the Lord, of his infinite mercy, set me right! This much may stand as a preface; but it must not be treated as most prefaces are, namely, left unread, or glanced over and forgotten. I pray you, carry it with you all along.

I. Now kindly notice that, according to our text, the presence of God is the glory of

The Most Glorious Place.

The prophet Ezekiel has been telling us many remarkable things which I shall not attempt to explain to you; and my chief reason for not doing so is the fact that I do not understand them. If I could open up every dark saying, it is not just now the time to go into an explanation of all the sublime mysteries which were seen by the eagle eye of Ezekiel, for I seek present practical edification; and this we can gain in an easier way. It is clear from the text, that when God shall bless his ancient people, and restore them to their land, and the temple shall be rebuilt, and all the glory of the latter days shall arrive, this will still be the peculiar glory of it all, that "the Lord is there." The prophet works up a climax, and closes his book of prophecy with these glorious words, "the Lord is there."

What a glorious state this world was in at the very first in the age of Paradise, for the Lord was there! I might say much of that fair garden of innocence and bliss, but the best thing I could say would be the Lord was there. Alas! that has vanished. Withered are the bowers of Eden: the trail of the serpent is over all landscapes, however fair. Yet days of mercy came, and God's saints in divers places found choice spots where they could converse with heaven. In the first days our gracious God spake with his people in their daily walk, as Enoch; or under the oak, as Abraham; or by the brook, as Jacob; or before the bush as Moses; or near the city wall, as Joshua. Wherever it might be, the place became to them the gate of heaven, for the Lord was there.

Ancient Dwelling Places.

In the days when God had called out unto himself a chosen nation, he revealed himself at Sinai, when the mountain was altogether on a smoke, and even Moses said, "I do exceedingly quake and fear." Well might he feel a holy awe, for the Lord was there. I will not dwell upon the glory of the tabernacle that was pitched in the wilderness, with its costly furniture and its instructive rites, for after all, the glory of the tabernacle was that the Lord was there.

In Canaan itself the days of sorrow came when the nation went after other gods, and the Lord became a stranger in the land. When he returned, and delivered his people by the judges, then the nations knew that Israel could not be trampled on, for the Lord was there. This was the glory of David's reign. This was the shout of the joyful people. "The Lord of hosts is with us: the God of Jacob is our refuge." You remember how, in after ages, when Solomon was crowned and his reign of peace had been inaugurated, he built for God a temple adorned with gold and precious stones. The excellence of the temple was seen when, on the opening day, the Lord revealed himself, and "the cloud filled the house of the Lord, so that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: for the glory of the Lord had filled

The House of the Lord."

I almost tremble while I remind you of the truest temple of God—the body of our Lord. The nearest approach of Godhead to our manhood was when there was found, wrapped in swaddling bands and lying in a manger, that child who was born, that Son who was given, whose name was called "Wonderful, Counsellor, The mighty God, The everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace." All along, through thirty years and more of holy labor, ending in a shameful death, God was in Christ reconciling the world unto himself. In the gloom of Gethsemane, among those sombre olives, when Jesus bowed, and in his prayer sweat, as it were, great drops of blood falling to the ground, he was "seen of angels" as the Son of God bearing human sin. Speak of Gethsemane, and we tell you God was there. Before Herod, and Pilate, and Caiaphas, and on the cross—the Lord was there. The thick darkness made a veil for the Lord of glory, and behind it he that made all things bowed his head and said, "It is finished." God was in Christ Jesus on the cross, and we, beholding him, feel that we have seen the Father. O, Calvary, we say of thee, "The Lord is there."

Here I might fitly close, for we can mount no higher; but yet we could not afford to leave out those other dwellings of the Invisible Spirit, who still by his presence in this unholy world. We have to remind you that God is the glory of the most glorious living thing that has been on the face of the earth since our Lord was here. And what is that? I answer, Jesus is gone: the prophets are gone; and we have no temple, no human priest, no material holy of holies. And yet there is a special place where God dwells among men, and that is in his Church. He has but one—one Church, redeemed by precious blood, called out by the Holy Ghost, and quickened into newness of life—this as a whole is the dwelling-place of the covenant God. Because God is in his Church, therefore the gates of hell shall not prevail against her. "The Lord is there" might be said of the Church in all ages. I have seen the crypts and underground chapels of the catacombs, and it made one feel that they were glorious places, when we remembered that the Lord God was there, by his Spirit, with his suffering people. When holy hymn and psalm and solemn prayer went up from the very bowels of the earth, from men who were hunted to the death by their foes—the Lord was there.

Makes Holy Places

In this land of ours, when a few people met together, here and there, to hear the Gospel and to worship, they made cottages, caves, and hollows in the woods, to be "holiness unto the Lord." Ay, and when crowds met beneath your Gospel oaks, or gathered together by the hillside to listen to the pure word of grace, the Lord was there, and souls were saved and sanctified. When the Puritans solemnly conversed together of the things of God, and held their little conventicles for fear of their adversaries—God was there. On Scotland's bleak moors and mosses, when the covenanters gathered in the darkness and the storm, for fear of Claverhouse and his dragoons—God was there. Those who wrote in those days tell us that they never knew such seasons in the days of peace as they enjoyed among the hills, amid the heather, or by the brook-side; for Jehovah-shammah, the Lord was there. And so onward, to this very day, wheresoever the people of God lift up holy hands and worship him, the Lord is there."

Flying forward, as with a dove's wing, to the future that is drawing near, we bethink us of the truth that there is to be

A Millennial Age

—a time of glory, and peace, and joy, and truth, and righteousness. But what is to be the glory of it? Why this, "Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there!" The Lord Jesus Christ will come, and begin his personal reign on earth among his ancients. In like manner as he went up into heaven, and the disciples saw him, so will he descend a second time, to be seen here among men; and his glorious presence shall fashion the golden age, the thousand years of peace. Then shall the nations shout "The Lord is come." What hallelujahs will then rise to heaven! Welcome, welcome, Son of God! How will all his faithful ones rejoice with joy unspeakable, and sing and sing again; for now the day of their reward has come, and they shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father! In all the glory of the latter days everything is wrapped up in this one word, "the Lord is there."

Up yonder, whither many of our beloved ones have already gone: up yonder, within that gate of pearl where eye cannot as yet see. What is it that makes heaven, with all its supreme delights? Not harps of angels, nor blaze of seraphim; but this one fact, "the Lord is there." What must it be to be with God? This perfect bliss may be ours this very day. The veil is very thin that parts the sanctified from the glorified. Enough of this. I have proved my point, that the glory of the most glorious place is that "the Lord is there."

The Glory of the Church.

II. Suffer me for a few minutes to speak to you on another point: the presence of God is the best privilege of his Church. It is her glory that "the Lord is there." If the Lord be among us, the consequences will be, first, the conservation of true doctrine. The true God is not with a lie: he will not give his countenance to falsehood. Those who preach other than according to his word, abide not under his blessing; but are in great danger of his curse. Trust-deeds and confessions of faith are useful in their way, even as laws are useful to society; but as laws cannot secure obedience to themselves, so articles of belief cannot create faith or secure honesty; and to men without conscience, they are not worth the paper they are written upon. If the Lord be among his people they will cling to the eternal verities, and love the doctrine of the cross, not by force of law but because divine truth is the life of their souls.

Where God is present the preservation of purity will be found. The Church is nothing if it is not holy. It is worse—it is a den of thieves. Setting the seal of its pestilent example upon evil living, it becomes the servant of Satan, and the destroyer of souls. Who is to keep the Church pure? None but God himself. If the Lord is there, holiness will abound, and fruits of the Spirit will be seen on all sides. Where God is, there is the constant renewal of vitality. A Church all alive is a little heaven, the resort of angels, the temple of the Holy Ghost. In some of our churches everybody seems to be a little colder than everybody else. The members are holy icicles. A general frost has paralyzed everybody; and though some are colder than others, yet all are below zero. No human power can keep a Church from the frost-bite which numbs and kills. Except the Lord be there, growth, life, warmth—are all impossible.

A Power in the World.

When the Lord is there, next, there is continuing power. With God there is power in the ministry, power in prayer, power in all holy work. Is it not said of the godly, "His leaf also shall not wither; and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper"? This is so with every church where the Lord abides. His presence makes it a power with its children and adherents, a power with the neighborhood, and a power with the age.

Furthermore, whenever it can be said of an assembly, "the Lord is there," unity will be created and fostered. Show me a church that quarrels, a church that is split up into cliques, a church that is divided with personal ambitions, contrary doctrines and opposing schemes, and I am sure that the Lord is not there. The children of God should be knit together. Saints who dwell with God love each other "with a pure heart, fervently." Some professors act as if they hated each other: I may not say, "with a pure heart," but I will say, "fervently." Where God is present the church is edified in love.

III. I shall now close by noticing, in the third place, that since this presence of God is the glory of the most glorious place, and the choice privilege of the most privileged, it is our exceedingly joy. The presence of the Lord is

Our Delight in Every Place.

We will think of our own dear homes. What a delightful family we belong to if it can be said of our house, "Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there"! Has it a thatched roof and a stone floor? What matters? The father of the family lives near to God, and his wife rejoices to be his fellow-helper in prayer, while the children grow up to honest toil and honorable service. Assuredly that cottage home is dear to God, and becomes a place where angels come and go. Because God is there, every window looks towards the Celestial City.

Here is a Christian who lives alone, apart altogether from family life. All his dear ones are dead, or far away. In his lone chamber, when he bows his knee in secret prayer, or whenever he takes his walk abroad to meditate, if he be indeed a true lover of the Lord Jesus, "the Lord is there." Wherever the believer's lot is cast, if he lives in fellowship with Christ, he may say of his quiet room, or of the garden-walk, or even of the stable or the loft, "Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there." "The Lord is very gracious to his lonely ones. They can say, "And yet I am not alone, for the Father is with me." Put you in a hospital, or in a workhouse: what matters it, if Jehovah is at your side?

In Suffering.

Some of us can bear witness that we have had the nearest approaches of God to our souls in times of intolerable pain, and even in seasons of intense depression of spirit as to earthly things. "I was brought low, and the Lord helped me," said David; and we can say the same. The Lord has said, "When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee;" as much as to say, "If I am not with thee anywhere else, I will be with thee then." We may say of the refining fire and of the threshing-floor, and of the oil-press, God has been there. In the time of trouble he has been a very present help. One might almost say, "Send me back to my prison again," as one did say who lost God's presence after he had gained his liberty. One might well cry, "Ah! let me have back my pain if I may again overflow with the joy of the Lord's presence."

Yes, but when Christian people go forth to work, when you come to your Sunday School, or go out with your bundle of tracts, to change them on your district, or when you join a little band and stand on the street corner yonder, and lift up your voice in the name of Jesus, you may expect, if you go with prayer and faith, that it shall be written, "Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there." It is only a young man standing up in a cottage to speak, and he has not much to say; yet there are penitential tears, and broken hearts: it is so, for God is there.

And now, from this time forth, beloved, ye that fear God and think upon his name, wherever you go, let it be said, "Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there." Make every place, wherever you go, to be the house of God. A dear brother of ours went to a shop where he worked with four ungodly men, but

His Lord Went With Him.

It was not long before we had the privilege of baptizing that friend's master and all his shop-mates, for the Lord was there. The other day there came a fresh man to work who could not bear to hear a word upon religion, but our brother was the means of his conversion, and the new man is coming among us, warm with his first love. Write across your workshop, "The Lord is here." If you cannot do it literally, do it spiritually, "Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there."

What shall I say to those who do not know the Lord, and do not care for him? O friend, the day will come in which Jesus Christ will say to you, "I never knew you: Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." Do not let him say that; but to-night commence an acquaintance with him. May his Holy Spirit help you so to do! I am sure the Lord Jesus Christ could not say to me, "I never knew you." It is impossible, because I could reply to him, "Never knew me, Lord? Why, I have been to thee with so many burdens, I have run to thee with so many troubles, that I am sure thou knowest me as one knows a beggar whom he has relieved many times a day. "Blessed be his name, I know him, and lean all my weight upon him. They that know him shall be with him, and he will receive them unto himself forever, and this shall be their glory—"Jehovah-shammah, the Lord is there." With him shall they dwell, world without end. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Charles Lamb's Early Years.*

Among his schoolfellows, Charles formed special friendships with a few select spirits; and in Coleridge—"the inspired charity-boy"—he found a life-long companion. He looked up to the elder lad—dreary, dejected, lonely—with an affection and a reverence which never failed all through life. . . . There is a Charles Lamb prize given every year, as fitting it should be, to the best English essayist among the Blue-coat boys, consisting of a silver medal. When a man, Lamb used to go and see the boys; and Leigh Hunt, who entered a little later, has left us a pleasant picture of one of these visits. . . . Lamb's little rooms in the Temple held a motley crowd. Low-browed rooms they were, set about with worn, homely, home-like furniture; his favorite books—his sole extravagance—on these shelves all about. His ragged veterans he called them; "the finest collection of shabby books I ever saw; such a number of first-rate works in bad condition is, I think, nowhere to be found." . . . He never forsook a friend ragged or rich in raiment or in repute. "I cannot scatter friendships like chuck farthings, nor let them drop from mine hand like hour-glass sand."

Playful and Tenderhearted.

Lamb's sense of fun bubbled up at most inapt times. Acting conversely, his trembling sensibility set the tears trickling down his cheeks while he was writing a playful paper; and made him even shed tears in the Strand, "for fullness of joy of so much life." If our friend laughed at others he was just as ready to laugh at himself; and his hissing of his own play is historic. One evening when Lamb was in marvellous vein, and met that immortal Comptroller of Stamps who had begged to be introduced to Wordsworth (the poet), and who insisted on having the latter's opinion as to whether Milton and Newton were not great geniuses, Lamb took a candle and walked over to the poor man, saying: "Sir, will you allow me to look at your phrenological development?" Haydon (the painter), and Keats (the poet), got him away, but he persisted in bursting into the room, shouting: "Do let me have another look at that gentleman's organs!"

* In the Footprints of Charles Lamb; by Benjamin Ellis Martin; Recollections of the Gentle English Essayist and his Times; Illustrated; Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, Publishers.

His Love for His Sister.

Lamb did not overrate her. Mary Lamb was no common-place creature, and she impressed all who knew her as a woman of fine judgment, of noteworthy good sense, full of womanly sympathies, sweet and serene. Hazlitt commended her as the wisest and most rational woman he had ever known. In her bearing toward her brother she was gentle and gracious always. Barry Cornwall has told us that "her face was pale and somewhat square, very placid, with grey intelligent eyes;" and Dr. Quincey called her "the Madonna-like lady." Her genuine literary qualities first had a chance to show themselves in 1806. Charles writes: "May is doing for Godwin's bookseller twenty of Shakspeare's plays to be made into children's tales. She has done them capitally, I think," (and again) "she begins to think Shakspeare must have wanted—imagination;" and she, too, has left a pretty picture of their common work. "You would like to see us as we often sit writing at one table, like an old literary Darby and Joan, he groaning all the while and saying he can make nothing of it, which he always says till he is finished and then he finds he has made something of it."

THE GOSPEL IN JAPAN.

Mr. J. McLain Brown's Life of Consecration in Y. M. C. A. Work and His Labor of Faith in Japan.

AMONG the Christian missionaries now laboring in the Mikado's dominions there is one whose past services in this country and whose faith in God render his personality peculiarly interesting to American Christians. He is Mr. J. McLain Brown, whose portrait appears on the next page. Some of our readers were among the group of Christian friends who stood on the dock at San Francisco on September 23, 1890, and waved him good-bye as he leaned over the rail of the Pacific steamer Rio de Janeiro, surrounded by other missionaries, who, like him, were quitting their native land and beloved friends to preach the Gospel in heathen lands. They will be glad to see his portrait in our pages, with that of the veteran missionary, Dr. C. S. Eby, with whom he is now laboring, and the picture we give of the shell of their church in Tokio, a photograph of which Mr. Brown has kindly sent.

Mr. Brown is a native of Washington, D. C. His early life there was one of sinful pleasure. Wild, wayward, reckless, he was a ready victim of the temptations in which that city abounds. But about seven years ago the Holy Spirit touched his heart, and the man was changed. It was a wonderful change. His former love of sin, his delight in pleasure, his habits of sensual gratification fell from him like cast-off garments, and he became a new man, active, vigilant, energetic, indefatigable in the service of Christ.

The church with which Mr. Brown connected was the first sphere in which he labored, but that did not find him all the opportunities for which his soul craved. He entered vigorously into the work of the Central Union Mission, and became prominent in its active and aggressive efforts. He also joined the Young Men's Christian Association, and, there, too, he labored strenuously to win souls for the Master. The delight he found in this labor of soul-winning and the success with which God blessed his efforts were intimations that such a man could not disregard. They were evidences that God had still further use for him in his vineyard, and Mr. Brown was glad to respond to the call. He finally gave up all secular employment, and devoted himself to the Y. M. C. A. as its assistant secretary. There his routine duties were efficiently and punctually discharged, and the time left to him after their performance was used in personal work among the young men of the city, many of whom he was blessed in leading to the Saviour. His bright cheerful face, his magnetic personality, his winning manner, and his sad experience of the temptations of Washington life made him an effective worker in the Master's service.

Mr. J. McLain Brown.

Ruins of the Central Mission Tabernacle, Tokio, Japan.

Mr. Brown's work in the Washington Y. M. C. A. became widely known, and calls came to him from other fields. He went to the Association at Charlottesville, Va., and a revival of religion occurred before he had been there many months. A large number of young men were won for Christ and went out into the town to bring in others. Thence he was transferred to Frederick, Md. There a similar movement resulted from his energetic and aggressive labors. At the urgent request of the State Secretary, he removed to Cumberland, Md., to organize an Association in that town. He succeeded in that effort. Not only was an Association formed but an evangelistic impulse was given to it which brought large numbers of young men into the fold of Christ.

While laboring at Cumberland, he heard of the wonderful opening there was in Japan, for the kind of work which had become peculiarly delightful to him, and in which God had so signally blessed him. Hearing that in Tokio alone there were eighty thousand young men—University students and others, who knew not Jesus, the longing to go to them and tell them of the Saviour filled his heart. He offered his services to two Mission Boards, but their expenditures for Japan were already as large as their resources warranted and his offer was declined by both. That answer would have satisfied some men that they were justified in remaining among their friends in their native land. Mr. Brown, however, could not rest at home with the consciousness of that field of work waiting for laborers. He laid the matter in prayer before God, asking a clear indication of the Divine will. He thought that if the means of travelling to Japan came into his hands it would be such an indication. They came; and Mr. Brown recognized their coming as an evident call to the work. He at once prepared to start. Some thought him rash in setting out without any visible means of support, but Mr. Brown is a man of strong faith and believed that God having called him to the work, would provide him with food and clothing necessary to his living. Affectionate farewells were spoken. The ministers and Christian workers at Cumberland were sorry to lose him. They held a meeting at which they spoke gratefully of the work done and bade him God-speed. At the Central Union Mission, in Washington, a similar meeting was held and in September last, Mr. Brown sailed with the good wishes of his old friends for his success. "I cannot express my feelings," Mr. Brown writes, "as I stood and looked back upon the receding shores of my native land, perhaps for the last time, and thought of the loved ones whose faces I might never see again, but I blessed God that he counted me worthy to go as his Ambassador to carry the news of eternal life to Japan, and those precious words of comfort and cheer, 'Lo! I am with you always,' came to me with a force and inspiration I had never known before."

Rev. C. S. Eby, D.D.

Mr. Brown has found the field of labor all that he expected it to be. His letters are written in the most hopeful strain. Many of the students speak English fluently so that he is not without opportunities of usefulness while acquiring the Japanese language. "They are bright, intelligent fellows," Mr. Brown says, "and already several have called for conversation on their eternal interests." What their influence will be, none can measure. They come from all parts of the Empire and every one who is converted will carry to his home the glad tidings and become a missionary in his turn. In this way the good seed may be sown among the thirty-three millions of Japanese, eighteen millions of whom have never heard the name of Jesus.

True to his principle of trusting God for everything, Mr. Brown receives no salary. He is connected as a volunteer worker with the Central Mission at Tokio. Its building was recently burned down, but, as will be seen by the accompanying picture, taken from a photograph, its restoration is in progress, and will soon be completed. It will accommodate a thousand persons, and there is no doubt of its being filled. The Christian work there is under the charge of Rev. C. S. Eby, D.D., whose portrait appears on this page. He was formerly a member of the Canadian Methodist Episcopal Church. Like Mr. Brown, he is working without salary, depending for his own support and the expenses of the Mission entirely upon God.

It is a privilege to help so consecrated a worker as Mr. Brown in such a field. That he is the right man to succeed there has been fully demonstrated. It is not possible for every Christian who longs for the salvation of that great nation to personally labor in the field, but all may participate, by contributing to the support of the worker. That God will provide for him, as he does for all who put their trust in him, there can be no doubt. It only remains to be seen who will be the Lord's instruments. That privilege is open to every one, and it is a grander privilege than any of us can realize in this life. We are told that the time is coming when a gift to a disciple will be recognized and rewarded, and how much more when that gift is to a disciple whom it aids in carrying on the work of the Lord. We sincerely hope that God will put it into the hearts of many of our readers to avail themselves of this privilege. Any subscriptions for this object will be gratefully received and promptly forwarded to Mr. Brown in Japan, if addressed to Mr. George W. Wheeler, Central Union Mission, Washington, D.C.

A BRAVE CHRISTIAN SOLDIER.

AT the close of the first day's fight at Fredericksburg (on December 13, 1862), hundreds of wounded were left dying on the field. Their agonizing cries went up for "Water! Water!" but none could help them and the roar of the guns mocked their distress. Many who heard the poor soldiers' piteous appeals felt the pangs of human compassion, but stifled them under necessity. But at length one brave fellow behind the stone rampart where the Southern forces lay, gave way to his sympathy, and rose superior to the love of life. He was a sergeant in a South Carolina regiment, and his name was Richard Kirkland. In the afternoon he hurried to Gen. Kershaw's headquarters, and, finding the commanding officer, said to him, excitedly: "General, I can't stand this any longer." "What's the matter, sergeant?" asked the General. "Those poor souls out there have been praying and crying all night and all day, and it's more than I can bear. I ask your permission to go and give them water." "But do you know," said the general, "that as soon as you show yourself to the enemy you will be shot?" "Yes, sir, I know it; but to carry a little comfort to those poor fellows dying, I'm willing to run the risk. If you say I may, I'll try it."

The general hesitated a moment, but finally said with emotion; "Kirkland, it's sending you to your death; but I can oppose nothing to such a motive as yours. For the sake of it, I hope God will protect you. Go."

Furnished with a supply of water, the brave sergeant immediately stepped over the wall and applied himself to his work of Christ-like mercy. Wondering eyes looked on as he knelt by the nearest sufferer and, tenderly raising his head, held the cooling cup to his parched lips. Before his first service of love was finished everyone in the Union lines understood the mission of the noble soldier in gray, and not a man fired a shot. Hatred forbore its rage in a tribute to the deed of pity.

A RESCUE FROM THE TRACK.

A NARROW escape from a horrible death took place in Baltimore, Md., on Jan. 21st. A man who was walking late at night along the track of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, stumbled over a prostrate form. Stooping down to see what it was, he found that it was the body of a young man who was lying unconscious across the rails. He had barely time to drag him aside before the Western Express shot around a curve and swept over the spot where, a minute before, the youth had been lying. When restored to consciousness, the rescued youth said that he had been attacked by some roughs, and had attempted to get clear of them by running across the track. They had thrown stones at him, one of which had struck him on the head and stunned him. His assailants must have gone away, leaving him insensible on the track. But for the man finding him there as he did, he must have been killed. There are men all around us whom temptation and sin have overhrown and who are unable of themselves to escape eternal disaster. Many might be saved, as this young man was, if Christians would extend to them a helping hand, and lead them to Christ. (Luke 14: 23.)

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

BY REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Continued from page 46.)

WHILE Gerald Towneley was "enjoying" himself in convivial fashion with his friends in the village inn, in the later evening hour of that day; while Abram Hardle was seated in his solitary sitting-room, "expecting" the young squire to come and speak to him "above board" concerning Nora—that sad and sorrowful maiden was holding a secret interview with Jasper Rawdon, that accomplished rogue and hypocrite, who had so successfully assumed to be her convict father.

The Late George Bancroft. (See page 53.)

For some time the two had not met: Nora herself had begged and pleaded with her "father" not to ask it, as the risks of discovery were so great. The consummate actor had strengthened his hold upon her sympathies; had so successfully laid siege to her tenderer feelings, that her pity for him was very deep and very real.

On this occasion, Nora made her way in furtive fashion through the shadows, along the road towards Towneley Chase. Turning down a narrow lane which led to nothing but a few green fields, she perceived her poor, penitent, lonely, hunted, peril-environed father, who met her with outstretched hands, a sad, sweet smile, and words of melting meekness and affection. He imprinted one light, respectful kiss upon her brow, and said:

"Welcome, once more, dearly welcome, Nora! Ah, if you only knew what these moments are to me! Stray gleams of sunshine through a coal-black sky; strains of music breaking the awful silence of night. O Nora, dear, often when I am alone, and that you know is always, except when you bless me with your presence as you bless me now, I am so wearily lonely that life—but there, how can you know, sweet girl? I'll say no more. I must bear my burden alone. I ought to, and I will. Nothing has come to me but what I deserve. Silence best befits these lips, and silent they shall be!"

But they were not, they merely changed the subject, and just now that was—money. Could not Nora give him money to keep life in him? He did not mention any sum, but the drift of it all was she must do her best to meet his needs, until the sale of Hazelcroft enabled her to send him away in peace.

After a lengthened interview of an unusually distressful character, so far as Nora was concerned, she said, "I must go now; uncle wished me not to stop away long, as he expected someone who would ask to see me this evening."

"Nora!" said her companion, with the suspicion that always accompanies rascality. "You have not hinted to any living mortal that I am here?"

What could Nora be but silent? She remembered her burst of agonizing confession to Mrs.

Appleton. So she stood perfectly speechless.

"Speak, girl! Have you flung a halter round the neck of your miserable father by entrusting his secret to another?" As he spoke he seized her wrist, and looked into her two eyes, with a look, as she thought, which had in it more of rage than apprehension. He hissed his question at her. "Have you? Yes or no?"

"Yes," she said, faintly.

"Then go home and sleep in the happy consciousness that you have murdered your own father." The brutal word, stupidly and foolishly said, even when considered from his own stand-point, had more effect than he intended. He meant to work upon her fears, and to get the whole story of her breach of faith from her that he might know better what to do. What he did was to drive the blood to heart and brain in a rush, and to extort this answer while reason was reeling on her throne:

"Yes, it was to be. You murdered my mother; it is just that I should murder you!" Hereupon she uttered a scream loud and long, and flung herself upon him, as if she would tear him limb from limb. Jasper Rawdon was not equal to the situation his own vexation had created for him. He felt that he must disappear, and that at once, Leaping over a gate in the blind lane in which he had met his "daughter" for the last time, he left her to "cool down," as he put it to himself, and to make her way home with what speed she might.

And Nora Mansford did reach home, but not by her own witting or in her own strength. She wandered aimlessly up and down the lane; equally aimlessly, she wandered along the road that led to Towneley Chase. The night darkened; the stars came forth in hosts; the dew fell thick and heavy, and a mist lay upon the ground. Still Nora Mansford wandered on; now lifting her hands to heaven; now clasping them across her brow; and now looking at them as she turned them to and fro, as if to see if any blood-stains rested there—and every now and again she said, not loudly, but with an awful intensity, "I have murdered my father." Still she wandered; and the darkness deepened, and the silent stars looked down, and the night wind made moan around the hapless maiden, as she wandered to and fro, flitting like a ghost through the gloom, her locks wet with the dews of the night. She was quiet for a time, her senses dulled and stupefied by the excess of her remorse; then her imagination pictured her father being led back in fetters into durance, and the sight forced the cries from her lips, which George Appleton and Mr. Magrath heard as they were driving home from Hazelcroft. It was an evident relief to her when she recognized George. She laid her hand right willingly in the hand he held out to her, as she said:

"O George, I'm so glad it's you, Take me home. I've been ill, oh, so ill, and something stole across my brain. Where am I, George? Take me home. I'm better now, I think."

George took her up in his arms, carried his burden, a sadly light one, to the dog-cart, saying only this: "Yes, poor child, I'll take you home. You are quite safe now. But how did —"

"Hush! Take me home," she said. Then the idea of "murder," again took hold upon her, and she broke into hysterical weeping, crying, "No, No! Better leave me here to die!"

Then George knew that no questions could be safely asked. He soothed her with kind words, as a mother might, and again she was still. By the aid of his wondering companion, who displayed the deepest grief on learning who she was, Nora was lifted into the vehicle, was closely wrapped in the rugs with which the travellers were provided, and so carefully held in the arms and near the heart of one who "could have died for her," she was borne as swiftly as it was safe for her to go to her home under Abram Hardale's roof.

That little household was in strong commotion. Tabitha Crowle had been for the last hour or two in a state of fretful worry, and indeed, of deep anxiety, because of the unusual absence of her favorite. It was, alas, no uncommon thing for Nora Mansford to steal away in the evening hours, but never to stay out so late or anything like so late as this.

Abram Hardale, too, was in one of his very crustiest moods. He had gone in and out, displaying growing irritation and vexation every time, asking every time he came in, "Has that lass come home yet?"

"Not yet," Tabitha would reply meekly, to keep him within bounds. "I daresay she's at Mrs. Appleton's. She'll be coming by-and-by."

At last the old man got waspish, angry, and began to say strong things. He remembered his interview with Gerald Towneley that morning. He thought of the young squire's failure to keep his word as to the "interview" he professed to desire. He jumped to the conclusion that the "slippery scoundrel," as he now chose to call him, had run off with Nora, and that her good name, and her chances of a "good marriage" into the Towneley family were gone for ever.

In his queer way he loved Nora, and every now and then there was a choking in the old man's throat, as he thought of any such harm coming to her. Fully convinced as time passed without Nora's return that something was wrong and that Towneley was at the bottom of it, the wrathful carpenter poured forth his vials of wrath on the head of Tabitha Crowle. Nothing but this was needed to rouse the faithful Tabitha into vigorous championship of the absent Nora.

"The little hussey's been wheedled off by that young scape-grace, Towneley," said Abram, on one of his sudden incursions into Tabitha's kitchen. "That's my opinion."

"Your opinion, is it?" said Tabitha bluntly. "It's a fair pattern o' most o' yours. They're most o' 'em thin bits o' things; an' yet you chuckle over 'em like a hen wi' one rickety chicken. There's fifty things that might hap'en to mek her late, fifty honest reasons an' good uns; an' yet you go an' pick about the only one there is that has no credit in it, as though you'd rayther it was that than any other. You're just like a blue bottle, you'll only settle on a raw place; an' if there isn't one, you'll choose a spot o' red paint i' stead of it."

It may well be imagined that as the hours passed slowly by the relations between the carpenter and his housekeeper became very strained indeed, so much so that eventually, Abram roundly charged Tabitha with acting as the accomplice of his erring niece.

"I reckon you know all about it," said he, "if the truth was known. The girl could hardly carry on her tricks if some other woman wasn't as weak as she is, and helped her to her own ruin. How much are you to get for your share—?"

Tabitha's tongue was in general quite a sufficient cudgel to drive her defeated antagonist from the field, but the indignant and disgusted housekeeper had no words for this last outrage. So she started to her feet, closed those capable digits of hers convulsively, and would have paid him for his intolerable insult by a blow if the carpenter, conscious that he was in the wrong, and made cowardly by the fact, had not slipped out of the kitchen. He began pacing the yard where the wood was piled, and where crippled carts, and wounded wagon-wheels were waiting repairs. This was his occupation when the dog-cart was driven up in haste, and the now spent and helpless Nora was lowered into her waiting uncle's arms. In one moment the hard and iron look passed off from Abram Hardale's features; he looked on the wan, white face of Nora, folded her closely in his arms, printed a kiss upon her brow, and carried her to her chamber without a word. If Abram Hardale had only treated his sweet charge in that fashion from the day the unfriended lassie first crossed his threshold, what sorrow he might have saved her, what bitter trouble might have been made impossible. He had given her shelter, food, and clothing, but not the far more precious gift of heart and home.

Tabitha Crowle was now herself again. George had hastened for a doctor to attend to Nora, Abram Hardale was humbly at Tabitha's beck and call to fetch and carry, and wait upon her slightest word, and Tabitha was where Tabitha's tender touch and warm heart and practical skill found noble and fitting place by the poor, weak, swooning maiden's side, a "ministering angel" indeed.

And what could the doctor say, but that she must have had a shock; that she was dreadfully weak and unnerved; and that a slight stimulus was all that he dared administer. Good nursing was all she needed, and a mind at rest. The first she was certain to have, for her loving Tabitha was by her side; the second, alas, she could not have, because of the secret that was eating her young life away—and of that not even to Tabitha Crowle did she say one word. In the unrestful dreams of that long night, she frequently uttered vague words, half uttered some broken sentences—among which the expressions "father," "shame," "murder," found a place; but of these Tabitha Crowle and her co-watcher, Abram Hardale, could make nothing but set it all down as the reasonless vagaries of a wandering mind. Poor Nora!

Very early the next morning, indeed, immediately after she had received the news of Nora's strange condition from the lips of her son, the Widow Appleton repaired to Abram Hardale's, and gave Tabitha Crowle to understand that she had come to stay. "Not to take your place, Tabitha," she took care to say, "for nobody could do that, I think, in a sick-room, but to relieve you and help you as best I may."

No sooner was Mrs. Appleton installed by Nora's bedside than that sorely-tried maiden seemed to settle into calm. The sympathetic widow knew her secret, and although her confession of her agonising trouble had cost her dear, it was an unspeakable relief to have somebody by her before whom she need not be always on her guard, lest she should drop some word that might serve as a clue, and put the life and liberty of her "father" into unsafe hands.

But the calm which fell on Nora's nerves and spirits brought with it a weakness that came perilously near a complete collapse. As she lay there in the cosy chamber, which was the only spot in the wide world where she felt herself in harbor, out of the trying storm, her face was as white as the pillow on which her head reclined, and her strength was so low that she could only speak in whispers, to catch which the widow had to bend her ear almost to her colorless lips. Mrs. Appleton was seriously alarmed and was full of fear lest the frail tenement of clay should fail to hold the sorrowful soul in life. Nora herself had the impression, not in the least unwelcome, that she was going to die.

"Are you better dear?" asked the widow as Nora waked out of a long sleep.

Nora smiled sadly. I shall never be better in the way you mean, dear friend," Nora answered. "I know Jesus is going to take me home. I am not sorry. I shall see my mother and be at peace. You will not tell my secret when I am dead Mrs. Appleton? Don't bring any harm to him."

"No, no, never without your consent. But I wish you would let me tell George or your uncle Hardale, instead of bearing all your burden yourself. It would relieve you and it might be good for him. He should not stay here; he ought to go to some safer place. Let me tell some one, Nora and get advice for you."

"No, no; you must not," said Nora, and the widow forebore to press her further.

(To be Continued.)

That Your Hair may retain its youthful color, fullness, and beauty,
dress it daily with

Ayer's Hair Vigor
It cleanses the scalp, cures humors, and stimulates a new growth of hair.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.
Lowell, Mass.

200,000

of our patent Registering Banks sold in one year. Money is registered when deposited, and cannot be removed until required amount is saved. Best plan to save money. Send for circular.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
301 Broadway, New York.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is a peculiar medicine. It is carefully prepared from Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Pipsissewa, Juniper Berries, and other well-known and valuable vegetable remedies, by a peculiar combination, proportion and process, giving to Hood's Sarsaparilla curative power not possessed by other medicines. It effects remarkable cures where other preparations fail.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is the best blood purifier before the public. It eradicates every impurity, and cures Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints, overcomes that tired feeling, creates an appetite, and builds up the system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Has met peculiar and unparalleled success at home. Such has become its popularity in Lowell, Mass., where it is made, that whole neighborhoods are taking it at the same time. Lowell druggists sell more of Hood's Sarsaparilla than of all other sarsaparillas or blood purifiers. Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Wives! Sons! DAUGHTERS!

We will send you for three months FARM POULTRY, the best poultry paper, if you send us ten names of persons who keep hens, (few or many), also 25 cents for one pack of Sheridan's Condition Powder.

POULTRY for PROFIT. We will send for 25 cts. or 15 cts. if you mention this paper, FARM POULTRY, a 20 page magazine, six months. Sample copy free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

NOTHING ON EARTH WILL MAKE HENS LAY LIKE SHERIDAN'S CONDITION POWDER

Highly concentrated. Dose small. In quantity costs less than one-cent a day per hen. Prevents and cures all diseases. If you can't get it, we send by mail post-paid. One pack, 25c. Five $1. 214-b. can $1.20; 6 cans $5. Express paid. Testimonials free. Send stamps or cash. Farmers' Poultry Guide (price 25c.) free with $1.00 orders or more. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

If you have a COLD or COUGH, acute or leading to CONSUMPTION,

SCOTT'S EMULSION
OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES OF LIME AND SODA.

IS SURE CURE FOR IT.
This preparation contains the stimulating properties of the Hypophosphites and fine Norwegian Cod Liver Oil. Used by physicians all the world over. It is as palatable as milk. Three times as efficacious as plain Cod Liver Oil. A perfect Emulsion, better than all others made. For all forms of Wasting Diseases, Bronchitis, CONSUMPTION, Scrofula, and as a Flesh Producer there is nothing like SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is sold by all Druggists. Let no one by profuse explanation or impudent entreaty induce you to accept a substitute.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA
Appetizing--Easily Digested.

Ask your Grocer for it, take no other. [66]

Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" free by E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK
American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. Louis

A CONVERT'S TESTIMONY.

PREACHERS are sometimes puzzled to the evidences of conversion, there are some that are unmistakable. An illustration is found in an incident which occurred at the New York Academy of Music on Sunday evening, January 11. There was a manifest work of the Holy Spirit at that night, and many were deeply moved. When Dr. Talmage invited those who desired the prayers of his people for their salvation to stand up, fully three hundred arose. Among them was Mr. J. H. Gregory, well known citizen of Key West, Fla., who was visiting this city. He was evidently in earnest and on January 18, he was at the Academy of Music, and then accepted Christ as his Saviour. Now Mr. Gregory had to go through a struggle before he reached peace. He was under the influence of a strong and not unusual feeling of resentment. He left an enemy behind him in Florida toward whom he was deeply bittered. Mr. Gregory, it appears, was building a new house. The adjacent lot is in the possession of a wealthy citizen who showed considerable ingenuity in embarrassing the workmen who are putting up Mr. Gregory's house. He put up a fence one inch and a half from the house so that the workmen could not proceed with the work. Mr. Gregory protested and offered to build the fence at his own expense. His neighbor would postpone it until the house was finished. The neighbor, however, was intractable. He insisted on it remaining, in spite of the inconvenience it was causing. Indeed, when the fence was accidentally destroyed by fire it was promptly rebuilt before the workmen could take advantage of its absence. He conducted Mr. Gregory regarded him as an inneighborly; and when he left Florida for New York his resentment against the man who had annoyed him was at the boiling point. In the Academy, when the Holy Spirit touched his heart, the thought of this came up in his mind. To his surprise, he found that it aroused an angry feeling. All the resentment, hatred and memory of the man who was wont to excite had disappeared. He felt kindly to him. The man seemed no longer an enemy, but brother. The love that filled his heart, extended to his adversary and when he had been there he would have spared his hand in friendship. "I am going back to Florida," said Mr. Gregory as he told the story, "with me but the kindest feelings toward him, and I shall let it be known that the grace of God has taken away all animosity. I am a new man. Everything seems different to me. I forgive easily. I love every one, even my enemy." So much God's love can do with the hardest heart.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

BAKER'S BREAKFAST COCOA.
Delicious, nourishing absolutely pure. Costing less than one cent a cup.

HOLD

OUT YOUR HAND

That's about all you have to do to get a book of 200 pages FREE. This book contains the names, addresses, and signed indorsements of many well known men and women who have been restored to health and strength by the use of Drs. STARKEY & PALEN'S Compound Oxygen. Of course the full list is not here, many patients prefer that their names should not be used. But the book has 200 pages of signed testimony, and is accompanied by a quarterly review of eight large pages more, entirely filled with new names of revitalized men and women.

The patients themselves do the talking. You get your knowledge of Compound Oxygen from what they say—not what Drs. STARKEY & PALEN say. The next step is personal knowledge from positive contact with the treatment itself. This is the most satisfactory of all—it is the real point.

Send for the book. Address

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 58 Church St., Toronto Canada.

THE CHORAL UNION, by Dr. H. R. PALMER, contains the most comprehensive and successful method of teaching the art of Reading and Singing Music at Sight.

Common Sense Music Reader, by Dr. PALMER and Prof. SCHAUFFLER. Adapted for use in Public Schools, etc. Price, for each of the above, $6 per Doz.; 60c. each by mail.

Sterling Gems, by T. E. PERKINS and H. P. MAIN. For Day Schools. Teachers and Scholars will enjoy this book. Price, $4.50 per Doz.; 50c. each by mail.

STERLING ANTHEMS, by H. P. DANES. A collection of new Anthems, etc. 64 pages, large octavo. By same author.

Festival Anthems, by H. P. DANES. 64 large pages. For Easter and other joyous occasions. Price for each of the above, 35c. by mail; $3.60 per Doz. by Express.

Sterling Anthems, by H. P. MAIN and B. C. UNSOLD. Over 100 Anthems from the popular books. $6.00 per Doz. by Express; by mail, 60c. each.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO. 76 East Ninth St., New York.

MOST WORTHY BOOKS FOR PURCHASE.

Choice and Popular Alto Songs.
33 songs—each one a Gem. Price, $1 in heavy paper, $1.25 in bds., and $2 in gilt binding.

The Songs of Ireland.
A new and carefully revised collection of the best and most celebrated Irish songs. Some of the best melodies in existence, and bright, spirited words. 66 songs. Price, $1 in heavy paper, $1.25 in bds., and $2 in gilt binding.

CHOICE SONG COLLECTIONS.

|                                  |           |
|----------------------------------|-----------|
| Song Classics. Vol. 1.           | 50 songs. |
| Song Classics. Vol. 2.           | 39 "      |
| Song Classics. Low Voices.       | 47 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos.             | 34 "      |
| Choice Sacred Solos. Low Voices. | 40 "      |
| Classic, Baritone and Bass.      | 33 "      |
| Classic Tenor Songs.             | 36 "      |
| Good Old Songs We Used to Sing.  | 115 "     |

CHOICE PIANO COLLECTIONS.

|                            |            |
|----------------------------|------------|
| Piano Classics. Vol. 1.    | 44 pieces. |
| Piano Classics. Vol. 2.    | 31 "       |
| Classical Pianist.         | 42 "       |
| Popular Dance Collection.  | 68 "       |
| Popular Piano Collection.  | 68 "       |
| Operatic Piano Collection. | 19 operas. |

Churchill's BIRTHDAY BOOK of EMINENT COMPOSERS. A handsome and useful book, $1.00.

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

SAFETY the great thing to be sought in an Investment, rather than high rate of interest.

We have loaned in twenty years

TWENTY MILLION DOLLARS

without loss to any customer.

Let us tell you what we can do for you in the way of something not only safe, but paying a good rate of interest.

None of our customers are waiting for their interest.

AMERICAN INVESTMENT CO.,
150 Nassau Street, New York City.

E. S. ORMSBY, President. A. L. ORMSBY, Vice-President. H. E. SIMMONS, Vice-President.

MUSICAL.

METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY.

Best private instruction in all branches, also surrounds pupils with superior advantages in Class Work, Lectures, Concerts, and the Languages. Refined boarding privileges for lady pupils. Dudley Buck and Albert Ross Parsons heading departments. Opens Sept. 15. Pupils received at any time. Book sent free.

19 and 21 East 14th St., New York.

TYPEWRITERS.

Largest like establishment in the world. First-class Second-hand Instruments at half new prices. Unprejudiced advice given on all makes. Machines sold on monthly payments. Any Instrument manufactured shipped, privilege to examine. EXCHANGING A SPECIALTY. Wholesale prices to dealers. Illustrated Catalogues Free.

TYPEWRITER } 70 Broadway, New York.
HEADQUARTERS, } 144 La Salle St., Chicago.

AGENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change. $75 to $100 monthly. Should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PURCHASING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

THE HOUSEWIFE

4 Mos. (on trial) 10 Cts.

Handsomely illustrated and devoted to Fiction, Fashion, Flowers, Fancy Work, Home Decoration, Art Needlework, Cooking, Housekeeping, everything pertaining to Woman's Work and Woman's Pleasure.

Every article contributed expressly for THE HOUSEWIFE by such writers as ROSE TERRY COOKE, MARION HARLAND, HARRIET PRESCOTT SPOFFORD, JENNY JUNE, MARIA PARLOA and JULIET CORSON.

5 cents a copy.—50 cents a year.
Or 4 months (on trial) for 10 cents.

If you mention this paper.

THE HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., N. Y. CITY.

THE NEW INDIA SILKS.

We have just received several cases of new and elegant designs in Rich Printed and Jacquard India Silks, our latest importations, and have opened them for immediate sale.

A noticeable feature of the assortment is the large number of Black Grounds, figured in flowered patterns of most beautiful colorings; and of Light Grounds, with designs of bud, vine, or spray, in choicest and most delicate half tones.

The newest fabric, Drap de Noct, is unequalled for durability and gracefulness in drapery.

James McCreery & Co
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St., NEW YORK.

A Handsome & Useful Present.

ALWAYS IN SEASON.

"4-IN-HAND" NECK TIE,
Crocheted with

Brainerd & Armstrong's
FAST COLOR CROCHET SILK.
"WASHABLE."

Used by all Art Schools, and for sale by all first-class dealers in Embroidery Materials.

BRAINERD & ARMSTRONG CO.,
625 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Send for printed rules for crocheting Gents' Four-in-Hand Neck Ties.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885 1886-1886

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.

Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.

THE MCDOWELL CO.,
6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.

If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from a room up, costing from $500 to $5,000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address

J. B. OGILVIE, Publisher, 67 ROSE ST., New York.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address

CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

For The Christian Herald.

PERFECT TRUST.

BY LILLA M. ALEXANDER.

I MAY not always know the way,
Wherein God leads my feet;
But this I know, that round my path,
His love and wisdom meet;
And so I rest, content to know
He guides my feet where'er I go.

Sometimes above the path I tread,
The clouds hang dark and low;
But thro' the gloom, or thro' the night,
My heart no fear can know,
For close beside me walks a Friend
Who whispers low, "Until the end."

I may not always understand
Just why He sends to me,
Some bitter grief, some heavy loss,
But though I cannot see—
I kneel and whisper thro' my tears
A prayer for help, and know He hears.

My cherished plans and hopes may fail,
My idols turn to dust,
But this I know my Father's love
Is always safe to trust:
These things were dear to me, but still,
Above them all I love His will.

Oh, precious peace within my heart;
Oh, blessed rest to know
A Father's love keeps constant watch,
Amid life's ebb and flow;
I ask no more than this; I rest
Content, and know His way is best.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

"I am one of the happiest mothers in Lowell over what Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for my child, as I really believe it saved her eyesight," says Mrs. R. E. Williams, Lowell, Mass.

Slush, dirt, wet feet; rheumatism and colds follow. Use Johnson's Anodyne Liniment freely.
Does every bone in your body ache? Then bathe in Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; rub brisk

WALL PAPER

PRETTY PATTERNS

8 Yard Rolls

Clean and New

From 3c. to 6c. a Roll

Embossed Gilt Paper, 8 to 15 cts. a roll
Gilt Borders, 4 to 18 in. wide, 2 & 3c. peryd.
Borders without Gilt, 2 to 9 in., 1c. per yd.

Send 4c. in stamps for samples of the best and greatest bargains in the country.
Mention this paper and address

F. H. CADY, 305 HIGH STREET,
PROVIDENCE, R. I.

A NEW BOOK BY DR. CUYLER.

How to Be a Pastor.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

16mo, gilt top, 75 cents.

"No one is better qualified to give counsel e'er of sort, as his forty years of successful service vouchfor Evangelist.

Sent postpaid on receipt of the price by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR COMPANY

740-2 Broadway, N. Y.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

THE TRUE MANETTIA VINE

Here shown is the most magnificent flowering vine in cultivation, either for the house or garden, for it is loaded with bloom every day in the year. In the house it can be trained all around a window, and will be a solid wreath of bloom both summer and winter. In the garden, its charming beauty surpasses everything. Flowers, intense scarlet, tipped with yellow, the most brilliant and striking combination, and borne by the thousand, each flower keeping perfect over a month before fading. It is of the easiest culture, and sure to thrive for any one with ordinary care. It can be trained on a trellis, strings, or used for drooping from hanging baskets; in any way a perfect mass of the most lovely flowers and foliage from the root to the tips of the branches.
Its great beauty and novelty attract every eye. Supply limited, and this offer will not appear again. Order at once, and if you are not ready for the plants now we will send them later; just when you say. PRICE of strong plants, of the true variety, ALREADY BUDED OR BLOOMING, by mail, post-paid, guaranteed to arrive in good order, 50 cents each, two for 50 cents, five for $1. To every order we will add another elegant novelty free.

THE GREAT SPIDER LILY. bloom soon after it is potted, sending up great spikes of lovely, large pure white blossoms of exquisite fragrance and unsurpassed beauty. It is one of the oddest, sweetest, and loveliest flowers grown. Large bulbs which will soon bloom, 25 cents each, three for 50 cents, post-paid, or for 50 cents we will send Manettia Vine, Spider Lily, a Superb Seed Novelty and Catalogue.

SEEDS, BULBS, PLANTS, Extra Choice, by Mail Post-paid.

12 Extra choice mixed Gladioli, flowering bulbs, 25c. 5 Grand Lilies, 5 sorts, including Auratum, 50c.
6 New Double Pearl Tuberoses " 25c. 5 Cacti, different sorts named, 50c.
5 Rare Chrysanthemums, 5 sorts named, 50c. 20 Bulbs and 10 pkts. Flower Seeds, all different, 50c.

SPECIAL OFFER. The above liberal offers are made to introduce our superior goods. We will send, post-paid, everything offered for only $2.50: Manettia, Spider Lily, Gladioli, Tuberoses, Chrysanthemums, Lilies, Cacti, Bulbs, Seeds, etc.

(A superb work of art in blue) of FLOWER AND VEGETABLE
OUR BLUE CATALOGUE. SEEDS, BULBS, PLANTS, AND RAKE FRUITS, is the finest ever issued. 128 pages, hundreds of elegant engravings, Stipple Lithograph Covers and 5 large colored plates. We offer the finest novelties in Flowers, Vegetables and Fruits, notably: Our great Japanese Wineberry, Floral Park Plums, Butterfly Orchid, Star Phloxes, Water Plants, New Roses, Dahlias, Gladioli, Chrysanthemums, etc. Also the greatest collection of rare Cacti and Flowering shrubs. This elegant and expensive Catalogue will be sent for only TEN CENTS, which is only a part of its cost to us, or if you order anything here offered and ask for a Catalogue it will be sent FREE. Address

JOHN LEWIS CHILDS, Floral Park, Queens Co., N. Y.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose
China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Webster's Dictionary. 3-12 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

GRAND NEW FLOWERS.

The Wonderful Manettia Vine—the most magnificent flowering vine in cultivation—price 25c. Fuller's new Giant Fanny Seed, 10 packages, magnificent sorts, 25c. Selection of 12 choice packages of flower seeds, 25c.; 12 packages Vegetable Seeds, 25c.; Fuller's Grand
New Seedling Gladioli, 12 fine mixed bulbs, 30c. The Excelsior Pearl Tuberoses, spikes of pure white, double flowers of great fragrance, 6 large bulbs, 25c., 12 for 40c. Beautiful Catalogue sent free.
J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO.,
Floral Park, N. Y.

MAULE'S SEEDS LEAD ALL.

Our Catalogue for 1891 is pronounced absolutely the best seed and plant book issued,
printed in good legible type, on good paper, it excites the admiration of all. 664 varieties
of Vegetables, Flowers, Flowering Plants
Small Fruits, Fruit- and Nut-bearing Trees
etc., are beautifully illustrated, as many as 38 of them being in colors. This catalogue is mailed free to all who ordered in 1890; but the postage on the book alone is five cents, we must ask all others who are not customers desiring a copy, to send us twenty-five cent in stamps for it; and in addition to sending our catalogue, we will also mail you, without extra charge, a packet of the wonderful BUSH
LIMA BEANS, THE MOST VALUABLE VEGE-
TABLE NOVELTY INTRODUCED IN YEARS
AND A PACKET OF THE NEW MARGUERITE
CARNATION, THE FLORAL WONDER OF
1891. These two packets of seeds are worth
25 cents; so it virtually means the same thing as mailing our catalogue free to all who answer
this advertisement. Address

WM. HENRY MAULE
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

MEXICO

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico
are most pressingly needed, and can be mailed to the address of

BISHOP H. C. RILEY,
Care of J. P. HEATH
43 Bible House, New York.

THE SECOND COMING OF CHRIST A HAND. It says in Daniel, 7th chapter, "The kin-dom and dominion under the whole heaven shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High."
Who are these people? Where will they come from?
A sermon will be held forth by J. Wiele at the Christian-Israelite Church, 108 First Street, New York Sunday, February 1, at 7:30 p. m. Seats free. Sermon will be held every second Sunday evening through the season. Two different books on this doctrine can be obtained at 12 cts. each. Address J. Wiele, 143 Nor-Sixth Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE NEW MODEL HALL TYPEWRITER, $3

GREAT OPPORTUNITY FOR SMART AGENTS

as well as

DIRECT PURCHASERS.

Send for our Catalogue and Terms, the former, full of THE BRIM of good TESTIMONIALS. See MANIFOLDING. Consider the Price, COMPAI-
WITH OTHERS. YOU'LL BUY OF US then.

Address National Typewriter Co.,
10 Temple Place, Boston, Mass.

EUROPEAN BICYCLE TOURS.

PERSONALLY CONDUCTED.

A delightful vacation for clergymen and all other whose habits are of a sedentary nature. We have h-seven years' experience in this business. Two tri-this year—France, Switzerland, Germany, Holland a-England. Parties now forming. Strictly first-cla-
For further information address

F. A. ELWELL, Portland, Maine

METAL CEILINGS

BEST for Churches, old or new;
for Schools, Stores and Residences.

H. S. NORTHROP,
18 Rose Street, New York

A LADY WANTED in every Town to

Just Issued. Quick Sales. Big Pa-
Home. Circ'lrs Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York

EGGS FANCY POULTRY VARIETIES. Ten year experience. Price List Free. No catalogues.
Pigeons—Blue, Fans and Red Jacobin
J. L. MOCK, 1247 S. HIGH ST., COLUMBUS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 5.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

REV. THOMAS HARRISON, THE EMINENT EVANGELIST—SCENES IN HIS LIFE.

1. Bishop Simpson Preaching at his first Jubilee—2. Reordained by Bishop Bowman—3. Gen. Black giving Testimony—4. Chief-Justice Waite's Avowal to Gen. Fisk.

ONLY ONE TAKING OFF.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED LAST SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1891, AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE NEW YORK ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

Modern Types of the Young Man who Lacked One Thing—What they Have—Wealth—Refinement—Religious Knowledge—What they Lack—Many Things Comprised in One—The Elements of Happiness—Means of Usefulness—Personal Safety—Good for the Aged—For the Prosperous—For the Poor—A Meeting at Sea—An Insurance on the Soul—The Knocking on the Door.

"One thing thou lackest." Mark 10: 21.

THE young man of the text was a splendid nature. We fall in love with him at the first glance. He was amiable, and frank, and earnest, and educated, and refined, and respectable, and moral, and yet he was not a Christian. And so Christ addresses him in the words that I have read to you: "One thing thou lackest." I suppose that that text was no more appropriate to the young man of whom I have spoken than it is appropriate to a great multitude of people in this audience. There are many things in which you are not lacking. For instance, you are not lacking in a good home. It is, perhaps, no more than an hour ago that you closed the door, returning to see whether it was well fastened, of one of the best homes in this city. The younger children of the house already asleep, the older ones, hearing your returning footsteps, will rush to the door to meet you. And in these winter evenings, the children at the stand with their lessons, the wife plying the needle, and you reading the book or the paper, you feel that you have a good home. Neither are you lacking in the refinements and courtesies of life. You understand the polite phraseology of invitation, regard, and apology. You have on appropriate apparel. I shall wear no better dress at the wedding than when I come to the marriage of the King's Son. If I am well clothed on other occasions, I will be in religious audience. However reckless I may be about my personal appearance at other times, when I come into a consecrated assemblage, I shall have on the best dress I have. We all understand the proprieties of everyday life and the proprieties of Sabbath life.

Neither are you lacking in worldly success. You have not made as much money as you would like to make, but you have an income. While others are false when they say they have no income or are making no money, you have never told that falsehood. You have had a livelihood or you have fallen upon old resources, which is just the same thing, for God is just as good to us when he takes care of us by a surplus of the past as by present success. While there are thousands of men with hunger tearing at the throat with the strength of a tiger's paw, not one of you is hungry. Neither are you lacking in pleasant friendship. You have real good friends. If the scarlet fever should come to-night to your house, you know very well who would come in and sit up with the sick one; or, if death should come, you know who would come in and take your hand tight in theirs with that peculiar grip which means, "I'll stand by you," and after the life has fled from the loved one, take you by the arm and lead you into the next room, and while you are gone to Greenwood they would stay in the house and put aside the garments and the playthings that might bring to your mind too severely your great loss. Friends? You all have friends.

Neither are you lacking in your admiration of the Christian religion. There is nothing that makes you so angry as to have a man ma-lign Christ. You get red in the face, and you say: "Sir, I want you to understand that though I am not myself a Christian, I don't like such things said as that in my store," and the man goes off, giving you a parting salutation, but you hardly answer him. You are provoked beyond all bounds. Many of you have been supporters of religion and have given more to the cause of Christ than some who profess his faith. There is nothing that would please you more than to see your son or daughter standing at the altar of Christ, taking the vows of the Christian. It might be a little hard on you, and might make you nervous and agitated for a little while; but you would be man enough to say: "My child, that is right. Go on. I am glad you haven't been kept back by my example. I hope some day to join you." You believe all the doctrines of religion. A man out yonder says: "I am a sinner." You respond: "So am I." Some one says: "I believe that Christ came to save the world." You say: "So do I." Looking at your character, at your surroundings, I find a thousand things about which to congratulate you; and yet I must tell you in the love and fear of God, and with reference to my last account: "One thing thou lackest."

Christ Knocking at the Door.

You need, my friends, in the first place, the element of happiness. Some day you feel wretched. You do not know what is the matter with you. You say: "I did not sleep last night. I think that must be the reason of my restlessness;" or, "I have eaten something that did not agree with me, and I think that must be the reason." And you are unhappy. O my friends, happiness does not depend upon physical condition. Some of the happiest people I have ever known have been those who have been wrapped in consumption, or stung with neuralgia, or burning with the slow fire of some fever. I never shall forget one man in my first parish, who, in excruciation of body, cried out: "Mr. Talmage, I forget all my pain in the love and joy of Jesus Christ. I can't think of my sufferings when I think of Christ." Why his face was illumined. There are young men in this house who would give testimony to show that there is no happiness outside of Christ while there is great joy in his service. There are young men who have not been Christians more than six months, who would stand up to-night, if I should ask them, and say in those six months they have had more joy and satisfaction than in all the years of their frivolity and dissipation. Go to the door of that gin-shop to-night, and when the gang of young men come out, ask them whether they are happy. They laugh along the street, and they jeer, and they shout; but nobody has any idea that they are happy.

I could call upon the aged men in this house to give testimony. There are aged men here who tried the world, and they tried religion, and they are willing to testify on our side. It was not long ago that an aged man arose in a praying circle, and said: "Brethren, I lost my son just as he graduated from college, and it broke my heart; but I am glad now he is gone. He is at rest, escaped from all sorrow and from all trouble. And then, in 1857, I lost all my property, and you see I am getting old, and it is rather hard upon me; but I am sure God will not let me suffer. He has not taken care of me for seventy-five years now, let me drop out of his hands." He went into the room of an aged man—his eye-sight nearly gone, his hearing nearly gone—and what do you suppose he was talking about? The goodness of God and the joys of religion. He said: "I would like to go over and join my wife on the other side of the flood, and I am waiting until the Lord calls me. I am happy now. I shall be happy there." What is it that gave that aged man so much satisfaction and peace? Physical exuberance? No; it has all gone. Sunshine. He cannot see it. The voices of friends. He cannot hear them. It is the grace of God, that brighter than sunshine and that sweeter than music. If a harpist takes a harp and finds that all the strings are broken but one string, he does not try to play upon it. Yet here will show you an aged man, the strings of whose joy are all broken save one, and yet he thrums it with such satisfaction such melody, that the angels of God stop their swift stroke of their wings, and hover above the place until the music ceases. O religion—ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." And if you have not the satisfaction that is to be found in Jesus Christ, I must tell you, with all the concentrated emphasis my soul: "One thing thou lackest."

I remark again, that you lack the element of usefulness. Where is your business? You are it is No. 45 such a street, or No. 260 such a street, or No. 300 such a street. My friend, immortal, your business is wherever there is a tear to be wiped away or a soul to be saved. You may, before coming to Christ, do a great many noble things. You take a loaf of bread to that starving man in the alley; but he wants immortal bread. You take a pound of candy to that dark shanty. They want the light that springs from the throne of God, and you cannot take it because you have it not in your o-heart. You know that the flight of an arrow depends very much upon the strength of the bow, and I have to tell you that the best bow that was ever made was made out of the cross of Christ; and when religion makes a soul and sits it on that, and pulls it back and lets it fly, every time it brings down a Saul or a Goliath. There are people here of high social position, and large means, and cultured minds, who, if they would let me into the kingdom of God, could set the city on fire with religious awaken-

"GOD WILL NOT LET ME SUFFER."

Oh, hear you not the more than millions of those in these two cities who are inverted? Voices of those who in these two cities are dying in their sins? They want light. They want bread. They want Christ. They want heaven. Oh, that the Lord would make you a flaming angel. As for myself, I have been before high heaven that I will preach this Gospel as well as you, in all its fullness, until every pore of my body, and every faculty of my mind, and every passion of my soul, is exhausted. But we all have a work to do. I cannot do any work, nor can you do my work. I points us out the place where we are to serve, and yet are there people in this house who are sixty, forty, fifty, and sixty years of age, and yet have not begun the work for which they were created? With every worldly equipment: "One thing thou lackest." Again, you lack the element of personal safety. Where are those people who associated with you twenty years ago? Where are those people that, fifteen years ago, used to cross South Ferry, or Fulton Street, with you, to Brooklyn? Walk in the street where you were business fifteen years ago, and how all the signs have changed where are the people gone? How many of them are landed in eternity? I cannot say, but many, many. I go to the village of my boyhood. The houses have changed. I passed one house in which once lived a man who had lived an earnest, useful life and he is in glory now. In the next house another lived. He devoured widows' houses, spent his whole life in trying to make the world worse and worse. And he is gone—the man and the miser both gone to the same place. Ah, did they go to the same place? It is infinite absurdity to suppose them both in the same place. If the miser had a harp, what did he play on it? O my friends I come to you this religion as the only personal salvation. When you die, where are you going to? We leave all these scenes, upon what will we enter? When we were on shipboard, and we all felt that we must go to the bottom, was I right in saying to one next me: "Wonder if we will reach Heaven if we do go to-night." Was I wise or unwise in asking that question? I tell you that man is a fool who never thinks of the great future.

I apply this subject to the aged—not to the young—not many in any assemblage. People do not live to get old. That is the general rule. Here and there an aged man in the assembly. I tell you the truth. You have lived long enough in this world to know that it cannot satisfy an immortal nature. I must talk to you more reverentially than I do to these other people, while at the same time I speak with great plainness. O father of the weary step, O mother, bent down under the ailments of life, has thy God ever forsaken thee? Through all these years, who has been your best friend? Seventy years of mercies! Seventy years of food and clothing! O, how many bright mornings! How many glorious evening hours you have seen! O father, mother, God has been very good to you. Do you feel it? Some of you have children and grandchildren; the former cheered your young life, the latter twine your gray locks in their tiny fingers. Has all the goodness that God has been making pass before you produced no change in your feelings, and must it be said of you, notwithstanding all this: "One thing thou lackest"?

Oh, if you could only feel the hand of Christ smoothing the cares out of wrinkled faces. Oh, if you could only feel the warm arm of Christ steadying your tottering steps. I lift my voice loud enough to break through the deafness of the ear while I cry out: "One thing thou lackest." It was an importunate appeal a young man made in a prayer-meeting when he rose up and said: "Do pray for my old father. He is seventy years of age and he don't love Christ." That father passed a few more steps on in life and then he went down. He never gave any intimation that he had chosen Jesus. It is a very hard thing for an old man to become a Christian. I know it is. It is so hard a thing that it cannot be done by any human work; but God Almighty can do it by his omnipotent grace; he can bring you at the eleventh hour—at half-past eleven—at one minute of twelve he can bring you to the peace and the joys of the glorious Gospel.

"One Thing Thou Lackest."

I must make application of this subject, also, to those who are prospered. Have you, my friends, found that dollars and cents are no permanent consolation to the soul? You have large worldly resources but have you no treasures in heaven? Is an embroidered pillow all that you want to put your dying head on? You have heard people all last week talk about earthly values. Hear a plain man talk about the heavenly. Do you not know it will be worse for you, O prospered man, if you reject Christ, and reject him finally—that it will be worse for you than those who had it hard in this world, because the contrast will make the discomfiture so much more appalling? As the hart bounds for the water brooks, as the roe speeds down the hill-side, speed thou to Christ. "Escape for thy life, look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain; escape to the mountain lest thou be consumed!"

I must make my application to another class of persons—the poor. When you cannot pay your rent when it is due, have you nobody but the landlord to talk to? When the flour has gone out of the barrel, and you have not ten cents with which to go to the bakery, and your children are tugging at your dress for something to eat, have you nothing but the world's charities to appeal to? When winter comes, and there are no coals, and the ash-barrels have no more cinders, who takes care of you? Have you nobody but the overseer of the poor? But I preach to you a poor man's Christ. If you do not have in the winter blankets enough to cover you in the night, I want to tell you of him who had not where to lay his head. If you lie on the bare floor, I want to tell you of him who had for a pillow a hard cross, and whose foot-bath was the streaming blood of his own heart. O you poor man! O you poor woman! Jesus understands your case altogether. Talk it right out to him to-night. Get down on your floor and say: "Lord Jesus Christ, Thou wast poor and I am poor. Help me. Thou art rich now, and bring me up to Thy riches!" Do you think God would cast you off? Will he? You might as well think that a mother would take the child that feeds on her breast and dash its life out, as to think that God would put aside roughly those who have fled to him for pity and compassion. Yea, the prophet says: "A woman may forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb, but I will not forget thee."

If you have ever been on the sea, you have been surprised in the first voyage to find there are so few sails in sight. Sometimes you go along two, three, four, five, six, and seven days, and do not see a single sail; but when a vessel does come in sight, the sea glasses are lifted to the eye, the vessel is watched, and if it come very near, then the captain, through the trumpet, cries loudly across the water: "Whither bound?" So you and I meet on this sea of life. We come and we go. Some of us have never met before. Some of us will never meet again. But I hail you across the sea, and with reference to the last great day, and with reference to the two great worlds, I cry across the water: "Whither bound? Whither bound?" I know what service that craft was made for, but hast thou thrown overboard the

"PRAY FOR MY OLD FATHER." God, if thou wert ever needed anywhere, Thou art needed here. There are so many sins to be pardoned. There are so many wounds to be healed. There are so many souls to be saved. Help, Jesus! Help, Holy Ghost! Help, ministering angels from the throne! Help, all sweet memories of the past! Help all prayers for our future deliver-compass? Is there no helm to guide it? Is the ship at the mercy of the tempest? Is there no gun of distress booming through the storm? With priceless treasures with treasures aboard worth more than all the Indies—wilt thou never come up out of the trough of that sea? O Lord God, lay hold of that man! Son of ance! O, that now, in this the accepted time and the day of salvation, you would hear the voice of mercy and live. Taste and see that the Lord is gracious. In this closing moment of the service, when everything in the house is so favorable, when everything is so still, when God is so loving, and heaven is so near, drop your sins, and take Jesus. Do not cheat yourself out of heaven. Do not do that. God forbid that at the last, when it is too late to correct the mistake, a voice should rise from the pillow, or drop from the throne, uttering just four words—four sad annihilating words: "One thing thou lackest."

THE DEATH-BED FRIEND.

If you pay money, you take a receipt. If you buy land, you record the deed. Why? Because everything is so uncertain, you want it down in black and white you say. For a house and lot twenty-five feet front by one hundred feet deep, all security; but for a soul, vast as eternity, nothing, nothing! If some man or woman, standing in some of these aisles, should drop down, where would you go to? Which is your destiny? Suppose a man is prepared for the future world, what difference does it make to him whether he goes to his home to-day or goes into glory? Only this difference: if he dies he is better off. Where he had one joy on earth, he will have a million in heaven. Where he has a small sphere here, he will have a grand sphere there. Perhaps it would cost you sixty, or one hundred, or one hundred and fifty dollars to have your physical life insured, and yet free of charge, I offer you insurance on your immortal life, payable, not at your decease, but now, and to-morrow, and every day, and always.

My hope in Christ is not so bright as many Christians', I know; but I would not give it up for the whole universe, in one cash payment, if it were offered me. It has been so much comfort to me in time of trouble, it has been so much strength to me when I have been assailed, it has been so much rest to me when I have been perplexed, and it is around my heart such an encasement of satisfaction and blessedness that I can stand here before God, and say: Take away my health, take away my life, take everything rather than rob me of this hope, this plain, simple hope which I have in Jesus Christ my Lord. I must have this robe when the last chill strikes through me. I must have this light when all other lights go out in the blast that comes up from the cold Jordan. I must have this sword with which to fight my way through all those foes on my way heavenward.

WILL WE REACH HEAVEN TO-DAY?

When I was in London I saw there the wonderful armor of Henry VIII. and Edward III. And yet I have to tell you that there is nothing in chain mail or brass plate, or gauntlet, or halberd, that makes a man so safe as the armor in which the Lord God clothes his dear children. O, there is a safety in religion. You will ride down all your foes. Look out for that man who has the strength of the Lord God with him. As a matter of personal safety, my dear friends, you must have this religion.

I apply my subject to several classes of people before me. Chiefly to that great multitude of young people in this house. Some of these young men are in boarding-houses. They have but few social advantages. Many of them are on small salaries, and they are cramped and bothered perpetually, and sometimes their heart fails them. Young man, to-night, at your bedroom door on the third floor, you will hear a knocking. It will be the hand of Jesus Christ, the young man's friend, saying: "O, young man, let me come in; I will help thee, I will comfort thee, I will deliver thee." Take the Bible out of the trunk, if it has been hidden away, take that Bible that was given to you long ago by some loved one, take it out of the trunk and lay it down on the bottom of the chair, then kneel down beside it, and read and pray, and pray and read, until all your disturbance is gone, and you feel that peace which neither earth nor hell can rob you of. Thy father's God, thy mother's God, waits for thee, O young man. "Escape for thy life!" Escape now! "One thing thou lackest!"

The Birth-place in Southampton, Eng., of Dr. Isaac Watts.

THE BIRTH-PLACE OF ISAAC WATTS.

THE whole Church throughout Christendom is indebted to the famous writer whose hymns will probably never be entirely displaced by modern poets. For nearly two centuries they have been favorites with churches of many denominations. The accompanying illustration is a picture of the house in which Isaac Watts was born, July 17, 1764. It was a scene of grievous trouble in those days of Stuart tyranny. The father of the poet was seized, soon after his son's birth, and sent to prison for the "crime" of attending a Congregational Church. A tradition survives in the old town, that the young mother, with her babe in her arms, used to issue from the house daily and take her way to the vicinity of the jail where her husband was confined, and stand there for an hour, so that he might be cheered by seeing her from the window of his cell. He was released after two years, and lived to see his son a minister.

REV. THOMAS HARRISON.

The Boy Preacher's Early Life and Evangelistic Work in the Great Cities of the Union.

WE are assured, on infallible authority, that they who turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever. In this world, they whose lustre attract the public eye, are the millionaires, the prominent statesmen, the great soldiers and monarchs of the time; but the day is coming when men will give honor to men of far other achievements. The wealth and pomp and glory of the world will bring no honor and give pleasure equal to that which the servant of Christ will enjoy as he sees some soul in the presence of God who learned the way there from his lips. Many Christians realize the fact now, and all such will be glad to learn something of the man whose portrait appears on the first page, and who has been used of God in the work in our day to a truly remarkable extent. During the past fifteen years he has devoted his time and energies and talents to it, and has pleased God to crown his labors with the salvation of multitudes of souls. The result has come from the power of God and not from his own merit or effort. None would be more ready to declare this than Mr. Harrison himself. The Spirit, like the wind, bloweth where it listeth. Men wonder that so many souls are moved under Mr. Harrison's preaching, and ask what the secret of his power. To him it is a mystery. He depends wholly and solely on the Spirit's work and his one aim is to become, through self-forgetfulness and self-submissiveness, an instrument which can be used in the work which first and last is of God. There is no other explanation of the extraordinary success which has followed his labors everywhere.

A Visit to Seventeenth Street Methodist Church, New York, where Mr. Harrison is now laboring, well repays the student of the methods of successful evangelistic work. The area presents a scene of upturned, eager faces, each one marked by the same emotion, that of intense earnestness and enthusiasm, while in no few cases the eyes are filled with tears of joy. Parents weeping with gladness that the prayers of their lives are being answered in the conversion of their children; sinners weeping, as they see for the first time how loving and patient a being is the God against whom they have rebelled. Following the direction of concentrated gaze of the congregation, what do we see? Moving to and across the platform, with a quick, nervous step, is a slight, pale young man, in appearance a mere boy, but little over five feet in height, with neither beard nor whisker, his short, light hair brushed straight up from a high intellectual forehead, and with piercing eyes of remarkable brightness. Every gesture, every movement is the expression of a highly nervous temperament, in which the physical seems to be lost in the spiritual and mental.

The sermon is usually very short, and is the most part directed to one point. With the vigor Mr. Harrison possesses, he attacks the citadel of the will. He is profoundly impressed with the conviction that the great stumbling block by which men are kept from Christ is the same as it was in the days of the Master, and he exclaimed, "Ye will not come unto me that might have life." Mr. Harrison assumes that his hearers know how they may be saved, and also that they need salvation, therefore he confines his utterances on those points to a striking illustrations which set them vividly before the mind.

Then he applies himself to what he considers the main difficulty, and words of warning, entreaty, of encouragement, fall in a torrent from his lips. But the signs following—str-men dissolved in tears; children solemnly giving themselves to God; hardened sinners flinging themselves on their knees entreating mercy, do not seem to be the effects of his appeal as the word "effects" is usually understood. These signs are rather the result of an unseen influence, a mighty wave which rolls in irresistible power over the assemblage, swaying all hearts and carrying men into the ocean of God's love. The greatest of all miracles, far surpassing those worked on material and visible objects—a moral, spiritual miracle, in which the heart of one is turned into the heart of flesh, is wrought by Almighty power, and we stand still in awe, forgetting the instrument employed, and say, "Thou didst it."

Thomas Harrison is a native of Boston, Mass., and was born December 25th, 1854. He is the son of a pious mother, whose prayers on his behalf, that he might be brought in early life to Jesus and the means of bringing others to him, have been abundantly answered.

His Conversion

As thus described by himself at a camp-meeting in Ohio, not long ago: "If ever there was a Christian on earth my mother is. It was my mother's constant prayers that guided me. But before I yielded, these influences bothered me a great deal, they worried me; and after school would throw my books down, and go to my room and pray and weep. One summer I went down to New Brunswick on a vacation. I was having a good time till one morning I received a telegram from home, running thus: 'Freddie is dead.' I felt inclined to yield at that solemn time, but I didn't."

"I was standing the next winter on the street, in the snow, and leaning against a cold icy lamp-post, lost in thought, when I seemed to hear a voice saying to me, 'Now or never.' But I said 'Good God, you don't ask me to get down in the snow and ice. I can't kneel here in the street; just wait till I get to my room, and I'll give up all. I'm afraid Lord, I'll freeze here.' Again I seemed to hear the voice, 'Now or never.' Again I remonstrated but a third time the words 'Now or never' thrilled me. I gave up, and cried 'Now, Lord,' and he received me as quick as a flash. That's the way I was converted."

At that time Mr. Harrison was engaged as clerk in a store, but God had other work for him to do, and by the advice of the Rev. Daniel Richards, pastor of the Dorchester Methodist Episcopal Church, he at once commenced a course of training for the Christian ministry. He entered as a student at Wilbraham Academy, of which the Rev. Edward Cook was at that time principal, and after remaining there some time and receiving license to preach, he was received into Brooklyn Lay College under the care of Dr. Talmage.

A Baptism of Fire.

Mr. Harrison's success as a gatherer of souls was as sudden as it is remarkable. It was manifested first at Long Plain, whither he went on a visit to a friend and preached in the church here. No results came until one day, Mr. Harrison and his friend went out into the woods, and kneeling there on the ground besought God for power. That their prayer was answered, was soon proved. A revival commenced, which stirred the whole neighborhood, and continued many weeks.

The following spring Mr. Harrison attended the meetings of the General Conference

At Baltimore.

During his visit he preached with marked success in the Eutaw Church, and the services were attended by many ministers of the Baltimore churches, who were struck by the evidences of pulpit power in one so young. The summer was spent in close application to study and active work in his native State, and in the fall he returned to Baltimore to hold special services. The work commenced at the Franklin Street Church in November, 1876. For six weeks he labored there with great success and then accepted invitations to other churches in the city which were similarly blessed. At one church—the Union Square Methodist—the services continued for twenty weeks and at the concluding meeting about a thousand persons made a profession of faith. Dr. France, the pastor of the church, kept a careful record of the converts, many of whom joined other churches, and many months afterward said that he personally knew of over nine hundred of the thousand, and they were then leading consistent Christian lives.

For about two years Mr. Harrison made Baltimore his headquarters, from which he made excursions to Trenton, N. J., to Washington, D. C., and to Georgetown, D. C., and attended the camp-meetings in Ohio and Pennsylvania. At the Foundry Church, Washington, the results which characterized the Baltimore work were witnessed and a large addition was made to the church. At one of the meetings, the late Chief Justice Waite was present. He watched the proceedings for some time and listened to the testimonies of the converts; then turning to Gen. Fisk, who had accompanied him, he grasped his hand and said, "This is the happiest hour of my life." (See Illustration No. 4.)

A memorable day in Mr. Harrison's life was the last day of his work at Wharton Street, Philadelphia. It was a day of jubilee over a thousand souls brought in during the services. The first service of the day was a praise service at six o'clock in the morning. Five hundred persons were present at that early hour. The crowning event of the day, however, was the sermon preached by Bishop Matthew Simpson at the noon service. The church was packed in every part and every inch of standing-room was occupied. The numbers present and the event celebrated moved the eminent bishop to more than even his usual eloquence, and he preached such a sermon as will never be forgotten by any who heard it. (See Illus. No. 1.)

During the next few months, Mr. Harrison labored at Trinity Church, Lima, Ohio, at Wharton Street, Philadelphia and in Buffalo, N. Y., and in each town the work was signally blessed. In May, 1880, Dr. Talmage invited Mr. Harrison to hold services in the Brooklyn Tabernacle. They were continued week after week, with a work of grace continually widening and deepening. Frequently, the large edifice, holding upward of five thousand persons, was not large enough to accommodate all who came. Dr. Talmage said at the close of the meetings: "I wish as a part of my service to express my heartfelt, unqualified approval of the way brother Harrison works, his services eclipse the ways of all other evangelists I have ever seen."

A Re-ordination.

The subject of illustration No. 2, on first page, is one among many delightful recollections of the evangelist's life. It occurred in the great revival at Springfield, Ill., when two thousand two hundred converts assembled to praise God for their new life. Bishop Bowman, the senior Bishop of the M. E. Church, took part in the service. He looked around at the immense gathering, and then, crossing the pulpit, placed his hand on Mr. Harrison's head, and in impressive tones said: "I ordain you, in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost, to go forth and win more souls for the Master." It was a solemn scene, and one that the Evangelist will never forget.

Among many prominent men who have given their hearts to God under Mr. Harrison's ministrations one especially, for personal reasons, is remembered with thankfulness. At one of the services during the revival at Danville, Ill., Mr. Harrison was surprised to see among those who rose to ask for prayer General Black, afterward Commissioner of Pensions. He went forward with others to the altar, and before he left the meeting was rejoicing in Christ. During the remainder of the meetings he was one of the prominent workers in leading other souls to the Saviour. (See Illustration No. 3.)

It has been impossible to give here more than the faintest idea of the extent of the blessing which has attended Mr. Harrison's labors in the various cities he has visited. Sufficient has been said, however, to show that in a very marked and extraordinary degree God has owned and blessed his work. We are sure that many earnest men among our readers would be glad if they, too, could render similar service to the Master. In order to give them practical help in such efforts, we have induced Mr. Harrison to furnish for publication in this journal a series of articles containing hints suggested by his extensive experience of revival work. They will be on the various features of evangelistic service, including preparations for a revival; the opening; the influence of music and the place it should have; the methods of dealing with seekers; care of converts; reminiscences of great revivals and kindred subjects. We earnestly hope that these articles, which will be thoroughly practical, may be made useful to many laborers in the Lord's vineyard and so his kingdom may be advanced.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

An Offer of a Passage to Africa for One Dollar has tempted a large number of colored people in Georgia to invest. On January 17 a man who acted as their deputy waited on the Passenger Agent of the East Tennessee Railroad at Atlanta, and asked for special rates for about five hundred persons to Savannah. The agent was incredulous but on investigation, he found that there really were that number in Atlanta, waiting for transportation to Savannah. They were going to Africa, they said, where they would be able to live in plenty without work. They had bought tickets good from Savannah to Africa for one dollar each, and they produced them to convince the agent. The tickets were gaudily printed cards merely authorizing "the bearer to start for Africa." There appears to be no doubt that the deluded people had really paid one dollar each for the cards and it is stated that over fourteen hundred have been sold in the State. Their preachers had vainly endeavored to disabuse their minds and some of them had been hooted at and threatened with violence for their pains. Some unprincipled schemers must have taken advantage of the ignorance of the poor people to defraud them of their money. The prospect of ease and luxury to be obtained at so low a rate was an offer they could not resist. It may be hoped that in future they will give more heed to the words of their preachers, who while they caution them against trusting in such delusive promises, will tell them how they may really reach a land of bliss unspeakable without money and without price. (Heb 11: 16.)

The Love of a Visitor to New York Led to his death recently. During the past two months, a young man has been staying in the city, who represented a firm of merchants in Vienna. He was sent here to sell goods for his employer, and was instructed to visit Philadelphia, Chicago, and other large cities after canvassing New York. Immediately on his arrival, he called upon a lady, whose husband is at present in Vienna, and delivered to her a parcel with which the husband had intrusted him. He became infatuated with her and spent his time in her company instead of attending to his business in New York; and then proceeding to other cities as directed. His employers receiving no orders from him, grew dissatisfied and finally ordered him to return. He replied admitting his non-success in New York, but promising to immediately start on a Western tour. But he lingered, being unable to break the spell of his guilty infatuation. On January 20, he received imperative orders to return to Vienna immediately. The letter drove him to desperation, and he committed suicide. Probably few men would have taken their lives for such cause; but there are many, who are losing their souls rather than give up some cherished sin. Numbers of men are in the position, in which the soul can be saved only by a sacrifice so painful that Christ likened it to cutting off the right hand and are unable to make the sacrifice, and do not pray to God for the necessary strength. (Matt. 5: 30.)

ELIJAH TAKEN TO HEAVEN.

S. S. LESSON FOR FEB. 15, BY MRS. M. BAXTER
II. KINGS 2:1-11. GOLDEN TEXT, GEN. 5:24.

The Two Exceptions to the Rule of Death—Two Men in Close Communion with God—The Translation a Type of the Coming Rapture—Elisha's Persistent Companionship—His Choice of a Blessing—The Condition—The Mantle of Elijah Falls Upon Him.

TWO men only, out of all the myriads who have peopled this earth, have been taken away without dying. Both these were men of faith. "By faith Enoch was translated that he should not see death; and was not found because God had translated him: for before he was translated, he had this testimony that he pleased God." Elijah was a man of faith in the living God. "Enoch walked with God," Elijah stood before the Lord God of Israel: both were inseparably connected with, both intensely dependent on, their God. Every step of the one, every word and action of the other, sprang out of the will of their God, which he revealed to them, and which they accepted from him.

"Death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned," but God knows how to make

His Own Exceptions.

Jesus has "destroyed him that hath the power of death, that is, the devil," "he hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel." But only two men, and those both Old Testament men, have so entered into the thought of our God as to be able by faith to be translated that they should not see death. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." When the Church of Christ understands her vocation, and her heavenly citizenship, and when she has put on her beautiful garments, and the beauty of her Lord is upon her, then he shall come and receive her unto himself without dying. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump." (1. Cor. 15: 51, 52.) Just at the present time, when everything seems to be in suspense and breathless, as though waiting for some great thing to happen, may we not believe that the Lord's coming for his Bride will be the possible solution of the state of things? Is it not the greatest of all coming things? Therefore the translation of Elijah may have a bearing on the present state of things in the Church which is of infinite importance to us.

Elijah knew that he was going to be translated. Elisha knew it, too, and so did the sons of the prophets. The Spirit of God shows "things to come" (John 16: 13), to such as are not absorbed with things present. The king and his nobles knew nothing of what was passing, but Elijah, who saw now the answer to his prayers, and the fruit of his life of solitude, and intense consciousness of God, in the springing up of schools of the prophets around him, saw in them also some development of spiritual intelligence. They all knew, and could put the question to Elisha, "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master to-day?"

Elijah Longed to be Alone.

The more intimate our acquaintance with our God, the more intense is our longing for solitude; and the more impossible it is to hold on our way with man unless we are much alone with our God. Three times the prophet urged on his follower Elisha to leave him. "Tarry here, for the Lord hath sent me to Bethel, . . . to Jericho, . . . to Jordan." And three times Elisha withstood his master! He too, had a life alone with God. The mantle of Elijah had been cast upon him without his seeking for it; but since God had called him, Elijah himself should not stand in the way of his vocation. The sons of the prophets were easily disposed of with their question, "Knowest thou that the Lord will take away thy master from thy head to-day? Yea; I know it; hold ye your peace" was all he had to say to them.

Some forty miles had been traversed: why all this journey? We know not; it may be that Elijah left the breath of prayer on every acre of ground over which he passed. Fifty sons of the prophets, who were aware of what was about to happen, stood to view afar off, and the two prophets stood by Jordan. What would happen next? "Elijah took his mantle and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they were divided hither and thither." Already the powers of the world to come were upon him, that which was not impossible with God was not impossible to him, as he stood almost separated from earth already, on the brink of Jordan. Where God bid him go there was no barrier strong enough to restrain him; mountains, rivers, everything must give way.

One intense God-begotten desire filled the soul of Elisha, but he had so drunk into the spirit of his master that he did nothing, even by a word, to bring it about. It is unbelief and not faith which is anxious about the fulfilment of God's promises. He knew that his God was to be counted upon, that God was in as full earnest in calling him to his vocation as he was in accepting it, and although his master's moments upon earth were numbered, and it looked as though the time would pass, and he should lose the opportunity to obtain his request, Elisha knew that his God had all in hand; and he waited on in silence. And not in vain, "It came to pass when they were gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, Ask what I shall do for thee before I be taken away from thee." It was God's answer. Not in vain had he followed the untiring steps of Elijah through that long journey, not in vain had he been true to his vocation to follow Elijah even when Elijah himself would discourage him. Not in vain had he kept silence and counted the presence of his God something more to be appreciated than even the last moments of his prophet-master upon earth. "Ask what I shall do for thee." Elisha needed no time to come to a decision; the same strength of purpose which had made him slay his oxen when he was first called, and burn his old farm implements, now centred in the only desire of his heart. "Let be upon me." Elijah was not a popular man, he was hated and feared at court, his stern, uncompromising, unearthly holiness of life, was a witness against the spirit of the age in which he lived. A double portion of his spirit would prove of no earthly advantage to Elisha; it meant, perhaps, persecution, misunderstanding, poverty, hardship among men. But Elisha had seen a life of fellowship with God; glimpses of the unseen world and its realities had been given him in the ordinary life of a man who was always face to face with God.

A Double Portion of Thy Spirit

Elisha looked on things with a prophetic eye, and had learned to weigh things in heavenly balances. He had come to see that acquaintance with a God that answereth by fire was of far more vital importance than acquaintance at court, for Ahab was worsted with all his prophets when challenged by the man who represented God. He had seen that numbers count for nothing when they are opposed to God, all Baal's prophets were weaker than the one man who simply trusted in his God, and he had seen the voice of a nation suddenly turned round to the witness of that one man who had the living God on his side. The light of eternity shone upon his prophet-soul, and Elisha judged not according to man in the flesh, but according to God in the Spirit. But oh, how few there are who judge as Elisha did! How many there are, even among Christians, who think that a fair show in the flesh, something which man can see, and admire, and appreciate, is of more value than that life "hid with Christ in God" which "the world knoweth not, because it knew him not." A life which makes no noise, attracts no attention, and yet, wherever it is seen, leaves the impress of God behind it.

"Thou hast asked a hard thing; but when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so." No sons of the prophets could follow in the miraculous pathway of the divided Jordan, only Elisha had faith to follow; he knew he was anointed for his vocation, and he began to understand the solemnity of his mission. He had had faith to walk through the divided waters, and had seen things of time and sense subject to his master's faith in God; should he fail just now when the test was to keep a steady eye on the world unseen by man? There are few who look fixedly on the unseen; men must have something tangible for their senses to lean upon, a reason which may commend itself to their intelligence, a feeling which may commend itself to their hearts, anything but the living God himself.

If Thou See Me

The ice was broken; the silence in which the two prophets had travelled that wondrous journey ceased; "they talked together," but Elisha's eye was fixed upon his master. "While they still went on and talked, behold, there appeared a chariot of fire and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up by a whirlwind into heaven." The Lord has heavenly hosts at his command; he is not confined to earth for instruments to do his will. He can send at his bidding "twelve legions of angels." (Matt. 26: 53.) Elisha was never disconcerted after this time; he learned his lesson that God can carry out his purposes by other than earthly instruments. In apparent danger of death at Dothan, he still saw God's chariots and horses around him (II. Kings 6: 17). "Elisha saw it, and he cried, My father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." He knew that he had obtained his request, and in token of it, he tore his clothes in two pieces, and took up, as his own henceforth, the mantle which dropped from the ascended Elijah. And with it he claimed and believed in, the double portion of his spirit, to be the prophet of the Lord in his room.

AFTER THE FUNERAL.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for Feb. 15. Gen. 5:24:
"And Enoch walked with God: and he was not; for God took him."

"WHY did the minister say that God took him, mamma?" The question was asked by a boy of some twelve years, who, nestling close to his mother's knee, as, clad in deep mourning, she sat rocking herself in a low chair. They had just returned from that heart-breaking journey to the cemetery, the misery of which still crushes us with its desolation as it has done all who have gone before us.

"God did take him, Henry. Oh! if it were not that I knew that, my heart would break," said the widow, more to herself than to the boy.

"Does that comfort you then, mamma? I should have thought it made it worse. You can't think so much of God as you used to, if it is he who has taken Papa from us."

The widow shuddered. The wound was so fresh and the boy was unconsciously laying it bare before her eyes. Was he voicing a thought that, struggle as she would, she could not quite put out of her mind? "I must," she exclaimed wildly, "I must; I will not listen to the enemy. God is good; though he slay me I will trust in him. Yes, my boy, we will hold fast our faith all the more now when we shall need it more."

"But why did God take him, mamma? You said God loves us and he loved Papa. It seems a strange thing for anyone to do who loves us. I thought when we loved people we tried to make them happy. This makes us miserable. You have been crying ever since Papa died and I am sure I feel dreadful. Why did God take him, mamma?"

Ah! if the poor mourner could have told her boy the reason for the blow, how much lighter her burden would have been! What a mystery it all was to her! Her darling husband, so good so kind, so necessary to her and her boy, cut down in his prime—who could tell the reason! Yet the boy must not be allowed to cherish hard thoughts of God. If they were allowed to strike their roots into his young mind the mischief might be life long. "We do not know the 'why,' Henry," she said gently. "We have to believe that there is a reason without knowing it. That is what we call faith. You know I love you, do you not?"

"Oh, yes; mamma?"

"Well, suppose you had a book or a toy that you were very pleased with, and I took it from you for some reason that you were not old enough to understand, you would be puzzled. You might wish you knew the reason, or you might wish I did not take it away; but it would be very hard, after all I have done for you, if you thought it was a proof that I did not love you. I should expect you to believe that I loved you still and that I knew best what was good for you. God expects that of us."

"It is not good for us to have Papa taken away," said the boy stoutly.

"Oh! it must be," said the widow, clasping her hands in agony. "It does not seem so, but God knows. We must trust him."

"Perhaps, it is good for Papa."

"Ah, yes, there is no doubt of that." The right string was touched. The mother could tell her boy of the happiness of those whom God takes. She had no doubt of that. She talked to him of Enoch, who, after walking with God for centuries, "was not, for God took him." Of Elijah, whom he took in a chariot of fire. Of Ridley and Latimer and Hooper, who, in later times, also left this world for the other in chariots of fire, willing to go, after bearing their testimony to him in the world. She told him that the passage was short, whatever the equipage, whether it was by violence or, as in the case of his father, it was only by ordinary sickness. The walk with God ended in the presence of God. Where else could it end? All creeds were summed up in that rule of conduct. She urged her boy to that walk, to the purity of life, the constant prayerfulness, the conscious dependence for guidance on the Unseen, which the walking with God implies, and assured him that in the end, whenever it might come, the state beyond the grave would be the fuller and more conscious experience of the light which had shone on the earthly path.

The boy listened, watching the light that beamed in his mother's eyes, and wondering that she should lose the sense of her burden as she talked. She also was walking in the light; and, years afterward, when he, too, was bearing the heavy weight of bereavement, having laid her dearly loved form in the grave, he was comforted by the thought once so dark to him, that God had taken her.

THE TWO AGES: A CONTRAST.

The Characteristics of the Present and Future Ages as Outlined in Prophecy.

BY REV. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

THAT the different characteristics given in the Scriptures of the future should describe the same age cannot be conceived. Both the present age, and the millennial age, were future to the prophetic writers, and to our Lord. They were not, however, describing in their predictions these distinct ages as one and the same, inasmuch as there would be found both sharp contradictions, and irreconcilable statements. By noting the ages, however, within their circumscribed limits, we see how exactly the predictions fit to each dispensation, as key to lock.

I. We may now examine the features of The Present Age.

1. It will continue an age of worldliness and pleasure-seeking. Our Lord compares the days of the period when he shall come, to the days that were before the flood, and to the days of Sodom. The people then were solely occupied with selfish and worldly pursuits—eating, drinking, marrying, buying, selling, planting, building. (Luke 17: 26-30.)

2. It will remain a scoffing age. The Apostle Peter declares "there shall come in the last days scoffers," whose sneers and jeers are specially aimed at the promises concerning the Lord's return. Untruthfulness will mark such scoffers. The boast that "all things continue as they were from the beginning of creation," proves them false to history. They are willingly ignorant, or rather they wilfully forget, that the first world created was overflowed with water, and so there was an interruption to the material earth in its continuance from the beginning.

3. It is an anti-Christian age. The lawless spirit had begun to assert itself in the latter days of the Apostles. This seductive spirit is to gain in power until it shall betray itself in its most awful development in the coming Man of Sin. (1. John 4: 3; 11. John 7.)

4. It is a sadly-mixed age. Wheat and tares grow together; good and bad fishes are in the same drag-net; sheep and goats are undivided till the end; wise and foolish virgins are found in each other's company.

5. It is an age of progressive deterioration. In Daniel, second chapter, the political governments of this age are described as iron mixed with clay. Nebuchadnezzar was the head of gold; the Medo-Persian power was represented by less valuable metal; the Grecian kingdom still shows the process of deterioration, while the Roman kingdom, still in existence in its divided form, is the basest of all metals. Alas! the golden age of human government seems to have been in the distant past. (Dan. 2: 37-44.)

6. It is a Satanic age. An age of demons who roam the air in freedom, and of Diabolos, head and chief of all spiritual foes of God and man. The devil is the "god of this world" or age; its prince and dictator. He who is a murderer from the beginning still plies his nefarious trade; he who is a liar from the first is not the less truthful now. Cunning, cruel, rebellious, hating every good thing, this mighty being rules in the hearts of all who are disobedient to God, and blinds the minds of all who refuse to believe the message of his grace.

Yes, the age in which we live is all this and much more. It is the age of oppression, of brutality, of licentiousness, of infidelity, of injustice, of conceit, of physical disasters, of fleshly defilement, of mental dismay and of moral darkness. Even to the end, it will be an age of perils, of pestilences, of persecutions, and will close with a visitation of plagues both terrible and incomparable. It will continue to be an age of shams and pretensions in religion, in science, in culture, and in social position. It will to its consummation, be an age of false teaching, of unsound doctrine, and of enervated piety.

No, these are not the ravings of a hypochondriac; they are sober statements and clear deductions from the infallible, unfailing and divinely originated Scriptures, and are to-day in the process of fulfillment before our eyes. But is there nothing good in this age? Yea, O, believer. God is sovereign in this age. His Church is chosen, called out, and cemented into an organic body in this age. The Gospel is preached to this end, the Spirit works for this purpose. But this Church redeemed from among men is not loved by the world. The world hates the Church, calls her names, persecutes her, chokes the seed of the word, supplants the wheat, and threatens to engulf this vessel of mercy with waves of wrath, and storms of tribulation. The end of this age then, is not golden for the world, but gloomy with dark convolving clouds of wrath from heaven. God is on the side of the Church and ever will be; the Father above for her; the Son with her; the Spirit in her. But for the harlot-world is reserved judgment unspeakable, and punishment eternal.

II. Turn we now to the Word concerning The Age to Come.

We do not imperceptibly glide into this glorious millennium. There will be an interruption of present events. The King invested with governmental authority by the Ancient of Days will come and purge away all that defileth and offendeth. Christ will come as a thief to the unready, and as lightning in swift haste. His legions will promptly attend to his commands, and his behests obey. What then?

1. The wicked shall be driven away like chaff, and all who refused the Gospel shall be destroyed both root and branch. The earth will be purged of its ungodly inhabitants, i.e., of those who did not like to retain God in their knowledge and who received not the love of the truth that they might be saved. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun, after the rebellious are driven forth into the outer darkness. Oh! my soul how terrible is the penalty of disobedience. (11. Thes. 1: 8; 2: 10; Matt. 13: 40-42, 49, 50.)

2. The Antichrist or man of sin, who will appear on the scene at the end of this age, with all power and signs, and lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness in them that perish, even that outlaw whose coming will be accompanied by Satanic energy with lies and works of falsehood; he who will oppose the living God and our Lord Jesus, shall be instantly destroyed by the breath of the descending Christ, and put to rout by the manifestation of his presence. (11. Thes. 1: 7-9.)

3. Satan the God of this present age will also be bound and remanded to the abysmal depths of the great pit. Although not as yet receiving the final sentence of doom he will be held prisoner of war by the great Immanuel for the space of one thousand years, i.e., during the blessed millennial age. (Rev. 20: 1-3.)

4. Christ as Son of Man will then be here in person, attended by his mighty ones, and the redeemed Church, to reign over a purified earth. He will take his rightful throne as the legal successor of David and display his ensign the lion of the tribe of Judah. Hail mighty Prince! Welcome thou glorious one who cometh in the greatness of thy might, King of kings and Lord of lords! (Luke: 1: 32; Rev. 19: 11-16.)

5. In that age God's covenant with Israel will be fulfilled. Gathered out of all nations, re-united and established in their own land the yoke of the oppressor shall be broken and every enemy subdued. The land kept for them, now given to them by the God of their fathers for an everlasting possession. Their city and their country, Jerusalem and Palestine; to be there after the commercial and religious centre of the world. He that scattered Israel will gather and keep him ever more. Great shall be their temporal prosperity; greater still their spiritual acquisitions. Their land shall produce wheat, and wine, and oil, and milk, and honey in plenty while their souls shall be abundantly satisfied with the goodness of Jehovah. (Isa. 61: 4-6.)

6. In that age also will all the nations, who had not heard of Jesus, now speedily hear of him and learn to love his name. For he will pour his Spirit on all flesh. Ethiopia shall suddenly reach out her hands to God, who will take them and draw that continent to his feet. The land of Sinim, too, and the Isles of the sea shall hear that the King has arrived, and will promptly pay him homage. Sheba and Seba shall offer gifts. The kingdoms of the world will joyfully accept his sovereign rule. Then shall holiness prevail and righteousness extend from the river to the ends of the earth. The year of Jubilee will then have come. (Isa. 2: 4-14.)

7. In that golden age, the seventh or sabbatical year of the world's history, wars will cease from the earth, peace will be universal, the discord of creation shall cease, the animals will be in subjection to man, and in peaceful accord with each other. Earth's fertility will be restored, her bosom will throb with abundance; famines, pestilences and poverty shall be unknown. The life of man will be as the life of a tree: the three score years will be multiplied. (Isa. 9: 6; 11: 6-9; 41: 18-20; 65: 19-22.)

These are but the outlines of millennial times sufficiently revealing however the superiority of that promised age over the age in which we live. To us, in our present environment, is the word sent; "I beseech you therefore brethren by the mercies of God, to present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God which is your reasonable service. And be not fashioned according to this age; but be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds, that ye may prove what is the good and acceptable and perfect will of God."

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE DEAD STATESMAN.

"DEATH at the Banquet" was the subject upon which I preached Sabbath before last, in the morning at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, and at night at the Academy of Music, New York. And now in the death of our honored and brilliant Secretary of the Treasury, William Windom, at the banquet of the Board of Trade last Thursday, we have a startling illustration of the same subject. But what a wide contrast between the two banquets—the one of Belshazzar's carousal, the other an assemblage of our useful and beloved citizens in the interests of commerce and our country's welfare! On the wall of one banqueting room was the handwriting of doom and overthrow, on the other the handwriting of commercial opportunity and national advancement. Whatever post-mortem may reveal, it is evident that this talented cabinet officer was slain of the fatigues and exhaustions of public speech. There seems to be so little effort required to address a public assemblage, that the world has little appreciation of the drafts on cerebral and nervous resources, as when Chandler of Michigan, after his Chicago speech, expired in the hotel, and as when Henry W. Grady, after his address at Boston, had only strength enough to get home to Atlanta to die, and as now when the Secretary of the United States Treasury finds in his own decease the peroration to his wise and resounding utterances. It looks so easy to make a speech or lay out a line of policy or work the brain, that many who toil chiefly with the hand have but little sympathy with those who toil with the intellect. Ah! it may be easy to talk platitudes and while away an hour in the uttering of glib nothings, but to take as much thought as that which appeared in the speech of Secretary Windom, and utter it in such a way as to impress the leading merchants of New York, who listened to him, is a tremendous thing to do, and no wonder that there was a physical reaction that took his life.

More sympathy is needed between occupations; and while the world needs to have more appreciation of the toils and hardships of hammer and trowel and axe and spade, it also needs to have higher appreciation of the exhaustions of pen and speech. I talked with

Mr. Windom upon one occasion concerning the demands upon those who manage the finances of a nation, and he gave me an insight that was appalling. To keep a national exchequer right side up when every political accident who happens to get into Congress has a theory of his own as to how the finances of the nation ought to be handled, required an equipoise, a broad common sense, an independence of character, a persistence which few possess. But all these qualities our lamented Secretary of the Treasury manifested from first to last. We have had plenty of poets and historians to tell the story of the American sword and the American hammer and the American plough, but no one has as yet told the story of the American dollar, and that will not be told until we shall have specially able biographers of such United States Treasurers as Alexander Hamilton, Albert Gallatin, William H. Crawford, Samuel Ingham, Thomas Corwin, James Guthrie, Salmon P. Chase, John Sherman, Daniel Manning and William Windom. And now this last financier falls at his post. In his utterances that night in New York he was only doing in a more popularized way what he had been doing in the Treasury Department at Washington. "Well done, good and faithful servant!"

Among his last great deeds was the relief of our national money market a few weeks ago. Had he made a mistake then our national finances by this time might have been a total wreck, our banks down and starvation trampling the multitudes. That we have emerged from that awful monetary exigency and that every day gets brighter and brighter is owing to the clear-headedness and practical sagacity of him who lies unconscious amid the weeping household to whom he only a few days ago gave parting salutation. May the God of all comfort sustain them. What a series of calamities among the families of the Presidential Cabinet. First the family of the Secretary of the Navy, then the family of the Secretary of State, and now the family of the Secretary of the Treasury passing under the shadows of bereavement, each new wound, like this last, opening all the other wounds. Let the prayers of the nation continue to ascend in behalf of all the stricken households, and may God spare the other homes that have as yet been untouched by mighty sadnesses. Would that such an occurrence as this we now bemoan might soften political asperities, and that when our public men deliver any political sentiment suavity of discussion might take the place of billingsgate and oburgation.

Who will take his place is a question that will be dominant for days to come. In time of war the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy bear the greatest responsibilities, but in time of peace like this, upon the Secretary of the Treasury comes the greatest weight. There may be a hundred men who feel themselves capable for such a post, but there is only one man fully competent. There is never a surplus of right material for any position. But when God removes an important man he has always some one competent to take his place. Who that one is, in what senatorial or legislative hall or on what judicial bench or in what influential place he now sits, I cannot say, but I pray God that he may point him out so plainly that he may be selected for the vacant chair. The financial welfare of this land has so much to do with the moral and social condition of our people that no patriot or Christian can be indifferent as to who shall be the successor of him now fallen at the banquet.

BRIEF NOTES.

The manifestations of divine power at THE CHRISTIAN HERALD services in the Academy of Music, New York, have been so marked on the past few Sunday evenings, as to attract the notice of the secular press. The New York Herald of January 26, said:

"The sermons which Dr. Talmage is preaching at the Academy of Music are producing remarkable results in the way of arousing serious interest in religious matters in the minds of many persons who have not been in the habit of giving much thought to spiritual things. Multitudes of people who are not regular church-goers attend these services. The great building is always crowded and whatever the weather may be, many are turned away unable to get in. On the last four Sundays the Doctor's Sermons have been particularly earnest in their exhortations to sinners to come to repentance, and after every service hundreds of persons have risen to ask for the prayers of the congregation, and have remained behind after the regular proceedings to talk with the preacher on religious matters. In the past month over one thousand persons have come to repentance in this way; and among them it is said, are many members of the dramatic profession, who, perhaps, because the Doctor preaches in a theatre have come to attend these services in considerable numbers."

The publisher of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is profoundly thankful to God that this effort has been so blessed. He is sure that every subscriber will rejoice with him that the journal's increase of prosperity, has enabled it to commence and sustain so grand a work, as this of opening that great building to the non-church-going thousands of New York. He hopes that every subscriber will regard himself as a partaker in the undertaking and will pray that its success may continue and increase.

The death of the French painter Meissonier is reported in a cable dispatch, received since the paragraph was written which appears, with his portrait, on the next page.

Bishop Fallows of the Reformed Episcopal Church, is laid aside by illness caused by overwork. He is suffering from nervous prostration, and absolute rest for a few weeks is necessary. All who know the good bishop and the value of his work, will pray for his speedy and complete restoration to health.

Rev. E. P. Telford's meetings at Charlestown, Mass., were exceedingly successful. There were large audiences and every night there were decisions for Christ. Mr. Telford began work at Hedding M. E. Church, Jersey City, N. J., on February 1.

Three Sunday Schools have been established in Alaska, by the Rev. Sheldon Jackson, during his five months' tour in that territory, from which he has just returned. The schools are to be controlled and supported by three distinct denominations. They are the Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Congregational Churches, each of which has charge of one school.

Rev. George C. Needham is lecturing each noon in Chicago on The Jewish Tabernacle, and preaching afternoons and evenings. The work in Immanuel Baptist Church is most encouraging. The evangelist, in addition to his evangelistic work, is the selected teacher for Moody's Bible Institute, during February. Dr. A. J. Gordon at present occupies the professor's chair.

A gratifying and spontaneous testimonial was received at this office last week from the Utah University, Ogden, U. T. The Rev. Samuel Small, D.D., A.M., President of the University, paid us a visit and delivered an official notification that, "in testimony of the eminent character of Louis Klopsch, A. M., (publisher of this journal) of his distinguished services to God and humanity," the Board of Directors had chosen him to be a member of the Board of Visitors of that institution.

The French Evangelical Church in New York, has for some time past been supporting a home for the use of French girls who come to New York seeking employment. Much good has been done by this means in protecting them from temptation, and helping them to obtain situations. During the past three years over eight hundred young women have had temporary shelter there. The good done encourages the managers to make an effort to render the institution permanent by purchasing the house now rented. Subscriptions for this praiseworthy object may be sent to Rev. Henri L. Grandlienard, 126 West 16th Street, New York.

Rev. H. Parrish, F. R. H. S., is holding services in the Sixteenth St. Baptist Church, New York, with many tokens of God's blessing. Dr. Pogson, the pastor of the church reports many conversions. Mr. Parrish belongs to the Primitive Methodist Church, and has done some excellent work in the Stepney district of London, England. Mrs. Parrish who is assisting her husband by holding women's meetings, and in the singing, is an experienced worker. She took up the famous Mrs. Reaney's work among the women of London, and proved an invaluable worker. Churches wishing to avail themselves of the visit of Mr. and Mrs. Parrish to this country may address them at 353 West Fourteenth Street, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Sudden Death of Secretary Windom—A Terrible Mine Explosion—Painter Meissonier ill—The Anti-Slavery Congress—The Fair and the "Force Bill," Etc.

A Frightful Explosion of Fire-Damp Occurred in the Mammoth Mine, No. 1, of the Frick Coke Company, near Youngwood, Pa., on the morning of Jan. 27th, resulting in the death of at least 130 miners, who were at work in three of the shafts. The main shaft leading to the mine is 110 feet deep. The mine is connected by interior workings with No. 2 mine, owned by the same company. No trace of the dreadful fire-damp had ever before been known in these mines, and for that reason the common coal-digger's lamp was used. Early on the 27th, the men went to work as usual. They went down in merry mood and worked until a few minutes past nine o'clock, when those above heard a noise like distant thunder and felt a trembling of the ground. A cloud of black smoke shot out of the mouth of the shaft of the Mammoth Mine to a great distance in the air. When it settled down, the workers began to pour out of the mouth of No. 2 Mine, and they, with the people above, ran toward the shaft of No. 1. All was silence below. A searching party went down and were appalled at the sight that met their gaze. Dead bodies lay in heaps, in various attitudes, some as though asleep, and others who seemed to have expired in agony, as the flame of the fatal damp had swept past them, scorching their poor bodies and often burning them beyond recognition. Not one man was taken out alive. The explosion had shattered the mine, and for a time it was feared that fire would add to the horrors of the calamity. The bodies were recovered with some difficulty, mutilated remains being scattered in every direction. The funeral of the victims took place on Sunday and was a sad and imposing spectacle. Many of the dead were buried at Scottsdale, where they formerly lived or had relatives.

The most stirring Political Event of the week, in some respects, was the defeat of Senator Ingalls of Kansas, by Judge W. A. Peffer, the Alliance candidate, for United States Senator, whose portrait appears in this column. Judge Peffer was born of German parents, in 1831, and was a farmer till 1850, when he went to California. He entered the army when the war broke out and, after its close, studied law. State Senator, editor, lawyer, and agriculturist, he is immensely popular with the masses in Kansas. He is a man of striking personal appearance, with strong, rugged features, and full flowing beard—the very opposite of Senator Ingalls, physically as well as mentally. He was never on the bench, but having served as Judge Advocate in the army, the title clung to him.

Patriotism and Politics have Somehow got sadly yet not unreasonably mixed together in connection with the World's Fair and the Force Bill. Several Southern and Western State Legislatures adopted resolutions that unless the Election Bill now before Congress were shelved and the threat of a "Force Bill" removed from Southern eyes, that section of the country would make no appropriation for the Fair. The New Jersey Legislature adopted a similar resolution. Indeed, so extensive was this threatened boycotting of the Fair by the politicians that had it been carried out it would have seriously imperilled the National show. When the Force Bill came up in the Senate, there was a great clash of arms and many strong speeches were delivered. On Monday, the 26th Jan., during the debate, a motion was made by Senator Wolcott of Colorado, to take up the Reapportionment Bill and, to the astonishment of all, it was carried, Senators Cameron, Jones, Stewart, Teller, Washburn and Wolcott—all Republicans—voting with the Democrats. This, together with the action of the various legislatures on the Fair appropriation, has gone far toward destroying the hopes of the supporters of the Election Bill.

Death Stopped the Banquet of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation at Delmonico's New York City, on the night of Thursday, Jan. 29th. Two hundred and fifty of the most distinguished men in the nation were seated at table, the diners were in the full tide of gastronomical and oratorical enjoyment, and brilliant speeches were being made. The Hon. William Windom, Secretary of the Treasury, had just finished a remarkably interesting and witty speech on the financial question, and as he sat down his face was wreathed in smiles at the applause his views had received. This was about ten o'clock. On one side of Mr. Windom sat President Ambrose Snow of the Board of Trade and Transportation, and on the other was grey-bearded Secretary Tracy of the Navy Department. Along the line of the table of honor, one could see such great men as Hon. Thomas F. Bayard, ex-Secretary of State under President Cleveland, Hon. Wilfred Laurier, of Canada, Hon. Murat Halstead, of Ohio, Gen. Stewart L. Woodford, Attorney-General Miller, and others equally distinguished. As Mr. Windom resumed his seat, he gasped suddenly and loudly and then slid off his chair to the floor, where he lay leaning against the chair with his eyes set and his pallid face wearing a ghastly expression of suffering. The guests forgot the feast, the speakers were silent, and all rose to their feet, conscious that something serious had happened. Secretary Tracy dashed some water in the face of the fallen man, and three physicians of the party raised him and carried him to an adjoining room, where every effort was made to revive him, but in vain. He had expired of apoplexy six minutes after being stricken. Gloom fell on the company and within a few minutes after the sad event, the banquet hall was deserted. The news of her husband's death was conveyed to Mrs. Windom while she was attending a reception at the home of Postmaster-General Wanamaker in Washington, by President Harrison in person. William Windom (whose portrait is given on this page) was born in Ohio, sixty-four years ago. He was educated at the common schools and studied law, being admitted to practice in 1850. The young attorney moved to Minnesota where he soon became an active Republican, and in 1858 was sent to the House of Representatives. He served ten years in that body, and in 1870 was appointed United States Senator to fill an unexpired term, being twice afterward elected. While Senator, he showed himself a master of financial legislation. In 1881, he was chosen by President Garfield for Secretary of the Treasury, and was soon acknowledged as the only man in the Cabinet who was able to oppose Mr. Blaine, then Secretary of State. The achievement by which he signalized his term of office was one of the most brilliant in financial history. The Government was paying five and six per cent. on the bulk of the public debt, though money was worth only three to four per cent. in the market. He announced that in three months he would pay off $202,000,000 of the debt bearing six per cent. interest, excepting any of the creditors who might in the interval offer to exchange their bonds for bonds bearing three and a half per cent. Similar measures were then taken with the $470,000,000 of five per cents., with a like result. He was re-appointed to the treasury portfolio by President Harrison.

The Anti-Slavery Congress Assembles in Brussels during the present week, and will be attended by delegates from all the European Governments as well as many ecclesiastical and philanthropic organizations. The Pope has taken a deep interest in it, and among those in attendance will be a number of French, Italian and German bishops, sent at his request. The object of the Congress is to secure the adoption of measures for the certain suppression of the slave trade in Africa, and to arrange for the enforcing of these measures by the Governments interested. The base of operations will be the Congo River, and the authorities of the Congo Free State will heartily co-operate.

English Statesmen and the British Press are again discussing the probabilities of Gladstone's resignation. The latter, however, maintains silence, although it is said to be well understood that, unless events take a turn more to his liking, the Liberal leadership will soon be vacant. One journal, the Chester Courant, claiming to possess authentic information, asserts that within the last two weeks, dissensions have arisen between Mr. Gladstone and his colleagues which nothing but withdrawal can heal.

Lovers of Art in This Country will Learn with regret of the serious illness of the famous painter, Jean Louis Meissonier, who is suffering at his home in Paris from bronchitis. M. Meissonier was born at France in 1815, and, going to Italy while still very young, devoted himself to the study of the painting of genre pictures, most of them representing a single figure. His extraordinary skill in detail has placed him foremost among painters of works of this character. After a hard struggle, prosperity came at last, and, in 1836, he found himself famous on the merits of a single picture, "The Chess Player." The story is told that he painted a portrait of Mrs. Mackay, wife of the California millionaire, which so displeased that lady, on account of the absence of all flattery, that she paid $15,000 for it and immediately destroyed it. A portrait of Meissonier is given in this column.

A GRACIOUS DISMISSAL.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

A Word of Sorrowful Import to the Woman—The Balm with the Bitterness—I. A Delightful Assurance—That She was Saved—Personally Given—To Her Direct—The Record Superior to the Voice—A Deliberate Statement—Illogical Doubts—II. A Considerate Precept—What She was to go From—The Cavillers—The Public Eye—What She was to go To—Her Home—Her Life Trial—Further Service—A Vision left for Duty—The Blessing of Holy Quiet—Foolish Conduct in a Bank.

"And he said to the woman, Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace."—Luke 7 : 50.

THE main part of my subject will be—that gracious dismissal, "Go in peace." To her who had been so lately blest, the word "Go," sounded mournfully; for she would fain have remained through life with her pardoning Lord; but the added words "in peace" turned the wornwood into honey—there was now peace for her who had been so long hunted and harried by her sins. Rising from the feet she had washed with tears, she went forth to keep her future footsteps such as those of a believing, and therefore saved, woman ought to be.

A Permanent Benediction.

Our Lord, in the instance before us, sent a penitent away from the chill atmosphere of self-righteous cavilling, and thus relieved her of a controversy for which she was not fitted; but I see more than that in this benediction. It looks to me as if our divine Master, when he found this poor sinner so full of love to him that she washed his feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head, having by a parable explained to the Pharisee the reason for the greatness of her love, then said to her, "Go in peace,"—meaning that word not only to be cheering for the necessary purpose of the moment, but to go with her, and to attend her all the rest of her life, until, when she came into the dark valley, she should fear no evil, for she would still hear that sweet voice saying, "Go in peace." What music to have heard! What music still to hear!

Now, I would to God that the word which I shall speak at this time might be honored of the Lord to serve that sacred purpose to some here present. May it be a life-word to certain of you! May it be to others of us who have long known the Saviour a revival of our rest, and may we get such a draught of peace from Jesus that we may never thirst again!

I. First, consider

A Delightful Assurance.

The ground upon which the penitent woman might go in peace was that she had been saved. The Saviour assured her: "Thy faith hath saved thee." She was not saved otherwise than we are saved; but she received the common salvation by like precious faith. The way of salvation to her was faith in Christ: there is the same way for us, but she had what some of you, no doubt, would greatly like to have: she had an assurance that she was saved from the Lord's own mouth. I think I hear some saying, "I should go in peace, I am sure, if the Lord Jesus would but appear to me, and speak, and say with his own lips, 'Thy faith hath saved thee.'" It is natural that you should think so; it must have been rapture to receive a benediction from the mouth of our King, our Saviour. Yet, dear friends, we must not hang our confidence upon a mere circumstance. For a mere circumstance it is, whether Christ shall literally stand before you in the flesh, and say, "Thy faith hath saved thee," or whether he shall say it to you by the record of his own Word.

It does not make much difference as to my faith in what my father says to me, whether I meet the venerable man in the morning in my garden, and there hear his voice, or whether I get a letter by post in his handwriting, and he says to me upon that paper just what he would have said if I had met him face to face. I do not require him always to come up the hill to my house to tell me everything that he has to say: I should think myself an idiot if I did. Now, what I would not do to my earthly father, I certainly would not do to my heavenly Saviour. I am perfectly satisfied myself to believe what he writes to me; and if it be so written in his Book, it seems to me to be quite as true and sure as if he had actually come from heaven, and had talked with me, or had appeared to me in the visions of the night. Is not this the reasoning of common sense?

"Well," say you, "we go with you there, but, then, he spoke that word

To Her Personally,

We should never have any more doubts, but should go in peace, if he said that word of assurance to us. You see, it is not merely that Jesus himself spoke, and said, 'Thy faith hath made thee whole,' but he looked that way; he turned towards her, and she knew that he referred to her. There was no mistaking to whom the assurance was given. Our Lord put it in the singular number, and said, 'Thy faith hath saved thee.' I want it to come home just so to me." Yes, but I think that this is a little unreasonable, too; is it not? Because if my father (to carry on my figure) were to speak to me, and to my brothers, and to my sister, and were to say, "Dear children, I have loving thoughts concerning you, and I have laid up in store for your needs," I do not think that I should say to him by-and-by, "Now, father, do you know that I did not believe you, or derive any pleasure from what you said, because you spoke to others beside myself?" I should be a most unreasonable kind of body if I were to talk in that way; and my father would begin to think that his son was qualifying for a lunatic asylum. Surely, it should not be less easy to believe that God would deal graciously with me in company with thousands of others than that he should pursue a solitary plan with me as the lone object of his love. Is it not so?

One of a Company.

"Ah, yes!" says one, "but you have not hit on it yet, I want to know that I am one that is in that plural, and I want to know that I really am one of those to whom Jesus speaks in his Word." My anxious friend, you must know it; and you may know it most certainly. It is written, "He that believeth on him hath everlasting life." It need never be a question whether you believe in him or not; if you trust him, that is the gist of the matter. You can readily ascertain whether you do really trust him, or do not trust him. If you do trust him, you are his, and every promise of his covenant is made to you.

It is most profitable for us that we should read our Lord's declaration over and over again, and put it in all sorts of shapes, and see how it remains evermore faithful and true. It is more assuring to you to find it in the volume of the Book than it would be if the Saviour met you to-night, and said to you, "Thy sins are forgiven thee. Thy faith hath saved thee."

The Record Excels the Voice.

If I were conscious to-night that, at some period of my life, I had seen the Lord, and that he had spoken to me, the very spot of ground on which it occurred would be exceedingly dear and sacred to my spirit; but I am certain that when I grew depressed, when darkness rushed over my soul, as it does sometimes, I should be sure to say to myself, "You never saw anything of the kind. It was a delusion, a figment of imagination, a delirium, and nothing more." But beloved, when I get to this Book, and see before me the sacred lines, I know that I am not deluded. There it stands, "God so loved the world, that he gave his Only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." I am sure about that, and I am sure that I believe, and therefore I am sure that I am saved.

We must either throw away this Book by beginning to talk about "degrees of inspiration" and all that foul rubbish, or else we are logically bound to be sure of our hope, and to rejoice in it. I warrant thee, O my hearer, that as long as thou standest fast by the belief that this is a sure Word of testimony, thou wilt know that thou are saved! You may doubt whether you believe or not; but given that you do really and unfeignedly put your trust in the Lord Jesus, that the cause of faith will be followed by its effect—salvation. "Thy faith hath saved thee: go in peace." Don't worry any longer: go in peace. Have done with questioning; end debate; go in peace. Go about your business, for the work of salvation is done. You are a saved soul: go and rejoice in finished salvation, and ask no more questions. "Wherefore criest thou unto me?" said God to Moses, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they go forward." Wherefore do you question and doubt any longer? Go forward to enjoy what God has prepared for you; and as you are saved and justified in Christ, now seek sanctification, and all the other blessings of the covenant of grace which lie before you in Christ Jesus your Lord.

II. We come, secondly, to hearken to ## A Considerate Precept.

Our Lord, with wise tenderness, dismissed the beloved object of his pardoning love, and bade her "Go in peace." This precept divides itself into two parts. There is, first, "Go," and then there is "Go in peace." Now, in "go" there are two things: to go from and to go to. Where was she to go from? First, she was to go from these quibblers. Simon and the Pharisees are as full of objections as a swarm of bees is full of stings. This was not a happy place for a childlike love to linger in. Her soul would have been among lions. Jesus seems to say, "Do not stay to be tormented by these cavillers. Thy faith hath saved thee; go. You have gained a great blessing; go home with it. Let these people argue with each other; you have a rich prize, take it out of the reach of these pirates." Oftentimes I believe that the child of God would find it to be his greatest wisdom, whenever he is in company that begins to assail his Lord, or to denounce his faith, just to go about his business, and let the scoffers have their scoffing to themselves. Some of us have thought it our miserable duty to read certain books that have been brought out against the truth, that we might be able to answer them; but it is a perilous calling. The Lord have mercy upon us when we go down into these sewers; for the process is not healthy!

I think that he meant, besides going away from the men, "Go into which you have unwillingly stepped." If our Saviour had been like some excellent people of the present day, he would have said, "Stand before all these men, and tell your experience. I shall require you to be at half-a-dozen meetings this week, and you must speak at every one of them." A splendid woman, was she not, who washed the Saviour's feet with tears, and wiped them with the hairs of her head? She might have exhibited her eyes and her hair, and told the gracious story. Who can tell but several would have been impressed by the narrative! The Saviour said to the woman—so excitable, for she was all that, as well as grateful—"Thy faith hath saved thee: go in peace." As much as to say, "There are certain of your own sex that you can speak to.

Away from Publicity

Find Some Poor, Fallen Woman

to whom you can quietly tell of my pardoning grace. But yours is a case in which the very beauty of your character will lie in the quietude of your future life. 'Thy faith hath saved thee.' That is enough for thee. Thou hast come upon the stage of action by that splendid act of thy love; but do not acquire the habit of winning publicity. Do not aspire to display thyself in a bold and heroic attitude, but go in peace." He almost seems to say, "Subside now into thy family. Take thy place with the rest of thy sisters. Adorn by thy future purity my doctrine, and let all men see what a change has been wrought in thee."

The difficulty with some people is that they are always wanting to practise the sublime. Alas! they often fail by just one step, and become ridiculous. They are always straining after effect; and, hearing of what has been done once, by one choice person, they must do it themselves, and they must keep on doing it. O my sister! there may come a time when you will have to speak for Christ, and speak openly before many; but to-morrow you had better go home, and see to the children, and make home happy for your husband. You will glorify Christ by darning stockings, and mending the socks of the little ones, quite as surely as by washing his feet with tears. You make a great mistake if you have not a piety which will take you into domestic life—which will help you to make the drudgery of life a divine service.

A Monk's Vision.

Do you not think that he even meant that she was now to cease from that singular fellowship with him that she had enjoyed? We must do that which the Master bids us do, as well as sit at his feet. I am tempted to tell a story which most of you must know concerning the famous man of God, who, in his cell, thought he saw the Lord Jesus, and under that persuasion he worshipped with rapt delight. But just then the bell at the convent-gate rang, and it was his turn to stand at the door, and deal out bread to the hungry. There was a little battle in his mind as to which he should do—tarry with his Lord, or go to hand out bread to the poor mendicants. At last, he felt that he must do his duty even at the cost of the highest spiritual bliss. He went and distributed the bread, and when he came back, to his great delight, the vision was still there, and a voice said to him, "If thou hadst stayed, I would have gone; but as thou hast gone, I have therefore stayed still to commune with thee." The path of duty must be followed, and no spiritual enjoyment can excuse us from it. Never offer one duty to God stained with the blood of another. Balance your duties, and let not one press out another. "Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace." Do not think that thou needest to be all day long at thy Bible, or all the evening at thy prayer. There is a time for everything.

Work at Home.

That leads me to speak of what she was to go to. It seems to me that the Saviour said, "Now go home. You have been a fallen woman: home is the place for you. Go home to your mother and father, or other relatives. Seek a home. Be domesticated. Attend to your own work. Whatever your place is, go to it. Leaving daily duty was the source of temptation; return to walks of usefulness, and habits of order, and this will be your safety. You will be less likely to be led away if you have work to occupy head, and heart, and hands."

Go forth to your further service: "Go in peace. There are some to whom you can tell of my love. Oh, how you will tell it! You that have washed my feet with your tears, go and shower those tears over fallen ones like yourself. Go use those eyes, that you may look my love right in their hearts as you are speaking to them. Go all your life in peace, and do for me all that I shall put in your way to do for me." That is what I think our Lord meant. Brethren, do not think of sitting here to enjoy yourselves; but go off, and glorify your Redeemer's name. Go!

Disregard Criticism.

Our Lord meant, "Go in peace" in reference to all the criticisms of all these people who have looked at you. Do not mind them. Do not trouble about them. What have they to do with you? It is enough for a servant if his master accepts him: he need not mind what others have to say about his service. Thy faith hath saved thee. Forget all the unkind things they have said, and do not trouble thy heart about the cruel speeches they may yet make. Go in peace, and be under no alarm as to upbraiding tongues.

And then I think he meant, "Go in peace about what thou hast done." I know the need of a word like that. I have preached the Gospel: I have thrown my whole soul into it; and after it is all over, I have felt bound to chide myself that I did not do much better as to style, or spirit, or length, or some other matter.

Oh, but if the master accepts it, one may go in peace about it! This woman had done a very extraordinary thing in washing Christ's feet with tears, and wiping them with the hairs of her head; and when she got away, she might have said to herself, "I wonder that I was so bold. Was I not immodestly conspicuous? How could I have done it! Have you not sometimes done a brave thing for Christ, and then afterwards felt just like that? So the Master says to this woman, "Go in peace. I have accepted thee and thy loving service. Do not trouble about what thou hast done. It is all sweet to me, and has a rich perfume of thy great love. Never fret about what you have done. You have done the right thing. Thy faith hath saved thee. Go in peace." I want us to have just that kind of peace—peace about what we have done for our Lord, even as we have peace about sin forgiven, and peace about human criticisms.

The last word I have to say is this: There are many poor souls who talk about coming to Christ, who are not yet saved; and they are always hearing about faith, and thinking of it, and yet they never do, in very truth, believe. Now, do not hear or debate any more about faith, but believe. Trust Jesus Christ, and think no more about your own trusting. Thou shalt think of it as a thing done, I mean, but not as a thing to be done.

Money Unclaimed.

Well, but I notice some say that they believe, but it is not believing, because if it were believing, they would "go in peace." A person comes to the bank with a cheque. He believes it to be honestly his, and the signature to be correct. He puts it down on the counter, and the clerk puts out the money. But see! The man does not take it! He stands and loafs about; and the clerk looks at him, and wonders what he is at. At last, when the person has been there long enough to wear the good man's patience out, the clerk says, "Did you bring that cheque to have the money?" "Yes, I handed it in." "Well, then, why do you not take the money, and go about your business?" If he is a sensible man, he delays no longer; nay, he would not have delayed so long. He takes the money, and departs in peace. Now, dear soul, if thou hast a promise from God—"He that believeth is not condemned," or "he that believeth hath everlasting life"—dost thou believe? Then take the blessing, and go about thy business. If you believe, you are saved: if you doubt that fact, you are rather an unbeliever than a believer. Take up your money, and go home. "O thou of little faith, wherefore didst thou doubt?" Trust Jesus! Thy faith has saved thee. Go in peace. The Lord help you truly to believe, for Jesus' sake! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Bleak Work Above the Clouds.*

ALMOST every one is familiar with the duties and the functions of the observers of the Signal Service. But on Mount Washington their duties are peculiar. Seven observations must be made daily. The recording-sheet of the anemometer must be changed at noon. Three of the seven observations must be forwarded in telegraphic cipher to the Boston station. Routine office work—letters received and sent—must have attention between times, and several blank forms must be filled with statistics. The battery and the wire of the telegraph plant must receive careful attention, and the matter of repairs is no inconsiderable one. The station on Mount Washington is the bleakest, and, with one exception, the coldest in the service. Three to four men, including a cook, are usually there, with one cat and one dog. Life would be very hard to bear there were it not for the click! click! click! of the telegraph instrument, which is the active connecting link with the world—the main-stay and hope of these recluses. And then flirtations with the world's operators is a necessity. A regular consternation occurs in camp when a storm breaks the wires and connection is lost. In such cases the observers risk their lives in storm and cold in search for the break, rather than be without the assurance of safety which the click seems to impart. The men live on as good food as can be. The larder is supplied in September, and the "refrigerator" (the top story of the observatory), is stocked at the same time. Meat and poultry are placed there already frozen, and they do not thaw "during the season." The water-supply comes from the frost-feathers. Care is taken that two or three barrels of these are stored in the back shed always, and a boilerful of them in a half-melted condition is ever upon the cook-stove. A water famine has been known to occur, when, from the oversight of the cook the supply of frost-feathers has been allowed to go down, or "poor weather for frost-feathers" comes along. A drink of this all-healing feather water can always be found on the stove, icy cold, if the cook attends to his duty.

*From Scribner's Magazine for February, which also contains articles on "David Livingstone," "Neapolitan Art," Etc.

Stanley's Greatest Achievement.

Livingstone did more, perhaps, than any other single man to fill up the blank which he found on the map of Africa at the beginning of his thirty years' wanderings; but he died and left unsolved the mystery of that mile-wide river that swept away northward past Nyangwe. The next white man that found himself standing on the banks of that mysterious river at Nyangwe, and wondering where it went to after it disappeared among the primeval forests, was Commander Cameron. Not long after Cameron, in October, 1876, Henry Stanley and his mongrel band of dusky and faithful followers found themselves face to face with the great problem at this same Nyangwe. Stanley was not the man to turn aside from such a magnificent problem, the one great mystery that now remained for solution in the Dark Continent. We all know the result. In eight months after leaving Nyangwe, Stanley had been able to trace down to the Atlantic the course of the Congo, one of the greatest rivers of the world, to place upon the map of Africa its most striking features; a river which is certainly destined to play a great part in the development of whatever resources Central Africa is able to produce.

A Typical Japanese Street Scene.

Next we turn into the "Ginza," the "Broadway" of the metropolis of Japan—a really fine thoroughfare, with paved sidewalks, tramways in the middle, and shops of a superior description. Here ebbs and flows the full business life of the city, and mingling with it, as elsewhere, the clattering patters, the mothers and sisters with the babies on their backs, the children kite-flying, the traders sitting over their glowing charcoal braziers; the hawkers of fish, dried radish, cakes, persimmons, toys, pipes, kites, and flags; the coolies with their balanced loads; the blind old samisen-players; the Buddhist priests; the pretty musmees with their hair like black marble and pigeon-feet; the imperturbable slit-eyed babies; the acquaintances meeting in the street and profusely bowing and saluting; the Japanese officers riding along, each with his betto, or groom; the flower-pedlars; the bullockmen; the bird-dealers; the tea-houses, the little funny house-fronts and opened interiors; the bath rooms, the temples, the stone-yards, the basket-works, the gliding rice-boats—tout le tremblement, in fact, of the wonderful and ever-interesting capital city of Japan.

Eating with Chopsticks.

Chopsticks, far from being awkward, are the most convenient as well as the cleanest table utensil, once the secret of their use is learned. It cannot be taught in words. There is an indescribable knack of fixing one stick firmly, and hinging the other with the first and second finger, so as to play exactly upon the fixed stick, which renders the little implements perfect for everything except, of course, juice or gravy and soup. You can even cut with them by inserting the points close together, and then forcibly separating them; and as for handiness and precision of grasp, in a little wager at this very restaurant, even I myself picked up with the hashi twenty-two single grains of rice in one minute from a lacquered tray, being beaten by a Japanese lady, whose swift skill dexterously conveyed as many as forty-nine.

The Opening of the First Japanese Parliament under the New Constitution.

OPENING THE FIRST JAPANESE PARLIAMENT.

(See Illustration.)

MUCH more significance attaches to the opening of the Japanese Parliament, a picture of which is here given, than such ceremonies have in other lands. It was the practical fulfilment of a pledge made by the Mikado or Emperor twenty-three years ago. At that time a revolution occurred in which the petty governors or Daimios were overthrown, and the Mikado Matsuhito became the supreme ruler of the empire, recovering the prerogatives exercised centuries ago by his predecessors.

The Mikado, on regaining the power formerly inherent in his office, promised the people a constitution. It speaks volumes for the patience of the people that they have waited nearly a quarter of a century for him to fulfil his promise. It would appear, however, that the years of waiting have not been wasted. The Mikado and his advisers have carefully studied the systems of government now operating in other lands. We cannot but admire the astuteness with which they have profited by the experience which has cost other nations years of labor and sanguinary struggles. The fierce conflicts through which France passed on the way to emancipation from the rule of the Bourbons and the Napoleons; the long years of blind groping and obstinate contention by which England gradually curtailed the prerogatives of the throne, and the vicissitudes of our own century's effort to reach true self-government, have been turned to account in providing Japan with a constitution adapted to the peculiar condition and character of her people.

Conservatives and radicals alike wonder at the skill with which the Mikado has protected his own rights while extending to the people all the power, which, in their stage of advancement, may be safely entrusted to them. There are, as in other systems, two houses of legislature. The upper house is a composite body. It has 252 members, of whom ten belong to the royal family, 139 are of various orders of nobility, 59 are men distinguished for learning or service to the State, and the remaining 44 are elected from among the highest tax-payers in the fifteen provinces of the empire. The Mikado, learning a lesson from the humiliating experience of England, grants the members a seat for life only, and does not make membership hereditary. The lower house consists of 300 members, elected by popular suffrage.

The interior arrangements of the legislative chamber are very similar to those of the Chambers of Deputies of the European Continental nations: there is nothing peculiarly Japanese, or Asiatic, in the architecture, the decorations, or the furniture. Our illustration is copied from a native journal in the Japanese language, printed and published at Tokio. The hall is simply painted, the walls of a ruddy terracotta hue, the galleries in white, grey, and gold; at the upper end is a raised platform, with a balustrade and two small flights of steps to it, and a curved tribune, or rostrum, for the member whose turn it may be to speak, above the reporters' table. The Mikado's throne, a gilded chair of State, with a small table on which are placed two pots of burning sticks of fragrant wood, is sheltered by a large canopy, hung with crimson silk.

This experiment of constitutional government will be watched with universal interest and with the best wishes of all liberty-loving people. Earnest prayers will also be offered by Christians of all nations, that this system of government may not be the only lesson the Japanese will learn from the experience of other peoples. As they have learned from western statesmen, how they may be politically free, so they may learn from the western missionaries now among them, how to be followers of him, who, if he make them free they will be free indeed.

THE REVIVAL IN TORONTO.

CHEERING news comes from Toronto, where Rev. C. H. Yatman has been holding services in the Metropolitan M. E. Church, a picture of which appears on the next page. Mr. Yatman went there on the last day of 1890, and took part in the watch-night service. The meetings commenced at once and, from the first, there was evidence of the presence of the Spirit. Soon it became necessary to hold two meetings a day, at each of which a large crowd gathered in the famous church. All classes were represented, but the most marked feature was the large number of wealthy business-men who were present. One after another, these men became concerned about their salvation and, by the blessing of God, were led to Christ. Dr. Simpson, of Paterson, N. J., who, at Mr. Yatman's request, went to help him in this promising field, says, that he saw merchants and business-men, some of them reputed millionaires, weeping over their sins and kneeling in earnest prayer for God's mercy. At the closing meeting held on January 26, Mr. Yatman gave a farewell address to the immense number of persons who had made profession of faith during his visit. Among these were one hundred young people from the Sunday school. Mr. Hooker, the pastor of the Church, says that the Metropolitan Church has had no such revival before in its history. Mr. Yatman is now on his way to Denver, Colo., where there are to be union meetings in Trinity Church.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

BY REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Continued from page 62.)

ONE evening during Nora's illness, Richard Mansford—or Mr. Magrath, as he was known in Settleworth—was standing at the gate of the "Hermitage," when he saw Gerald Towneley turn down a by-lane close by. He was walking in the shadow, and as it seemed to him there was a secret and surreptitious air about his movements that provoked his curiosity. In answer to his call, Phelim, who was in the garden, was soon by his side.

COUNT ITO,
President of the House of Peers.

"There is some one in the lane, Phelim. He has just turned the corner. Follow him, and tell me where he goes, and who he is, that is, if you know him."

"Sure, an' it's the young squire, sor," said the Irishman, after a brief glance down the lane, "an' it's afther no good that my gintleman is, I'll warrant."

"Mr. Magrath" was greatly stirred and perplexed concerning the fair young girl at the carpenters' cottage. The line he had adopted since his arrival in the neighborhood had been dictated by prudence and had been followed with the best of motives. He had a strong feeling now that he had made a blunder, and he determined if possible, to repair it by a redoubled watchfulness over Nora. To this end he was bent on getting at the real truth as to these assignations of hers with the young reprobate of Towneley Chase.

Phelim made a rapid pursuit, keeping in the shadow until emerging he met his man just where the light of a gas lamp shone full on face and features. The man was standing as if uncertain whether to go forward or return. Phelim passed him, giving him a full, broad look the while. The Irishman started, turned round, and looked again. The man scowled at him, and crossed the road. Said Phelim to himself as he sauntered slowly on, "Shure an' ever a bit is it the young squire. But I've seen my gintleman before; that I could swear. I've got his picture hung up here," said he, tapping his forehead; "but the name isn't unthornat he it."

He followed his quarry until the latter had passed the gate of the Hermitage. His master was still standing by the gate. "Well, Phelim," said his employer, "Is it Mr. Gerald Towneley?"

"Only in the gin'ral get-up av' him," said Phelim. "There's plenty av' Towneley about him to desave the eye in passing; but he's no more Gerald Towneley than he's my grandmother, who's been dead this twenty years, God rest her soul. The gin'ral height an' build av' 'em is just the same, an' more by token, the hair on the upper lips av' 'em must have come from the same shop, an' the gloves likewise. But I had a good look at him under the gas-light. The face is familiar, but I can't place it. Anyway I'll know the chap again if I sees him."

The subject dropped for the present. Phelim turned in and set about preparing supper.

The tenant of the "Hermitage" had much food for thought. "Phelim can't be wrong in his judgment," he said to himself. "Is this Nora's secret visitor? Who is it? What game is he playing?"

Meanwhile, Jasper Rawdon made his way by devious paths to the dingy quarters of Gabriel Grubb. Scarcely had he made his presence known to the principal spider in that region of cobwebs, than he was accosted by his co-partner in crime, who spoke in a tone of much vexation and alarm.

"What in the world have you been up to?" said Grubb. "I've a notion you've upset the apple-cart. It's my opinion that you had better clear off."

"Hallo;" said Rawdon, vexed at the tone his "friend" was taking, and still more vexed at the intimation that he was the only party in peril. "What's the matter?"

"Nora Mansford has been scared out of her seven senses by some fool who ought to know better," said Grubb. "She was found like a mad woman wandering through the mist and darkness of the night. She was brought home by George Appleton and that mysterious old meddler at the 'Hermitage.' Mrs. Appleton is nursing her, and they say that she knows more than anybody else what—"

Silence ensued; a long spell of it. Gabriel Grubb and Jasper Rawdon both knew that they were standing on the edge of a volcano, that the fires were quickening, and that the crust was thin. The attorney was wondering what it would cost him to buy the departure of his colleague, so as to save himself, or how to sell him so as to secure the same result. The convict was wondering how to replenish his exchequer so as to be in a position to seek fresh woods and pastures new, now that the Settleworth meadows were likely to prove barren.

The Metropolitan M. E. Church, Toronto.

"Who is that bearded old fellow at the Hermitage?" said Rawdon, breaking the long silence at last. "He looks a bit of a miser. How's he off for money, I wonder?"

"I can hardly make him out," replied Grubb; "but they say at York that he's a millionaire who has gone queer by the sudden accession 'o a pot of money, and that he daren't invest it for fear of losing it."

"It would be a kindness to take care of it for him," said Jasper Rawdon, with a low laugh. "We should certainly know what to do with it, shouldn't we?"

"Just so; but it is too risky a business, my boy," answered the attorney, dwelling on the "too" as though his only objection to share the booty was the peril attached to getting it. "Besides," he continued, in a significant tone, "I'm afraid you're already 'up a tree,'—"

"And where are you, Gabriel Grubb? If I have to go to destruction you'll have to show me the way!" said Rawdon, rising to his feet in wrath. "I can bear the rack if it's only for the pleasure of hearing you squeal."

So saying the dear friends parted company. Rawdon went out into night, and Gabriel Grubb locked himself in with a view to devising in quiet some plan for saving his own carcass from the wolves of retribution, whose menacing howl seemed already to fall upon his ear.

Out into the dark strode Jasper Rawdon; out into the fields, to pace the ground in solitude, and settle, if he could, what it was best to do. If Nora Mansford died, all his dreams of gold died, too. If she lived, still her secret was in somebody else's keeping; and she herself, halfdemented, and despairing—she was not to be depended on for an hour. Oh, if he only had money, a good supply, he might escape from the meshes of the net he had so strongly woven around himself. Money he must have under any circumstances. And why not? There was doubtless plenty at the Hermitage, and if Grubb was chicken-hearted he was quite able to manage that business by himself, and there would be no division of the swag.

That night the tenant of the Hermitage sat up late, thinking and planning. When he retired at last to bed, he could not sleep; he could but lie still and think.

In the middle of the night he heard a slight noise, the noise as of a saw or file moving with cautious and measured stroke. Hastily and quietly donning his dressing-gown, he stepped down stairs in stockinged feet, and followed the guidance of the sound till he came to a side door leading into the kitchen garden, a door that was seldom used. It was not light enough to let him see the motion of the little blade, but the slight noise continued and the silent watcher was assured that a burglary was intended.

Quickly and quietly he withdrew. He was a brave man and a strong one, a man without fear. He had determined to let the man effect an entrance and then to secure him with a view of handing him over to the authorities, and of saving others from such untimely visitations. He soon apprised the faithful Phelim of what was going on, and in a few moments that honest henchman, "good at need," was at hand with his favorite weapon, the "Tipperary staff" for offence or defence as the case might be. His master armed himself with a pistol, the same that had done duty in the defence of Ooramarra, and a stout cudgel, and then silently stood in a small recess to watch and wait.

The saw was evidently in the hand of an expert, and very soon an opening was made; a panel of the door was displaced. After that the burglar was enabled partially to insert his body; thus he could draw the upper and lower bolts, and then let himself in through the open door. He did not close it after him, but proceeded along the passage, and turned into the dining-room; through the dining-room he passed on to a small room which was used as a library. Here the tenant of the "Hermitage" kept his cash—a considerable sum, too, for he had no banking account at Settleworth.

The burglar found the door locked. He did not seem at all surprised, but began again to manipulate with a gimlet previous to the insertion of his thin steel saw. "Mr. Magrath" began to think that the saw had had enough to do, so stepping forward, he seized the intending robber round the waist, pinned his arms tightly to his side, and flung him backward on the carpeted floor.

Muttering an emphatic malediction the man struggled desperately to loose his right arm; and, despite his opponent's great strength, would have succeeded but for the intervention of Phelim. The Irishman, with his customary readiness, had come to the fray provided with a good stout rope, and bound him as tightly as a running noose and a strong grip made possible. There was nothing for it but to submit.

"Don't murder me!" the rascal cried. "I know it's all up with me. Look, there's a knife in my side pocket. You can take it; I can do no more."

Master and man were inclined to call him coward as well as thief. "Let him get up, Phelim. Slacken the fellow's bonds a little," said Magrath.

As soon as the cord was loosened the burglar pulled out his hand, drew a pistol from his breast pocket, and fired at the Irishman, whom he regarded as the more formidable adversary of the two. The aim was true and deadly, and would have settled all Phelim's earthly affairs for him effectually. His master, however, never took his eye off their prisoner. He saw the dire intent, and struck the pistol arm upward with his cudgel. The bullet found a place, not in honest Phelim's heart, as was intended, but in the ceiling of the room, affording proof positive of the murderous design.

"Och, darlint!" quoth Phelim, flinging himself on the burglar, and gripping him as in a vice." If that's what you're after, sure you'll be better kept. The cord was now used with more judgment, and the man was effectively fettered, and as "harmless," as Phelim put it, "as a shillaly with the nob an' the handle gone."

He was now conducted to the sitting-room, a light was produced and the "double" of Gerald Towneley stood confessed. In a moment the Irishman, seized by a sudden inspiration, loosed and lifted the flapped cap which seems the favorite head-gear of the burglar fraternity, brushed his hand across his forehead, and revealed an ugly scar above the temple, which it was evidently a part of its owner's hair-dressing operations to keep hidden from public view, "Phelim Magrath, his mark!" shouted the Irishman, triumphantly; "sealed, signed, and delivered at Ooramarr Farm! I thought I knew yer ugly face." Then did Jasper Rawdon turn livid with apprehension and surprise. He stared at the speaker in silent terror.

"Yes, in truth, it is surprisin'," said Phelim. "Your black heart an' murderin' hands put the rope round your neck at last. Do you know who that is, you dirty, foul-hearted spalpeen?" So saying, Phelim pointed to his master, who was standing silently in the shadow regarding the rascal with wrath and repugnance. When he stepped forward and stood upright in the full light of the lamp, Rawdon cried in horror, "Richard Mansford! Risen from the dead!" and as if to show that even in Jasper Rawdon there was a limit to human deviltry, he turned ghastly white and sick with fear and awe.

"Yes," was the reply, "it is Richard Mansford, whom you shot at in hope to kill, and who lives to avenge his brother's blood!—that brother who lies in his grave at Ooramarr, with the wound made by your dagger in his heart!"

Now, indeed, the double-dyed villain knew that the game was up. His devilish hardihood for the nonce forsook him utterly. He seemed to be surrounded and confronted with all the rascality of his life, and with all the murdered victims who had fallen by his hand. And so he collapsed, and would have fallen, had not Phelim Magrath upheld him and placed him in a chair.

Then he began to whimper and to appeal for pity. Then a ray of hope crossed the black horizon of his midnight sky, as he intimated that he knew where the original deeds of the Hazelcroft estate were—could give information about—

"Silence!" thundered Richard Mansford. "I cannot make terms with a red-handed villain. If you have anything to confess, out with it, or else keep silence, for fear that I forget that you are a man, and in my anger and contempt shoot you down as if you were a dog!"

Convinced that he had nothing to hope for on those lines, and that unconditional surrender and a clean breast were likeliest to serve his turn, Rawdon blurted out the secret of the deeds, compromised Gabriel Grubb, acknowledged the design to fleece Hardale, and was proceeding to speak of Nora.

"Hold!" said Richard Mansford. "Don't soil the maiden's name by passing it through your evil lips. I suppose you are the cause of all her grief."

Rawdon hung his head like the felon that he was, half essayed to speak, and then lifted a furtive look at the man whom he had so foully wronged.

"Out with it!" said Richard, "I see there's something infernal yet to come. Out with it!"

Then at last the wretch confessed that he had personated the dear girl's dead father, and had burdened her life, and closed her lips with a horrible secret that was eating out her very heart.

It was as much as the shocked and astonished listener could do to refrain from felling him to the ground. "Poor child!" he said. "Poor child! Living on the rack, and suspected of wrong at the very time she was being tortured by a lie!"

He paced the room to and fro in a perfect tempest of excitement. The grey dawn of the morning was peeping at the window, and when he saw it, he turned to Phelim Magrath, and said:

"I cannot wait, Phil, I cannot wait. Go and fetch Abram Hardale. He's an early riser, and by the time you get there you can do your errand. Call at the constable's as you come back, and tell him to bring his handcuffs, and take this rascal to the Round House. Be quick!"

In the course of an hour or so the old carpenter was standing in the unfamiliar precincts of the "Hermitage." In his presence the burglar kept his head down, and seemed loth to look him in the face.

"Hardale," said Richard, speaking hotly, as though he could not get calm again after hearing the diabolical confession he had listened to; "Here's the author of your niece's anguish and distress! He has made her believe that he is her father, that he might the more successfully rob her and you. It is a wicked lie. I saw her father buried, and can find his grave. You can read the truth of what I say in his hang-dog face. Tell him it's a lie!" he shouted, striding up to Rawdon, with clinched hand and face quivering with wrath. Rawdon involuntarily lifted his head, startled by the tones of thunder and the menacing advance.

"It's a lie," said he, and said no more.

By this time the constable had appeared upon the scene. His movements, like all the rest of his fraternity of that day, were slow, but they were fairly sure. The handcuffs were duly placed, and in somewhat pompous fashion, staff in hand, and with true official stride, he marched his prisoner out of the "Hermitage," along the road and through the town to the Round House, as the House of Detention was called, previous to bringing him in the due course of events before the bench of magistrates for final committal to the York assizes.

(To be Continued.)

The Superior

remedy for all diseases originating in impure blood;
the

MEDICINE

which may always be relied upon to give the best satisfaction, is

AYER'S
Sarsaparilla
Cures others, will cure you

IF those 200,000 ESTEY ORGANS were placed on top of each other they would make a very high column. To realize how high take Mt. Everest, the highest mountain in the world, 29,000 feet high; put on top of that the highest mountain peaks of Bolivia and Chili, about 23,000 feet; on top of that the highest peaks on the east coast of Africa, about 20,000 feet; on top of that place Mt. Popocatepetl, 18,000 feet; on top of that place Mt. Orizaba, the twin of Mt. Popocatepetl, 18,000 feet; on top of that put Mt. St. Elias, also about 18,000 feet; on top of that Mt. Blanc, the highest of the Alps, 15,732; on top of that the highest peaks of the Pyrenees, about 11,000; on top of that the highest mountains of Georgia, about 6,703; on top of that Mt. Washington, 6,285; on top of that the highest mountains of Australia, 7,000 feet; and all of these great and wonderfully high mountains of the world, placed one on top of another, would only make a mountain peak less than one fifth of the height of the 200,000 ESTEY ORGANS.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

100 Doses One Dollar

Every ingredient employed in producing Hood's Sarsaparilla is strictly pure, and is the best of its kind it is possible to buy. All the roots and herbs are carefully selected, personally examined, and only the best retained. So that from the time of purchase until Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared, everything is carefully watched with a view to attaining the best result. Why don't you try it?

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.

Dropped on Sugar, Children Love to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Mar 6 - 110
Mar 8 - 112
Mar 10 - 114
Mar 12 - 116

GAIN
ONE POUND
A Day.

A GAIN OF A POUND A DAY IN THE CASE OF A MAN WHO HAS BECOME "ALL RUN DOWN," AND HAS BEGUN TO TAKE THAT REMARKABLE FLESH PRODUCER,

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL WITH Hypophosphites of Lime & Soda IS NOTHING UNUSUAL. THIS FEAT HAS BEEN PERFORMED OVER AND OVER AGAIN. PALATABLE AS MILK. ENDORSED BY PHYSICIANS. SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS. AVOID SUBSTITUTIONS AND IMITATIONS.

How many murmur at their surroundings who might brighten them by the use of

SAPOLIO.

Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap used for all cleaning purposes. Try it.

VanHouten's Cocoa

"BEST & COES FARTHEST." The purest, most soluble—the original cocoa. Invented, patented and made in Holland. Delicate, stimulating, nutritious, much better for the nerves than tea and coffee. Ask for VAN HOUTEN'S, take no other. [61]

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school, science lessons, stories, games, occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers and mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 161 LaSalle St., Chicago.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address. CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

$100.00 will be paid new contributors of short articles to Phenological Journal. 1st prize, $50. Journal containing full particulars, 15 cts. Fowler & Wells Co., H., 777 Broadway, New York.

DYSPEPSIA. Advice sent free to any address. Food to eat. Food to avoid. John H. McAlvin, Lowell, Mass. 14 years City Treas

AFRICAN NATIVES BECOMING TEACHERS.

A SOUTH African missionary goes out in the cool of the evening to meditate; he is sitting on the bullock-wagon enjoying for a few minutes the quiet beauty of the scene. Presently he catches sight of two figures wearily crossing the plain on the other side of the river, in which, alas, no water can be found now. Soon they emerge from its dry bed, and seeing the missionary by the wagon, joyfully approach him, sure of a welcome, and respectfully salute him with 'Good-day, master.' 'Good-day, boys; where do you come?' 'From Kimberly, master!' 'Kimberly! that is a long way off. Where are you going?' 'We want to stay here, master!' 'But this is not your home, and we are already crowded. Where do your friends dwell?' 'Across the Zambesi, master!' 'Why, then, do you wish to tarry here?' 'We want to be taught by you, master! We were heathens when we went to Kimberly, but we are Christians now; and we desire to teach our own people about Jesus, but we don't know enough yet; so we want to stay here and learn.' They then handed a letter to the missionary from the missionary at Kimberly, the result of which was that he agreed to allow them to stay, they promised to support themselves whilst there.

18881889

1885188218871878

1890

See it grow! You won't have to look back far. 1877 was the year when Pearline started in to take charge of washing and cleaning. It was a new idea; people didn't know about it; when they did find out, they were afraid of it.

But look at it now. Every year has been a big advance on the year before — and 1890 a bigger advance than ever. It's the biggest year, against the biggest opposition—smooth-tongued peddlers to fight against, cheap prices and poor quality, prize packages, imitations of all sorts. But Pearline started ahead and has kept there—and now it's farther ahead than ever.

A poor thing can't grow like this. A dangerous thing can't. Find out for yourself why Pearline grows. Ask about it of some one who is using it.

Beware of peddlers and imitations. JAMES PYLE, New York.

"

70 years young

"

Said the hale old poet, when questioned about his age.

Attesting in himself the truth
That robust age means well lived youth.

Compound Oxygen makes a man feel young again. Does this naturally; for Compound Oxygen is a concentration of nature's ozone. It is charged with electricity. It is readily seen what will be the result of an inhalation of such vitalized nourishment. Disused air cells expand again into activity. You feel like breathing from the top to the bottom of both lungs—something that but few of us do—and you regain strength in the most simple and direct way possible. Another strong point—Compound Oxygen is liberated from the inhaling apparatus by heat. You put the inhaler in a tin cup of hot water—and breathe it—at once a warm oxygenated vapor gets to the lungs and you feel the genial glow from head to foot.

A Book of 200 pages that tells all about it, and gives the signed indorsement of many well known men and women, will be sent Entirely Free of Charge to any one who will address

Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.
120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal. 58 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

B

O

T

A

N

Y

The A B C of Botany. In taking up this fascinating study, Teachers cannot do better than consult the A. B. C. (American Book Company's) Catalogue, which contains ALL A. B. C. THE BEST Botany Texts now published. Such well-known educators and scientists as Bentley, Coulter, Gray, Goodale, Herrick, Hooker, Steele, Wood, and Youmans have contributed to the books of this popular and attractive list, which will be sent free, postpaid, to any address on application to the American Book Company,

NEW YORK CINCINNATI CHICAGO.

Please mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Agents Wanted to sell our NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK.
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.
American Pub'g Co. Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. Louis.

THIS BRIGHT NEW 1891

needs the brightest and best of music. The 2,000,000 readers of this ad. are all invited to provide themselves with music or music books from our complete and varied stock.

Send freely for lists and information.

SOME OF OUR NEWEST BOOKS.

Songs of Ireland. $1.00. Choice, revised collection of very favorite songs. 66 songs. 144 pages.

Potter's Responses and Sentences. 75 cts.; $6.75 doz. A timely and good collection, which will be welcomed by many choirs. More than 50 short pieces, with a number of Glorias, Chants, &c.

Prayer and Praise. Cantata. Ballard. A good and easy cantata, for a choir or Chorus. 50 cts.; $4.50 per dozen.

Masonic Ode. Fithian. A new, most convenient book of easy and good music, perfectly fitted for the masonic ritual. Much needed. 60 cts.; $6 doz.

Comic and Minstrel Songs. $1.00. 46 merry songs, well calculated to make time pass cheerfully.

Banner Folio. Violin and Piano. Winner. Large number of popular melodies, skillfully arranged for Violin, with Piano accompaniment. $1.00.

Mandolin and Piano Duets. Winner. About 75 popular airs for Mandolin & Piano. $1.00.

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

If You Play the Organ

Send to cts. for copy of "THE ORGAN." Contains 24 pages choice MUSIC, also suitable for Piano. Each book complete. Published bi-monthly at $1 a year.

10 ANTHEMS Samples for 20c.
5 CAROLS and Services " 10c.
G. Molineux, 10 E. 14th St., N. Y.

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT

PROF. RICE'S SELF-TEACHING SYSTEM. All can learn music without the aid of a teacher. Rapid, complete. Entitled 12 Years, Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, Harmony. Send stamp for Music Journal. Circulars free. Address G. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 243 State St., Chicago.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

THE CHORAL UNION, by Dr. H. R. PALMER, contains the most comprehensive and successful method of teaching the art of Reading and Singing Music at Sight.

Common Sense Music Reader, by Dr. PALMER and Prof. SCHAUFFLER. Adapted for use in Public Schools, etc. Price, for each of the above, $6 per Doz.; 60c. each by mail.

Sterling Gems, by T. E. PERKINS and H. P. MAIN. For Day Schools. Teachers and Scholars will enjoy this book. Price, $4.50 per Doz.; 50c. each by mail.

A full Catalogue of our other popular publications sent on request.

81 Randolph Street, Chicago. THE BICLOW & MAIN CO., 76 East Ninth St., New York.

INDIA AND CHINA SILKS

In our Basement Salesroom we have placed on sale Figured India and China Silks, 23 and 27 inches wide, in 100 new and choice designs, at 50c., 65c., and 75c. per yard.

Also a full assortment of Plain India Silks, in all the newest tints:

22 inches Wide, 45c. per yard.
24 " " 65c. " "
27 " " 75c. " "

And exceptional value in complete lines of Black and Colored Surahs from 50c. to 85c. per yard.

James McCreery & Co
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

WASTE
Embroidery Silks.

Factory Ends at half price; one ounce in a box. All good silk and good colors. Sent by mail on receipt of 40 cts.; 100 crazy stitches in each package. Latest and best book on Art Needlework, only 10 cents. A beautiful assortment chenille and arrasene; 15 new shades in each for 50 cts. Send postal note or stamps to THE BRAINARD & ARMSTRONG SPOOL SILK CO., 625 Broadway, New York, or 631 Market St., Philadelphia, Pa.

For the names and addresses of 10 ladies interested in Art Needlework we will send one book free.

Send for Rules for crocheting Gent's Four-in-Hand Neck Tie.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.
DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885 1885-1886

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Gracelul and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.

Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

SUPERB ANTHEMS, by H. P. DANKS. A collection of new Anthems, etc. Diamond Collection. A complete choir collection. 64 pages, large octavo. By same author.

Festival Anthems, by H. P. DANKS. 64 large pages. For Easter and other joyous occasions. Price for each of the above, 35c. by mail; $3.60 per Doz. by Express.

Sterling Anthems, by H. P. MAIN and B. C. UNSOLD. Over 100 Anthems from the popular books. $6.00 per Doz. by Express; by mail, 60c. each.

A PRAYER.

I ASK not for wealth, but power to take
And use the things I have aright;
Not years, but wisdom that shall make
My life a profit and delight.

I ask not that for me, the plan
Of good and ill be set aside;
But that the common lot of man
Be nobly borne and glorified.

I know I may not always keep
My steps in places green and sweet,
Nor find the pathway of the deep
A path of safety for my feet.

But pray, that when the tempest's breath
Shall fiercely sweep my way about,
I make not shipwreck of my faith
In the unfathomed sea of doubt;

And that, though it be mine to know
How hard the stoniest pillow seems,
Good angels still may come and go,
About the places of my dreams,

I do not ask for love below,
That friends shall never be estranged;
But for the power of loving, so
My heart may keep its youth unchanged.

Youth, joy, wealth—Fate I give thee these;
Leave faith and hope till life is past;
And leave my heart's best impulses
Fresh and unailing to the last.

—Phoebe Cary.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

All derangements of the kidneys and liver, pains in the back, tired feelings, and weakness, are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. This medicine is purely vegetable. It is sold by all druggists.

For severe colds, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment surely excels any remedy we ever used.

Unlike any other, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is for internal as much as external use.

THEY BRIGHTENED HER LIFE.

A GIRL with a spinal complaint, who was obliged to spend all her life on a sofa, had four brothers. The eldest was a very tall, strong fellow, who took the lead amongst his friends in boating and cricket. "Harry," asked a companion, "how did you develop such splendid muscles?" "Well," said Harry, "I have a little crippled sister at home, and I'm the only one in the house who can lift her from one room to another, without giving her the slightest pain. I take plenty of exercise, and keep up my strength for her sake." The second brother, Fred, played the piano and violin very well, and once a friend asked him why he gave so much time to his music. "The fact is," said Fred, "I've an invalid sister at home, and it gives her such pleasure to hear me play, that I learn all the new music I can, for her sake." The third brother was clever with his brush, and when he went for a walk over the heath-covered hills, or by the rushing mountain stream in the valley below, he would take out his paints and make a sketch, and when he returned home he would sit by the side of his little sister and by means of the sketch describe to her the beauties of nature, that she had never seen. The fourth brother was always reading, and he used to cull a little story from his books to tell his sister. How her sad life must have been brightened by the kindness of these good brothers! What was it that made them so thoughtful to give her pleasure? Love and pity. They saw her weakness and pity made them use their strength and talents for her sake. It was just so with the Lord Jesus. He saw how we were lost, and that no one but himself could help us. Our helplessness, our misery, drew pity from his loving heart, and so he came here as a baby, that he might live amongst us and save us. (Rom. 5: 6.)

THE CAPTIVE EAGLE.

THE Rev. John McNeil says in a sermon published in The Signal: "I met a man to-day who told me of a friend of his who had an eagle. He had caught it when it was young, alive and unwounded, and had kept it and fed it and brought it up and tamed it as far as it could be tamed. He had kept it shut in and domesticated. But he was going to emigrate to the other side of the world, and he thought where would he bestow his eagle. There was no use in taking it away. And then he thought, Well, I will bestow it on nobody. I will give the eagle its freedom; and he opened the hen-house where he kept the eagle—(Oh, there is a kind of sermon in it; there are a lot of eagles living in hen-houses)—he opened it and he took the bird up and set it in his back garden, and to his great disappointment, did not fly. It went about very likely enjoying the wee bit bigger walk that it had, but it did not fly, so he actually lifted it and put it upon the garden wall, and it looked down, and he began to be a little sad and sorry, and wished that he could have talked to the bird, and told it what the poet said about it, and how it is the symbol of freedom and of power to soar into the very eye of the sun. But suddenly, he said, a cloud that had been there passed away, and a burst of warm bright light came out, and the eagle looked up. Could it remember the days of its youth? It gathered itself together, and it lifted up one wing, and stretched it out, and it lifted up the other, and then with a scream, away it went, and it was soon a mere mote far away in the blue heavens. That is what faith does to the soul that gets quick touch with God. All the chains are broken. The prison door is opened, and everyone's bands are loosed. 'They that wait on the Lord mount up with wings as eagles.'"

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A SPECIAL AND SELECT EXCURSION
of Clergymen and Laymen to

EGYPT and PALESTINE,

under the arrangements of

THOS. COOK & SON,

Will leave New York, Feb. 18th and March 11th. Illustrated descriptive programme and further particulars may be obtained of the organizers, Rev. KITTREDGE WHEELER, Hartford, Conn., or Rev. R. B. HULL, DD., 448 9th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

AGENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly. Should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PUBLISHING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

CLEANSSES PRESERVES BEAUTIFIES

RUBIFOAM

FOR THE TEETH

25¢
SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS

We Sell Direct to Families

AND MAKE IT EASY FOR YOU TO BUY OF US NO MATTER WHERE YOU LIVE.

Yes, my dear, my Marchal & Smith Piano is a beautiful instrument. The tone is so sweet and pure, the action so fairy-like, and the finish so elegant that not another thing can I wish for. I wrote to the factory, and told them just what I wanted, and they selected it and sent it to me for trial, agreeing to take it back and pay all the freight if I did not like it. But I could not be better suited if I had a thousand to choose from. My dear, when you want a Piano or an Organ send for their catalogue.

PIANOS ORGANS

$150 to $1500. $35 to $500.

THE MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 EAST 21st STREET, NEW YORK.

Three Great Books FOR RELIGIOUS READERS.

Dr. Strong's Our Country.

More than 130,000 sold. Paper 25 cts. cloth 50 cts.

One of the most powerful books that have come from the American press during the present century. It portrays America's material, social and religious condition and tendency, and points out the perils which threaten her future. The wide circulation of this book has given an extraordinary impulse to the work of holding America for the highest political, social and religious, national life.

"Words are feeble in the recommendation of this book."—Pulpit Treasury.

Dr. Pierson's Crisis of Missions.

Paper, 35 cents, cloth $1.25.

"One of the most important books to the cause of Foreign Missions, and through them, to Home Missions also, which ever has been written. It should be in every library and every household. It should be read, studied, taken to heart and prayed over."—Congregationalist.

Dr. Cuyler's How to be a Pastor.

Cloth, 75 cents.

"The fruit of large native sense, long experience, wide observation, and devout consecration."—Congregationalist.

"If any man living understands the subject of this little book it is Dr. Cuyler."—Independent.

"Ought to be read by all pastors, young or old."—N. Y. Tribune.

Send for our list of books for practical Christian Workers.

The above books mailed postpaid on receipt of price by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers.

740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 1-2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

HARTSHORN'S SELF-ACTING SHADE-ROLLERS

Beware of Imitations.
NOTICE
AUTOGRAF
OF HARTSHORN'S ON LABEL AND GET THE GENUINE HARTSHORN.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Waulrich & Co (on every label), Pulmer, Mass.

CHRISTIAN WORK IN Mexico.

Contributions in aid of Christian work in Mexico are very much needed, and can be sent to the address of Bishop H. C. RILEY, care of J. P. HEATH.

43 Bible House, New York

CARMEL SOAP is made only from sweet Oil by a Mission Society in Palestine. Being ABSOLUTELY PURE and possessing the emollient property of Olive Oil, it is unsurpassed for the Toilet and Bath, and superior to all other soaps for the Teeth and Hair. It is the only perfectly safe soap for the NURSE and Invalids. If your druggist or grocer does not keep it, send 15 cents for sample cake to the importer, A. KLIPSTEIN, 52 Cedar St., New York.

BAILEY'S Compound light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS. A wonderful invention for lighting Churches, Halls, Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price list free. BAILEY REFLECTOR CO. 708 Penn Ave. Pittsburgh, Pa.

METAL CEILING

BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores and Residences.

H. S. NORTHPROP,
18 Rose Street, New York

PRINTING OUTFIT.

A WHOLE PRINTING OUTFIT, COMPLETE, PRACTICAL & PERFECT. Just as shown in cut. 3 Alphabets of best Type, Bottle of Indelible Ink, 100 Twocents, in neat case with catalogue and directions "HOW TO BE A PRINTER." Sets up any name, prints cards, paper, envelopes, etc., marks 100 words free. BEWARE of cheap COUNTERFEITS. Postpaid only $25. 3 1/2 for $1. Agents wanted. INGERSOLL & BROS., 65 CORTLANDT ST. N. Y. CL.

A LADY WANTED IN every Town to WOMAN'S HAND BOOK

Just issued. Quick Sales. Big Profits. Home Circ'lrs Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York

EGGS

FANCY POULTRY TO VARIETIES. Ten years experience. Price List Free. No catalogue. Pigeons—Blue, Fan and Red Jackson. J. L. MOCK, 1347 S. HIGH ST., COLUMBUS

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV, No. 6.
Office, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

THE SHEIK IN CHARGE OF JEREMIAH'S GROTTTO, NEAR JERUSALEM, THE SUPPOSED SITE OF CALVARY.

THE SNOW.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE LAST SUNDAY.

The Snow-Crowned Mountains of Palestine—Job's Microscopical Investigation—What the Snow Meant to Two Boys—God in the Littles—The Realm under the Thumb—The Snow's Accumulated Power—Stops Traffic and Communication—A Tragedy on the Alps—Demoralized Napoleon's Army—The Power of Insignificant Workers—Their Recognition and Reward in Heaven—The Usefulness of Sorrow—The Snow's Cleansing Power—The Bell-Crowned Guiding Posts in the Scotch Snow Drifts.

"Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?"
Job 38 : 22.

GROSSLY maligned is the season of winter. The spring and summer and autumn have had many admirers, but winter, hoary-headed and white-bearded winter, hath had more enemies than friends. Yet without winter the human race would be inane and effortless. You might speak of the winter as the mother of tempests; I take it as the father of a whole family of physical, mental and spiritual energies. The most people that I know are strong in proportion to the number of snow-banks they had to climb over, or push through, in childhood, while their fathers drove the sled loaded with logs through the crunching drifts high as the fences. At this season of the year when we are so familiar with the snow, those frozen vapors, those falling blossoms of the sky, those white angels of the atmosphere, those poems of the storm, those Iliads and Odysseys of the wintery tempest, I turn over the leaves of my Bible and—though most of it was written in a clime where snow seldom or never fell—I find many of these beautiful congelations. Though the writers may seldom or never have felt the cold touch of the snowflake on their cheek, they had in sight two mountains the tops of which were suggestive. Other kings sometimes take off their crowns, but Lebanon and Mount Hermon all the year round and through the ages never lift the coronets of crystal from their foreheads. The first time we find a deep fall of snow in the Bible is where Samuel describes a fight between Benaiah and a lion in a pit; and though the snow may have crimsoned under the wounds of both man and brute, the shaggy monster rolled over dead and the giant was victor. But the snow is not fully recognized in the Bible until God interrogates Job, the scientist, concerning its wonders, saying: "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?"

I rather think that Job may have examined the snow-flake with a microscope; for, although it is supposed that the microscope was invented long after Job's time, there had been wonders of glass long before the microscope and the telescope of our days were brought of. So long ago as when the Coliseum was in its full splendor, Nero sat in the emperor's box of that great theatre, which held a hundred thousand people, and looked at the combatants through a gem in his finger-ring which brought everything close up to his eye. Four hundred years before Christ, in the stores at Athens, were sold powerful glasses called "burning spheres," and Layard, the explorer, found a magnifying glass amid the ruins of Nineveh, and in the palace of Nimrod. Whether through magnifying instrument or with unaided eye, I cannot say, but I am sure that Job somehow went through the galleries of the snowflake and counted its pillars and found wonders, raptures, mysteries, theologies, majesties, infinities walking up and down its corridors, as a result of the question which the Lord had asked him, "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?"

Oh, it is a wondrous meteor! Humboldt studied it in the Andes twelve thousand feet above the level of the sea. De Saussure revelled among these meteors in the Alps and Dr. Scoresby counted ninety-six varieties of snowflake amid the Arctics. They are in shape of stars, in shape of coronets, in shape of cylinders, are globular, are hexagonal, are pyramidal, are castellated. After a fresh fall of snow, in one walk you crush under your feet Tuilleries, Windsor Castles, St. Paul's, St. Peter's, St. Mark's Cathedrals, Alhambras and Sydenham Palaces innumerable. I know it depends much on our own condition what impression these flying meteors of the snow make. I shall not forget two rough and unpretending wood-cuts which I saw in my boyhood side by side: one picture of a prosperous farmhouse with all signs of comfort, and a lad warmly-clothed looking out of the door upon the first flurry of snow, and his mind no doubt filled with the sound of jingling sleigh-bells, and the frolic with play-fellows in the deep banks, and he, clapping his hands and shouting: "It snows! It snows!" The other sketch was of a boy, haggard and hollow-eyed with hunger, looking from the broken door of a wretched home, and seeing in the falling flakes prophecy of more cold and less bread and greater privation, wringing his hands and with tears rolling down his wan cheeks, crying: "Oh, my God! It snows! It snows!" Out of the abundance that characterizes most of our homes may there go speedy relief to all whom this winter finds in want and exposure!

Mount Hermon's Snowy Peak.

And now I propose for your spiritual and everlasting profit, if you will accept my guidance, to take you through some of these wonders of crystallization. And notice first, God in the littles. You may take alpenstock and cross the Mer de Glace, the Sea of Ice, and ascend Mont Blanc which rises into the clouds like a pillar of the Great White Throne, or with Arctic explorer ascend the mountains around the North Pole and see glaciers a thousand feet high grinding against glaciers three thousand feet high. But I will take you on a less pretentious journey and show you God in the snowflake. There is room enough between its pillars for the great Jehovah to stand. In that one frozen drop on the tip of your finger you may find the throne-room of the Almighty. I take up the snow in my hand and see the coursers of celestial dominion pawing these crystal pavements. The telescope is grand, but I must confess that I am quite as much interested in the microscope. The one reveals the universe above us; the other, just as great a universe beneath us. But the telescope overwhelms me, while the microscope comforts me. What you want and I want especially is a God in littles. If we were seraphic or arch-angelic in our natures, we would want to study God in the great; but such small, weak, short-lived beings as you and I are, want to find God in the littles.

When I see the Maker of the universe giving himself to the architecture of a snowflake and making its shafts, its domes, its curves, its walls, its irradiations so perfect, I conclude he will look after our insignificant affairs. And if we are of more value than a sparrow, most certainly we are of more value than an inanimate snowflake. So the Bible would chiefly impress us with God in the littles. It does not say, "Consider the clouds," but it says, "Consider the lilies." It does not say, "Behold the tempests!" but, "Behold the fowls!" and it applauds a cup of cold water, and the widow's two mites, and says the hairs of your head are all numbered. Do not fear, therefore, that you are going to be lost in the crowd. Do not think that because you estimate yourself as only one snowflake among a three days' January snow-storm that you will be forgotten. The birth and death of a drop of chilled vapor is as certainly regarded by the Lord as the creation and demolition of a planet. Nothing is big to God and nothing is small. What makes the honey industries of South Carolina such a source of livelihood and wealth? It is because God teaches the lady-bug to make an opening in the rind of the apricot for the bee who cannot otherwise get at the juices of the fruit. So God sends the lady-bug ahead to prepare the way for the honey-bee. He teaches the ant to bite each grain of corn that she puts in the ground for winter food in order that it may not take root and so ruin the little granary. He teaches the raven in dry weather to throw pebbles into a hollow tree that the water far down and out of reach may come up within the reach of the bird's beak. What a comfort that he is a God in littles! The emperor of all the Russias in olden time was looking at a map that spread before him his vast dominions, and he could not find Great Britain on the map, and he called in his secretary and said: "Where is Great Britain that I hear so much about?" "It is under your thumb," said the secretary; and the emperor raised his hand from the map and saw the country he was looking for. And it is high time that we find this mighty realm of God close by, and under our own little finger. To drop you out of his memory would be to resign his omniscience. To refuse you his protection would be to abdicate his omnipotence. When you tell me that he is the God of Jupiter and the God of Mercury and the God of Saturn, you tell me something so vast that I cannot comprehend it. But if you tell me he is the God of the snow-flake, you tell me something I can hold and measure and realize. Thus the smallest snow-flake contains a jewel-case of comfort. Here is an opal, an amethyst, a diamond. Here is one of the treasures of the snow. Take it for your present and everlasting comfort.

THE DOGS OF ST. BERNARD.

Behold, also, in the snow the treasure of accumulated power. During a snow-storm let an apothecary, accustomed to weigh most delicate quantities, hold his weighing scales out of the window and let one flake fall on the surface of the scales and it will not even make it tremble, the Ray you want to express extreme triviality of the play you say, "Light as a feather;" but a snowflake is much lighter. It is just twenty-four times lighter than water. And yet the accumulation of these flakes broke down, a few days ago, in sight of my house, six telegraph poles, made helpless police and fire departments, and halted rail-trains with two thundering locomotives. We have already learned so much of the power of electricity that we have become careful how we touch the electric wire, and in many a case a touch has been death. But, a few days ago, the snow put its hand on most of these wires and tore them down as though they were cobwebs. The snow said: "You seem afraid of the thunderbolt; I will catch it and hurl it to the ground. Your boasted electric lights adorning your cities with bubbles of fire, I will put out as easily as your ancestors snuffed out a tallow candle." The snow put its finger on the lip of our cities that were talking with each other and they went into silence, uttering not a word. The snow mightier than the lightning.

Jews to

In March, 1888, the snow stopped America. It said to Brooklyn: "Stay home!" to New York: "Stay home!" to Philadelphia: "Stay home!" to Washington: "Stay home!" to Richmond: "Stay home!" It put into a white sepulchre most of this nation. Commerce, whose wheels never stopped before, stopped then. What was the matter? Power of accumulated snow-flakes; on the top of the Appenines one flake falls, and others fall, and they pile up, and they make a mountain of fleece on the top of a mountain of rock, until one day a gust of wind, or even the voice of a mountaineer, sets the frozen vapors into action and by awful descent they sweep everything in their course—trees, rocks, villages—as when, in 1827, the town of Briel in Valais was buried, and in 1624, in Switzerland, three hundred soldiers were entombed. These avalanches were made up of single snow-flakes. What tragedies of the snow have been witnessed by the monks of St. Bernard, who, for ages have with the dogs been busy in extricating bewildered and overwhelmed travellers in Alpine storms, the dogs with blanket fastened to their backs and flasks of spirits fastened to their neck, to resuscitate the helpless travellers, one of these dogs decorated with a medal for having saved the lives of twenty-two persons, the brave beast himself slain of the snow on that day when accompanying a Piedmontese courier on the way to his anxious household down the mountain, the wife and children of the Piedmontese courier coming up the mountain in search of him, an avalanche covered all under pyramids higher than those under which the Egyptian monarchs sleep their sleep of the ages. What an illustration of the tragedies of the snow is found in that scene between Glencoe and Glencreran one February, in Scotland, where Ronald Cameron comes forth to bring to his father's house his cousin Flora MacDonald, for the celebration of a birthday, and the calm day turns into a hurricane of white fury that leaves Ronald and Flora as dead, to be resuscitated by the shepherds. What an exciting struggle had Bayard Taylor among the wintry Appenines.

In the winter of 1812, by a similar force the destiny of Europe was decided. The French army marched up toward Moscow five hundred thousand men. What can resist them? Not bayonets, but the dumb elements overwhelm that host. Napoleon retreats from Moscow with about two hundred thousand men, a mighty nucleus for another campaign after he gets back to Paris. The morning of October 19th, when they start for home is bright and beautiful. The air is tonic, and, although this Russian campaign has been a failure, Napoleon will try again in some other direction with his host of brave surviving Frenchmen. But a cloud comes on the sky, and the air gets chill, and one of the soldiers feels on his cheek a snow-flake, and then there is a multiplication of these wintry messages, and soon the plumes of the officers are decked with another style of plume, and then all the skies let loose upon the warriors a hurricane of snow, and the march becomes difficult, and the horses find it hard to pull the supply train, and the men begin to fall under the fatigue, and many not able to take another step lie down in the drifts never to rise, and the cavalry horses stumble and fall, and one thousand of the army fall, and ten thousand perish, and twenty thousand go down, and fifty thousand, and a hundred thousand, and a hundred and twenty thousand and a hundred and thirty-two thousand die, and the victor of Jena and bridge of Lodi, and Eylau, and Austerlitz where three great armies, commanded by three emperors, are not eloquent, and will not be a snow-flake, because they cannot be an avalanche. In earthly wars the generals get about all the credit, but in the war for God and righteousness and heaven all the private soldiers will get crowns of victory unfailing. When we reach heaven—by the grace of God may we all arrive there!—I do not think we will be able to begin the new song right away, because of the surprise we shall feel at the comparative rewards given. As we are being conducted along the street to our celestial residence, we will begin to ask where live some of those who were mighty on earth. We will ask, "Is so-and-so here?" and the answer will be, "Yes, I think he is in the city, but we don't hear much of him; he was good and he got in, but he took most of his pay in earthly applause; he had enough grace to get through the gate, but just where he lives I know not. He squeezed through somehow, although I think the gates took the skirts of his garments. I think he lives in one of those back streets in one of the plainer residences."

Then we shall see a palace, the door-steps of gold, and the windows of agate, and the tower like the sun for brilliance, and chariots before the door, and people who look like princes and princesses going up and down the steps, and we shall say, "What one of the hierarchs lives here? That must be the residence of a Paul or a Milton, or some one whose name resounds through all the planet from which we have just ascended." "No, no," says our celestial dragoman, "that is the residence of a soul whom you never heard of. When she gave a charity her left hand knew not what her right hand did. She was mighty in secret prayer, and no one but God and her own soul knew it. She had more trouble than anybody in all the land where she lived and without complaining she bore it, and though her talents were never great what she had was all consecrated to God and helping others, and the Lord is making up for her earthly privation by especial raptures here, and the King of this country had that place built especially for her. The walls began to go up when her troubles and privations and consecration began on earth, and it so happened—what a heavenly coincidence!—that the last stroke of the trowel of amethyst on those walls was given the hour she entered heaven. You know nothing of her. On earth her surrendered to him, now himself surrenders to the snow-flakes. Historians do not seem to recognize that the tide in that man's life turned from December the 16th 1809, when he banished by hideous divorce his wife Josephine from the palace and so challenged the Almighty, and the Lord charged upon him from the fortresses of the sky with ammunition of crystal. Snowed under! Billions, trillions, quadrillions, quintillions of flakes did the work. And what a suggestion of accumulative power, and what a rebuke to all of us who get discouraged because we cannot do much, and therefore do nothing.

Crystals of Snow as Seen under a Microscope.

"Oh," says some one, "I would like to stop the forces of sin and crime that are marching for the conquest of the nations; but I am nobody, I have neither wealth nor eloquence nor social power. What can I do?" My brother, how much do you weigh? as much as a snowflake?" "Oh yes." Then do your share. It is an aggregation of small influences that will yet put this lost world back into the bosom of a pardoning God. Alas that there are so many men and women, who will not use the one talent because they have not ten, and will not give a penny because they cannot give a dollar, and will not speak as well as they can because they name was only once in the newspapers, and that among the column of the dead, but she is mighty up here. There she comes now, out of her palace grounds, in her chariot behind those two white horses, for a ride on the banks of the river that flows from under the throne of God. Let me see. Did you not have in your world below an old classic which says something about "these are they who came out of great tribulation, and they shall reign forever and ever?"

As we pass up the street I find a good many on foot, and I say to the dragoman, "Who are these?" And when their name is announced I recognize that some of them were on earth great poets and great orators and great merchants and great warriors, and when I express my surprise about their going afoot, the dragoman says, "In this country people are rewarded not according to the number of their earthly talents, but according to the use they made of what they had." And then I thought to myself: "Why, that theory would make a snowflake that falls cheerfully and in the right place, and does all the work assigned it, as honorable as a whole Mont Blanc of snowflakes." "Yes, yes," says the celestial dragoman, "Many of Jews to speak of it as Luke does, according to the Revised Version, "When they came unto the place which is called The Skull, there they crucified him." (Luke 23: 33.) It is also one of the few places around Jerusalem which would be visible to "many beholding afar off."

"The yawning cavern of Jeremiah," says Dr. Thompson, "extends under the cliff about one hundred feet, and there are various buildings, graves, and sacred spots, arranged irregularly about it, walled-off, plastered and whitewashed. Under the floor of the caverns are vast cisterns. Lighting our tapers we descended about forty feet into the deepest one. The roof is supported by huge, square columns, and the whole, neatly plastered, is now used as a cistern. The water was pure, cold and sweet. This place is in Moslem hands, but the keeper allowed us to explore every part at our leisure." On the top of the hill are many Moslem graves, and this fact, doubtless, has prevented the hill being built upon or sold to strangers.

HOUSE AND TOTEMS IN ALASKA.

(See Illustration.)

REFERENCE is frequently made in the descriptions of Alaska, and its people—which are read with more interest since the Government has made our possession of that bleak province, the basis of diplomatic dispute, to the curious totem-poles, which are seen in the Indian villages of the Territory. It may interest our readers to have the accompanying picture of two of these totem-poles, which are those of a Tongass Chief whose dwelling, seen in the picture is near Fort Simpson.

There is a general impression that the totems are Indian idols, but, whatever they were in the past, it does not appear that they are now objects of worship. They are generally from thirty to fifty feet high, with a diameter of about three feet at the base, and tapering slightly upward. They may be divided into two classes, the clan or family pillars, and those erected as memorials of the dead. They do not differ in appearance, though they do in their location, the family totem being near, or actually part of the home, and the funeral totem, being erected over the grave. The Indians themselves cannot explain the carvings, nor why any particular carving should be identified with a particular family. In this they are not more unenlightened than the noble families of Europe, who cannot give the reason for the designs on their coats-of-arms. In some cases, too, the dragons, and other devices on European escutcheons are as grotesque as those on the Indian totems. It is not improbable that if it were possible to trace back the history of these proud families, it would be found that the animal, or bird which now figures on their coach-doors, on their silver-plate and their writing-paper was once the totem of the tribe of uncivilized barbarians from which they are descended.

A VETERAN REVIVALIST DEAD.

A REMARKABLE man wonderfully honored of God in winning souls for Christ, was called to his reward last week. In these days of rapid movement and of soul-stirring incident, men have almost forgotten James Caughey, and many did not even know that he was living a quiet, secluded life in his New Jersey home. The announcement of his death will, however, stir many a memory among the elders in Israel. They will remember the mighty awakenings in Canada, in England, in Ireland, and in our own country which followed his labors. They were talked of with wonder and thankfulness to God when many of the evangelists now in their prime were boys at school and before some of them were born. It is fifty-seven years since he was ordained and admitted to the Troy Conference, and fifty years since he set out on his famous tour. He went out trusting in God for his support, believing that he was directly called to the work of evangelization in Europe and he preached with the unction of a man, assured in his own heart that he was sent of God. It was said at the time, by persons who followed his labors, that not less than twenty thousand souls were won during that pilgrimage of seven years. Besides that, thousands of Christians in the Churches which he visited were quickened, and aroused to seek a richer blessing and to attain a fuller endowment of grace and power.

Of late only a few dear friends have succeeded in gaining personal intercourse with the veteran evangelist. His public work, he felt, was finished, and as the years passed, he more and more sought seclusion. But his doors were readily opened to men of kindred spirit. Some two or three years ago the Rev. Thomas Harrison (whose portrait appeared in this journal last week), was warmly welcomed by the aged servant of Christ. "I had studied his life and work," Mr. Harrison says, "I had thought about him and asked questions about him for many years.

Indian House and Totems in Alaska.

His stirring words had been an inspiration and a quickening to me in all my revival work and I longed inexpressibly to see him in the flesh before he departed hence. At last an opportunity occurred. Accompanied by Brother Stephen Merritt I went to his home at New Brunswick. We received the stereotyped answer that we could not see Mr. Caughey, but we persisted and I sent in my name. The door was opened and the stalwart old man (he was six feet or more in height, with flowing white hair thrown back like the mane of an old lion) stood there with extended arms, uttering the words 'Come in thou beloved of the Lord.' I found the man, whose voice thundering the terrors of the law had startled multitudes to flee from the wrath to come, as sympathetic as a woman and as tender as a child. We had an interview I shall never forget. He asked me of my work and talked with me of the revivals of by-gone times. At the last he prayed over me with a power and a fervor such as an Apostle nearing the close of his life might have used, and then I left him to see his face no more on earth. I regard that visit as one of the most memorable events of my life."

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Railroad President's Debt to a School teacher was heartily acknowledged in Kansas recently. An official in the Postoffice Department who was riding over the Fort Scott & Wichita Railroad got into trouble with the conductor who refused to recognize his credentials. Ultimately the matter was referred to the President of the road. The President promptly passed the official, and then entered into conversation with him. After whiling away an hour in learning all about himself and his family, the President said, "I know your wife, sir; I was in her school more than thirty years ago when she was a teacher in Ohio. She once gave me a sound whipping for laziness, and it changed me. But for her firmness I should now have been a plodder on the farm." The time will come when, seeing more clearly than we do now the meaning of the trials of our own lives, we shall thank God for the discipline that now we groan under. (Heb. 12: 11.)

Patients Poisoned by Hothouse Flowers have been frequent visitors of late to the hospitals and the offices of private physicians in New York. A daily journal says that their malady was the same in all cases. It was that of mild blood-poisoning and closely resembled in its symptoms, the disease prevalent among the men who prepare hides for the tanner. One physician has had under treatment six patients during the past two weeks, who all work in a well-known florist's establishment up-town. The peculiarity of the cases excited his curiosity, and he made an investigation to discover the cause. He found that the disease originated in the hands which had been pricked by the thorns on rose-stems. Further questioning disclosed the fact that a powder of which Paris-green is one of the ingredients had been used in the hot-house to kill the insects, which infest the rose-trees. It is supposed that the powder adhered to the rose-stems, and was introduced into the blood, when the thorns pricked the hands. It is somewhat startling to learn that danger lurks in a thing so beautiful and fragrant as a hot-house rose. They who deal with spiritual maladies would not be so much surprised as the physicians were by such a phenomenon. Their experience is that the poison, which affects the soul finds an entrance more frequently by means of something which is gratifying to the senses than in any other way. (Col. 3: 5, 6.)

An Aristocratic Bridegroom Received a Lesson from an American captain recently. A steamer of the North German Lloyd line was discharging her passengers at the pier at Hoboken, N. J. Among them was a German baron who had come to marry the daughter of a wealthy brewer whose acquaintance he made during her visit to Germany. The captain who is in charge of the pier was busy entering the names of the passengers as they left the ship to go to their respective destinations. "What is your name?" the captain asked of the noble stranger, when his turn came. The baron began to enumerate his titles and many Christian names, but had not got more than half through when the busy captain interrupted him. "Oh," said he, "that will do; you left all those titles behind you in Germany; you are in America now. What is your last name?" The baron was exceedingly taken aback, but he gave the desired information which the captain recorded, and, so Americanized, the baron passed out to meet his friends. It may be hoped that the young man will some day reach another place where his titles will be similarly uncalled for. None are received in heaven but they who enter simply as sinners saved by the grace of God. (Col. 3: 11.)

THE FOUR JUDGMENTS.

The Times of the Gentiles Terminating in Judgment Followed by the Millennium.

BY T. B. BAINES.

THE "times of the Gentiles" began with the kingdom of Babylon, the head of gold in Nebuchadnezzar's prophetic dream. Then came the kingdom of the Medes and Persians, symbolized by the breast and arms of silver; the Greek monarchy, set forth in the belly and thighs of brass; and afterward the stronger and more enduring dominion of Rome, represented by the legs of iron. After this, "the times of the Gentiles" changed their nature; iron and clay mingled together, or the rule was divided among kingdoms of various origin and character, though all connected with the dismembered Roman Empire. Another vision shows us that in this last stage

The Roman Empire will revive in a ten-kingdomed federal form, under the presidency of one especially energized by Satan. It is when it has reached this phase that judgment will descend, a stone cut out without hands falling on the Gentile powers and crushing them to pieces, after which it grows into a mountain that fills the whole earth; or, as interpreted by Daniel, "In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all the kingdoms, and it shall stand forever" (Daniel 2: 44.) Such is the history, prophetically traced, of the yet uncompleted "times of the Gentiles."

While these were running their course, the Jews—that is, the two tribes forming the Kingdom of Judah—fulfilled the seventy years of captivity foretold by the prophet Jeremiah. At the close of that period, the Babylonian Kingdom having been destroyed and the Persian established on its ruins, Cyrus issued a decree permitting the Jews of the captivity to return to Jerusalem, in virtue of which a small band, without political power or position, found their way back to the ruined city, and there rebuilt the temple. Nearly a century afterward, the same Gentile power gave a "commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem." From this "commandment" dates Daniel's.

Prophecy of Seventy Weeks.

It is divided into three parts, of seven weeks, of sixty-two weeks, and of one week. During the first part, of seven weeks, the city was rebuilt. The second part, of sixty-two weeks, comprehends the time from the completion of the city to the cutting off of the Messiah. The third part, of one week, which yet awaits its accomplishment, carries "the times of the Gentiles" to a close, "finishes the transgression" of the Jews, and brings in "everlasting righteousness," the desolator being destroyed, and the Messiah's kingdom established. During the coming in of the Gentiles, God's purposes of earthly blessings are suspended. The stream of prophetic time ceases to run. It stagnated, so to speak, after the sixty-ninth week, when Messiah was cut off, and will not again begin to flow till after the fullness of the Gentiles has come in, and God once more takes up the thread of his purposes concerning the earth. During this last unfulfilled week of Daniel's seventy weeks there will commence which precede the "day of the Lord," or the establishment of Messiah's kingdom. These judgments may be broadly divided into four different classes.

The Judgments

I. The Jews and the rest of the Israelites will be restored, but only after fearful troubles, from which but a portion will escape. The Jews, who rejected the Christ, will receive the Antichrist, will enter into covenant with "the prince that shall come,"—the last phase of Gentile power, and will worship his image, "the abomination of desolation," set up in the holy place. The remnant of faithful ones who refuse to have part in these last scenes of wickedness and lawlessness will be persecuted with fearful persistency and malignity, many of them killed, the rest driven into exile. The time will be one of untold tribulation, so that, but for its shortness, no flesh could be saved.

Then the Lord himself will appear in power and great glory, destroying with the sword out of his mouth the followers of Antichrist. Those who "abide the day of his coming," the purged remnant who "come out of the great tribulation," having "washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb," shall be a holy people, their dross purged away, their judges restored as at the first, and their counsellors as at the beginning, and Jerusalem shall be "called the city of righteousness, the faithful city." The elect remnant of Israel also will be brought back, and made to inherit the land.

II. But besides the purging judgments referred to, there will be other acts of righteous government and retribution reserved for that dreadful period. Babylon, especially, that is,

The Corrupt Carcass of Christendom, will come into remembrance. The blood shed and the crimes committed in the name of Christ will then be righteously avenged. The beast and his confederates, themselves, following a still more fearful delusion, will hate the scarlet woman and make her desolate; the very power which has supported her will turn against her; and the cup which she hath filled shall be filled to her double.

III. The fall of Babylon shows the doom of that soulless profession of Christ and that lifeless ecclesiastical organization which will survive when all true believers have been removed to the Father's house. But by whom is this apostate, corrupt system destroyed? By the beast and his coadjutors, that is, by that wicked head of the Gentile powers whose pride and blasphemy will at length draw down the lightnings of God's avenging wrath—the impious chief of those kings of the earth who shall "take counsel together against Jehovah, and against his Anointed."

This associated Gentile dominion is the third class dealt with in the judgments of the last week. The confederacy, headed by the prince and energized by Satan, will form a league with the mass of the Jews and their false Christ, and will gather together their forces to battle; when Christ will appear in his glory, followed by the armies of heaven, take the beast and the false prophet and cast them alive into the lake of fire, and afterward destroy their followers with the sword that proceedeth out of his mouth. So end "the times of the Gentiles."

IV. But there is another class of judgments. This power which God uses, like the Assyrian of old, as a scourge to the unfaithful Jews, will, when the hour for judgment comes, itself also be visited. When Jerusalem is besieged and half the city has been carried off, Christ will appear for its deliverance, the besieging host will be cut off, and the remnant of the people saved. This will close the preliminary judgments. The nation having been purged, Babylon consumed, the last Satanic form of Gentile dominion overthrown, and the enemies who sought to destroy Jerusalem scattered, Christ's kingdom will be established on earth. The saints, who have come purged out of the great tribulation, will receive "dominion under him. Satan will be cast into the bottomless pit, while the Bride, the Lamb's wife, seen in figure as the New Jerusalem, will reign with Christ a thousand years.

It is a solemn thing to trace the incurable hatred of the human heart to God. A thousand years' experience of Christ's righteous and blessed rule will not suffice to change the nature of man. No sooner is Satan loosed from his imprisonment than the nations rebel, but only to be at once destroyed with devouring fire from heaven. This last outbreak of human wickedness brings the world's history to a close. Then the dead, who had no part in the first resurrection are raised, are judged according to their works, and are cast into the lake of fire. Satan, death, and hades are all similarly destroyed. And now, the last enemy having been vanquished, the work of reconciliation, founded on the blood of the Cross, is completed; a new heaven and a new earth are created, in which righteousness not only reigns, as during the thousand years, but permanently dwells.

Such, as traced out in the Word of the living God, is the prospect before the world. Are these the things which Christians are looking for?

A BROTHER'S VICTORY.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for Feb. 22. "Not by might nor by power but by my spirit saith the Lord."—Zech. 4: 6.

"WHERE have you been, Robert?" The question was asked by Robert's elder brother, Edward, who, coming out of school, saw him walking demurely homeward.

"What is that to you! Mind your own business," was the younger boy's surly reply.

"It is my business," said Edward. "You have no father to look after you now, and I am going to do it. I know you have not been to school and I insist on knowing where you have been."

"Well, you may find out if you can; you aren't my father," said Robert. "I am not going to be bossed by you."

"We shall see about that. I will not have you disgrace your mother and sister and me, if I know it. What do you think will become of you if you play these tricks? I won't have you going off playing with blackguard boys instead of going to school."

"Oh, who are you? I shall go where I like without asking you."

The dispute ended in the natural way by the elder boy giving his brother a thrashing. He did it conscientiously, too, with a vigor that he hoped would leave an impression on the boy's mind and render him more respectful for the future, and less disposed to question his authority. He was sixteen and Robert was only twelve. Edward knew well that some authority was needed in the case or Robert would go wrong. Their father had been dead only a few weeks and the elder boy was concerned over his brother's thus early doing what he had never dared do while his father was alive. Being the eldest son, Edward considered that he was now the head of the family and responsible for discipline. His mother was too kind and gentle to make her authority felt, and besides, had always been disposed to be indulgent with her younger son. Edward loved his mother dearly, but he thought it would have been better for all her children if she had displayed more firmness. While his father was living, it had not been so necessary, but now that he was gone, the mother's laxity might be disastrous, especially to Robert.

"What have you been doing to Robert?" was the mother's greeting when Edward entered the home. "He ran in just now crying bitterly, and he says you have been beating him. You are cruel to hit a little boy like that. Oh! what shall I do, if my children take to quarrelling! You dare not have done it if your father had been alive. You naughty, wicked boy! Why do you distress me like this? Do you want to break my heart?" The widow burst into tears and would not be comforted.

Robert was allowed to stay at home that afternoon and was petted and comforted by the injudicious mother. The next day, on the way to school Edward seized the opportunity of speaking to him. "Now mind what you do," he said, "if you don't behave I'll beat you again."

"If you do, I'll tell mother," answered the boy. "She says you shall not hit me."

"You behave and then there will be no need. If you don't you'll catch it" was the retort.

"You look troubled, Edward," said his Sunday School teacher, who met the boy that evening on his way home. "Yes, Mr. Willoughby, I feel so," said Edward. "Perhaps you could help me, I am in a difficulty that I cannot see my way out of."

"Tell me all about it, my boy, I will help you if I can."

Edward told his story and ended with, "I am determined to punish him when he needs it and keep him straight if I can. Am I not right?"

"Do you know what is the strongest thing in the world, Edward?"

Edward thought a moment of wind and water and steam and finally said, "No, I am not sure what is the very strongest, but what has that to do with it?"

"Everything; the strongest thing we know of, that which has won more victories, has overcome strong men, broken hearts and conquered stubborn spirits, is love. Why not try that?"

"Oh, Robert gets enough love from his mother, he don't need it from me."

"You are mistaken; no one gets enough love. If you try it you will find that Robert will appreciate it. You do love him, now; but let him see that you do. Think kindly of him, help him with his lessons and let him see that you are anxious for his welfare. You have no idea how it will influence him. God rules the world by love. Our highest conception of him is that he is love. Let his spirit be in you and you will conquer."

It was a hard thing to do. Edward struggled with his own masterful spirit a long time before he succeeded. But one day after a kind word to his brother, Robert looked up in his face, and said in a surprised tone, "Why I did not know you cared for me." It was a revelation to both. Edward was surprised that Robert should have felt his caring so much. After that the victory was easy. It was won not by might nor by power, but by the spirit of the Lord.

ELIJAH'S SUCCESSOR.

S. S. LESSON FOR FEB. 22, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 2: 12-22. GOLDEN TEXT, ZECH. 4: 6.

Elisha's View of Elijah's Ascent—The Significance of the Rent Garments—The Mantle Taken Up—A Symbol of the Prophet-Vocation—The Waters Divided—Elisha's Succession Recognized by the Presence of Elijah's Spirit—The Search for the Prophet—The Healing of the Waters.

ELISHA'S eyes were disciplined; he had a single eye; therefore his whole body was full of light. (Luke 11: 34-36.) He had learned the lesson of the Preacher, "Let thine eyes look right on, and let thine eye-lids look straight before thee. . . . Turn not to the right hand nor to the left." (Prov. 4: 25, 27.) His journey with Elijah had developed a unity of purpose, a consciousness of his vocation which manifested the true prophet character. Those who are ready for any distraction, who have eyes and ears open for all which is around them, and who are subject to every influence never can make prophets of the Lord. Deep, intense, concentrated attention to God characterizes his prophet children. All through that wondrous day when Elisha followed Elijah, in spite of his master's opposition, in spite of the sons of the prophets, his eyes had been turned from the things of time and sense. A double portion of "his master's spirit" filled his horizon; he saw all else as though he saw it not. Thus when God's horses and chariot of fire appeared, the eyes turned heavenwards were able to take in the heavenly vision. "Elisha saw it, and cried, my father, my father, the chariot of Israel and the horsemen thereof." The sign which Elijah had given him was, "If thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee." He had seen, and the double portion his! Called, anointed, clothed with a double portion of Elijah's spirit, Elisha could now go forward to fulfil his vocation.

The prophet Elisha had no regrets for the oxen and the land, for the homestead and the farm, which he had left to follow Elijah; he wasted no time in regrets for his master; Elijah had needed no funeral, how could Elisha weep? Something of heaven had come down to take a heavenly man to the sphere to which he belonged; was it a cause for weeping? But Elisha took hold of his own clothes, and rent them in two pieces." Henceforth nothing of his own must remain, nothing of the past, no covering but Elijah's mantle, nothing which should remind himself or others of his own earthly life.

A prophet must be a separated man. Just as long as a child of God relies on any earthly advantage which he possesses, of family, money, talent, experience, physical strength, or even spiritual knowledge, he has not, as yet, torn his clothes in two pieces, there is still something of himself which invests him. Elisha could not let the mantle of Elijah, as it fell from an opened heaven, form only a part of his own clothing; it must be

All or Nothing.

If we are "clothed upon, that mortality may be swallowed up of life," it becomes an instinct to do away with all that is of self in our life. Old things have very definitely, "passed away; behold, all things are become new." "He took up also the mantle of Elijah that fell from him." In rending his own clothes, he surrendered anew his own life for his vocation; in taking up the prophet's mantle, he accepted the prophet-life, and no other. There are many who are troubled about the question of recreation or amusement. The apostle Paul settles this matter in these words, "When I was a child, I spake as a child, I understood as a child, I thought as a child; but when I became a man, I put away childish things." (1. Cor. 13: 11.) Children must play: it is as unnatural to a child not to play as it is unbecoming in a man to play like a child. There are many whose spiritual age is that of a child; distraction and even amusement are possibilities to them, because the greatness of their vocation has never so dawned upon them as to make them "put away childish things;" they are childish still. Spiritual maturity has always a dignity about it which makes childish things an impossibility. A man who lives in the light of eternity, in the consciousness that he is "a man sent from God," that eternal issues hang upon the moments that are passing, the words and deeds which are being spoken and done,—has no room in his heart and life for trifles. Everything partakes of the greatness which fills his soul. He may have the tenderest heart of compassion for others, can make allowance for those who have not put away childish things, but he cannot himself come down to their level, or forsake the atmosphere of eternity in which he dwells, for the littleness and narrowness of a life filled with considerations which belong only to the world and time and sense.

"The mantle of Elijah" was a reality to Elisha. Elijah's life was characterized by his own account of himself; "The Lord God of Israel before whom I stand." In taking possession of the mantle, Elisha took possession of the life—a life

In the Presence of his God.

He went back to the Jordan, no longer with Elijah, but more than ever with Elijah's God. He smote the waters, and said, "Where is the Lord God of Elijah?" Why should not every barrier give way before God and him as before God and Elijah? He was not disappointed, the waters recognized their Master with the prophet, and "parted hither and thither; and Elisha went over." Oh, how many of God's children have reasoned out in an intellectual way that the powers and gifts of the early Church have not been recalled, and in a carnal spirit, and with a life full of self, have sought to revive them, and have failed! In order to know anything of real heavenly power, there must be a forsaking of the earthly, the tearing of our own clothes before taking upon ourselves the mantle of Elijah. When eternal life in a man dominates his own life, then "the power of an endless life" (Heb. 7: 16) is manifest; when the earthly life predominates in a Christian, there is a proportionate lack of the power of God. Those who are always taken up with difficulties, and who see impossibilities at every step, have not accepted the prophet's mantle, they do not stand before the Lord God of Israel, with whom nothing is impossible.

Elisha did not need to explain matters to the sons of the prophets; the presence of God with him told its own tale, and it ran from one to another, "The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha." There are some who cannot have the least communion with God without treasuring it up to tell at some testimony meeting, that they may impress others with the sanctity of their lives. Oh, how much greater is it when, like Elisha, the fruit of dealings with God in private so manifests itself that all are obliged, to say, "The Spirit of God is upon him!"

The Great Lack

of the Christianity of this age is depth. There is plenty of activity, feverish activity, plenty of talking, preaching, Bible exposition; but oh, so little real acquaintance with God! The sons of the prophets were awed with the presence of God in his prophet, and "bowed themselves to the ground" before him. But they could not be quite satisfied that Elijah had really left this world, they had conceptions which were very much limited to earth, and they were in great anxiety lest, after all, Elijah should not be really gone to heaven, but only carried by the Spirit to the top of some mountain or dropped in some valley! They were even zealous to rescue him from some terrible fate; they actually sent an expedition of fifty strong men to deliver him from God's neglect! How like poor-near-sighted man! Was it likely that horses of fire and chariots of fire, God's own heavenly instruments, should do their work so badly? Would God allow Elijah to be under the impression that he would take him up into heaven, and then only remove him from one place on earth to another? It is not thus God does his work. Elisha said, "ye shall not send." They overpowered him at last, and the prophet let them have their way, as the only means of proving to them how unbelieving were the lines on which they acted. After three days of fruitless search they returned, and Elisha said, "Did I not say unto you, go not?"

Men who are in Need

soon discover those who have power with God. Surface Christians do not find them out. Elisha tarried at Jericho. Like his Master before him, he could not order his own steps, he knew that his God had a will about his going out and coming in. The men of the city came to him and complained of the unwholesomeness of the water and the consequent want of fertility of the soil. Elisha, who was all the time in communion with his God, and no doubt, directed by him, said, "Bring me a new cruse, and put salt therein. And they brought it to him. And he went forth unto the spring of waters, and cast the salt in there, and said, Thus saith the Lord, I have healed these waters; there shall not be from thence any more death or barren land. So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha." It was his first, "Thus saith the Lord," the first manifestation of God's working through him in public. If Elisha had not tested his God at the Jordan, if he had not torn his own clothes, to be fully invested with Elijah's mantle and spirit, if he had not persevered with his one request, "A double portion of thy Spirit," he would have failed at this crisis. He had not failed his God, and his God would not fail him.

"I have Healed

these waters" would have been a bold word if he had not been quite sure that God bore witness to him. But Elisha was trying no experiment; his God was with him. Elisha cast in the salt at the spring of waters. So does every true prophet. There are some who heal the hurt of the daughter of God's people slightly, but none do this as sent of God. The spring must be cleansed where it bursts forth on thoughts and intents of the heart must be clean.

Volume XII., of The Christian Herald, containing the numbers for 1889, with complete index, bound in cloth, may be had from this office; price $2.50, including postage. A few volumes of 1884, 1885, 1887, and 1888 are also for sale. None are on hand prior to 1884.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

SCANDALIZATION.

HOW many people spend half their time in hunting lies! You see a man rushing anxiously about to correct a newspaper paragraph, or a husband, with fist clinched, on the way to pound some one who has told a false thing about his household. Oh, the folly of such a hunting excursion! Falsehoods are monsters with thick hide. After a shower of bullets has struck their side they lift their hind foot to scratch the place, supposing only a black fly has been biting.

Henry VIII. in a hawking-party, on foot attempted to leap a ditch in Hertfordshire, and with his enormous avoirdupois weight went splash into the mud and was hauled out by his footman, half dead. And that is the fate of men who spend their time hunting down lies. Better go to your work and let the lies run. Their bloody muzzles will have tough work with a man usefully busy. You cannot so easily overcome them with sharp retort as with adze and yard-stick. All the howlings of California wolves at night do not stop the sun from kindling victorious morn on the Sierra Nevada, and all the ravings of defamation and revenge cannot hinder the resplendent dawn of heaven on a righteous soul. By all reasonable means set yourself right, but do not get hot and fretful and exasperated, for in such a mood you do yourself more harm than all your enemies can possibly accomplish. Under all the assaults of this life cultivate a Christian good-humor. But my chief object in these lines is to excite a disgust for the gossip and scandalization always abroad in every community. This disposition to hurl people down and gloat over their disaster is simply diabolic. Our Lord, in the best sermon ever preached, said: "Judge not, that ye be not judged." Put me down for the defendant in every case that comes up between now and the hour of my death, until the guilt of the defendant is demonstrated; and then, instead of gloating over his fall, I will try to help him up and pray for his pardon to an all-forgiving God. I wonder what would have become of us if God was as hard on us as we are hard on our fellows? I am sorry for all who pass through the criminal courts to incarceration, whether their imprisonment be righteous or unjust. I am sorry for anybody in trouble. I abhor the spirit which says in regard to any of the fallen: "Good for him!" Such a spirit is poor return to the God who decreed that the cradle of our infancy should be rocked by Christian mothers and who has all our lives long encompassed us by elevating influences. Give all who are assailed the benefit of the doubt. Peddle no scandal. Listen not to whispers, and remember the resounding and portentous words of the inspired apostle who declared: "He shall have judgment without mercy that hath showed no mercy."

RUINED BY PROSPERITY.

I HAVE known men, before their success, kind and humble, and loving and genial, and useful and obliging, and positively Christian, who, after their success, became hard and cruel, and overbearing and infidel. A man wants the grace of Christ at that crisis to keep him rightly balanced. Joseph was as much a Christian in Pharaoh's court as in the dungeon. Daniel forgot not God amid the roystering-excesses of the Babylonian palace. Queen of Sheba bowed down before the King of Heaven amid the glitter of gold and the perfume of gardens of frankincense. A man can be as good walking upon Axminster as though he lived on the floor of a shanty. There has been many a man who has ridden through in magnificent equipage on earth, and at death got out of his carriage only to mount the chariots of salvation, in glory sweeping through the streets of heaven. It is all nonsense for men to talk against money as though it had no uses. But, success in life of any sort must be accompanied by the grace of God, or it is ruin. It was Solomon that said, "The prosperity of fools shall destroy them." And where there are one hundred men who can stand trouble, there is not one man that can stand success. The Israelites got along tolerably well when they were hungry, and when they were thirsty, and when they were smitten in the desert; but after awhile they wanted something more worthy of mastication, and they asked for meat, and the Lord sent a great flock of quails, and they darkened the heavens, and they fell all around about the encampment, and the people said, "Ah, now what a fine time we shall have!" and they ate of these quails, and they ate and they died. They got through with the hardship and the hunger, but not so with the prosperity. And I see scores of men who are going on in life, now persecuted and tried and set upon, and they are maintaining their Christian character; but give them a little brilliant success and they are gone. It is not the troubles of life that slay men. It is the quails!

FIDELITY.

THERE are enough accidents unavoidable to make accidents by recklessness fourfold inexcusable. There are so many ways of getting out of this life, it is not necessary to expedite wholesale departure. There needs to be promptness of arraignment in all such cases, to show that the people take negligence under such circumstances as manslaughter. But is it not a matter of gratitude, after all, that with such vast multitudes perpetually on the wing, there are so few casualties? While we condemn the unfaithfulness here and there evident, what a host of brakemen, of conductors, of engineers, of telegraph operators, are very diligent! They receive no praise for doing well—only condemnation when they relax. What a grand thing if all railroad companies and all manufacturers and all employers once in a while tried the effect of commendation for faithful services rendered! How many men, weary of brain and weary of hand, and weary of foot and weary of eye, and weary of back and weary of soul, would pluck up new courage for their toil at one word of approving recognition! No, the world's way is to be oblivious if you do well, and to be thunderously irate if you come short.

BRIEF NOTES.

The Year-Book of the United Brethren gives the following statistics: Organized churches, 4,208; itinerant ministers, 1,467; local preachers, 884; members, 197,123; Sunday Schools, 3,460, with 214,790 scholars.

The West Presbyterian Church, New York, of which Dr. John R. Paxton is pastor, has raised $40,000, for the rebuilding of the Presbyterian Hospital. One member of the church, who insists on remaining anonymous offered $20,000, if the other members would contribute the same sum and his offer has been accepted.

Interesting revival services are being held in the Third Baptist Church, Germantown, Pa., by the pastor Rev. W. E. Needham, assisted by his brother Rev. B. C. Needham. Fifty persons rose to ask for prayers on the night of Sunday, January 25. An original feature of the service is that the pastor illustrates his remarks by rapid, but spirited sketches before the audience.

Dr. Edward Judson and his Church on Friday last held their first service in their new church in Washington Square, New York, a picture of which with a portrait of Dr. Judson appeared in this journal on Dec. 24. The first service was appropriately a prayer-meeting. Last Sunday Dr. Judson preached there for first time.

An appeal is issued on behalf of the farmers of Rawlins Co., Kansas. They are brought into extremity by the loss of their crops through the protracted drought and hot winds of last season. They are now without feed and seed. A committee has been formed to relieve their urgent wants. Subscriptions may be sent to the chairman, Mr. J. E. Nicols Achilles, Rawlins Co., Kan.

A cheering account of the success of Rev. J. H. Weber, at Bridgeton, N. J., is sent by Mr. C. W. Shoemaker of that town. He says that the effects of Mr. Weber's work are felt all through the place, in the churches of all denominations, the homes, and the factories. During the four weeks' services it was not uncommon to see two hundred persons at one time in the inquiry-room. The church, which holds 1200 persons, was crowded every night. Mr. Weber is now laboring in Boston, Mass.

Contributions to the Fund for supplying colored ministers in the South with this journal have been received since our last acknowledgment to the amount of $13. They are from: Johnstown Centre, Wis., $1; China, Me., $1; North Monmouth, Me., 50c.; Allegheny, Pa., 50c.; A Friend, $1; Woodhaven, L. I., N. Y., $1.50; Western Union, Wis., $4.50; Footville, Wis., $1; North Burns, Mich., $1.50; Newark, N. J., 50c. We have also received the sum of $10 which the donor desired to be given to poor widows, and it has been done.

At the stated meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Bible Society on February 5, grants of books were made to the value of about $6,354, including $2,000 for colportage. Funds were also granted to the amount of $750. Issues from the Bible House during the month of January were 80,897 volumes; issues since April 1, 872,786 volumes. In reference to the Penzotti case (a full account of which with pictures was given in this journal on January 21), there was no good news to report. The Board was informed that Mr. Hicks, of the United States Legation, had telegraphed that he had watched the case closely, and had had almost daily promises of Mr. Penzotti's release which the Foreign Office deemed certain; but although his imprisonment has continued for more than six months, a decision does not seem to have been rendered as yet.

A wonderful work is going on at Reading, Pa., where Dr. L. W. Munhall is conducting union services. The Morning Herald of that city says that "the history of Reading has no precedent with which to compare the immense crowds that turn out twice a day, to hear Dr. Munhall, and Prof. and Mrs. Lowe, the sweet singers, and take part in the services. The outpouring was phenomenal and hundreds were unable to get within sound of the voices of the speakers and singers. Last Sunday afternoon, the First Presbyterian Church was crowded and in the evening the Academy of Music, with a seating capacity of 1800, was more than crowded. The hundreds turned away hastened to the court house, where an overflow meeting was held, and found that building packed to suffocation and the corridors so completely filled that they could not enter there. A fair estimate places the attendance at the three meetings at between 10,000 and 15,000."

CURRENT EVENTS.

Poet Whittier will Write no More—Premier Crispi's Fall—An Explorer's Mishap—World's Fair Difficulties—An Alabama Race War—Fatal Floods in China, Etc.

"The Gentle Quaker Poet," John Greenleaf Whittier, after a long and beautiful literary career, has at last laid down his pen, his waning physical powers compelling him to rest during the days that still remain to him.

Few poets in this century have sung in a strain at once so pure and lofty, and so intensely devotional as Whittier. Since the death of Emerson, no man in America has been so loved by the literary world, and in summer the Oak Knoll Cottage, near Danvers, Mass., and the old house at Amesbury, in winter, have been the objective points of thousands of pilgrimages. There, with his dogs, his feathered pets and his beloved books, the snowy-haired man passes his declining years. He is now eighty-four, but his spare form is still straight and his eyes undimmed, although his step is less firm and his hand-clasp less strong than of yore. The life of Whittier has been an open book. His childhood was passed in poverty, and he worked on a farm and afterwards as a shoemaker, studying whenever he found an opportunity. At twenty-two, he was editing a newspaper in Boston, and was beginning to be known somewhat as a poet. Since 1836, he has issued many volumes of pure, sterling verse, full of lessons of Christian love and brotherhood. Among the best known are his "Songs of Labor," "Home Ballads," "National Lyrics" and "Hazel Blossoms." His portrait is given in this column.

A Notable Reunion, which illustrates in a comprehensive manner, the benefits of co-operation between master and workmen, took place at the town of Dolgeville, N. Y., a few days ago. Less than twenty-five years ago, Alfred Dolge began the business of making piano sounding-boards there. He had been a workingman himself and knew the hardships of his class, so he resolved to devote the balance of his life to the experiment of profit-sharing with his own workmen. The result has been a success beyond all expectation. From a village of 200 people, the place has grown to a population of 2,500; every workman in the great factories is a partner, according to behavior and length of service, and every man is insured by the general concern. After ten years, the artisan receives a profit annually equal to fifty per cent. of the wages he earns; after thirteen years, sixty per cent.; sixteen years, seventy per cent.; nineteen years, eighty per cent.; twenty-two years, ninety per cent.; and twenty-five years, one hundred per cent. When he reaches sixty he is pensioned, or the amount of the endowment is paid to his heirs. Almost all are house-owners and there is, to all appearance, no happier or more prosperous community in the Union than this same town of Dolgeville. Schools, lyceums and libraries are provided, and there is a fine public park. All this has been accomplished by co-operation. Best of all, it is a moral God-fearing town and the rum-seller has no abiding place there. Churches abound, and they are strongly supported.

What with the Opposition from several Southern and Western States, and the apathy of oth- er sections that might have been reasonably expected to take an active interest in the approaching World's Fair, Chicago is encountering many serious difficulties in raising the funds necessary to go on with the national show. It is now estimated that the expenses to be incurred before the Fair opens will be $5,000,000 in excess of the receipts. There is talk of a plan for bonding the receipts from admissions to cover the expenses. The immediate needs of the Board of Directors will require about $15,000,000, and there are now $950,000 in the hands of the Finance Committee, which will soon be exhausted in the construction of buildings. Still another project for tiding over the difficulty, is to increase the capital stock of the Exposition Company to $10,000,000, which, with the $5,000,000 to be got from the sale of city bonds, will carry the Fair through. In spite of these difficulties, there is little doubt that the management will succeed in raising all the money needed. Besides, when it is well under way, it is believed that those States that are lukewarm, will patriotically join with the rest of the Union in making the Fair a grand national success. The Finance Committee will report this week.

A Wedding of National Interest was that of Miss Marie Louise Shepard, daughter of Col. Elliott F. Shepard, and grand-daughter of the late William H. Vanderbilt, to William Jay Schiefflin, the grandson of John Jay, which was celebrated at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York, on February 5th. Many of the best known families in the country were represented among the guests, including the Whitneys, Astors, Goelets, Dodges, Phelps, Sloanes, and Vanderbilts. There were in all some two thousand guests at the ceremony. Some of the presents were very beautiful and costly, one being a "sun" of a hundred diamonds, surrounding a very large thirteen-carat diamond, and another a necklace of diamond pendants. It was the mother of the young bride, Mrs. Elliott F. Shepard, who, three weeks ago, formally dedicated to the Young Women's Christian Association of New York, the new Margaret-Louisa Home for Working-women, so called after her two daughters. A description was published in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at the time.

Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, one of the foremost of American explorers, who has twice faced death in the Arctic and has penetrated farther into the interior of Alaska and the far Northwest than any other white traveller, had a very narrow escape from instant death at Mason City, Ia., a few days ago, somewhat similar to that of Emin Pasha at Bagamoyo, two years ago. He had not yet fully recovered from the fatigues of his latest exploration in Alaska. Climbing a stairway in his hotel, he missed his footing and fell downward ten feet or more, lighting upon his head on a pile of trunks. The nose and five ribs were broken and the spine injured. It was in 1880 that Schwatka, then a very young man, led the memorable Arctic search party which afterward made his name famous. A portrait of Lieutenant Schwatka is given above.

A Race War, which broke out lately in Alabama, has already resulted in the loss of several lives. The trouble began between the white and black miners, at a place called Carbon Hill, some distance from Birmingham, the whites being determined to drive out the colored miners. Of 1,000 employees at these mines, only about 125 are black. According to the telegrams, many of the latter were shot down without provocation. The Mayor of Carbon Hill called on Governor Jones for assistance, and two companies of troops were sent to the scene of the disturbances. On their arrival, the rioting ceased. Several arrests were made.

Seldom Does a Great Statesman meet so singular and unexpected a defeat as that sustained by Signor Crispi, the Italian Premier and the founder of the famous Triple Alliance. The refusal of the Italian Chamber to ratify his Spirit Taxes bill precipitated the crisis and the Premier and Cabinet were forced to resign. To himself, as well as to King Humbert, this collapse was sudden and unlooked for. The King declined to receive the resignation, hoping that his fallen minister might be able to reconstruct the Cabinet; but the large majority by which his bill was defeated in the Chamber left little encouragement, and efforts are now being made to compose a new Ministry. It is not improbable that the Marquis de Rudini may be the next Premier. Signor Crispi, whose portrait is given in this column, was a Neapolitan lawyer and took an active part in the revolt that overthrew the kingdom of the two Sicilies. After a short exile in France, he returned to Italy and was elected to the Chamber of Deputies from Palermo. Four years ago, he succeeded Depretis as Premier. His greatest achievement in that capacity has been the formation of the Triple Alliance of Italy, Germany and Austria. He is now about sixty-two years of age.

Recent Floods in China have Caused a Frightful loss of human life. In the province of Wen Chean alone, it is estimated, 1,000 persons have perished. Temples, bridges, public buildings and walls are destroyed in ten districts of Schuan. Fire followed the floods at Pel Chang destroying thirty-five houses. The suffering throughout China, especially among the poor, is appalling. Bread is at famine prices.

The Revolt in Portugal, which seems to have been brewing ever since the successful rebellion against Dom Pedro in Brazil, was short-lived. The three companies of soldiers who began the movement and who depended upon the support of their comrades in Oporto and elsewhere, were routed within a few hours by the loyal government troops and the ring-leaders either shot or arrested. It is said that at least fifty persons were killed and two hundred injured in the fight in Oporto. An attempt to excite a rising among the marines met with even less success, the leaders being arrested. A number of civilians have also been arrested, and they, together with the naval and military offenders, will be tried by a military court and probably shot within a few days. So ends the first effort at establishing a Portuguese Republic.

Germany is Uneasy over the Reports concerning the young Emperor's health. It is said that Kaiser Wilhelm has developed symptoms of the disease that killed his father, the Emperor Frederick, and that the ailment in his ear has taken an aggravated form, occasionally confining him to bed for days at a time. Still he is very courageous, and dislikes being made an object of sympathy.

A PRIVATE INQUIRY.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

Eli's Intercourse with God Interrupted by his Sins—The Messages Sent by Third Persons—I. The Question to Samuel—Implies that God Speaks to Men—How He Speaks to Them—His Words Should be Deeply Pondered—And Remembered—And Repeated—Must be Told in Full—The Consequences of Unfaithfulness—II. The Man Who Asked the Question—Willing to Learn from a Child—Anxious to Know the Worst—III. Personal Questions.

"What is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee?"

1. Samuel 3 : 17.

THE Lord would not speak directly to Eli, although he was the High Priest. In ordinary circumstances it would have been so; but Eli had grieved the Lord, and thus had lost his honorable standing. God had not cast him off; but he viewed him with such displeasure that he would only speak to him through another person: even as great kings, if they are offended with their courtiers, send them messages by other hands. The Lord sent, first, a man of God to warn Eli of what would be the sure result of his want of firmness with his sons; and when he gave him a second warning, it was sent through one who was a little underling in his family.

The Prophet Set Aside.

O ye saints, who live upon familiar terms with the Lord, take heed of sin, lest you lose your close communion, your favored fellowship, and stand in a second place! God will speak to you; but it will be in warning, and in a roundabout way, and not face to face, with his lip to your ear, as he has been wont to do while you have pleased him. God will not cast you off; but he may set you aside for a time. You may still hear his message through others; but he will be silent to you personally. You may have to live in the frigid zone of doubt and anxiety, instead of sunning yourselves in the full blaze of divine love.

Further, when God had sent a man to God to Eli, and the message did not arouse him to a sense of his sin in over-indulgence of his sons, and toleration of evil in those under him, the Lord sends him a word of threatening by a child. Eli was a man of God, and, notwithstanding his great chastisement and his mournful death, I doubt not that he died in the Lord; but he brought dishonor on his own name, and he was condemned to know that his holy office would not be continued in his line, and that none of his descendants should live to old age. He had not duly honored the Lord, and therefore he heard the sentence pronounced on him and on his race. Oh, brethren let us beware of sin, of allowing sin in those under our charge, lest the Lord lay us low, and send an affliction upon us, which shall cleave to our race forever.

I. First, let us view this question as addressed to Samuel. The first remark which we shall make upon it is that

God does Speak to Men.

Otherwise this would be a senseless question: "What is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee?" God does communicate with mortals. He has done so in the inspired volume of his sacred Word. Every line in this priceless volume was dictated by the Spirit, and is a message from God to men. This book is to be read as the record of Jehovah's voice. It is the phonograph of our Father's speech in days gone by. What he has spoken aforetime by his voice, he continues to speak to us by his written Word. God, in a renewed manner, speaks to us by his Word when his Spirit applies it to us individually. We never truly hear the voice of God in Scripture until the truth is spoken home to each heart and conscience by the Holy Ghost. Revelation must be revealed to each one; otherwise it soon comes to be a veiling of truth, rather than a discovering of the Lord's mind. The revelation is clear enough in itself; but we have not the opened eye till grace bestows it.

Moreover, our God has ways of communicating his mind to his children by those of his servants who speak in his name. He directs the thoughts of his ministers, and suggests their words, so that they speak to the cases of those who are led to hear the Word of God. By our own thoughts, also, the Lord communes with us. If we will be still before him, he will prepare our hearts, and in silence we shall hear his voice. It would be a strange thing if God could not, and did not, communicate with his own children; and it is still more strange and sad that, though he does speak, his people are slow of heart and dull of hearing. Our God speaks to us also in providence. In choice favors we hear his soft and tender tones; in chastisement and rebukes we hear the sterner notes; but

Every Sound is Full of Love.

Our next observation is, that when we hear the voice of God we should be deeply impressed by it. Young Samuel gave evidence that he deeply felt the responsibility of having heard the voice of God. We read that "Samuel lay till morning:" he did not go to sleep, but he did not leave his bed. He lay still, and thought. After hearing that terrible word which made his heart heavy, and caused his ears to tingle, like a wise child, he lay still, and pondered it in his soul. He did not rush in upon Eli, for the news was hard to tell; neither did he seek out another confidant. He had been called to be the Lord's prophet, he was conscious of his commission, and he became sober beyond his years. "He lay till morning." What thoughts passed through his mind on his lone bed! I would to God that, after every sermon, all my hearers, young and old, had a quarter of an hour alone! A night of wakeful thought over it would be better still. Don't hurry through Scripture, but pause for the Lord to speak to you. Oh, for more meditation! Samuel "lay till morning." Wise child that! With such work before him for his head and his heart, he did well to lie quiet, take breath, and collect his strength.

Next, the heavenly voice made such an impression on his mind that

He Feared to Tell It

to Eli. The message was so dreadful that he dreaded to repeat it to him whom it most concerned. When you and I know God's word, and hear God's voice in it, it will often strike us with a solemn awe which will quite overpower us. Marvel not that "the child Samuel feared"; and especially feared to show Eli the vision. I say that, when you and I hear the voice of the Lord our God, it will create in us deep emotions of fear, of joy, and of holy reverence, and we shall know of a surety that it is no little thing to hear the word of the Most High. We shall tremble at his word, yet we shall rejoice to hear it.

I would say, next, that we should store up in our memories whatever God says to us. These are not things which we can safely allow to slip. What is written in this book should be transferred to our memories. It is a good thing to learn passages of Scripture by heart, even as classical scholars treasure up the words of their favorite authors. It is a good thing to have texts of Scriptures used from day to day to sweeten the breath, and then laid by in the heart to perfume the character.

A Mind Well Stored

with Biblical lore will be a great consolation to us, should we live, like Eli, till our eyes are dim, and we cannot see to read. The Bible in the memory is better than the Bible in the bookcase.

One more remark. Looking at the text in its light toward Samuel, we learn that we should be able to tell what we hear from God. We find Eli saying to Samuel, "What is the thing that the Lord hath said unto thee?" If God has spoken to us, somebody or other will need to know, and will have a right to be informed. It may be that many whom we esteem will wish to know what God has spoken to us; and we must be prepared, even though it be with a measure of fear and trembling, to tell them the solemn tidings. What is whispered in our ear in the closet we may have to speak on the housetops.

Samuel did his work very carefully and completely. We read, "and Samuel told him every whit, and hid nothing from him." He said nothing more and nothing less than God had spoken. You know how difficult it is to repeat a story correctly. Additions and subtractions are weeds which it is hard to keep out of the garden of conversation. Alas! this holds good even of the Word of the Lord: how many add to it or take from it! But the child Samuel repeated his story correctly, because the fear of the Lord was upon him. When you do tell the Gospel, tell it correctly; for it is wonderfully easy to make another Gospel of it; and the tendency to do so is very powerful in these days. How many are proclaiming a mutilated Gospel, and are not telling "every whit!" Some part of revelation they think too high, or too dry, or too orthodox or too something or other; and so their overweening conceit induces them to leave it out. Oh, do not so, I pray you!

A Painful Duty.

It was a very painful duty, which the holy child was called upon to perform. Samuel loved his foster father, and for him to mention the tremendous doom pronounced upon Eli's house must have caused him great grief of spirit. But he bravely repeated the dread words of the Most High. There are certain truths in God's word which we tremble to think upon. Do you dream that we have any pleasure in the doctrine of eternal punishment? We speak of the wrath to come, and the everlasting punishment which God apportions to the impenitent, with fear and trembling; but we speak of it because we cannot escape from the conviction that is taught in the word of God.

And, dear friends, to communicate the message of God was a very weighty duty to the child Samuel. Read what Eli said to him. "I pray thee hide it not from me: God do so to thee, and more also, if thou hide anything from me of all the things that he said unto thee." My brother in the Gospel, what if you and I should keep back some painful part of God's message, and God should do so to us, and more also? I cannot bear to be lost; and yet I shall be lost if I decline to warn others of their danger, and of the doom of unbelief. I cannot bear to be cast away for ever from the presence of God; yet this woe will be unto me if I preach not the Gospel, and do not declare the whole counsel of God. This is an awful outlook for us. May we never dare to tone down the more severe parts of the story, and flatter men in their sins; for if we do this, God will mete out to us a portion with the condemned!

Why Eli asked the Question.

II. Let us now view the question as it comes from Eli. I understand from Eli's question, first, that we should willingly learn, even from a child. "What! shall I, a man of seventy or eighty, learn from a child?" says one. Yes, unless you are more foolish than Eli, you may do so. Eli, with all his faults, was willing to hear what God might speak, even if he heard it from the lips of the child Samuel. How unwise people are when they will not hear a man, but make up their mind that he knows nothing! Some would not hear the most precious truth from the lips of a man whom they despise. Certain of the friars in Luther's day confessed that much of what Luther said was very true, and a reformation was certainly very much needed; but then, they would not have it from such a fellow as Luther—a renegade monk, too, who spoke so rudely! Erasmus could be endured, but Luther made such a noise about it. Teaching is often judged, not by its own value, but by the prejudices which people may happen to have concerning the source from which it comes. "I do not like him," says one. Well, what does it matter whether you like him or not? What does he say? If a thing is true, never mind who says it. Believe it.

Next, learn from Eli that we should be willing to know the very worst of our case. Let me repeat that word: we should be willing to know the very worst of our case. I have used this expression in my own prayers many a time:

—“Lord, let me know the worst of my case.” I suggest it as a very excellent petition. Surely, we do not wish to be left in pleased with the idea that we are rich and increased in goods, and have need of nothing, when all the while we are naked, and poor, and miserable. We desire to be informed as to our own condition. We would know even the frightful truth, the humbling truth, what some would even call the degrading truth—if indeed it be truth. We wish to be degraded, if to know the truth would make us feel degraded.

A Fool's Paradise,

Next, we should desire to hear the whole of God's word. Like Eli, we should demand faithfulness. We should say to the teacher, to the friend who is dealing with our soul, “I pray thee hide it not from me; but be faithful to me.” You do not go to a surgeon that he may falsely assure you that you have no wound; and I hope you do not come here that I may give you unsafe comfort, and make you feel content in sin. Let those who are foolish desire to be lulled into the deadly slumber of delusion, but for yourselves seek after the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, and love that which humbles you, and draws you nearer to your Lord.

Dear hearers, pray for us who are preachers of the Gospel, that we may be made faithful, and kept so. You know the prevailing currents of these times are toward flesh-pleasing teachings. Men aspire to be clever, and to that end they must appear to be bold thinkers, highly cultured, and far removed from the old worn-out notions of orthodoxy. Many are the floral displays in sermons! Sheaves of corn are too plain and rustic. This is the age of bouquets and wreaths of rare flowers. Paul must give way to Browning, and David to Tennyson. Brethren, there are enough in the novelty business; we have something better to do.

III. And now, we conclude by considering the question, to and from ourselves. I put to you very briefly, and with great solemnity. Have we ever asked the Lord to speak to us? Yes, yes, my sister, I know you have; and you, my brother, you have done still more, for God has already spoken to you. But here are many unconverted people, and I am much rejoiced that you care to come to such a place as this. I do not attribute your presence in every case to the highest motive, for you come to hear a preacher, of whom you have heard much talk; and at another time you will go to hear some noted orator in another place. Did you ever say to yourself, “I will hear what God the Lord will speak”? This would be a far better object than listening to human rhetoric.

A Series of Questions

Next, have we all regarded what God has spoken? When we were young, on a Sabbath-day, we heard a word from the pulpit which seemed to go through us. But

What Came of It?

The tears we shed, were they tokens of coming conversion? Is it not sadly true that Monday found us at our old tricks? We had forgotten what manner of men we were. Was it not so? Is it so still with some of you? The Lord have mercy upon you if it be so! If you have been brutish and obstinate, may grace subdue you.

A further question is this: Have we shaped our lives by what God has said? I know many people who read their Bibles and know what the Scripture means, but they never practise what God says to them. Oh, my hearers, to know the word of God and not to put it in practice, is to make rods for your own backs; for he that knew his Master's will and did it not, was beaten with many stripes. The more you know the more stripes will come upon you, if you have knowledge only, and not obedience.

Next, brethren, have we told what we know? That is a practical point. I speak to quite a number of Christian men and women who would have to confess, “No; I am like Samuel, so far that I fear to tell Eli the vision.” You were going to speak to the person who sat in the pew with you the other Sunday, and you almost got a word out, but it died on your lips. For idle words you will have to give an account. You did mean to pray with your child, mother, but you have not done it yet. What if she dies before you have done so? Good friend, you meant to speak to the man at the next bench in your workshop. Ah, you have meant to do it so many times! I had a friend, a dear friend, who is now, I trust, in heaven, and there was a man who used to take orders from him for goods, and bring them to him when finished. He was a good and punctual workman, but not a Christian. Well, my friend intended—ah! he intended for years—to have a quiet conversation with that workman about his soul. One day the goods came in, but a woman brought them. She said, “I am So-and-so's wife. He finished these goods; but he is dead.” My friend said that to his heart; for he had so often thought of the man, and often said to himself, “I must and will speak to him the next time he calls;” but somehow, when he came into the shop, business was brisk, and he looked over the goods and paid for them as quickly as he could, and never began a conversation. Now the man was beyond the reach of warning or instruction. Do not let it be so with any person with whom you come in contact.

The Words were Like a Bullet

Do as Samuel did: tell the whole of it if they ask you to tell them, or if they do not ask you to tell them. Those who do not ask you are probably those who have the most need of your efforts. There is an art in private conversation, I believe. Certain of our dear friends are always telling out the Gospel on all sides, and they seem to do it with much ease. I speak of my Lord also to individuals, but I must confess that it does not come so easy to me to speak to an individual as to preach to thousands. We must school ourselves to it. That art of button-holing, and coming into close contact with individuals, is one that we must cultivate, and we must not be satisfied until we become expert in it; for it is one of the chief ways in which men are saved. May God help you in this and all other duties. Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

The Anonymous Prophet.*

THE name Zechariah—“The Lord remembers”—is a common one. The prophet of this name, who wrote the first eight chapters of this book was a contemporary of Haggai, and his chief task like that of his older colleague, was to rouse the people to rebuild their ancient temple. . . . There is yet another “Zechariah, son of Jeberechiah,” who is mentioned by Isaiah (8 : 2), and since the author of chapters nine to eleven in the book of Zechariah is different from the author of the first eight chapters, Bleek and others have supposed that they were written by the Zechariah whom Isaiah knew. This is only a conjecture. The name seems to have been borne by many persons of note. . . . The three chapters nine to eleven are probably the work of some prophet, whose name is no longer recoverable. They may have been by some one, who bore the common name of Zechariah, but their whole style and purport shows that they could not have been written by the post-exile prophet, whose utterances, we have before us in the previous eight chapters, [one expression Zech. 11 : 12, 13 is ascribed to Jeremiah in Matt. 27 : 9.] . . . Internal evidence makes it almost certain that in chapters twelve to fourteen, we are face to face with yet another prophet, and one who lived neither like the contemporary of Haggai, in the period after the exile, nor yet like the author of the other three chapters in the anarchic close of the history of the Northern Kingdom, but a little after Habakkuk and shortly before the destruction of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

* From The Minor Prophets, by Rev. F. W. Farrar, D.D., one of the excellent series of volumes on Men of the Bible. This volume is one of the best of the whole series and the most useful inasmuch as the ordinary reader knows little about the men of whom it treats, and the author's learning and research sheds new light on his subject. Pp. 245; Price 1s.; Published by Anson D. F. Randolph & Co., 38 West 23d Street, New York.

A REPEEMED CHURCH.

REV. DR. TERHUNE'S SUCCESSFUL PASTORATE.

See illustrations on next page.

THE First Reformed Church, on Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn, is a stately edifice, capable of seating fourteen hundred people. It was built in 1869, a period when inflation of everything, including human hopes, was at its height. So, although the cost of labor and materials was at high water-mark, and the sale of the smaller church in which the congregation, in charge of Rev. E. S. Porter, D.D., had formerly worshipped, left but $1,200 in the treasury, sagacious judges desisted no peril in the enterprise. Not until financial ebb had succeeded financial flow, and the cost of the completed building was found to have exceeded $136,000, was uneasiness as to the result of the undertaking felt by the solid men of the congregation.

The rally along the whole line consequent upon the discovery of their position, reduced the debt to about $50,000, which was safely funded. This load, with the weary weight of interest, was borne for twenty-one years! Now and then, it was necessary, by special effort, to shake off floating debts, the inevitable accretion of funded indebtedness carried under such circumstances. At one time the floating debt amounted to $10,000, at another, since the present pastor entered upon his office, to $7,000. These were paid off without diminishing the main debt. Embarrassment and anxiety were increased, after some years, by the ill-health of Dr. Porter, and the deaths and removals of valuable parishioners, and work became struggle. When in 1883, Dr. Porter's confirmed invalidism compelled his resignation, it seemed a forlorn hope which Rev. E. P. Terhune, D.D., was called upon to lead.

Dr. Terhune's pastorates of eighteen years in Newark, N. J., and of five years in Springfield, Mass., justified the confidence of his new flock in his generalship. In the prime of vigorous maturity, magnetic in manner, earnest in study, and eloquent in speech, he brought his best powers to bear upon the difficult task committed to him.

The “backbone” of the First Reformed Church on Bedford Avenue is slanch. When the fortunes of the parish were at the worst, the “staying power” of men of means and of women who added to their faith, works, was manifest. Dr. Terhune only waited to assure himself of this before attempting a feat pronounced by the outside world to be an impossibility. It was a foregone conclusion in community and denomination that all efforts to free the church would result in mortifying defeat.

Rising in the the pulpit upon the first Sunday in January, 1889, the intrepid leader told the audience—a small one by reason of a fierce storm—that the debt must be paid in full, and how it could be done. He was ably seconded by Mr. Edward Kimball, and before the close of that stormy Sabbath, $33,000 were pledged by responsible parties. Within the month the whole amount was subscribed, and each pledged as a “legal promise to pay.” The subscription-paper was put into the hands of an able treasurer especially appointed to receive funds and discharge obligations, and the work began in serious earnest. Each organization connected with the church assumed a share of the load. The Ladies' Aid Association pledged $5,000, the Sunday School, $2,500, and the Society of Christian Endeavor, $500. At the end of the two years allotted for the payment of the debt, every subscription had been paid.

So silently was the great emprise carried forward that comparatively few of the congregation were prepared for Dr. Terhune's announcement on the first Sabbath of 1891, that they “would worship that day in their own sanctuary,—that the building so dear to them was now truly—and for the first time—the House of God.”

The solemn jubilee service of the next Sunday was felt by the rejoicing people to be the real consecration of the church they had fought to save. An eloquent commemorative discourse was preached by the pastor in which his own part in the Great Deliverance was modestly minified by his determination to honor him who had given thirty-four years of zealous service and his very life to secure the end his people that day commemorated. Dr. Terhune was followed by a son of the late revered incumbent, Rev. E. S. Porter of Bridgewater, Mass., whose congratulatory address to church and pastor was full of feeling, and was listened to with profound emotion.

Rev. E. P. Terhune, D.D.

The First Reformed Church, Bedford Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

On Tuesday evening, January 6th, 1891, the general joy was evinced by the gathering in the chapel and parlors of the church of the congregation and their invited guests. Happy faces and glistening eyes testified to the passionate loyalty of a tried and faithful people to the church of their love. There were musical numbers, given by the choir—the best in that quarter of the city,—brief addresses; the presentation to Dr. Terhune of a superb writing-service of solid silver engraved with a suitable inscription,—lastly a supper to which all were made welcome. The surprise-gift to the pastor was presented on behalf of the women of the church, by Mrs. R. N. De Nyse. Her address was exquisite in sentiment and diction, eliciting from a distinguished divine the exclamation: "Who says that women ought not to preach!"

One section of the beautiful tribute to the pastor ran as follows: "Through your life among us and your words, we have been encouraged to do our part. We have been drawn nearer to God when you have prayed with and for us, and every lesson from the pulpit in the dear old building over yonder had in it a message of God's love true and sweet, and many an appeal that our hearts be given to him who gave his life for us."

"We would thank you for this, and for the many times you have brought cheer to the sick and consolation to the dying; for sympathy bestowed when we were bowed down with sorrow or care. Through your kindness to us and your fidelity to your work you have made our hearts cling more closely to this church, and we rallied at your bidding with renewed energy and strength to make this our church-home."

In his grateful response, Dr. Terhune referred to the signal services rendered by his "true yoke-fellows" through the long contest that led to the triumph of the church. "Who would not work gallantly with such a backing—rather let me say—with such a vanguard of noble women?" he said. "But for them—their faith, their prayers, their patience, their labor of love—we should, to-night, be compelled to register failure, not success."

He then introduced "the friend of his boyhood, and of all his later years, Rev. Dr. Talmage, who had come to rejoice with us." Dr. Talmage said:

"Friends and neighbors: It requires no talent to get a church in debt, but requires earnestness and faith and Christian genius to get it out, and that work has been accomplished by my friend of many years, Dr. Terhune, leading on his church to this magnificent consummation. Most men are best appreciated after they are dead, their bodies safely under ground and their souls in glory. I want the pastor of this church to know that his work is appreciated by Brooklyn and the world while he is yet in life and health and full strength, with many years of active service before him. One word of ante-mortem appreciation is worth a whole library of post-mortem praise. If I should live long enough to do a good thing, tell me of it instead of telling my tombstone. Those who have helped in this stupendous undertaking of raising a big church debt, ought to be happy about it the rest of their days. What self-sacrifice and holy pluck and persistence and power to put the foot on all obstacles, are represented in this triumph. How glad I am to meet your pastor under such jubilant circumstances. He was the son of a Presbyterian elder, and myself the son of a Reformed Church elder; but Dr. Terhune has landed in the Reformed Church, and I have landed in the Presbyterian. His father and my father, who were great friends on earth, are now in the same Church Triumphant. Yes, in our boyhood, Ed and I studied together, we rode together, we walked together, and before we were fortunate enough to meet our lifelong companions, we called on the ladies together, and in all the years I never knew him to say a wrong word or do a mean thing. But I must say I think that one of the grandest things he ever did since he entered this life was to knock off the shackles of debt from this beloved church, which now opens the brightest chapter of its history. The same characteristics that put this work through successfully were his characteristics when a boy. When Terhune started to do anything he stopped not until he accomplished it. Dr. Terhune has done for this church that which no other man that I know of could have done, and this building will stand as his monument long after all of us now in the harvest-field shall have quit work. If he never preaches another sermon or does another thing for God and the world, he will have a right to rejoice that he has put this church in a stronger and grander position than it ever occupied. Thanks to the Committee of Reception, who invited me to come again within the borders of the Reformed Church. Dear old Church! Baptized at her altars as I was, ordained by her ministry and my parents carried out to their last sleep under her benediction, I never think of her without a throb of affection, and you will not blame me for stopping a moment to kiss my mother. May the blessing of God be upon her ministers and her churches! Health upon all her cradles, and garlands upon all her graves!"

THE REVOLUTION IN CHILI.

REPORTS of serious disturbances in Chili, have arrived during the past few weeks, and have caused much surprise, as Chili has hitherto prided herself on her immunity from the internal broils to which other countries in Central and South America are subject. According to the dispatches received, a portion of the Chilean navy revolted on January 7th, and blockaded the ports of Valparaiso, Iquique, Coquimbo and Pica, and seized Tarapaca. The army is said to have remained faithful to the Government and to have defeated the insurgents in a sharp conflict on shore. The dispatches go on to say that the insurgents were surprised at the attack of the troops as they had confidently relied on their co-operation. Precisely what has occurred it is impossible to say at present. The representatives of Chili in this country do not credit the news contained in the dispatches. They say that as they come by way of Buenos Ayres, owing to a break in the direct cable off the coast of the Valparaiso, Chili, From the Sea.

Ecuador, they are untrustworthy as they are liable to be tampered with there by persons financially interested in discrediting Chili. There is little doubt, however, that an insurrection has taken place though its successes may have been exaggerated.

For nearly a year there has been a great deal of discontent in Chili. The people there are slow to move in open revolt, but much indignation has been expressed against President Balmaceda, and his unpopularity was rapidly approaching a dangerous point in December last. It arose out of a conflict between the President and Congress. It was asserted that the President had interfered in an unconstitutional manner with the election of members of Congress, and was intriguing to promote the election of Senor Enrique Sanfuentes, a personal friend of his own, as his successor. The Congress also expressed a want of confidence in the President's Cabinet, and at length took the extreme course of refusing appropriations until the unpopular ministers were dismissed. The President complied, but the new cabinet was far from satisfactory to Congress. A new electoral law was then passed, of a character precisely opposite to that which is now agitating our own Congress. Its aim was to prevent government control of the elections, and place them wholly under the management of the local officials. It was charged that Balmaceda defeated this law by private orders to the provincial governors. Indignation meetings and public protests of all kinds were made, but the President continued firm both as to his endorsement of Sanfuentes, and his determination to control the elections. The popular feeling was displayed very unequivocally during a visit which the President paid to the harbor works of Talcahuano, when the people with many prominent citizens of Valparaiso and Santiago manifested their resentment. This was also voiced in the press, and some arrests were made among the editors in consequence. With the public feeling in so explosive a state, some such outbreak as that reported was considered in December last, very likely to occur. Valparaiso, a picture of which is here given, is the city that next to Santiago, the capital, exercises the greatest influence in Chili. It is built in the shape of an amphitheatre, the houses rising in terraces on the sides of the hills, which overlook its bay. It is strictly a business town, its chief buildings, being the custom house and bonded warehouses, the banks, warehouses, merchants' establishments and some unusually fine shops. Its population is about 125,000, with a large foreign element. The wealth and culture of the people may be inferred from the club-houses famous for their luxury and display, the excellent libraries and public reading-rooms and the picture galleries in which are many celebrated masterpieces.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

BY REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Continued from page 78.)

THE morning was now considerably advanced, and the unusual sight in quiet Settleworth of a handcuffed prisoner being marched through the streets had gathered quite a little crowd, and a noisy one. Tramp, tramp, tramp, amid buzz and shout and jeer, the constable and his prisoner marched along the roadway. They had to pass the premises of the old carpenter, under the bedroom window in the gable end of the cottage from which a white sad face was looking out. Nora Mansford caught sight of the constable and his staff; then of the bright steel handcuffs on the prisoner's wrists; then of the face of Jasper Rawdon, haggard, hopeless, and wearing withal a pleading look, as he fixed his eyes on her face. "My father!" she exclaimed, and uttering a low cry, long and despairing, Nora sank upon the ground. The shame, the disgrace, the horror and the agony found its culmination; and when the astonished Tabitha discovered her, the scarlet hue of fever was on her cheek, and the unnatural blaze of dominant unreason in her eye.

The girl instantly sprang to her feet as if in an agony of terror, and shrank back into a corner of the room.

"I've murdered him!" she cried, "I've murdered him!" Then rushing past the horrified Tabitha, she sprang through the open door, through the yard, on the highway, bounding on rapid as a deer, with one fell object in her seething brain, one dreadful goal in view, the river Settle and a grave in its flowing waters.

Near the bridge that spanned the river was a footpath that lay by the river side. At a place where the Settleworth woods sloped right down to the river's edge was a still, deep reach of water, locally known as the Trout Pool, half shadowed by umbrageous trees, a beautiful spot, and a favorite resort of Nora at times when her heart was more than usually oppressed and weary.

George Appleton had risen early that morning, as he usually did, and had set to work in the little room he called his "study," upon the plans he was constructing for the renovation and repairs of Hazelcroft. Long and closely he sat with pencil, compass, rule and pen, but all the while he labored under an unaccountable constraint that he could not shake off. At last he threw his pencil on the drawing-paper set before him, and hastily left the little room.

"Mother," said he, as he passed through the cosy kitchen in which she was preparing the morning meal. "I must have a 'dip' this morning to freshen me up a little, and wash off the blues. I'll be back in half an hour." Providing himself with towels for his bath, he made his way to certain, safe and moderate shallows in the neighborhood of the Trout Pool, his customary bathing resort. He had divested himself of coat and vest, when he paused in astonishment at the sight of a white form with hands outstretched and hair floating in the breeze in rapid flight, speeding towards the Pool.

"Nora!" he shouted, as he spurned the ground in hot pursuit. His stride was long and his speed was swift; but his involuntary cry had only served to urge her to more determined effort. Long before he reached the place he saw her make one fearful bound from the bank, and plunge into the very middle of the Pool, with a splash that startled the stock-doves from their perches in the wood, and forced the agitated wavelets to either shore.

Hastily taking off his boots, for he knew well the hazard of the venture, and with a prayer to heaven on his lips, he dived to meet her as she rose, caught her garments in his hand, and brought her up; loosed her, and in an instant had his strong arm around her. Then began a strange fight for life or for death. The strange fires that were burning in brain, and nerve, and muscle, were not to be easily quenched even in the spasms of death, and Nora commenced a fierce and hostile struggle to free herself from his embrace. He gasps for breath; the floating dress folds itself round his one free arm, and hampers him. He is sinking! No, a desperate effort rids him of the clinging fetter, and again he makes for the farther which is now the nearer shore. Suddenly he remembers that the set of the stream has worn the bank sheer almost to the very bottom. How shall he, how can he, get her ashore? His strength is failing. Thank God, her strength is failing, too. Her resistance grows less and less, and when at length he touches the steep bank, she lies limp and still across his tired arm.

But his strength is all but gone. In vain he tries to find a foothold in the yielding soil. He is at the bank, but he cannot touch the bottom with his feet. O, for a helping hand! O, even for a bending bough! A little to the right of him is the old elm with the crooked roots projecting outward from the river edge. He must swim again and reach one of them. He is desperate. Love and pity give him strength. His right hand grips a naked root, too thick, alas, to grasp, but his hand is on it, and for a moment or two he can rest him there. The root is wet and slippery with his wet hand; he feels his fingers sliding from it. A cry escapes him; his head droops, his left hand with its precious load droops, too. Another cry, or rather groan, leaves his white lips. Then all is dark!

With the disappearance of Nora through her chamber door, Tabitha Crowle found her wits again, recovered from the palsy effects of her astonishment, and, rushing after the flying girl, raised a hue and cry that told the neighborhood that help was needed. Abram Hardale had returned from the "Hermitage;" Richard Mansford had come with him to reveal himself to his niece, and to end forever the effects of the horrible delusion of which she was the innocent victim; and honest Phelim Macgrath who had been to the Round House, finding a pardonable gratification in seeing the "blaguard haythen," as he called him, safely housed in jail, was brought on the scene by Tabitha's wild cries.

Tabitha ran with a speed that would not have been wisely prophesied concerning her, and the three men followed her. Phelim was close to her heels as she took the wood-land way across the bridge and among the trees. It was he that heard George Appleton's despairing cry. Scarcely had that last despairing groan left George Appleton's white lips, than Phelim's vigorous grasp was on his wrist, and Phelim's hand was wrapped around Nora's dripping robes, the while his leg found purchase around the tree. Other hands were stretched to help, and the rescued maiden and her brave rescuer were laid side by side on the green bank of the river which had well-nigh been their grave.

With the young carpenter the matter was not very serious. He soon showed signs of returning consciousness. He was spent and weak, and had to be borne by sympathetic hands to his home which was not far away. With Nora it was far otherwise. She was in utmost peril, if she were not already dead, for Richard, at the outset of his efforts for her recovery, perceived no single sign of life. Gentle as a woman, tender as a mother, skillful as a doctor, he went about his work in a way that excited the admiration of the by-standers, who stood in silent sympathy, or busied themselves under his direction to render what help they could.

Eventually, after many fluctuations of hope and fear, Nora gave evidence that the spirit still tenanted its frail casket, and having had her wrapped in warmest clothing, her uncle Richard arranged for her careful transfer, to Abram Hardale's more distant abode, but to the "Hermitage" near by, where his conscience told him she ought to have had her home for many a day.

For many days Nora Mansford hovered between life and death. It was an anxious time. At last, youth, a sound constitution and good nursing with God's blessing, gained the battle, and Nora Mansford was so far her old self again as to make it possible and advisable to inform her of the happy things that it would give life to her to know.

She had only known the tenant of the "Hermitage" by sight, but had often spoken to Tabitha concerning him. His face and mien; his tone and bearing, had won upon her, and she had said many a time how kind and good he looked.

Richard Mansford never relaxed his care over her during those days of suspense, and there were no bounds to his joy when she slowly and painfully crept back to life. He reproached himself that he had not gone straight to his natural duty when he left Australia, and reached his native shores; had he gone direct to his brother's daughter and taken her to his heart, from what floods of agony he would have saved her. As he looked at her, he thought of this with tears of repentance in his eyes, and a great pain at his heart. Now he resolved to lose no time in telling her all.

One morning having learned from Tabitha that she was better than usual, he went to the room where she was reclining on her invalid's couch, and asked her if she felt well enough to hear good news.

On Nora's assuring him that she was, he said, "Well then, I must introduce myself. You may call me uncle, my dear. My name is Richard Mansford, I am the brother of your own father, now lying in his grave on my farm at Ooramarra, in Australia. I saw him buried, and I reared a stone there to mark the place," said he quietly.

Nora strove to rise in her great wonder, but her uncle quietly laid his hand on her, saying softly.

"All is well, sweet niece, all is well. You wonder, how it happened that so heavy a sorrow could come to you as that you have borne so silently and so long. You have been the victim of a cruel deceiver, who personated your father for his own gain; whose lies are now quite exploded, and who is in good keeping in York jail awaiting his trial, not for his nefarious crime against you, but for the burglary at the 'Hermitage.'"

For a few moments Nora lay perfectly still with her eyes closed, lay musing, and as I think, talking with her God. Then she opened her eyes, looked at her new found relative with glistering eyes, and said as she stretched her arms to him:

"Kiss me, dear uncle, and help me to thank God!"

Richard Mansford did as he was told, glad and grateful that he had done the right thing at last. The touch of his niece's lips was the pleasantest sensation that had come to the lonely man for many and many a day, and he proceeded to tell her all she ought to know.

The conversation soon turned, under his deft management, to her rescue from Trout Pool, of which she knew nothing, so strictly had her uncle warned others to forbear from imparting the news. The past was a blank to her from the moment, when she saw Rawdon with the hand-cuffs on. She listened intently as he told of her mad plunge into the Trout Pool of the dreadful struggle between herself and her rescuer, of his hard, doubly perilous toil in bearing her to the shore; of his weakening limbs and failing strength, as he vainly strove to place her on the bank; of his last effort to hold on by the slippery root. Then a red spot came upon her cheeks, and her uncle felt he must close the stirring story soon. He had used only personal pronouns, and no names, in the narrations hitherto.

"But who was it, who saved me? I have not heard that yet," said Nora, excitedly.

"Well, well," said her uncle, with a smile. "I don't think that Settleworth, or any other place is over rich in gallant souls, who are equal to a courageous deed of that sort. Do you know of one?"

"It was George Appleton," she said, blurring it out as though the thought itself had leaped out as soon as it was born, clothing itself as it came, in words.

"That's the hero!" said her uncle, "for it was unmistakably heroic, out and out!"

Then memory produced an echo: "Nora, I could die for you!" Memory produced a picture. She saw the young carpenter standing by his bench, manliness incarnate, as she thought, with love in every glance of his eye, and anxiety for her stamped on every feature of his face, as he said those strong words. Her face was scarlet, and turning from her uncle she hid her face in her pillow, and constrained herself to silence in a battle with emotion that threatened hard to leave her vanquished on the field.

Richard Mansford rose and left the room. He had been making revelations to his wondering niece; she in turn had made a revelation to him!

(To be Concluded.)

Colds and Coughs

croup,
sore throat,
bronchitis, asthma,
and hoarseness cured by

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

the safest and most effective emergency medicine.
It should be in every family.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co
Lowell, Mass.

200,000

of our patent Registering Banks sold in one year. Money is registered when deposited, and cannot be removed until required amount is saved. Best plan to save money. Send for circular.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
301 Broadway, New York.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed
by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

Purifies the Blood

At the coming of spring the blood should be purified, as impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect the health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint of impurity, drives out scrofulous humors and germ of disease, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

N. B. If you make up your mind to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to take any other

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, $1: six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

Wives! Sons! DAUGHTERS!

We will send you for three months FARM POULTRY, the best poultry paper, if you send us ten names of persons who keep hens, (few or many), also 25 cents for one pack of Sheridan's Condition Powder.

POULTRY for PROFIT. We will send for 25 cts. or 15 cts. if you mention this paper, FARM-POULTRY, a 20 page magazine, six months. Sample copy free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

NOTHING ON EARTH WILL MAKE HENS LAY
LIKE SHERIDAN'S CONDITION POWDER

Highly concentrated. Dose small. In quantity costs less than one-tenth cent a day per hen. Prevents and cures all diseases. If you can't get it, we send by mail post-paid. One pack, 25c. Five $1. 2-1/2 lb. can $1.20. 5 cans $5. Express paid. Testimonials free. Send stamps or cash. Farmers' Poultry Guide (price 25c.) free with $1.00 orders or more. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

Stop that CHRONIC COUGH NOW!

For if you do not it may become consumptive. For Consumption, Scrofula, General Debility and Wasting Diseases, there is nothing like

SCOTT'S EMULSION

Of Pure Cod Liver Oil and HYPOPHOSPHITES
Of Lime and Soda.

It is almost as palatable as milk. Far better than other so-called Emulsions. A wonderful flesh producer.

Scott's Emulsion

There are poor imitations. Get the genuine.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Largest Sale in the World"

Ask your Grocer for it, take no other. [62]

Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" sent free by
E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK.

American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. Louis.

HOW A FEW CONVERT MANY.

DR. A. W. DOUTHWAITE, a medical missionary, says that about thirty years ago an officer, named Yu Yah-an, in the service of the Imperial (Chinese) Government, while stationed at Ning-po listened to the preaching of the missionaries. He was afterwards discharged from the army, and became an earnest Buddhist missionary, and gained many proselytes. In 1875 Mr. Douthwaite opened a mission station at Kin-hwa, and Mr. Yu, who had not forgotten what he had heard fifteen years before, attended the services, was converted, and after being baptized, was received into the Church. Several months after he was taken ill, and, Mr. Douthwaite says, "During his sickness his propagandist spirit was roused within him, or rather, the spirit of God so stirred his soul to enthusiasm that, before he had fully recovered, he requested me to send him forth as a missionary to the adjoining province Kiang-si. I well remember his earnest entreaty to be allowed to go, 'For,' he said, 'I have wandered on the wrong road, and now I want to lead them to the way of truth: let me go. I ask no wages, nor do I want any of your money; I only want to serve Jesus.' I, of course, sent him away gladly, and as he was too old and feeble to walk, I gave him a little money to defray his travelling expenses. Three weeks after he returned, bringing one of his former Buddhist converts, a stout, black-looking old farmer, named Yu ang-hyi, who seemed almost wild with delight at having, as he said, found the truth, after searching in vain for forty years." The old man stayed with me several days, and then begged to be baptized before returning home. At first I declined to receive him into the Church, as I knew little about him; but he pleaded earnestly, saying "that he was an old man and would never be able to make such a long journey again," that I yielded, and baptized him. Six weeks after, he turned up again, accompanied by six of his neighbors, men who showed plainly that they were earnestly seeking for something that would satisfy their souls, as their religion failed to do. I entertained and instructed them for several days, then sent them back to their villages to tell others what they had learned. They were subsequently baptized, and through their efforts many others—men and women—were led to trust in Christ, while I had no share of that work."

MASSA FORGIVEN BY HIS SLAVE.

A HELPFUL little volume, just out, for the workers is, "Seven years among the Freedmen," by Miss Matherbury, Polo, Ills.—a teacher well known to many in Illinois—detailing the quaint and thrilling scenes of her experience—"truth stranger" oftentimes, "than fiction." One day a chore-man came to Miss Matherbury, to be taught a prayer; all the scholars had a prayer to say and wanted one. John was past middle life and very ignorant. The teacher began the Lord's Prayer, a sentence at a time, explaining as the lesson progressed. "Thy kingdom come" was all right. "Forgive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." "What dat mean?" said he. "That you must forgive everybody, or God will not forgive you." "Stop, teacher; can't do dat," and he went away. After vacation he appeared, saying: "Now go on wid de prayer. I dun forgive him. Ole massar once gib me five hundred lashes, and hit me wid a crow bar, an' t'row me out fur dead, and I met him on de street, an' wouldn't speak at him, but to-day I met him, an' said 'How d'ye?' Now go on wid dat prayer!"

WHERE HE FOUND THE LORD.

PREACHING in the East London Tabernacle, in aid of the Seaman's Christian Friend Society, the Rev. Archibald Brown related this incident: "There came to me here one day a grand looking fellow. I had not to ask whether he did business on the water, for the sea-breeze had kissed his brow so often that it had left its mark there. I said, 'Where did you find the Lord?' In a moment he answered, 'Latitude 25, longitude 54.' I confess that rather puzzled me. I heard of people finding Jesus Christ in these galleries, and down these aisles, and in all sorts of places, but here was something quite different. 'Latitude 25, longitude 54! What do you mean?' He said, 'I was sitting on deck, and out of a bundle of papers before me I pulled one of Spurgeon's sermons. I began to read it. As I read it I saw the truth, and I received Jesus in my heart. I jumped off the coil of ropes saved. I thought if I were on shore I would know where I was saved, and why should I not know on the sea? And so I took my latitude and longitude.'"

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

A NEW BOOK BY DR. CUYLER.

How to Be a Pastor.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

16mo, gilt top, 75 cents.

"No one is better qualified to give counsel of this sort, as his forty years of successful service prove."—Evangelist.

Sent postpaid on receipt of the price by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR COMPANY

740-2 Broadway, N. Y.

GOLD

Debentures issued by this Company make as safe an investment as is possible.

Interest never in default.

Safety Better than High Rates.

Let us tell you what we can do for you for an investment either in bonds or loans.

Assets April 30, 1890, $3,342,202.

AMERICAN INVESTMENT CO.,

150 Nassau Street, New York City.

E. S. ORMSBY, President. A. L. ORMSBY, H. E. SIMMONS, Vice-Prests.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address.

CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

FREE!

THE UNSPEAKABLE DELIGHT OF IT! THE VIM AND BUOYANCY! HAVE YOU EVER BEEN A PRISONER? ARE YOU A PRISONER NOW? DOES DISEASE HOLD YOU? ESCAPE! YOU CAN. COMPOUND OXYGEN WILL HELP YOU HERE. COMPOUND OXYGEN IS A CONCENTRATION OF OZONE. IT IS CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY. INHALED TO THE LUNGS IT SENDS A GLOW OF REVITALIZATION ALL THROUGH THE SYSTEM. IN ORDER TO INHALE COMPOUND OXYGEN IT MUST BE RELEASED FROM THE INHALING APPARATUS BY HEAT. THIS SENDS A WARM, OXYGENATED VAPOR TO THE BREATHING SURFACES THAT IS NOT ONLY MOST SOOTHING AND HEALING, BUT IS MOST EFFECTUAL IN REMOVING CLOTS AND OBSTRUCTIONS. COMPOUND OXYGEN MAKES STRENGTH. THAT'S THE POINT; AND STRENGTH IS THE SPECIFIC OF ALL SPECIFICS TO WORK WONDERS FOR THE SICK MAN.

A BOOK OF 200 PAGES WILL TELL YOU WHO HAVE BEEN RESTORED TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY THE USE OF THIS POWERFUL REMEDIAL AGENT.

THE BOOK IS FILLED WITH SIGNED INDORSEMENTS, AND WILL BE SENT ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE TO ANY ONE WHO WILL ADDRESS

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

THE CHORAL UNION,

contains the most comprehensive and successful method of teaching the art of Reading and Singing Music at Sight.

Common Sense Music Reader,

by Dr. PALMER and Prof. SCHAUFFLER. Adapted for use in Public Schools, etc. Price, for each of the above, $6 per Doz.: 60c. each by mail.

Sterling Gems,

by T. E. PERKINS and H. P. MAIN. For Day Schools. Teachers and Scholars will enjoy this book. Price, $4.50 per Doz.: 50c. each by mail.

A full Catalogue of our other popular publications sent on request.

81 Randolph Street, Chicago. THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

SUPERB ANTHEMS,

by H. P. DANKS. A collection of new Anthems, etc.

Diamond Collection. A complete choir collection. 64 pages, large octavo. By same author.

Festival Anthems, by H. P. DANKS. 64 large pages. For Easter and other joyous occasions. Price for each of the above, 35c. by mail; $3.60 per Doz. by Express.

Sterling Anthems, by H. P. MAIN and B. O. UNSOLD. Over 100 Anthems from the popular books. $6.00 per Doz. by Express; by mail, 60c. each.

A full Catalogue of our other popular publications sent on request.

76 East Ninth St., New York.

THIS BRIGHT NEW 1891

needs the brightest and best of music. The 2,000,000 readers of this ad. are all invited to provide themselves with music or music books from our complete and varied stock.

Send freely for lists and information.

SOME OF OUR NEWEST BOOKS.

Songs of Ireland. $1.00. Choice, revised collection of very favorite songs. 66 songs. 144 pages.

Potter's Responses and Sentences. 75 cts.; $6.75 doz. A timely and good collection, which will be welcomed by many choirs. More than 50 short pieces, with a number of Glorias, Chants, &c.

Prayer and Praise. Cantata. Ballard. A good and easy cantata, for a choir or Chorus. 50 cts.; $4.50 per dozen.

Masonic Ode. Fithian. A new, most convenient book of easy and good music, perfectly fitted for the masonic ritual. Much needed. 60 cts.; $6 doz.

Comic and Minstrel Songs. $1.00. 46 merry songs, well calculated to make time pass cheerfully.

Banner Folio. Violin and Piano. Winner. Large number of popular melodies, skillfully arranged for Violin, with Piano accompaniment. $1.00.

Mandolin and Piano Duets. Winner. About 75 popular airs for Mandolin & Piano. $1.00. Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.

C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

MUSICAL.

METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY.

Best private instruction in all branches, also surrounds pupils with superior advantages in Class Work, Lectures, Concerts, and the Languages. Refined boarding privileges for lady pupils. Dudley Buck and Albert Ross Parsons heading departments. Opens Sept. 15. Pupils received at any time. Book sent free.

19 and 21 East 14th St., New York.

Everyone knows the discomforts of dirt. Everyone should know that dirt's greatest enemy is SAPOLIO.

Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap.

BAKER'S BREAKFAST COCOA.

Delicious, nourishing absolutely pure. Costing less than one cent a cup.

A Handsome & Useful Present.

ALWAYS IN SEASON.

"4-IN-HAND" NECK TIE,

Crocheted with

Brainerd & Armstrong's FAST COLOR CROCHET SILK.

"WASHABLE."

Used by all Art Schools, and for sale by all first-class dealers in Embroidery Materials.

BRAINERD & ARMSTRONG CO.,

625 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

Send for printed rules for crocheting

Gents' Four-in-Hand Neck Ties.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885 1885-1886 No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.

THE MCDOWELL CO.

6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

THE OPEN WINDOW

A Monthly Magazine, issued by The Shut-In-Society

for the benefit of invalids. The object of the Society is to relieve the weariness of the sick-room, by interchange of letters, and other tokens of remembrance.

TERMS OF OPEN WINDOW:

To Associates, $1.00 per year; 50 cents to invalid members. Send for sample copy to Secretary.

MRS. HELEN E. BROWN, 146 E. 52d St. New York City.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

A LADY WANTED

in every Town to sell WOMAN'S HAND BOOK. Just issued. Quick Sales. Big Pay at Home. Circ'rs Free. E. B. TREAT, Pub., New York.

TRUSTING JESUS.

I AM trusting Thee, Lord Jesus,
Trusting only Thee;
Trusting Thee for full salvation,
Great and free.

I am trusting Thee for pardon;
At Thy feet I bow,
For Thy grace and tender mercy,
Trusting now.

I am trusting Thee for cleansing
In the crimson flood;
Trusting Thee to make me holy
By Thy blood.

I am trusting Thee to guide me;
Thou alone shalt lead!
Every day and hour supplying
All my need.

I am trusting Thee for power;
Thine can never fail!
Words which Thou Thyself shalt give me,
Must prevail.

I am trusting Thee, Lord Jesus;
Never let me fail!
I am trusting Thee forever,
And for all.

—Frances Ridley Havergal.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

It is pure economy to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla, for it is the only medicine of which can truly be said "100 Doses One Dollar." It is stronger, purer, and better than any other blood purifier.

Originated by a physician, Johnson's Anodyne Liniment is prescribed by many regular doctors. If it's sciatica, bathe with Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, pressing the muscles and nerves hard. Johnson's Anodyne Liniment, used externally, cures rheumatism; not in a minute however.

A SPECIAL AND SELECT EXCURSION
of Clergymen and Laymen to

EGYPT and PALESTINE,

under the arrangements of
THOS. COOK & SON,

Will leave New York, Feb. 18th and March 11th. Illustrated descriptive programme and further particulars may be obtained of the organizers, Rev. KITTREDGE WHEELER, Hartford, Conn., & Rev. R. B. HULL, D.D., 448 9th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

THE DOLLAR TYPEWRITER

THIS IS THE TYPE USED: ABCDEFGHI

A perfect and practical Typo Writing machine for only ONE DOLLAR. Exactly like cut; regular Remington type; does the same quality of work; takes a fool's cap sheet. Complete with paper holder, automatic feed, metal type wheel & inkling roll. It manifolds & uses copying ink; in fact does all of the work of a $100 machine. Speed, 15 to 25 words a minute. Size, 3x4x6 inches; weight, 12 oz. MENTION THIS PAPER. Satisfaction guaranteed. Circulars free. AGENTS WANTED. Sent by express for $1.00; by mail, 15c extra for postage. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.
Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 1-2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

$100.00 will be paid new contributors of short articles to Phrenological Journal. 1st prize, $50. Journal containing full particulars. 15 cts. Fowler & Wells Co., H., 777 Broadway, New York.

MAULE'S SEEDS LEAD ALL.

Our Catalogue for 1897 is pronounced absolutely the best seed and plant book issued; printed in good legible type, on good paper, it excites the admiration of all. 664 varieties of Vegetables, Flowers, Flowering Plants, Small Fruits, Fruit- and Nut-bearing Trees, etc., are beautifully illustrated, as many as 38 of them being in colors. This catalogue is mailed free to all who ordered in 1896; but as the postage on the book alone is five cents, we must ask all others who are not customers, desiring a copy, to send us twenty-five cents in stamps for it; and in addition to sending our catalogue, we will also mail you, without extra charge, a packet of the wonderful BUSH LIMA BEANS, THE MOST VALUABLE VEGETABLE NOVELTY INTRODUCED IN YEARS; AND A PACKET OF THE NEW MARGUERITE CARNATION, THE FLORAL WONDER OF 1897. These two packets of seeds are worth 25 cents; so it virtually means the same thing as mailing our catalogue free to all who answer this advertisement. Address.

WM. HENRY MAULE,
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

CHURCH WINE or absolutely pure unfermented GRAPE JUICE, (without addition or subtraction,) BROOK LAWN FARM BRAND. Nature's Greatest Delicacy. Gives life, vivacity, color. Is more nourishing than beef. Makes cheeks of velvet, muscles of iron. No table complete without it. Spurious imitations have compelled the adoption of the distinctive title which is our registered Trade Mark. Works, Brook Lawn Farm, Esopus-on-Hudson. Presses and keeps the largest in the world. To be had in New York City at Hudson's, Caswell, Massey & Co., Kneuper's, Milhaus' Sons, Acker, Merrill & Condit, Jackson & Co., Charles & Co., Schoonmaker, and others. Pts., 54; Qts., $7 per case of 1 doz. Brook Lawn Farm Co., 101 Park Place, New York.

FORBIDDEN FRUIT

THE NEW MODEL "HALL."

A PERFECT TYPEWRITER. BEST MANIFOLDER. TERMS TO AGENTS LIBERAL. PORTABLE, INEXPENSIVE. WRITES ALL LANGUAGES. Read Mr. Howell's Opinion. "I wish to express my very great satisfaction with the Hall typewriter. Impressions and alignment are both more perfect than any other typewriter that I know, and it is simply a pleasure to use it. It is delightfully simple and manageable. (Signed) W. D. HOWELLS. Send for Catalogue and Specimens of Work. Address N. TYPEWRITER CO., 10 Temple Pl., Boston.

TYPEWRITERS.

Largest like establishment in the world. First-class Second-hand Instruments at half new prices. Unprejudiced advice given on all makes. Machines sold on monthly payments. Any Instrument manufactured shipped, privilege to examine. EXCHANGING A SPECIALTY. Wholesale prices to dealers. Illustrated Catalogues Free.

TYPEWRITER } 70 Broadway, New York.
HEADQUARTERS, } 144 La Salle St., Chicago.

IF YOU WANT ANY BOOKS,

It makes no difference where you see them advertised, or by whom or where they are published or sold, send your orders to me and I will attend to them promptly, send all books to you prepaid, and guarantee that they reach you safely. Postage stamps received for fractional parts of a dollar.

J. E. JEWETT, 77 Bible House, New York.

WRITE for Catalogue TO-DAY.

ANY MAN OR WOMAN NOTHING CAN GET IT FOR AND IT IS JUST WHAT YOU WANT.
OUR CATALOGUE FREE
The Best and Finest ever issued. To Any Address.

A ONE CENT POSTAL CARD WILL GET IT FOR YOU.
WRITE FOR IT NOW. Delays Are Dangerous.

THE CORNISH ORGANS
CELEBRATED PIANOS

sold direct from factory at wholesale prices for cash or upon an easy installment plan to suit all pockets.

ONE SMALL PROFIT ON THE ACTUAL COST—That is ours.
3 or 4 Big Profits and Commissions Saved—THEY ARE YOURS.

THREE BIG FACTS: { The Best,
Our Instruments are { Cheapest, { Most Durable.

THEY HAVE TRIUMPHANTLY STOOD THE TEST OF A QUARTER OF A CENTURY.

Address the Manufacturers. WRITE TO-DAY.

CORNISH & CO. (Old Established and Reliable)
Washington, New Jersey.

SCOTT'S FLOWERS

Handsomely Illustrated Catalogue of sent FREE to any address.
12 NEW FRENCH CANNAS strong plants for $1.00
2 NEW PLANTS and 7 Pkts. NEW and RARE FLOWER SEEDS $1.00
6 Splendid WINTER BLOOMING ROSES, 50c.
ALL the above sent postpaid for $3.00.
ORDER NOW, and mention this paper.

GOOD SEEDS

Only can produce
Choice Vegetables and Beautiful Flowers.
If you want the BEST
Direct from Headquarters,
Write TO-DAY, naming this paper, to
W. ATLEE BURPEE & CO.
PHILADELPHIA, PA.

For a FREE copy of their Enlarged and Elegantly Illustrated
Complete Seed Book for 1897,
Well known for many years as

Burpee's Farm Annual

Every Live Farmer and Gardener should have it.

GRAND NEW FLOWERS.

The Wonderful Manettia Vine—the most magnificent flowering vine in cultivation—price 25c. Enter a new Giant Pansy Seed, 10 packages, magnificent sorts, 25c. Selection of 12 choice packages of flower seeds, 25c.; 12 packages of Vegetable seeds, 25c.; Fuller's Grand New Seedling Gladioli, 12 fine mixed bulbs, 25c. The Excelsior Pearl Tuberoses, spikes of pure white, double flowers of great fragrance, 6 large bulbs, 25c., 12 for 40c. Beautiful Catalogue sent free.
J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO.,
Floral Park, N. Y.

Nasal Catarrh can be easily, quickly, pleasantly, and lastingly cured, providing one knows how. I do know how, can do it, and guarantee just such a cure. MY HEALING CATARRH POWDER (perfectly soluble) will positively and effectually cure in a few days only any ordinary case not complicated with acrofula. There is no humbug and no disappointment about it. I know what I am talking about, and what I say is the TRUTH; if not, denounce me in this paper as a fraud. Many thousand packages sold in past twelve years, and I hereby declare upon oath that I seldom have a complaint, and do not know of a failure to cure in all that time. It is perfectly harmless, safe and pleasant to use, clears the head without sneezing, purifies, heals, stops and cures every discharge from the nose, sweetens the breath, and cures catarrh in all its stages. A package, enough to last two weeks, and more than enough to surely and infallibly cure nearly every case, sent post-paid for only 25 cents by GEORGE STODDARD, 1226 Niagara St., Buffalo, N. Y. Have been in drug business in Buffalo over 22 years. Have my own good reasons for offering this incomparable remedy at so low a price. Mention this paper.

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
Aids medicine, but is especially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach.
FOR A DISORDERED LIVER TRY BEECHAM'S PILLS.

GRAND NATIONAL PRIZE of 16,600

QUINA-

LAROCHE'S INVIGORATING TONIC,

CONTAINING
Peruvian Bark, and
Pure Catalan Wine
Endorsed by the Medical Faculty of Paris, as the Best Remedy for
LOSS of APPETITE
FEVER and AGUE;
MALARIA, NEURALGIA
and INDIGESTION.

An experience of 25 years in experimental analysis, together with the valuable aid extended by the Academy of Medicine in Paris, has enabled M. Laroche to extract the entire active properties of Peruvian Bark (a result not before attained), and to concentrate them in an elixir, which possesses in the highest degree its restorative and invigorating qualities, free from the disagreeable bitterness of other remedies.
22 rue Drouot, Paris.

E. FOUGERA & CO., Agents for U. S.,
30 North William street, N. Y.

LAROCHE

DONALD KENNEDY

Of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but then you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Write me if you want to know more about it.

DYSPEPSIA. Advice sent free to any address.
Food to eat. Food to avoid
John H. McAlvin, Lowell, Mass. 14 years City Treas.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1890, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.
 Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 7.
 Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
 Annual Subscription, $1.50

CHRISTIAN RAILROAD MEN—THE NEW YORK CENTRAL BRANCH OF THE R. R. YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.
 1. Chairman Cornelius Vanderbilt—2. Director Depew—3. Exterior of Building—4. Entrance Hall—5. Library—6. Lecture-Room—7. Lunch-Room—8. Gymnasium.

PRACTICE, NOT THEORY.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON PREACHED IN THE BROOKLYN ACADEMY OF MUSIC LAST SUNDAY MORNING, FEBRUARY 15, 1891.

Ocean Craft with too much Sail and too Little Tonnage—Jerusalem's Hallowed Site—Practical Religion, the Great Want of the World—Wanted in the Market—The Prevalence of Adulteration—A Liturgy for Wheat-Speculators—Wanted by Employers and Employees—By Professional Men—By People in Elevated Society—Tippling Ladies—Wanted in the Marriage Relation—The Old Religion with New Appliances—Illustrious Examples of Practical Religion—The Consecrated Home of the Crossleys.

"Faith without works is dead." James 2: 20.

HE Roman Catholic Church has been charged with putting too much stress upon good works and not enough upon faith. I charge Protestantism with putting not enough stress upon good works as connected with salvation. Good works will never save a man, but if a man have not good works he has no real faith and no genuine religion. There are those who depend upon the fact that they are all right inside, while their conduct is wrong outside. Their religion, for the most part, is made up of talk,—vigorous talk, fluent talk, boastful talk, perpetual talk. They will entertain you by the hour in telling you how good they are. They come up to such a higher life that they have no patience with ordinary Christians in the plain discharge of their duty. As near as can tell this ocean craft is mostly sail and very little tonnage. Fore-topmast stay-sail, fore-topmast studding sail, maintopsail, mizzen-top-sail—everything from flying jib to mizzen spanker, but making no useful voyage. Now, the world has got tired of this, and it wants a religion that will work into all the circumstances of life. We do not want a new religion, but the old religion applied in all possible directions.

Yonder is a river with steep and rocky banks, and it roars like a young Niagara as it rolls on over its rough bed. It does nothing but talk about itself all the way from its source in the mountain to the place where it empties into the sea. The banks are so steep the cattle cannot come down to drink. It does not run one fertilizing rill into the adjoining field. It has not one grist mill or factory on either side. It sulks in wet weather with chilling fogs. No one cares when that river is born among the rocks, and no one cares when it dies into the sea. But yonder is another river, and it mosses its banks with the warm tides, and it rocks with floral lullaby the water-lilies asleep on its bosom. It invites herds of cattle and flocks of sheep and coveys of birds to come there and drink. It has three grist mills on one side and six cotton factories on the other. It is the wealth of two hundred miles of luxuriant farms. The birds of heaven chanted when it was born in the mountains, and the ocean shipping will press in from the sea to hail it as it comes down to the Atlantic coast. The one river is a man who lives for himself. The other river is a man who lives for others.

Do you know how the site of the ancient city of Jerusalem was chosen? There were two brothers who had adjoining farms. The one brother had a large family, the other had no family. The brother with a large family said: "There is my brother with no family; he must be lonely, and I will try to cheer him up, and I will take some of the sheaves from my field in the night-time and set them over on his farm, and say nothing about it." The other brother said: "My brother has a large family, and it is very difficult for him to support them, and I will help him along, and I will take some of the sheaves from my farm in the night-time and set them over on his farm, and say nothing about it." So the work of transference went on night after night, and night after night; but every morning things seemed to be just as they were, for though sheaves had been subtracted from each farm, sheaves had also been added, and the brothers were perplexed and could not understand. But one night the brothers happened to meet while making this generous transference, and the spot where they met was so sacred that it was chosen as the site of the city of Jerusalem. If that tradition should prove unfounded, it will nevertheless stand as a beautiful allegory setting forth the idea that wherever a kindly and generous and loving act is performed, that is the spot fit for some temple of commemoration.

The Midnight Meeting of the Two Brothers.

I have often spoken to you about faith, but now I speak to you about works, for "faith without works is dead." I think you will agree with me in the statement that the great want of this world is more practical religion. We want practical religion to go into all merchandise. It will supervise the labelling of goods. It will not allow a man to say that a thing was made in one factory when it was made in another. It will not allow the merchant to say that watch was manufactured in Geneva, Switzerland, when it was manufactured in Massachusetts. It will not allow the merchant to say that wine came from Madeira when it came from California. Practical religion will walk along by the store shelves, and tear off all the tags that make misrepresentation. It will not allow the merchant to say that is pure coffee, when dandelion root and chicory and other ingredients go into it. It will not allow him to say that is pure sugar, when there are in it sand and ground glass.

When practical religion gets its full swing in the world, it will go down the streets, and it will come to that shoe-store and rip off the fictitious soles of many a fine-looking pair of shoes, and show that pasteboard is sandwiched between the sound leather. And this practical religion will go right into a grocery store, and it will pull out the plug of all the adulterated syrups, and it will dump into the ash-barrel, in front of the store, the cassia bark that is sold for cinnamon and the brickdust that is sold for cayenne pepper; and it will shake out the Prussian blue from the tea leaves, and it will sift from the flour plaster of Paris and bonedust and soapstone, and it will by chemical analysis separate the one quart of Ridgewood water from the few honest drops of cow's milk, and it will throw out the live animalcules from the brown sugar.

There has been so much adulteration of articles of food that it is an amazement to me that there is a healthy man or woman in America. Heaven only knows what they put into the spices and into the sugars and into the butter and into the apothecary drug. But chemical analysis and the microscope have made wonderful revelations. The Board of Health in Massachusetts analyzed a great amount of what was called pure coffee, and found in it not one particle of coffee. In England, there is a law that forbids the putting of alum in bread. The public authorities examined fifty-one packages of bread, and found them all guilty. The honest physician, writing a prescription, does not know but that it may bring death instead of health to his patient, because there may be one of the drugs weakened by a cheaper article, and another drug may be in full force, and so the prescription may have just the opposite effect intended. Oil of wormwood warranted pure from Boston was found to have forty-one per cent of resin and alcohol and chloroform. Scammony is one of the most valuable medical drugs. It is very rare, very precious. It is the sap or the gum of a tree or a bush in Syria. The root of the tree is exposed, an incision is made into the root and then shells are placed at this incision to catch the sap or the gum as it exudes. It is very precious, this scammony. But the peasant mixes it with cheaper material; then it is taken to Aleppo, and the merchant there mixes it with a cheaper material; then it comes on to the wholesale druggist in London or New York, and he mixes it with a cheaper material; then it comes to the retail druggist, and he mixes it with a cheaper material, and by the time the poor sick man gets it into his bottle, it is ashes and chalk and sand, and some of what has been called pure scammony after analysis has been found to be no scammony at all.

Now, practical religion will yet rectify all this. It will go to those hypocritical professors of religion who got a "corner" in corn and wheat in Chicago and New York, sending prices up and up until they were beyond the reach of the poor, keeping these bread-stuffs in their own hands, or controlling them until the prices going up and up and up, they were, after a while, ready to sell, and they sold out, making themselves millionaires in one or two years, trying to fix the matter up with the Lord by building a church or a university or a hospital—deluding themselves with the idea that the Lord would be so pleased with the gift He would forget the swindle. Now, as such a man may not have any lit-urgency in which to say his prayers, I will compose for him one which he practically is making: "O Lord, we, by getting a 'corner' in bread-stuffs, swindled the people of the United States out of ten million dollars, and made suffering all up and down the land, and we would like to compromise this matter with thee. Thou knowest it was a scaly job, but then it was smart. Now, here we compromise it. Take one per cent of the profits, and with that one per cent you can build an asylum for these poor miserable ragamuffins of the street, and I will take a yacht and go to Europe, forever and ever. Amen!"

MRS. CROSSLEY'S PRAYER.

Ah! my friends, if a man hath gotten his estate wrongfully and he build a line of hospitals and universities from here to Alaska, he cannot atone for it. After awhile, this man who has been getting a "corner" in wheat, dies, and then Satan gets a "corner" on him. He goes into a great, long Black Friday. There is a "break" in the market. According to Wall Street parlance, he wiped others out, and now he is himself wiped out. No collaterals on which to make spiritual loan. Eternal defalcation!

But this practical religion will not only rectify all merchandise; it will also rectify all mechanism, and all toil. A time will come when a man will work as faithfully by the job as he does by the day. You say when a thing is righteously done, "Oh, that was one by the job." You can tell by the swiftness or slowness with which a hackman drives whether he is hired by the hour or by the excursion. If he is hired by the excursion, he whips up the horses so as to get around and get another customer. All styles of work have to be inspected. Ships inspected, horses inspected, machinery inspected. Boss to watch the turneyman. Capitalist coming down unexpectedly to catch the boss. Conductor of a city car sounding the anchor bell to prove his honesty to a passenger hands to him clipped nickel. All things must be watched and inspected. Imperfections in the road covered with putty. Arguments warranted to last until you put them on the third time. Shoddy in all kinds of clothing. Chromos. Nachbeck. Diamonds for a dollar and a half. Bookbindery that holds on until you read the third chapter. Trained horses, by skilful dose of jockeys, for several days made to look spry. Wagon tires poorly put on. Horses poorly shod. Plastering at cracks without any provocation and falls off. Umbing that needs to be plumbed. Imperfect r-wheel that halts the whole train with a hot-
X. So little practical religion in the mechanism of the world. I tell you, my friends, the love of man will never rectify these things. It will be the all-pervading influence of the practical religion of Jesus Christ that will make the angel for the better.

Yes, this practical religion will also go into agriculture, which is proverbially honest, but needs to be rectified, and it will keep the farmer from sending to the New York market veal that is too young to kill, and when the farmer farms shares, it will keep the man who does the work from making his half three-fourths, and it will keep the farmer from building his post and rail fence on his neighbor's premises, and it will keep him shelter his cattle in the winter storm, and it will keep the old elder from working on Sunday afternoon in the new ground where nobody sees him. And this practical religion will hover over the house, and over the barn, and over the field, and over the orchard.

Yes, this practical religion of which I speak will come into the learned professions. The lawyer will feel his responsibility in defending innocence and arraigning evil, and expounding the law, and it will keep him from charging for briefs he never wrote, and for pleas he never made, and for percentages he never earned, and from robbing widow and orphan because they are defenceless. Yes, this practical religion will come into the physician's life, and he will feel his responsibility as the conservator of the public health, a profession honored by the fact that Christ himself was a physician. And it will make him honest, and when he does not understand a case he will say so, not trying to cover up lack of diagnosis with ponderous technicalities, or send the patient to a reckless drug store because the apothecary happens to pay a percentage on the prescriptions sent. And this practical religion will come to the school-teacher, ionable woman intoxicated in the street, or the rail-car, or the restaurant. The number of fine ladies who drink too much is increasing. Perhaps you may find her at the reception in most exalted company, but she has made too many visits to the wine-room, and now her eye is glassy, and after awhile her cheek is unnaturally flushed, and then she falls into fits of excruciating laughter about nothing, and then she offers sickening flatteries, telling some homely man how well he looks, and then she is helped into the carriage, and by the time the carriage gets to her home it takes the husband and the coachman to get her up the stairs. The report is, She was taken suddenly ill at a German. Ah! no. She took too much champagne, and mixed liquors, and got drunk. That was all.

Yea, this practical religion will have to come in and fix up the marriage relation in America. There are members of churches who have too many wives and too many husbands. Society needs to be expurgated and washed and fumigated and Christianized. We have missionary societies to reform Mulberry Street, in New York, and Bedford Street, Philadelphia, and Shoreditch, London, and the Brooklyn docks; but there is need of an organization to reform much that is going on in Beacon Street, and Madison Square, and Rittenhouse Square, and West End, and Brooklyn Heights, and Brooklyn Hill. We want this practical religion not only to take hold of what are called the lower classes, but to take hold of what are called the higher classes. The trouble is that people have an idea they can do all their religion on Sunday with hymn-book and prayer-book and liturgy, and some of them sit in church rolling up their eyes as though they were ready for translation, when their Sabbath is bounded on all sides by an inconsistent life, and while you are expecting to come out from under their arms the wings of an angel, there come out from their forehead the horns of a beast.

There has got to be a new departure in religion. I do not say a new religion. Oh, no; but the old religion brought to new appliances. In our time we have had the daguerreotype and the ambrotype and the photograph; but it is the same old sun, and these arts are only new appliances of the old sunlight. So this glorious Gospel is just what we want to photograph the image of God on one soul, and daguerreotype it on another soul. Not a new Gospel, but the old Gospel put to new work. In our time we have had the telegraphic invention and the telephonic invention and the electric light invention; but they are all the children of old electricity, an element that the philosophers have a long while known much about. So this electric Gospel needs to flash its light on the eyes and ears and souls of men, and become a telephonic medium to make the deaf hear; a telegraphic medium to dart invitation and warning to all nations; an electric light to illumine the Eastern and Western hemispheres. Not a new Gospel, but the old Gospel doing a new work.

Now you say, "That is a very beautiful theory, but is it possible to take one's religion into all the avocations and business of life?" Yes, and I will give you some specimens. Medical doctors who took their religion into every-day life: Dr. John Abercrombie, of Aberdeen, the greatest Scottish physician of his day, his book on "Diseases of the Brain and Spinal Cord," no more wonderful than his book on "The Philosophy of making her feel her responsibility in preparing our youth for usefulness and for happiness and for honor, and will keep her from giving a sly box to a dull head, chastising him for what he cannot help, and sending discouragement all through the after years of a lifetime. This practical religion will also come to the newspaper men, and it will help them in the gathering of the news, and it will help them in setting forth the best interests of society, and it will keep them from putting the sins of the world in larger type than its virtues, and its mistakes than its achievements.

An Oriental Farmer.

"They began this day by a prayer to God."

Yes, this religion, this practical religion will come and put its hand on what is called good society, elevated society, successful society, so that people will have their expenditures within their income, and they will exchange the hypocritical "not at home" for the honest explanation "too tired," or "too busy to see you," and will keep innocent reception from becoming intoxicated conviviality.

Yea, there is great opportunity for missionary work in what are called the successful classes of society. It is no rare thing now to see a fash-

"the Moral Feelings," and often kneeling at the bedside of his patients to commend them to God in prayer. Dr. John Brown, of Edinburgh, immortal as an author, dying under the benediction of the sick of Edinburgh; myself remembering him as he sat in his study in Edinburgh talking to me about Christ, and his hope of heaven. And a score of Christian family physicians in Brooklyn just as good as they were.

Merchants who took their religion into everyday life; Arthur Tappan, derided in his day because he established that system by which we come to find out the commercial standing of business men, starting that entire system, derided for it then, himself, as I knew him well, in moral character A 1. Monday mornings inviting to a room in the top of his storehouse the clerks of his establishment, asking them about their worldly interests and their spiritual interests, then giving out a hymn, leading in prayer, giving them good advice. Arthur Tappan. I never heard his eulogy pronounced. I pronounce it now. And other merchants just as good. William E. Dodge in the iron business, Moses H. Grinnell in the shipping business, Peter Cooper in the glue business. Scores of men just as good as they were.

Farmers who take their religion into their occupation: Why, this minute their horses and wagons stand around all the meeting-houses in America. They began this day by a prayer to God, and when they get home at noon, after they have put their horses up, will offer a prayer to God at the table, seeking a blessing, and this summer there will be in their fields not one dishonest head of rye, not one dishonest ear of corn, not one dishonest apple. Worshipping God to-day away up among the Berkshire Hills, or away down amid the lagoons of Florida, or away out amid the mines of Colorado, or along the banks of the Passaic and the Raritan, where I knew them better because I went to school with them.

Mechanics who took their religion into their occupations: James Brindley, the famous millwright, Nathaniel Bowditch, the famous ship chandler, Elihu Burritt, the famous blacksmith, and hundreds and thousands of strong arms which have made the hammer and the saw and the adze and the drill and the axe sound in the grand march of our national industries.

Give your heart to God and then fill your life with good works. Consecrate to him your store, your shop, your banking house, your factory, and your home. They say no one will hear it. God will hear it. That is enough.

In the latter part of the last century a girl in England became a kitchen-maid in a farm-house. She had many styles of work and much hard work. Time rolled on, and she married the son of a weaver of Halifax. They were industrious; they saved money enough after awhile to build them a home. On the morning of the day when they were to enter that home, the young wife arose at four o'clock, entered the front doorway, knelt down, consecrated the place to God, and there made this solemn vow: "O Lord if thou wilt bless me in this place, the poor shall have a share of it." Time rolled on and a fortune rolled in. Children grew up around them, and they all became affluent, one a member of Parliament, in a public place declared that his success came from that prayer of his mother in the doorway. All of them were affluent. Four thousand hands in their factories. They built dwelling houses for laborers at cheap rents, and when they were invalid and could not pay they had the houses for nothing. One of these sons came to this country, admired our parks, went back, bought land, opened a great public park, and made it a present to the city of Halifax, England. They endowed an orphanage, they endowed two almshouses. All England has heard of the generosity and the good works of the Crossleys. Moral: Consecrate to God your small means and your humble surroundings, and you will have larger means and grander surroundings. "Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." "Have faith in God by all means, but remember that faith without works is dead."

GENERAL SHERMAN DEAD.

AS THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press the sad intelligence comes of the death of General William T. Sherman. He expired on the afternoon of Saturday, the 14th inst., at his home in New York City. On Sunday the 8th inst, he was attacked by erysipelas and in a few hours the disease had taken a firm hold on the aged hero. It is believed he caught cold while attending the wedding of Colonel Shepard's daughter, a week ago. Thirty-six hours after his face and throat were affected, he became unconscious, and lay in a stupor for days with brief intervals of semi-consciousness. His married daughters and his brother, Senator John Sherman, were at once summoned to the family residence in New York City. On Thursday, the 12th, the patient seemed to rally, but he was still so weak that the physicians hardly gave any hope. The old warrior, during his lucid intervals, showed a soldier's courage, making no murmur over his sufferings. Many distinguished men visited the home and some few were admitted to the sick-room, among the latter being Dr. Talmage. Gen. Sherman was born in Ohio on February 8, 1820, over 71 years ago. His military career is well known to all Americans. He succeeded Gen. Grant as General of the United States army in 1869, holding the command until his retirement several years ago, when he was succeeded by the late Gen. Sheridan.

The attack of erysipelas which proved fatal was the third he had sustained within a few years. The sad event plunges a whole nation in sorrow, for the grand old soldier was beloved everywhere. A more extended notice of the event will be published in the next issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

AN ORIENTAL BAZAAR.

THE scene pictured by the artist in another column, wherein the merchants of an Eastern city are busily trafficking in the shadow of the pillars of a temple, is one familiar to travellers in Oriental countries. In Alexandria, Beyrout, Port Said, Cairo and Jerusalem, such groups are often encountered in the public squares, beside some venerable pile, or wherever a mart of trade can be established. Awnings are hung, the shawls, tapestries, cloths and laces are displayed in little piles on the steps, or upon improvised stands, and are spread out in tempting fashion to attract the eye of the passerby. It was such a scene as that in the picture that the Scriptures describe, in relating the incident where the Savior drove the traders and money-changers from the temple.

CHRISTIAN RAILROAD MEN.

THERE ARE NOW NINETY-FIVE Y.M.C.A.'S AMONG THE RAILROAD EMPLOYEES OF AMERICA.

How a Noble Work Was Started in New York and Extended Throughout the Union—Cornelius Vanderbilt Gave it the First Impulse—The Handsome Quarters of the Metropolitan Railroad Branch—Hundreds of Souls Brought to Christ—Centres of Christian Activity.

(See illustrations on first page.)

THE city of New York contains a large number of benevolent and philanthropic institutions which are unknown to the general public, but which exert an immense influence for good upon those for whose benefit they have been especially established and are being maintained. Among these is the Railroad Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association, which originated in the city of Cleveland in 1874, and was introduced into New York in the following year. The early history of the association was romantic in the extreme. It originated in the mind of an employee of one of the roads centering at Cleveland, who had been repeatedly discharged because of his intemperate and dissolute habits. When he was converted to Christ, he at once determined to provide religious privileges for his fellow railroad men and, with the co-operation of the corporations themselves, a reading-room was opened in the Union Depot at Cleveland. A great revival soon broke out among the men, and

Hundreds were Converted.

Meetings were held in the shops and round-houses, and personal visitation was made through the yards and upon the trains.

This movement soon came to the attention of Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who was then the First Vice-President of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad, and he at one determined that a similar undertaking should be inaugurated in this city. A vacant room was found in the basement of the Grand Central Depot, it was fitted up, furnished comfortably and supplied with papers and other current periodicals. At first the men for whose benefit this reading-room was intended were suspicious of it, and the attendance was very small. The secretary, Mr. O. R. Stockwell, was a man of rare tact and he succeeded during the time of his occupancy of the position in disabusing the railroad men's minds of erroneous ideas, and laid the foundation of the present highly successful work. Few who are not brought into close personal contact with railroad men understand the

Peculiarities of their Lives

or appreciate the force of the temptations by which they are constantly surrounded. The strongest of these come from the fact that most of their leisure time is spent at points remote from their places of residence, where the conservative influences of the home and the family are lacking. The irregularity of their lives, the fatiguing nature of their employment, the long and frequent periods of service, render them to a large extent, inaccessible to the ordinary agencies employed by the Church. Even when they are able to spend the Sunday at home they are quite likely to neglect Church attendance because the habit of worship has been broken. Their exclusiveness adds to the difficulties which others find in approaching them, and yet this the natural outgrowth of the discipline of the companies and of the constant propensity of those who travel to exhibit to railroad men the worst traits in their characters.

The Railroad Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association in New York did a quiet modest work in the reading-room in the basement of the big depot, until the fall of 1882 when the generosity of Cornelius Vanderbilt who is its chairman, provided the attractive building of which we give an illustration on the first page. The membership is now nearly 14 and is constantly increasing. The building thoroughly adapted to the needs of the men. On the first floor there are reading and social rooms, with great open fire-places, and in the latter the men are allowed the privilege of smoking, but in other parts of the building it is prohibited. Some of these are also illustrated in the present issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The Library, which contains more than six thousand volumes, is in charge of a competent librarian, and is used by more than five hundred different men in the course of a month. On the floor below are located the gymnasium and bowling alleys, where the clerks employed in the offices of the various companies and such others as may be disposed to do so, can exercise, and the bath rooms, which are splendidly fitted up with porcelain tubs, nickled showers, and a big plunge. The hall of the building where entertainments and lectures are given, is on the second floor, and on the third are sleeping rooms, and a restaurant where food is furnished by the Association at cost price. Educational classes and religious meetings are held at regular intervals.

The work of the Branch in New York is under the direction of a Committee of Management Composed of Prominent Railroad Officials among whom are, in addition to Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt, the Chairman, Hon. Chauncey M. Depew, Mr. H. Walter Webb, Mr. J. D. Layng, and Mr. E. V. W. Rossiter. The members of the Branch are appointed on various committees with special charge of the several departments. There is no distinction made in the membership between Roman Catholics and Protestants, all being equally welcome to the enjoyment of the privileges which are provided, but the management is kept in the hands of active Christian men. The support of the institution comes from three sources: appropriations by the companies, dues from the members and contributions by the Chairman.

While the headquarters of the New York Branch are at the Railroad Men's Building, it also maintains rooms in which similar work is done at West Seventy-second Street round-house, at Weehawken and at New Durham. The New York Branch is the largest of Ninety-five Similar Societies in the United States and Canada, all of which are succeeding in providing for the comfort and elevation of railroad men.

From the beginning Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt has been the prime mover and leading spirit in the undertaking. To his generosity, administrative abilities and constant attention, is due the general interest which is now being taken in organizations of this kind, as well as the success which has crowned his labors. His personal popularity among his employees is due to his kindly spirit, upright Christian character and to the utter absence of ostentation in the disposal of his benefactions. Mr. Chauncey M. Depew has aided the undertaking in all possible ways, and his addresses at the various anniversaries are largely looked for by the members. During the present season a large number of the men have been converted, and they make the best kind of Christians. Groups of them have gone out to hold special railroad meetings in churches round about, and their visits have been productive of great good.

THE SIOUX CHIEFS IN WASHINGTON.

The Indian Leaders Discussing their Grievances with Secretary Noble.

(See Illustration on page 108.)

A DELEGATION of Sioux Indians had several interviews last week with the Secretary of the Interior. On page 108 is a picture of a group of the chiefs, reproduced from a photograph which was taken during their visit to Washington.

The Indians were invited to speak freely both as to the recent troubles and their general grievances. As to the latter, they complained of the quality and quantity of the rations, but their chief complaint was, as it has often been in the past, of the number of people who have squatted on their lands. They were unanimous in their desire for more and larger schools and declared that they wished to send their children to learn "the white man's ways." Little-no-heart added that the Christian people on the reservation were doing a good work in civilizing the people, and their influence was always on the side of peace and good government. All the speakers urged the appointment of civil rather than military agents.

The Sioux story of the recent hostilities was pathetic in the extreme. If their account is true, the battle at Wounded Knee was a disgraceful outrage—a massacre, not a battle. The Sioux say that when they were surrounded, one man among them, not a leader, but a man generally despised, fired his gun and killed an officer. Instantly the soldiers began firing and the Indians were shot as they stood. Some made a break for the ravine, and they were pursued and shot. But the worst part of the story was told by Turning-Hawk and American Horse. They said that the soldiers fired upon the women who were apart from the men, and at some distance. The women also turned and ran, but they had their babes on their backs and could not run fast. The soldiers easily overtook them and shot them down, the same bullet in many cases killing child and mother. In one case, the mother was shot and her child was found alive at her breast after she was dead. The women were without arms, so that the massacre was inexcusable. Mr. Cook, an Episcopal clergyman at Pine Ridge, who accompanied the delegation and assisted in interpreting, said that one of the officers boasted in his hearing that Custer's massacre had been avenged. It may be inferred that the Departments of the Interior and of War did not believe these statements, for Col. Forsyth who commanded at Wounded Knee, and who had been suspended by Gen. Miles, has been reinstated. The accusations are, however, too horrible to be disposed of by a mere Departmental report. The country will expect from the President, as a man of Christian profession, a thorough and complete investigation.

An Oriental Market Place.
(See page 100.)

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Wife's Heroism Saved Her Husband's Life, recently, at Angelica, N.Y. The man had committed a murder and was on trial for it. He was attended constantly during his trial by his wife whose devotion enlisted much sympathy for him. It was chiefly out of compassion for her that the jury convicted the prisoner of a minor offence. During the trial the question was repeatedly raised of what had become of a third bullet from the pistol with which the murder had been committed. It was not answered until after the verdict had been rendered. Then the wife sought a physician and asked him to extract the bullet from her own person. When she heard of the murder she expressed sympathy for the dead man and her husband in his anger shot her. Fearful lest it might increase her husband's danger if it were known that he had shot her, too, she would not even call in a doctor, but bore her suffering in silence for weeks until he was safe. Then she made her secret known to save her life. It is strange that a man so brutal should inspire such love in a woman's heart; but it is well for us all that love is not measured by the merits of its object. If God had not loved us while we were yet sinners no man would have been saved. (Rom. 5:8.)

A Phonograph in a Kitchen has Caused trouble between a house-keeper and her boarders in Newark, N. J. The facts were disclosed in the course of a trial on February 5, in which one of the boarders was sued for defamation of character. It appears that the boarders have been complaining of late of the quality of the food supplied in the house. The boarding-house-keeper alleged that the fault was with the cook. One of the boarders who is a clerk in a notion store placed a phonograph in the kitchen and taught the cook how to operate it. The next day the instrument was brought up and the lady, not knowing what it was, consented to turn the handle in the presence of all the boarders. The instrument reproduced a conversation in which the cook was blamed for giving too high a price for provisions and was exhorted to buy cheaper articles. The boarder insisted that the person whose observation the phonograph reproduced was the keeper of the boarding house, and appears to have convinced the other boarders that it was so. Hence the suit. It was not surprising that the lady was mortified if the voice was indeed her's. The phonograph is an inconvenient instrument for people to have near them who are in the habit of saying things which they do not wish to have disclosed. There are none who would not be more careful of their utterances than they are if they realized the truth of our Lord's declaration, that "Every idle word that men speak they shall give an account thereof in the day of judgment." (Matt. 12:36.)

A Severe and Almost Fatal Shock was Received from a swaying wire in New York, on January 30. A broker's clerk left the office about noon on that day to go to his lunch. As he crossed Beaver Street opposite Delmonico's restaurant he had the sensation of being struck by something heavy from above. He does not remember anything more until he opened his eyes and saw a crowd around him. He looked around for the heavy case, or whatever it was that had felled him, for he was then lying in the slush of the gutter. There was nothing to be seen that could have dealt him the blow, but he heard some one speak of the electric-light wires and looking up he saw a wire, its broken end, hanging just above him. That young man, in common with other citizens, has, doubtless, walked many a time in the light which was carried by the wire that so nearly proved fatal to him. He suffered by the negligence of the Company, who ought to have had their wires underground, but there are disasters of which this was typical in which the sufferer will have none but himself to blame. They who walk in the light of the Gospel yet do not accept Christ, will find that the Gospel which might have been "the savor of life unto life" was to them "the savor of death unto death." (II. Cor. 2:16.)

THREE SCENES ON AN OLD FARM.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for March 1. "The Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them." John 5: 21.

SCENE First: An old farm-house. An oil-lamp on a long table. A strong, middle-aged man sitting at one end, with an open book before him. Next him a woman with tears in her eyes, evidently his wife. At her side two children of six and eight years respectively. On the other side of the father a boy of sixteen years, a girl of eighteen, another of fourteen and a boy of twelve. At the other end of the table are several of the young people employed about the farm and two or three women helpers. It is early morning two hours before sunrise.

The farmer reads from the first chapter of Proverbs: "My son hear the instruction of thy father, and forsake not the law of thy mother. For they shall be an ornament of grace unto thy head and chains about thy neck. My son if sinners entice thee consent thou not," and so on to the end of the chapter. Then chairs are pushed back and all kneel down for prayer. The farmer opens in his usual way, thanking God for the preservation of life and health, and prayer for a continuance of blessing. But he abbreviates a little this morning as he has a special subject on which he wishes to enlarge. He prays for his son. This son is to set out this morning, it appears from his prayer, for a city at some distance to enter a house of business. The farmer is not very clear about what his life there will be, or the nature of his duties, but he knows that however he may be situated, he will need God's blessing. He prays that he may not forget the God of his father and his grandfather, that he may read his Bible and take it as a lamp to his feet and that God will preserve him from the evil. His voice breaks a little as he pleads for the boy and the mother's sobs become audible. Then, as he closes with the Lord's prayer, all present join in and they rise from their knees. The servants separate to their morning duties and presently the vehicle is at the door in which the boy is to travel to the nearest railroad depot. Then good-byes are said and the mother weeps over her boy and the father puts his hand on his head and solemnly commends him to God.

Scene Second: Three years later. The farmer is at the country post-office asking if there are any letters for him. There are deep lines on his forehead now. He looks as if he had passed through some trouble and much anxiety since we saw him last. He does not ask eagerly for his mail; but much as a man might ask who would regard "no news as good news." But there are three letters, all from the same city—the city where his son is employed. He starts with surprise and almost terror as he receives them. Evidently that son of his has given him cause for apprehension. He opens one of the letters. It is the one addressed in his son's writing. He turns to the window out of the sight of the postmaster to read it, and sighs heavily. Then he groans as his eye takes in the few sentences it contains. He opens a second letter which is in a lawyer's handwriting. It seems to contain an appeal, for the farmer shakes his head decisively. The third letter is in a business hand, probably from his son's employers. He reads it through mechanically, but he does not groan over that. The blow that seems to have crushed him was his son's letter.

The farmer drives home slowly. He dreads the close of his journey. "Wife," he says when he is home and has called her aside, "I have bad news. God help you to bear it. The boy has gone from bad to worse. He has brought disgrace on us all and on our honored name. The first who ever bore that name to disgrace it. He is dead to us now. He has written it himself here in this letter. He says we must try to forget him, to think of him as dead. I could have borne it better even if he really were dead." The mother covers her face with her hands and weeps silently. The other children are told something of what has occurred. Not all; the parents cannot tell them all. Their brother's name must not be mentioned any more. It is a gap in the family circle as decisive as if death had invaded it.

Scene Third: The farmer and his wife are elderly people now. The mother's hair is quite white and she wears spectacles as she reads or sews. The father stoops a little and does not walk with so elastic a step as he used to have. They are sitting together in the evening. Some of their children are married now and the family circle has thinned, though grand-children come, now and again, to make the old place ring again with childish laughter. A stranger has come in and, being a clergyman, is received cordially. He has a story to tell. It is the story of a repentant prodigal. The story of one who ran away long years ago to avoid arrest for theft, who settled in a distant land, reformed and prospered. He tells how he has been led to seek the forgiveness of God how he has returned and made full restitution and how rejoicing in God's acceptance, he wants the forgiveness of his father and mother. "Forgive him!" exclaims the old man. "Thank God that he asks it. Yes with all our hearts. Where is he? Bring him in. It is like bringing the dead back to life."

OUR LORD'S PROPHECY.

Christ's Words of Consolation and Warning Respecting His Second Coming.

BY REV. ALDER SMITH, D.D.

WE must always remember that there are two stages in our Lord's Second Coming, and though the second part (when his feet shall stand on the Mount of Olives; and he shall come with all his saints) must be during the last days of the final portion of the Great Tribulation mentioned in Daniel and in Zechariah, yet the first portion for his saints will probably be before the great trouble, or at its commencement. We find the lightning flash of the rapture, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be"—is mentioned in Matthew, before the verse which commences with "Immediately after the tribulation of those days."

The Two Stages of the Advent.

I firmly believe the two stages of the Lord's second advent are mingled in his prophecy, and thus concealed from the eyes of the world, in the same way that the two advents of our Lord were blended, in the accounts given of them, in the old prophets. In Luke 27, we read: "For as the lightning, that lighteneth out of the one part under heaven, shineth unto the other part under heaven; so shall the Son of Man be in his day." "I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed; the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left." This is the rapture; but we read in Matthew: "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light. And then shall appear the sign of the Son of Man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn, and they shall see the Son of Man coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory. And he shall send his angels with a great sound of a trumpet, and they shall gather together his elect from the four winds from one end of heaven to the other."

Christ Comes First for His Church.

From these, and other verses, we may conclude that our Lord will come first for his Church, as suddenly and as universally as the lightning flash, and he will then gather his elect from the uttermost part of earth to the uttermost part of heaven. I believe the gathering of God's elect in Matthew 24: 31, by the angels, and "with a great sound of a trumpet," to be indicative of the rapture of the Church of Christ at the first stage of the second advent. Read in the First of Thessalonians 4: 15-17, and in 1. Cor. 15: "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." These verses undoubtedly refer to the rapture of the living saints when our Lord comes; and this event clearly follows the trumpet sound, and the raising first of the dead in Christ.

The gathering together of God's elect in Matthew and Mark is the same gathering as is mentioned in the Second of Thessalonians 2: 1: "Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him;" and there is no doubt that St. Paul here refers to the rapture of living saints, at the first stage of the Lord's advent, spoken of in his first epistle, and which I have just read. We know that great troubles are coming upon this earth before our Lord again stands on the Mount of Olives with his saints; and we have the cheering words of St. Luke: "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up, and lift up your heads; for your redemption draweth nigh." Note the words, "begin to come to pass," as if the rapture would take place before the world was convulsed with trouble. In Luke 17, we read: "And as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man." "Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot." Noah was safe in the ark before the flood came, and Lot was removed out of Sodom before the city was destroyed and "thus shall it be in the day when the sun of Man is revealed." That is, watchful Christians who are looking for the Lord's coming, will probably be removed before the final great troubles come upon the earth.

Our Lord will undoubtedly come as a thief in the night for his Church, when least expected by the world, as we read in Matthew 24: 43-44, and in Luke 21: 34-36. Here again is a statement, that faithful Christians will be accounted worthy to escape the great troubles that are coming, and to stand before the Son of Man, and the lightning flash of the rapture. Now there is one

Difficulty in Our Lord's Prophecy,

—viz., the verse: "Verily I say unto you. This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." But "this generation" is proved to be the Jewish race by Matthew 23: 32-39, where our Lord denounces them as a generation of vipers, filling up the iniquity of their fathers, whose house would be left desolate, and who would not see him again, until they hailed him as the Blessed One coming in the name of the Lord. This of course, is still future, and it proves that "they" must refer to the Jews as a race.

The Lord may now come at any time for his Church, although it is very probable that that day will not come as a thief on watching Christians. It is very possible (very probable I think) that some of the Jews may first be restored at Jerusalem in unbelief, and that they will then see him whom they pierced. In the parable of the "ten virgins" we read of the midnight cry before the Bridegroom appeared, and we hear of the Master's knock before he comes in. There is also "the Son of Man in heaven." This (whatever it is) may synchronise with the advent. At any rate, the foolish virgins who represent the unwatchful, worldly church—those who will be eternally saved but who will not be accounted worthy to escape the Great Tribulation, will not have time to buy any oil when the cry comes, "Behold, the Bridegroom cometh," but will be left behind. Therefore it is easy to see that the proper attitude of Christians ought to be one of watching and praying.

Signs of the End.

It does not say anywhere that we shall not know the period of the Lord's return; and in fact we have two signs given us that we may know of the approach of the end. Matt. 24: 14, "And this Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations; and then shall the end come." Only as a witness. Surely that is now almost an accomplished fact. There is certainly no civilized nation where the Gospel has not been preached as a witness; and when it has been preached in all nations, then shall the end come. We also read about the fig-tree putting forth its leaves. There is a reference here to the Jewish nation; so here, the putting forth of leaves symbolises the future reviviscence of that race, which the Lord declared should not pass away till all things be fulfilled. Surely the Jewish fig-tree is commencing to bud!

Therefore be ye all ready, and "let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning; and ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding; that when he cometh and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately. Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching: verily I say unto you, that he shall gird himself, and make them sit down to meat, and will come forth and serve them." Surely this refers to the marriage supper of the Lamb! With such a prospect as this before us, what manner of persons ought we to be?

THE SHUNAMMITE'S SON.

S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 1, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 4: 25-37. GOLDEN TEXT, JOHN. 5: 21.

The Ministry of the Still Small Voice—The Miracle of the Cruse of Oil—Elisha's Hostess at Shunem—Her Care for His Needs—The Promised Child—His Death—The Mother's Appeal to Elisha—The Staff Insufficient—The Struggle Between Life and Death—Restoration of the Child.

ELISHA had secured the "double portion," the right of the first-born. (Deut. 21: 17.) Yet, although he was anointed at God's command to be a prophet in Elijah's room (1 Kings 19: 16), his ministry was of a very different order. In Elijah's ministry, the wind, the earthquake and the fire must rend the mountains and break in pieces the rocks before the Lord (1 Kings 19: 11), to make way for the "still small voice." Elijah's was a ministry of judgment; famine and fire from heaven accompanied his testimony. But Elisha was the minister of the "still small voice," the messenger of mercy. It was through him that God sent deliverance to Jehoram's army, when, allied with Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom in making war with Moab, their water supply had been cut off. (II. Kings 3.) It was through him that the poor widow's pots were filled from one cruse of oil, when the creditor was about to seize her sons in payment for the debt. (II. Kings 4: 1-7.) Wherever he went, Elisha carried with him the presence and power of his God. It was no transient thing that the sons of the prophets had recognized in him that his master's spirit rested upon him, Elisha was always

A Man of God!

In the course of his ministry, he one day visited Shunem, a town of Issachar, not far from Carmel. A rich woman lived there, a person of means and influence, who constrained him to accept of her hospitality. A strong tie drew together this man of God, with his holy God-commissioned ministry as prophet, and this woman of God, equally in charge for him, who was placed a mother of her people, in her large estate to care for them as God's instrument. Elisha became frequent visitor at her house. With all the efficacy of a true woman, a woman of God, he would make him at home there. So she said to her husband, "Behold now I perceive that this is a holy man of God which passeth by us continually. Let us make a little chamber, pray thee, on the wall; and let us set for him here a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candle-stick; and it shall be when he cometh to us, he shall turn in thither." Blessed woman whose husband is one with her in ministering to God's prophets! There are some who offer

Hospitality to God's Messengers,

but with a selfish motive, to enjoy their society, and to make on them constant demands of time and attention. This woman's arrangement was not to facilitate her enjoyment or her husband's enjoyment, in the society of the prophet, but that Elisha's communion with his God might be unhindered. She knew him too well to surround him with all the appliances of wealth and luxury, her gifts were not such as would have indulged her taste or generosity in giving, but such as accorded with the heavenly life of the prophet. Oh, for women with a like spirit! Their ministry is of untold value in the Church of God; these are true Marys, who sit at the feet of Jesus, and serve him as his disciples, and verily they shall not lose their reward.

But nothing was further from the Shunammite's mind than reward. The privilege of being permitted to minister to God in his servant was in itself more than any earthly recompense. But he who says, "Give, and it shall be given unto you; good measure, pressed down, and shaken together, and running over shall men give into your bosom" (Luke 6: 38), is not backward to repay in like measure. One day when Elisha was quietly communing with his God in the prophet's chamber, and his heart, no doubt, going out in gratitude to God for such a tender provision for him, he must have found his heart drawn out in prayer for his hostess, and the "still small voice" must have whispered an answer, "Call this Shunammite. . . . Say now unto her, Behold, thou art careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? Wouldst thou be spoken for to the king, or to the captain of the host?" There are some whose great ambition is to be known and recognized by great people. The Shunammite was of another spirit. "I dwell among mine own people," was her noble answer; the woman was a living sacrifice, finding more pleasure in ministering than in being ministered to.

Elisha was at a loss, but glad to be so; this woman was a true disciple of such a prophet, and the atmosphere of such a spirit amidst the prevailing idolatry—must have been a great refreshment to him. What is then to be done for her?" he asked of Gehazi. And the servant, who had probably fraternized with the servants of the house, hit on just that which her heart desired but had long despaired of. "Verily, she hath no child," "Call her." And the woman who would ask nothing for herself received the unlooked for intimation; "Thou shalt embrace a son." Her first impulse was to look at the natural impossibility of such a thing. But it was even so: and the woman, who had delighted herself in the Lord, and in serving him, just in the sphere he had placed her, experienced the truth of this promise "Delight thyself in the Lord, and he shall give thee the desire of thine heart."

All true gold must pass through the fire. God tries us just where we feel the most keenly; otherwise the trial is no real trial. The boy in whom she delighted was peculiarly God's gift to her, and probably the possibility of his being taken from her never once crossed her mind. And when, on a hot day in harvest time, a servant came with the little lad in his arms, struck down with sunstroke, and looking like death, the shock must have been almost too much for her! "He lay upon her knees till noon and then died!" Under the circumstances of his birth, she found a difficulty in saying "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Could God give only to make it possible for her to know such a grief? But how explain this unrequested gift so suddenly snatched away? How recognise the hand of love? Deeper down than the loss of her child: there was the question,

"What can God Mean?"

What has He to say?" Her first act was one of faith. She took the little corpse and laid him in Elisha's room, until God and His prophet had explained matters in the presence of that dead child. She could not resume life in her ordinary surroundings. She must go to the prophet: no messenger would do; she gave no explanation to her husband. When life and death transactions have to take place between God and his children, no presence of man, even of the nearest and dearest must intrude; she came to the man of God on Mount Carmel,—the place of God's visitation by fire; she needed just now a God who could answer from heaven. Elisha saw her, and sent Gehazi to meet her and say, "Is it well with thee? Is it well with thy husband? Is it well with the child?" Intuitively this woman perceived a lack of spiritual power in Gehazi. She could not open her heart to him. Between her and God there might be darkness; she could not understand; but there was no breach. She could still acknowledge that God did right, and her soul satisfied with God, and her will laid down, spoke in the depth of an unshaken faith!

"It Is Well."

But in Elisha's presence it was another matter. This man understood her; she could not hide from him what she hid from her husband and Gehazi: the question which remained unanswered in her heart. She fell at Elisha's feet, and held them. Gehazi would have thrust her away, but Elisha understood that something unusual had caused this unwonted emotion. "Let her alone, for her soul is vexed within her, and the Lord hath hid it from me, and hath not told me." Elisha expected to know, and to know from God, by right of his prophet vocation (Amos 3: 7), that which concerned one of his true servants. Those who live enough in the silence of God to listen to the "still small voice" receive communications from God which other ears are not fine enough to distinguish. "Did I desire a son of my Lord, did I not say, Do not deceive me?"

Elisha saw all the situation, and standing there on the spot which had witnessed the fire as God's answer from heaven to a man who had not feared to pray for the resurrection of the dead, Elisha was ready to follow his master. The mantle which had smitten the waters still clothed him. But Elisha knew himself as only an instrument; God must do the work; and he could do it if he would by any man. Calling Gehazi, he said, "Gird up thy loins and take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way: if any salute thee, answer him not again; and lay my staff upon the face of the child." It was a desperate errand, and Gehazi must be undistracted. But there needed something more than this, and the spiritual sensibilities of the Shunammite discovered it as she said to Elisha, "As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee." And she was right. Gehazi went on before to do his errand, but he had to return with the humiliating acknowledgment, "The child is not awaked." Oh how many godly parents, how many teachers, have to make the same confession. "The child is not awaked,—not roused from sin, not converted to God!" Elisha accompanied the mother, and God accompanied Elisha. When he entered the death-chamber, the Lord of Life stood with him. Gehazi was left outside, and the struggle between commenced. Which should conquer? "Elisha prayed unto the Lord;" no prayer of invitation; he prayed as an instrument of a present God, whose mind was made known to him. The Creator who first made man was in that chamber, and Elisha knew it. "Then he went up, and lay upon the child," it was no experiment, life touched death; he "put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands, and the flesh of the child waxed warm." But death was not yet conquered, the prophet left the death chamber, paced to and fro in the house, but spoke to none. He had not prevailed, but his God. It was victory now, he "went up, and stretched himself upon him," and life returned! It is a picture of the Church of Christ in face of the powers of death, which Christ has conquered by dying (Heb. 11: 14); we are living in days when, if ever, there are signs of Christ's return, when the dead in Christ shall rise, and the living saints be caught up alive to meet him. (1. Thes. 4: 17.) But there need to be Elishas in these days, with life enough to conquer the prevailing death. And the Shunammite? Was it not a greater gift to have her son restored to her from death than if she had never gone through such a trial of her faith? She now knew Israel's God as never before. The God of the resurrection should be that mother's stay for time and for eternity.

Life and Death

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

ADMIRAL PORTER.

IT stuns me as though I had been struck a blow between the eyes the announcement that our friend, Admiral Porter, has gone. He was one of the most gracious and splendid men I ever knew. When a few moths ago he took me through his great house and showed me the trophies of many naval battles, and the presents he had received from all parts of the world, it seemed to me that he was strong enough to become a nonagenarian if not a centenarian. But full of years and honors, and beloved both by those for whom he fought and against whom he fought, has ascended. A private letter from him received years ago in which he expressed his Christian faith, gives me confidence in the happiness of his destiny. How they pass away, those who fought on federal and confederate sides! Many of those who were antagonistic on earth are side by side in heaven. None of us surely are without warning in these times when death is cutting such a wide swath, with his sharp scythe. Be ye also ready.

ALL HAIL, SOUTH AMERICA!

THE President's proclamation swinging wide open the door of commerce between Brazil and the United States, is the beginning of a movement which will make every dollar invested in North American manufactures worth two dollars, and lift our laboring classes into a greater prosperity than they have yet dreamed of. The simple fact is, that the tropical countries are now buying from transatlantic nations almost everything, and from us almost nothing, and the tide ought to turn, and the tide will turn.

In a recent year five billion three hundred and sixty-nine million dollars' worth of goods manufactured in the United States, and only two per cent, taken by foreign markets! Is it not a marvel that American manufactures are not as dead as the proverbial door nail? My only wonder is, that nine-tenths of the manufacturers have not gone into bankruptcy, and ninety-nine one hundredths of the factory hands have not gone into starvation or the almshouse; and it will be worse if the battle is to go on between Lowell spindles here and Manchester spindles there, between foreign merchants who want tariffs down and American merchants who want tariffs up. There is no relief for us in the markets of Europe, and there will be none until "Moons shall wax and wane no more."

This nation to-day, like a silly drygoods merchant who stands behind the counter haggling with a small customer about three yards of tape, when there are at the counter, impatiently waiting, three princesses wishing to purchase their bridal trousseaus. May God arouse this nation from its commercial idiocy!

In South America are regions nearly three times as large as the United States without manufactories, without woollen goods, without agricultural implements, without telegraphs, without telephones, without shoes, without sewing-machines, without ten thousand things that we have and they must have. Not tens of thousands, but millions of consumers. Where shall they get their supplies? They are getting them from another hemisphere three thousand miles away, and we at their next door are buried under a surplus of those very things. They are able to trade with us for their sugars and coffees, and spices and fruits, and valuable woods, and a thousand other commodities. We need their's as much as they need our products. But look, and then hang your heads at the statement that, while our next door neighbors, the Southern republics, and Brazil and neighboring colonies import six hundred and seventy-five million dollars worth of goods a year, only one hundred and twenty-six million dollars worth are from the United States—one hundred and twenty-six million dollars out of six hundred and seventy-five million dollars—only one-fifth of the trade ours. European nations taking their four fingers and leaving us the poor thumb. The sister republics on the American continent, with a foreign commerce amounting to four hundred and twenty-eight million dollars, trade with us to the feeble and paltry sum of sixty-three million dollars. There is nothing but a comparative ferry between this country and the West Indies, while there are raging seas and long voyage between them and other continents, yet they import one hundred and sixteen million dollars worth of goods, and only thirty-one million dollars worth come from us.

Now, all this is going speedily to be changed, and it is going to be the solution of the labor question, of the bread question, of the communistic question, of the over-production and under-consumption question, and nearly all the other questions. It is going to set all the mills on the Merrimac, and the Connecticut, and the Susquehanna, and the Chattahoochee, and the Alabama running day and night with double set of hands, and calling for ten factories where we have one, and putting all the men out of employ into work at good wages, and it is going to change this story of dull times into a prosperity which will roll on in full tide until the Mississippi loses its way to the gulf of Mexico.

They are soon coming to trade with us, Bolivia, Peru, Paraguay, Uruguay, Venezuela, Salvador, Nicaragua, Colombia, Costa Rica, Ecuador, Brazil and the brunette West Indies to meet the blonde and smiling United States. Hail! Marriage day of North and South. While the pessimists have been hunting up the burial service to read at the death of American commerce, and the stops of the organ were being pulled out for the Dead March in Saul, I, an optimist, both by nature and by grace, take up in anticipation the bright-covered wedding liturgy, and as the blonde North takes the brunette South by the hand, saying, "With all my wordly goods I thee endow," I cry, "Whom God hath joined together let neither foreign despotism nor American demagogism ever put asunder." Then let all the organs and choirs and orchestras make everything, from the Montreal ice palace to the halls of the Montezumas, quake under the rolling thunders of the march of North and South American progress.

In anticipation I nail on the front door of the Nation an advertisement: Wanted, one hundred thousand men to build South American railroads, as long as from here to San Francisco. Wanted, five thousand telegraph operators. Wanted, twenty million dollars worth of dry goods and hardware from New York city. Wanted, all the clocks you can make at New Haven, and all the brains you can spare from Boston, and all the bells you can mould at Troy, and all the McCormick reapers you can fashion at Chicago, and all the hams you can turn out at Cincinnati, and all the railroad iron you can send from Boonton and Pittsburg. Wanted, wanted right away, and wanted by express, wanted C. O. D., wanted by railroad train, wanted by steamer. Wanted, lawyers to plead our causes; wanted, doctors to cure our sick; wanted, ministers to evangelize our population; wanted, professors to establish our universities.

BRIEF NOTES.

Miss Harriet S. Benson of Philadelphia has offered to defray one-half the expense of establishing and supporting a mission in Alaska, if the Reformed Episcopal Church will undertake the work.

Rev. Thomas Harrison held a "mid-winter camp meeting" in Seventeenth St. M. E. Church, New York, on Sunday last. Five services were held during the day, the first commencing at 9:30 a. m. The interest in the meetings, the numbers attending, and the good that is being done, have decided the Evangelist and the church to continue them for some time longer.

Mr. S. H. Hadley, of the Jerry McAuley Mission in New York, is doing good work at the Central Union Mission, Washington, D. C. Among the converts is one man who went on the first night of the services because he was an old friend of Hadley, who had not seen him since Hadley quitted his evil ways and became an evangelist. He once saved Hadley's life in a drunken spree. In giving his testimony he said: "If Jesus can save such a man as Hadley, I can trust him to save me."

Dr. L. W. Munhall's services at Reading, Pa., were concluded on Sunday February 8. The announcement that they were his farewell meetings attracted enormous assemblages. The Metropolitan Hall would not contain near all who desired to attend. Overflow meetings were held in the First Presbyterian and Immanuel Evangelical Churches by Revs. Chapman and Stevenson. The young men's meeting in the afternoon was well attended and the attendance at the meetings was estimated at over 5,000. Over one hundred persons made profession of faith at the last meeting.

Rev. H. Parrish and Mrs. Parrish, the evangelists from Stepney Green Tabernacle, London, were laboring last week at the Macdougall Street Baptist Church, New York. The audiences were large in spite of the unfavorable weather. Many souls have been led to Christ and the good work is still going on. The purely evangelistic character of the work of these evangelists is proved by the fact that although they belong to the Primitive Methodist Denomination, their labors are so acceptable to other churches. Any church desiring to avail itself of their visit to this country may address Rev. H. Parrish, 333 West 14th Street, New York.

Mr. George W. Wheeler, of the Central Union Mission, Washington, D. C., asks us to acknowledge the receipt by him of the following sums for the support of Mr. J. McLain Brown's work in Tokio, Japan, whose portrait appeared in this journal on Jan. 28: Mrs. A. M. Bruen, $100; Mrs. Fanny Loesch, $50; "In our Saviour's Name," $10; C. Kiehle, $10; J. H. Chandler, $7.50; Wilbur Bissell, $5; Julius Ives, $5; James C. Crabtree, $2; H. Clark, $2; D. L. C., Morgantown, N. J., $2; Eliza J. Cook, $2; "In Christ's name," $1; D. D., Buffalo, N. Y., $1; No Name, $1; G. H. Harvey, $1; "One who loves to do something for the Lord," Lowell, Mass., $10. Mr. Wheeler would be glad if subscribers would send him their names and addresses, so that he may keep them informed of Mr. Brown's work from time to time.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Admiral Porter Dead—Siberian Prison Horrors—Rescued From a Coal Mine—Canadians and Reciprocity—The New Queen of the Sandwich Islands—Foreign Affairs, etc.

Admiral David D. Porter, of the United States Navy, died at Washington of heart disease, on the 13th inst, after a long illness. He came of a race of sea-kings, and was the son of the famous Commodore David Porter, who commanded the frigate Essex in the War of 1812. His grandfather was also a Captain David Porter who in the early days of the Revolutionary War commanded the sloop gun-boat Delight. David D. Porter the grandson, had been associated with the sea from his infancy. In 1829 he was a Naval Cadet; a few years later he was serving in the old war ship Constellation, under the renowned Commodore Biddle. Gradually promoted, the opening of the Civil War found him in command of the Powhatan. He bore a prominent part in many of the naval battles of the war, notably the capture of the Mississippi River forts, the siege of Vicksburg, the bombardment of Alexandria, and the reduction of Forts Fisher, Jackson and St. Philip. The close of hostilities saw him commander of 35 vessels, and he was promoted to be Vice-Admiral in 1866. In 1870, on the death of Farragut, he was appointed Admiral of the Navy. He has always been a favorite with the American people. He leaves a widow and six children, two sons being in the Navy and a third in the Army. A portrait of the late Admiral is given above.

The Czar has Reconsidered the Proposed Enforcement of the repressive laws against the Hebrews, this step being taken upon the representations of his Minister of Finance, Vyschnegradsky, who feared that the wholesale exodus would seriously affect the Imperial Treasury as well as the mercantile interests of the country. Already, in anticipation of withdrawal, many millions of roubles had been taken out of Russia and the relations with foreign bankers were also affected. The persecuted race were encouraged to leave by the munificent gift of Baron Hirsch, whose fund of $2,500,000 will shortly be placed in the hands of a Committee in New York, for the purpose of aiding the Hebrew immigrants who come here from Russia. It is said that the Committee will include such men as Seligman, the great banker, and ex-Minister Strauss, who formerly represented this country at the Turkish Court.

Three Men were Buried Alive for 115 Hours in Slope 3 of the Susquehanna Coal Company's mine at Grand Tunnel, near Nanticoke, Pa., last week, and were rescued by their comrades after hope had been almost abandoned. The mine had flooded and John Rineer, William Cragie and Michael Shetlong were 4,000 feet from the mouth of the pit when the water rushed in. During all the five days and nights they were in total darkness and had neither food nor drink. They had a supply of air however, and this kept hope alive until they heard the cheering voices of the rescuing party. Their first act, after replying to the shouts, was to fall upon their knees in thankfulness to God for his mercy. Their escape is regarded as one of the most wonderful ever known among mining accidents.

Signor Crispi, the Fallen Italian Premier is not to be crushed by defeat. He has refused a title offered him by King Humbert and, like Cincinnatus who resumed a plough after filling the highest civic honors in Rome, has returned to his law books and once more hung out his modest sign as an attorney. The new Ministry seems to be a rather weak one, and Crispi has magnanimously promised to attack it only in the event of its opposing the Dreibund, or Triple Alliance of the German, Austrian and Italian Cabinets, which he firmly believes to be necessary to the welfare of Italy and the peace of Europe. There are many in Rome who believe that Crispi's recall is imminent.

A Thrilling Story of the Horrors of a Siberian prison is told by Captain Joseph W. Morris, an American, who while sealing with his vessel, the Helena, was captured by a Russian government steamer and with his crew of Americans and a number of Japanese fishermen taken to Vladivostock. His trial was a farce, being conducted in Russian, a language of which he could not speak a word. According to the Captain's tale, he was deported to Siberia where for two years and a half he labored in the coal mines as a convict. His food was one pound of dry bread per day, and he was shackled to a Polish prisoner, who at first tried to beat him but latterly grew more friendly. The Pole sickened and died and Captain Morris was compelled to work with the dead man's body still attached to the end of the bar to which the two had been chained. His narrative of his efforts to rid himself of this ghastly companion is only equalled in sadness by his statement that, three days after the death of the Pole, a pardon came for the man who was no longer alive to benefit by the Emperor's clemency. Morris had abandoned all hope of ever seeing home or friends again when, one day he, too, was pardoned and restored to liberty. This is the first instance on record where the Russian government has ever voluntarily restored to life and liberty any one who has been sent to the mines of Siberia.

Canadians have been Actively Discussing for several days past a remarkable manifesto, issued by the Premier, Sir John Macdonald, in which he takes decided ground against unrestricted reciprocity with the United States, which, he says, means annexation. This, he points out, is admitted to be the view held by the ablest of American politicians. He believes there is enough loyalty in Canada to defeat the schemes of reciprocity projected by Mr. Laurier and Sir Richard Cartwright, and he warns Canadians that the great question upon which they will shortly be called to decide will be whether they are to endanger the possession of the heritage bequeathed to them by their forefathers and submit to direct taxation for the privilege of having their tariff fixed at Washington and ultimately becoming a portion of the United States. For himself he enthusiastically says: "A British subject I was born and a British subject I will die." In spite of the government attitude, the public opinion is said to be overwhelmingly in favor of reciprocity. Sir John Macdonald is now in his 76th year, but is still possessed of wonderful vigor. He has held many prominent official positions in Canada, and during his entire career has been only once—about thirty years ago—identified with the opposition and then only for a very brief period. He has been Prime Minister since 1878 and is recognized as the father of the Canadian policy of protection.

Notwithstanding Emperor William's Peace protestations, it is worthy of remark that the German authorities are pushing forward military preparations with unexampled rapidity. Hundreds of additional workmen have been employed in the smokeless powder works at Spandau. The effect of smokeless powder is said to be demoralizing on the troops, who do not like to be assailed by unseen and unheard missiles. Simultaneously with the great activity in German and Russian military circles, Austria, France and even England, are also pushing forward preparations that bode anything but good for Europe's peace. The British Navy is to be increased and five thousand youths are to be trained every year to form a Naval Reserve.

Probably the Foremost Man in Mexico To-day is Senor Don Matias Romero, who has been chosen to preside over the sessions of the International American Monetary Conference which will shortly resume its sessions in Washington. Senor Romero, who is now Mexico's minister to this government, is fifty-four years of age. He studied law and while yet a young man was made Assistant Secretary of State by President Comonfort. Under several successive administrations he held high offices and in 1863 entered the service against the French and Maximilian. He is a man of fine presence and great magnetism, a staunch friend of America and an ardent lover of liberty. He is eminently qualified to guide the deliberations of the Conference. His portrait is given above.

The Boy King of Serbia, Alexander, the Son of ex-king Milan and the much-abused Natalie, is believed to be dying at Belgrade of a dangerous chronic malady. He is only sixteen years of age, and ascended the throne in 1889. Meanwhile Milan is reported to intend returning to Belgrade, in the hope of being once more established on the throne. The Serbs are passionately devoted to Natalie and her son, but have little love for the monarch who, four years ago, treated them so badly. Milan was not a model of kingly decorum and lost prestige during the last war in which the country engaged. Besides, his treatment of Natalie and his attempts at securing a divorce offended the national ideas of morality. On the whole, it is hardly to be expected that his return would be the signal for national thanksgiving.

The New Queen of Hawaii, Lydia Liliuokalani, is the sister of the late King Kalakaua, and like, ex-Queen Kapiolani, is a sincere and earnest Christian. She paid a visit to Europe in 1887, but has never been in this country. Under the law of Hawaii, the king, failing direct issue, is empowered to name his successor and it was Kalakaua's wish that Liliuokalani assume the throne on his death. She is a woman of rather pleasing features and most amiable disposition, possessing some education and intensely patriotic withal. Under her rule, there is every prospect that the little island kingdom will come into still closer relations with the United States. Secretary Blaine is said to be in favor of a scheme to build a new cable line to Hawaii, to further the interests of reciprocity, and for the accommodation of such firms as are prepared to establish business relations there.

OUR MANIFESTO.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

The Assault on Paul's Credentials—The Modern Preacher Assailed—The Gospel Not From Man—I. In the Mode of its Reception—Not a Birth-right—Not by Human Authority—Not on the Faith of a Church—By the Revelation of the Spirit—In Meditation—In Sickness—In Service—In Holiness—II. In its Essence—Proved by Comparison with False Gospels—By Being Beyond Human Thought—By its Immutability—By its Opposition to Sin—Its Simplicity—Can be Safely Trusted.

"But I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man." Galatians I : 11.

TO me it is a pitiful sight to see Paul defending himself as an apostle; and doing this, not against the gainsaying world, but against cold-hearted members of the Church. They said that he was not truly an apostle, for he had not seen the Lord; and they uttered a great many other things derogatory to him. To maintain his claim to the apostleship, he was driven to commence his epistles with "Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ," though his work was a self-evident proof of his call. If, after God has blessed us to the conversion of many, some of these should raise a question as to our call to the ministry, we may count it a fiery trial; but we shall not conclude that a strange thing has happened to us. When the devil is not troubled by us, he does not trouble us. If his kingdom is not shaken, he will not care about us or our work, but will let us enjoy inglorious ease. Be comforted by the experience of the apostle of the Gentiles, he is peculiarly our apostle, and we may regard his experience as a type of what we may expect while we labor among the Gentiles of our own day.

The Preacher's Commission.

The treatment which has been given to eminent men while they have lived has been prophetic of the treatment of their reputations after death. This evil world is unchangeable in antagonism to true principles, whether their advocates be dead or living. They said more than eighteen hundred years ago: "Paul, what of him?" They say so still.

It is not unusual to hear dubious persons profess to differ from the apostle, and they even dare to say, "There, I do not agree with Paul." I remember the first time that I heard this expression I looked at the individual with astonishment. I was amazed that such a pigmy as he should say this of the great apostle. Altogether apart from Paul's inspiration, it seemed like a cheese-mite differing from a cherub, or a handful of chaff discussing the verdict of the fire. It is remarkable that Paul's writings should be so assailed; but this warns us that when we have gone to our reward, our names will not be free from aspersion, nor our teaching from opposition.

To come more closely to our text. We do not claim to be able to use Paul's words exactly in the full sense which he could throw into them; but there is a sense in which, I trust, we can each one say, "I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man." We may not only say this, but we ought to be able to say it with thorough truthfulness. On this point he would have all the brethren certified past all doubt.

The Mode of Reception.

I. First, to us the Gospel is not after men as to the mode by which we have received it. In a certain sense we received it from men as to the outward part of the reception, for we were called by the grace of God through parental influence, or through a Sabbath School teacher, or by the ministry of the Word, or by the reading of a godly book, or by other agency. But in Paul's case none of these things were used. He was distinctly called by the Lord Jesus Christ himself speaking to him from heaven, and revealing himself in his own light. Yet we also can say this in another sense. We also have received the Gospel in a way beyond the power of man to convey it to us: men brought it to our ear, but the Lord himself applied it to our heart.

So I note that not one among us has received the Gospel by birth-right. We may be the children of holy parents, but we are not therefore the children of God. To us it is clear that "that which is born of the flesh is flesh," and nothing more. Only "that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Yet we hear of persons whose children do not need conversion. They are spoken of as being free from natural corruption, and born children of God, having a grace within which only needs to be developed. I am sorry to say that my father did not find me such a child. He found out early in my life that I was born in sin, and shapen in iniquity, and that folly was bound up in my heart. Friends and teachers soon perceived in me a natural depravity; and assuredly I have found it in myself: the sad discovery needed no very minute research, for the effect of the evil stared me in the face in my character.

Not of Men.

Brethren, we have not received the Gospel, nor do we now receive it, because of the teaching of any man, or set of men. Do you receive anything because Calvin taught it? If so, you had need look to your foundations. Do you believe a doctrine because John Wesley preached it? If so, you have reason to mind what you are at. God's way, by which we are to receive the truth, is by the Holy Ghost.

There is an opinion current in certain circles that you must not receive anything unless it is taught you of men: the word "men" being swallowed up and hidden away, but being there, under the term "the Church." But this is to receive a Gospel "after man" with a vengeance. My dear brethren, a doctrine's being believed by what may in courtesy be called "the Church" is no voucher for it: the most of us would almost regard it as being a question to be raised whether teaching can be true which has been vouched for by those which have usurped the name of churches of Christ. We would each one say, "I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man." We never think of quoting the community of men called "the Church" as the ultimate authority with conscience. We have not so learned Christ.

Great World Corporations

Furthermore, I hope I shall speak for all of you here when I say that we have received the truth by the inward teaching of the Holy Spirit. The precious doctrine of peace through the precious blood of Jesus, we know by inward personal teaching. Yes, those gracious men who have gone to heaven did preach the Gospel to us fully and earnestly, and they labored to make known Christ to us; but to reveal the Son of God in us was beyond their power. Since our first days we have experienced a gradual opening up of the Gospel to our understanding, but in all that process, our real progress has been of God, and not of men.

How sweetly the Spirit has taught us in meditation! Have you not often been surprised and overcome with delight as Holy Scripture has opened up, as if the gates of the golden city had been set back for you to enter? The truth is something like those and grottoes of which we have heard, which you must enter and see for yourself if you would really know their wonders. If you should venture there without light or guide, you would run great risks; but with blazing flambeaux, and an instructed leader, your entrance is full of interest. See! your guide has taken you through a narrow winding passage, where you have to creep, or go on bended knees! At last he has brought you out into a magnificent hall; and when the torches are held aloft, the far-off roof sparkles and flashes back the light as from countless jewels of every hue! As you stand in that vast pillared and jeweled palace, you feel how much you owe to your guide, and to his flaming torch. Thus the Holy Spirit leads us into all truth, and sheds light on the eternal and the mysterious. This he does in certain cases very personally.

Stalactite Caverns.

How often has the Lord taught his servants his own truth in the school of tribulation! We speak well of meditation: it is as silver; but tribulation is as much fine gold. Tribulation not only worketh patience; but patience brings experience, and in experience there is a deep and intimate knowledge of the things of God which cometh by no other means. Do you know what it is to be in such pain that you could not bear one turn more of the screw, and have you, then, in faintness fallen back upon your pillow, and felt that even then you could not be more happy unless you were caught up to the third heaven? Then has it been verified to some of us that we can do all things through Christ that strengtheneth us.

I may add, concerning many of the truths of God, and the whole Gospel system, that we have learned the truth thereof in the field of sacrifice and service with our Lord, so that to us it is "not after man." If you do not believe in human depravity, accept a pastorate in this wicked London, and if you are true to your commission, you will doubt no more! If you do not believe in the necessity of the Holy Spirit to regenerate, take a charge over a cultured and polished congregation, that will hear all your rhetoric, and will remain as worldly and as frivolous as it was before.

Supernatural Agency.

Once more, some of us have received the Gospel because of the wonderful unction that has gone with it at times to our souls. I hope that none of us will ever fall into the snare of following the guidance of impressions made upon us by texts which happen to come prominently before our minds. You have judgments, and you must not lay them aside to be guided by accidental impressions. But for all that, and at the back of all that, there is not a man here that has led an eventful, useful life, but must confess that certain of those acts of his life, upon which his whole history is hinged, are connected with influences upon his mind which are produced, as he believes, by supernatural agency. A passage of Holy Writ, which we had read a hundred times before, took us captive, and became the master of every thought. We steered by it as men trust the pole-star, and we found that our voyage was made easy thereby.

What is unction, my brethren? I fear that no one can help me by a definition. Who can define it? But yet we know where it is, and we certainly feel where it is not. When that unction perfumes the Word, it is its own interpreter, it is its own apologist, it is its own confirmation and proof, to the regenerate mind. Then the Word of God deals with us as no word of man ever did or could. We have not received it, therefore, of men. Constantly receiving the divine Word as we do, it comes to us with an energy ever fresh and forcible. It comes to us especially with a sanctifying power, which is the very best proof of its coming from the thrice-holy God. Philosopher's words may teach us what holiness is, but God's Word makes us holy.

In Its Essence.

II. To us the truth itself is not after men. I desire to assert this plainly. If any man thinks that the Gospel is only one of many religions, let him candidly compare the Scriptures of God with other pretended revelations. Have you ever done so? I have made it a college exercise with our brethren. I have said—We will read a chapter of the Koran. This is the Mahometan's holy book. A man must have a strange mind who should mistake that rubbish for the utterances of inspiration. I have had several pretended revelations submitted to me by their several authors; for we have more of the prophetic clan about than most people know of; but no one of them has ever left on my mind the slightest suspicion of his sharing the inspiration of John, or Paul. There is no mistaking the inspired Books if you have any spiritual discernment. Once let the divine light dawn in the soul, and you perceive a coloring and a fashion in the product of inspiration which are not possible to mere men.

Would one who doubts this write us a fifth Gospel? Would any one among our poets attempt to write a new Psalm, which could be mistaken for a Psalm of David? I do not see why he could not, but I am sure he cannot.

Beyond Human Power.

The Gospel, our Gospel, is beyond the strain and reach of human thought. When men have exercised themselves to the very highest in original conceptions, they have never yet thought out the true Gospel. If it is such a common-place thing as the critics would have us believe, why did it not arise in the minds of the Egyptians or Chinese? Great minds often run in the same grooves; why did not other great minds run in the same grooves as those of Moses, or Isaiah, or Paul? I think it is a fair thing to say that, if it is such a common-place form of teaching, it might have arisen among the Persians or Hindoos; or, surely, we might have found something like it among the great teachers of Greece.

I will give you another proof, which, to my mind, is conclusive that our Gospel is not after men; and it is this—that it is immutable, and nothing that man produces can be so called. If man makes a Gospel—and he is very fond of doing it, like children making toys—what does he do? He is very pleased with it for a few moments, and then he pulls it to pieces, and makes it up in another way; and this continually. The religions of “modern thought” are changeable as the mists on the mountains.

The Enemy of Sin.

Again, it is not after men, because it does not give sin any quarter. I have heard that an Englishman has professed himself a Mahometan because he is charmed by the polygamy which the Arabian prophet allows his followers. No doubt the prospect of four wives would win converts who would not be attracted by spiritual considerations. If you preach a Gospel which makes allowances for human nature, and treats sin as if it were a mistake rather than a crime, you will find willing hearers. If you can provide absolution at small cost, and can ease conscience by a little self-denial, it will not be wonderful if your religion becomes fashionable. But our Gospel offers no excuse or cloak for sin, but condemns it utterly. It presents no pardon except through the great Atonement, and it will give that man no security who tries to harbor any sin in his bosom. This is not to the taste of this or any other age; and therefore I am sure man did not invent it.

We know that the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ is not of men, because our Gospel is so suitable for the poor and the illiterate. The poor, according to the usual fashion of men, are overlooked. “The poor have the Gospel preached to them.” Yet there are not a few nowadays who despise a Gospel which the common people can hear and understand; and we may be sure that a plain Gospel never came from them, for their taste does not lie in that direction. They or, as they say, “thoughtful.” Do we not hear this sort of remark, “We are an intellectual people, and need a cultured ministry. Those evangelistic preachers are all very well for popular assemblies, but we have always been select, and require that preaching which is abreast of the times?” We praise God that he has chosen the base things, and things that are despised. I hear it boasted of a man’s ministry, although it gradually diminishes the congregation, that it is doing a great work among “thoughtful young men.” I confess that I am not a believer in the existence of these thoughtful young men: those who mistake themselves for such I have generally found to be rather conceited than thoughtful. Young men are all very well, and so are young women, and old women also; but I am sent to preach the Gospel to every creature, and I cannot limit myself to thoughtful young men.

Want Something Abstruse

Dear friends, if it be so that we have not received the Gospel from man, but from God, let us continue to receive truth by the divinelyappointed channel of faith. We that speak against rationalism are ourselves apt to reason too much; and there is nothing so unreasonable as to hope to receive the things of God by reasoning them out. Let us believe them upon the divine testimony; and when they try us, and even when they seem to grate upon the sensibilities of humanity, let us receive them none the less for that. We are not to be judges of what God’s truth ought to be; we are to accept it as the Lord reveals it.

Let us also conclude from our subject that if these things come to us from God, we can safely rest our all upon them. If they came to us of men, they would probably fail us at a crisis. But if these things come of God, they are eternal and all-sufficient.

We can Both Live and Die

upon the everlasting Gospel. Let us ever deal more and more with God, and with him only. If we have obtained light from him, there is more of blessing to be had. Let us go to that same Teacher, that we may learn more of the deep things of God.

Let us bravely believe in the success of the Gospel which we have received. We believe in it: let us believe for it. We will not despair though the whole visible Church should apostatize. When invaders had surrounded Rome, and all the country lay at their mercy, a piece of land was to be sold, and a Roman bought it at a fair value. The enemy was there, but he would be dislodged. The enemy might destroy the Roman State. Let him try it! Be you of the same mind. The God of Jacob is our Refuge, and none can stand against his eternal power and Godhead. The everlasting Gospel is our banner, and with Jehovah to maintain it, our standard never shall be lowered. In the power of the Holy Ghost truth is invincible. Come on, ye hosts of hell, and armies of the aliens! Let craft and criticism, rationalism and priestcraft do their best! The Word of the Lord endureth forever—even that Word which by the Gospel is preached unto men.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Dodging a Law.*

IN the city of London, in olden times, the streets being unlighted by public lamps, and thieves being plentiful, a law was made for every one to put a candle out over his door. As the story comes to me, the law was obeyed—a candle was exhibited, but it was not lighted. The letter of the law was darkness, for the spirit of the law was absent. The wise corporation had to meet and ordain a regulation that everybody should light the candle which by law was to be over the door. So they did; but after it had been lighted according to law the wind blew it out; and again the citizens saved their tallow. The city fathers made another alteration in their edict, and decreed that every citizen should hang a lantern over his door. This was soon accomplished; but the householders put no candle in the lantern. The corporation had been exceedingly wise, and is so still. You laugh, but my reverence for all public bodies is so great that you cannot suppose that I intended anything sarcastic. The Council went over the old ground and settled that the lantern should have a candle in it. Again the good folks did as they were bidden, but they did not light the candle. This called forth the decree that in the lantern there should be a lighted candle. Canny citizens put only a very short length of candle; and though it was soon burnt out, they could not be charged with a breach of the law in that case made and provided. The Corporation specified the length of the candle to be lighted, but I dare say clever people still dodged the law.

Solomon’s Mistake.

Solomon mentions the candle in his graphic picture of the virtuous woman, who not only worked by day, but wrought far into the night.

* From Sermons in Candles by C. H. Spurgeon, a most delightful little book, a striking proof of the great preacher’s unequalled ingenuity in drawing practical moral lessons from common objects. Full of interest and amusing incidents, pp. 170. Price 6s. Published by A. C. Armstrong & Son, 714 Broadway, New York.

He says: (Prov. 31: 18), “Her candle goeth not out by night.” Many would have their hours shortened as to work, and lengthened as to sleep; but she did the very reverse. She lengthened her days by taking hours out of her nights. A wonderful example that woman was! I recollect when I was a boy hearing a minister preach about her from the text, “Who can find a virtuous woman? for her price is far above rubies.” The opening of that memorable discourse was somewhat after this fashion: “‘Who can find a virtuous woman?’ Why any one who chooses to look for her; and the only reason why Solomon could not find her was because he looked for her in the wrong place. Virtuous women keep clear of a king who had such a multitude of wives. But,” said the preacher “if Solomon were here now, and were made truly wise, he would not long ask: ‘Who can find a virtuous woman?’ He would join the church, and find himself at once among a band of holy women, whose adornment is a meek and quiet spirit. If he were permitted to look in upon the Dorcas meeting, he would see many of the sort of whom he once said, ‘She stretcheth out her hand to the poor; yea, she reacheth out her hands to the needy.’ If he would adjourn to the Sunday School, he would there meet with others of whom he might say, ‘She openeth her mouth with wisdom; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.’ We who serve the Lord Jesus, meet many a time with virtuous women, of each of whom we could say with the wise king, ‘Her price is far above rubies.’” Whatever one may think of the correctness of the exposition, the sentiment of the preacher was sound and practical.

Good Out of Ill.

We are apt to complain of the very providence which blesses us. Years ago a farmer returned from market with a golden burden for he had sold his wheat. He thought it hard it should rain and spoil his best coat; but when he came to the lone place between the woods and perceived that a highwayman would have shot him if the rain had not damped his powder, he had a much more vivid idea of the loving care of God. Remember Bernard Gilpin, the apostle of northern England. He was seized and despatched to London to be tried as a heretic. On the road he fell from his horse and broke his leg. His persecutors know that his wont was to say, “It is all for the best;” so they taunted him with the inquiry, “Is this all for the best?” and he meekly replied that he had no doubt it would turn out to be so. Gilpin was right. The accident caused a delay on the road, and he and his guard arrived in London just as Queen Mary died. They heard the bells ringing when they came to Highgate Hill, and learned that Queen Elizabeth was on the throne. He was too late to be burned: he had broken his leg, but he had escaped the flames. In some way or other the Lord will preserve his people from all evil, even as the lantern preserves the light which is placed within it.

Candle Churches.

We will conclude as they do at open air entertainments, with the greatest display of our fireworks. Here are many candles uniting their brilliance; they all hang upon one support, and shine by the same light. May they not represent the Church of Christ in its multiplicity, variety and unity? These candles are all supported on one stem, they are all giving forth the same light, and yet they are of all manner of sorts, sizes and colors. A great way off they would seem to be but one light. They are many, and yet but one. I happened one evening to say that no one could tell which was the “U. P.,” and which was the Free Church, or which was the Wesleyan, or the Primitive, or the Baptists, and so on; but one strong old Baptist assured me that the “Dips” gave the best light. Another said the Presbyterians were, on the whole, cast in the best mould; and a third thought the Episcopalian church was made of the truest wax. I told them that some of the Baptists would be the better for another baptism. The Free Churches might

High Hawk

Little Wound

Big Road

Two Strike

Fire Lightning

Young-Man-Afraid-of-his-Horses

Spotted Elk

SIOUX CHIEFS IN THE DELEGATION TO WASHINGTON LAST WEEK.

be none the worse for being more established in the faith; and even the Methodists might improve their methods. The main question is possession of the one light and fire of God, the flame of divine truth. Those who shine by divine grace are all one in Christ Jesus.

THE BIBLE IN SPAIN.

The Movement Started from America Carried Forward by Matamoros and Cabrera.

THE encouraging reports recently received of the progress of Evangelical Christianity in Spain are stimulating Christians across the Atlantic to send to that country some earnest Gospel preachers and a supply of evangelical literature in the Spanish language to help in the work. The movement is peculiarly interesting to American Christians, because its initiation can be traced by a remarkable chain of Providential circumstances to a humble effort made some years ago in this country.

The great leader of the revival of true religion in Spain was Manuel Matamoros, whose portrait appears on page 109, with a picture of the Evangelical Church in Seville. He was a young Spanish officer whose education had been gained in the military school of Toledo, and who was a man of refinement and unbounded courage. In 1855 he was at Gibraltar and there fell in with a Spanish law-student, named Ruet, who had been banished from Spain for circulating the Bible. Ruet had first heard the Gospel in Turin from an eloquent preacher named De Sanctis, who some years previously was one of the most famous ecclesiastics in Rome. While he was preaching Romish doctrines to large audiences in that city some unknown person left at his house a brief statement of the cardinal doctrines of the Bible contrasting them with the doctrines he was preaching. The priest read the statement, tested it by the Word and under the blessing of God was converted. This state-was prepared by a missionary, sent out at the expense of a few Christian ladies in this country. Thus the torch of divine truth was handed from the missionary to De Sanctis, from De Sanctis to Ruet, and from Ruet to Matamoros.

Both the latter were young men and full of enthusiasm. Matamoros was eager to return to Spain to preach the truth. Ruet dare not go, owing to the decree of banishment, but he undertook to keep Matamoros supplied with New Testaments in Spanish, and with this promise the young evangelist set forth. For three years he labored zealously through Southern Spain, preaching and circulating the Word of God. In Seville, Granada, Barcelona, Jaen, and various towns of Andalusia many souls were won and little congregations organized. In 1860, however, his work was cut short. He was arrested on the charge of preaching heretical doctrines, and after several examinations and tedious imprisonments in various jails, he was sentenced to eighteen years' imprisonment, nine of which were to be spent on the galleys. The story of his work and his sufferings became known in England, and an influential deputation was sent to the Queen of Spain to beg for his release. He was finally liberated in 1863. He settled in Switzerland where, aided by a wealthy American lady, he established training-schools for young men and women who went there from Spain to be prepared for evangelistic work in their own country. His health however had been undermined by his imprisonment, and he died in 1866 at the age of thirty-two. But his work is going on and the men and women whom he trained are still laboring in all parts of Spain.

Among the men whom Matamoros was instrumental in leading from darkness to light was the man who is now at the head of the Reform movement, John Baptist Cabrera. He was a prominent Romish ecclesiastic, but by the blessing of God on Matamoros' teaching he became a zealous preacher of the truth. He, too, had to quit Spanish territory to avoid persecution, but when the old regime was overthrown by the revolution, General Prim authorized him to return to Spain and preach where he would. He promptly availed himself of the permission and has organized church after church through the length and breadth of the country. These have been united in a Spanish branch of the Christian Church, on the pattern of, and in communion with, the Church of Jesus, established by Bishop H. C. Riley in Mexico. Cabrera has now been elected its Bishop and it is expected that he will soon be consecrated by Lord Plunkett, Archbishop of Dublin.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

OLD CRUSTY'S NIECE.

A SERIAL STORY.

BY REV. J. JACKSON WRAY.

(Concluded from page 94.)

THE triumph of rescuing Nora from the Trout-pool was celebrated in every house in Settleworth, for George Appleton was a general favorite. The widow's pride in her boy was increased as she heard his praise uttered on all hands. She nursed him tenderly and soon had the pleasure of seeing him convalescent. Richard Mansford was a daily visitor, greatly welcomed and highly valued, for in George's enforced retirement, it was far better than any physician's prescription for him to have intercourse with a kindred mind. Of course, the tenant of the "Hermitage" put the young man in possession of the facts the reader already knows. George felt a strange relief at the news of Rawdon's capture and the full deliverance of Nora.

Of course, George was warm in his expressions of delight that Nora had found a relative in the tenant of the "Hermitage," whom he held in the highest estimation and regard; and that this relative was none other than Richard Mansford with Hazelcroft and gold behind him, and he meant every word he said. Richard Mansford knew and felt that he did. Nevertheless there fell a constraint on George: a "flash of silence," but it was eloquent enough for Richard to understand it, which brought his visit to an end.

"Now, mother mine," said George. "You and I are relieved at last of that charge. Willy-nilly, it seemed that Nora Mansford must be cared for in her evident distress by somebody more thoughtful and emotional than Abram Hardale. Whatever mission we had in that direction is accomplished. Nora Mansford passes into the care of her uncle and into the place and position in life which properly belong to her, and which she is so well fitted to adorn. I have had a dream, a strange mixture of pleasure and of pain. Now the dreamer is awake, and the memory of his foolish vision must fade away."

Now, Widow Appleton felt a little inclined to demur against what her son had hinted at—the giving up of all thoughts of winning Nora Mansford; and against what he declared to be his intention of applying for his old place in the shop of Abram Hardale. He might at least wait until he was asked by the old carpenter to resume his place, and had received from him some apology for his rude dismissal. As for Nora, why, she owed her very life to him! She durst not hint that much, however, to her son, who was of too superior mould to look at duty from that point of view. So, like a wise woman, she said nothing—an exhibition of wisdom that is too rare in either sex not to be noted and chronicled when it appears.

The next day, feeling quite equal to the necessary effort, he repaired to the carpenter's shop, and like Tabitha Crowle, was sorry and distressed to see his old master so thoroughly broken down. "Good morning, Abram," he said, willing to save the old man from one unnecessary humiliation. "I hear you have not filled up my place and that you need some one to look after the business while you go away for a time to get rest and strength. I shall be glad if you will let me take hold of the business and manage it till you come back. I owe you more than enough to make that a duty, as well as a pleasure, too. Don't say No."

"So far from saying No," said Abram, offering his hand, "I'll say Yes, and thank you. The fact is that since you left, all has been at sixes and sevens, and I shall never get 'em right unless you'll step into your old place again; or rather mine, for I'm getting beyond it. I was a great fool, George, to let you go, and I should be a still greater fool if I didn't own it. When will you come?"

"Whenever you like," said George, fully convinced that a change had, indeed, come over his old master. "I mayn't be able to do a full day's work just yet, but—"

"You can do as you like," said Abram, "only take the reins."

George was a good deal tired when he reached home, but he was in good spirits, for the old man's bearing had been a pleasing surprise, and George had a pleasant and gracious work to do.

Manuel Matamoros.

The Pioneer of Spanish Evangelization.

He was none the worse for finding a little note addressed to him in the handwriting of Nora Mansford, with which he was very familiar, by reason of her care of her uncle's business books. It was not so firm and legible as usual—that could hardly be expected after the dire peril of the Trout Pool. It ran thus:

"Dear Friend,—I have come to know at last who it was that saved me from drowning, and gave me back the life that in a spasm of horror I had madly thrown away. How can I thank cious. Mother sends her best love and will come to you in the morning. Believe me to be, yours with truest regard, GEORGE APPLETON."

"Now, George, I'm sure you've written enough, and more than enough. Read it over to me," said George's mother. She smiled and nodded; it will do.

Now what does the reader think was the first comment that left Miss Nora's lips when she was reading it? When she came to the words "a life so precious," she laid the little billet on her knee, and murmured, "Precious to whom, I wonder?"

Ladies do like to have such matters made clear, you see. Uncle Richard was warm in his praises of George's letter. "Quite enough, you see, Nora," he said, "and not too much." "Not too much, certainly," said Nora, and as she did not say anything more, it may be supposed that she agreed with her uncle's opinion, that there was "quite enough."

Now, I need make no further pause in announcing that Richard Mansford was strongly inclined to play at Providence again. "Surely all is plain sailing here," he thought. "These two young folks are made for each other. I love them both, and I feel sure that each would make the other happy. I'm inclined to—"

No! won't. If he's worth her if he wants her. I'll leave it alone."

My story must not be too long. Mrs. Appleton informed her son that Nora would come to thank him if she were well enough, and she (his mother, that is) thought it would be courteous and kind for him to call. He did so, and found her, to his thinking, more charming and winsome than ever. And so she was, for the blush and the gleam, and the shame-faced consciousness that her face was showing all her heart, did make an unusually piquant picture. Her uncle read her like a book. George's face was an

The Reformed Church of the Ascension in Seville.

you? Neither word nor pen can do more than hint my gratitude. What of yourself? A word by the bearer, or, better still, a line from yourself to say that you are not seriously worse for the peril into which you put your own life for the sake of one so little worthy, will be an unspeakable relief to yours in all esteem, regard, and gratitude, NORA MANSFORD. P. S.—Give my love to Mrs. Appleton, and tell her that as soon as you are well enough to spare her, I want her longingly and lovingly to come and bless me with a sight of her face."

"Well enough?" said George, as he read the equally open page, though the legend written there was printed in a somewhat different type.

"George," said she—she had so called him from the first. She had to make a rush for it, or her voice would go in spite of herself. "George, I owe my life to you! What return can I make?"

"None!" said George, and paused, as if desiring yet fearing to say more. That incorrigible uncle could not for the life of him forbear from helping Providence a little. "Out with it, George. A manly word is always honorable," he said. George did out with it: "I want no reward and no return, Nora. The joy of saving life is its own reward. But I want you." Here the door suddenly opened—closed—Uncle Dick, as he had requested to be called, was gone, and as there was no disinterested witness left to tell "what followed after that," I cannot of course write it down: but if George Appleton may be believed, and he has borne an excellent character all along, Miss Nora was willing to confess that she wanted him, but what process was gone through to bring that crisis on, I really cannot say. This I know, that Mrs. Appleton knew all about it before her laddie crossed her threshold, "His very step had music in't as he came up the garden walk; and I give it as my private opinion that she had been guilty of complicity with Uncle Dick in the matter, and must take with that individual her full share of the blame."

The arrangement was certainly welcome to both, though Richard Mansford was able to so endow his niece that she might have been a suitable match for some one more highly placed in society than a village carpenter. Mansford, however, had democratic ideas and preferred to see Nora married to a good man whom he knew well, rather than to a man of high station whom he did not know. Besides, Nora's preference was clearly manifested and Richard was not the man to sow seeds of sordid ambition in her mind. George should be her husband and the young couple should have money enough. He could spare them plenty and when he died they should have all he had. But, he meant Nora to have her rights, too. He at once gave orders for a suit against Gabriel Grubb for his share in the Hazelcroft swindle.

No sooner did that worthy hear of this step and of Rawdon's apprehension than, knowing full well that his own liberty was in danger, he made a parcel of the genuine Hazelcroft deeds, and sent them over to Abram Hardale in the hope that he would not be thought worth while hunting down. He gathered together all his substance, departed swiftly and quietly, and the place that knew Gabriel knew him no more. Where he went to nobody knew; what became of him nobody cared. Doubtless in some quarter of the globe he made himself a cobwebby den of some kind, turned the shimmering discs of his spectacles on some intended dupe, and uttered his usual formula, with variations—"Just so." Such men as he do not always receive "poetic justice;" but they get it in currency of a very prosaic kind. Their whole life is an infliction.

As for that other villain, Jasper Rawdon, he victimised others to the very last. He had managed to secrete some money in the lining of his clothes. With that he succeeded in bribing the jailer to furnish him with poison. He was found dead in his cell. At the inquest the truth came out; the warden lost his situation; and Jasper Rawdon could not even die without working damage to another.

Abram Hardale, softened, mellowed, was every way improved. He tasted in quiet fashion the mellow fruit of life's eventide, respected where he had been condemned, and esteemed where he had been disliked. The better side of his character came to the front, and the cynical side was either kept behind, or, he became "nice all round." Richard Mansford took upon himself the heavy costs the old man had expended to secure his niece's rights, and Abram Hardale was able to retire from the cares of business, and was succeeded by George Appleton, much to the satisfaction of folks in general.

"I can't very well manage it any longer, myself," said Abram, "I'm growing too old, but though my day's over George's is coming on, and I will say this of him that, next to me, he's the very best wheelwright and all round hand in this Riding."

From this it will be seen that despite the change which had come over the dear old man, there was a good deal of the old leaven in him still.

Matters were gradually settling themselves down in this way, when Richard Mansford received an important communication from Donald McLean, his partner and representative at Ooramarra. It appeared that there had been a great rush to the newly-discovered gold-fields, and as these included Goldfinch Gully, and the largest portion indeed of the Ooramarra farm, the Scotchman's quiet was invaded in lawless fashion by a motley crowd of adventurers. These had squatted, without so much as "with your leave," or "by your leave," and the whole face of the estate was undergoing transformation. The letter went on to say that as it was evident the place would soon become the seat of a large population, as he knew that Richard would have nothing to do with the gold fever, and as he was equally determined to be "out of it" himself, he suggested that he should have leave to close a bargain with eager purchasers and clear out, adding that he was getting a little home sick, and would like "a smell o' the heather on the dear old muirs o' Sutherland."

Richard Mansford was quite of the same mind. So he hastily sent off his full permission. "I know," he wrote, "that you will do your best for both of us. The gold-fever will turn the place into a Pandemonium that neither you nor I could bear to live in. Sell out and come home."

In due time the honest, faithful Scotchman landed in England, and repaired at once to Settleworth and took up his quarters at the "Hermitage." He might have "retired on his means," but he preferred, as any wise man will, an active life, and so became manager of the Hazelcroft farm. It was some hundreds of acres in extent, but his one objection to it was that it was so small. After so many years on the countless square miles of an Australian cattle run, it did seem a very circumscribed domain.

After the repairs were completed, Richard Mansford and Nora removed to Hazelcroft, and from the home of her uncle, Nora was married to her true and only love, George Appleton. They resided at the "Hermitage." In that sweet spot they commenced a honeymoon, foregoing all the fashionable discomforts of a wedding tour, which did not wane through all their long and useful after-life. Widow Appleton was strongly urged to make her home with them, but the wise old lady declined. She intended to trouble them with her presence a good deal, she said, but she should retain her little cosy cottage, so long her peaceful home.

I catch one farewell glimpse of Hazelcroft. It is Christmas, and the quaint oak parlor, where Richard Mansford passed so much of his happy boyhood, is bright with the light of the blazing Yule log, which casts its glow upon the walls. George Appleton is reading some mirth-provoking rythmes from a Christmas book, while the three children, Richard, Nora, and Rupert, are looking at the colored pictures on its pages. Nora Appleton, looking bright and happy, sits so that the lamp-light falls upon some dainty knitting in her fingers, and illumines a countenance which has a peaceful sunshine of its own. In the ingle nook sits Richard Mansford. His head is bowed, and there is a tender smile upon his face, for he is stroking the golden curls of a pretty little maiden seated on his knee. She is called Anice, and he thinks as he touches the soft curls, of another beloved Anice who has long since gone to join the angels.

THE END.

A new Story will be commenced in this journal next week, entitled:

"ROMA."

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING,

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c.

For Bilious Attacks

heartburn, sick headache,
and all disorders of the stomach, liver, and bowels,

Ayer's Cathartic Pills

are the safest, surest,
and most popular medicine for family use.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.
Every Dose Effective.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed
by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

Hood's Sarsaparilla 100 Doses One Dollar

Every ingredient employed in producing Hood's Sarsaparilla is strictly pure, and is the best of its kind it is possible to buy. All the roots and herbs are carefully selected, personally examined, and only the best retained. So that from the time of purchase until Hood's Sarsaparilla is prepared, everything is carefully watched with a view to attaining the best result. Why don't you try it?

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.
Dropped on Sugar, Children Love
to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail 6 bottles Express paid, $2. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Some Children Growing Too Fast

become listless, fretful, without energy, thin and weak. But you can fortify them and build them up, by the use of

SCOTT'S EMULSION

OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND HYPOPHOSPHITES
Of Lime and Soda.

They will take it readily, for it is almost as palatable as milk. And it should be remembered that AS A PREVENTIVE OR CURE OF COUGHS OR COLDS, IN BOTH THE OLD AND YOUNG, IT IS UNEQUALLED. Avoid substitutions offered.

"Good sense is the master of all human life," and it is a good proof of common sense to use

SAPOLIO.

It is a solid cake of Scouring Soap.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Best & Goes Farthest."

Ask your Grocer for it, take no other. [63]

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school, science lessons, stories, games, occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers and mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Alice B. Stockham & Co., 161 La Salle St., Chicago.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent 100 to any address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK.

American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct., Boston, St. Louis.

SEVEN SMOKERS CURED.

THE Rev. Dr. Cathcart of England says: "There was a family in my church which included the father and six sons, all of whom smoked, and I thank God that he made me instrumental in putting out all the seven pipes. It was at the time that the China Mission had been first taken up, and I was speaking upon it, and referring to tobacco. I said that if they gave me, for seven years, all the money which they were accustomed to spend upon tobacco, I should build a church. As I was going out I met the father of the family to which I refer, but he passed me without a recognition. Another time I met him, and again he passed me in the same way. I thought this strange, and that it was time to know the reason of it. For the third time he was passing me, and I stopped and spoke to him about it, and he replied, 'Well, you see, it is all right to speak against drink but you must leave tobacco alone, it is a gift of the Lord.' Poor man, what a delusion! He was wedded to his pipe, yet finally he was brought to see that it was his duty to give it up."

SAVED FROM A WATERY GRAVE.

Mr. Archibald Orr Ewing writes as follows: "About ten years ago, I was going out to India, and on the way we sighted a boat, with some men in it, who were frantically rowing towards us. When at last the boat was got alongside, we found in it two poor negroes. They had escaped from one of the islands in that part of the world; fleeing from the power of a tyrannical master, they had taken to the sea, but had not been able to take much water with them; and for two days they had been under the rays of the scorching tropical sun without a drop to moisten their parched lips. Poor fellows, they were almost gone, but in God's mercy they were restored to health. What a longing these men must have had to catch a glimpse of a sail that they might get water! There are many poor souls in heathen lands who have as great a longing to escape from the power of sin. They could be saved, and make what profit they can to its accomplishment, if they need others to bring them the Water of Life."

A BISHOP'S APPEAL TO A NEGRO.

BISHOP ASBURY saw a negro of bad character sitting on the bank of a creek, fishing. The man was quite one. It was just possible that he might be willing to talk, and that precious seed might be dropped. The good old minister stopped his horse, tied it to a tree, and sat down beside the negro. At first sheer surprise sealed the poor slave's lips; but as his new friend spoke, the kindness of the tone and the brotherliness, free from any mark of conscious condescension, melted the man's heart. He listened as if the story of the love of Jesus at last seemed real. Tears came to his eyes as Asbury besought him to forsake his evil life and seek God's forgiveness. But whether there was any resolve underneath the emotion, Asbury could not soon discover. He left the district, and did not see the negro again for twenty years. But he was ultimately sought out by an old colored Christian, who had journeyed seventy miles to have an interview, and to tell of harvest following seed-time. The visitor was the negro found once with his rod by the stream, and by earnest appeals won for the Saviour. This man had since been the instrument of leading many others into the light. Greater is the worker's reward than all his expectations, if, in season and out of season, he is ready to rescue.

Out of Date

—washing and cleaning with soap and scrubbing. There was too much work in doing it —too much wear and tear when it was done. The birth of Pearline was the beginning of better things. It has lived long enough to prove that it can do no harm; it only needs a trial to prove that it is good.

Beware

of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them. PEARLINE sells on its merits, and is manufactured only by

JAMES PYLE, New York.

THE RELIEF

THAT FOLLOWS THE USE OF COMPOUND OXYGEN DOES NOT DISAPPEAR WHEN THE TREATMENT IS DISCONTINUED.

COMPOUND OXYGEN CREATES STRENGTH; MAINTAINS IT. THIS IS A DIRECT RESULT, BECAUSE THIS POWERFUL REMEDIAL AGENT IS PURE NOURISHMENT. IN ORDER TO INHALE IT, IT MUST BE RELEASED FROM THE INHALER BY HEAT. THIS SENDS A WARM, OXYGENATED VAPOR THROUGH THE LUNGS THAT IS VERY EFFECTIVE IN DISLODGING CLOTS AND OBSTRUCTIONS. THE APPARATUS WHICH ACCOMPANIES EVERY TREATMENT IS SIMPLICITY ITSELF. A CHILD CAN USE IT. AND THAT'S A GREAT POINT. THIS WARMING, REVITALIZING VAPOR COMING INTO CONTACT WITH A CHILD'S LUNGS BREAKS UP INCIPIENT COLDS AND COUGHS, AND RELIEVES CROUP IN A WONDERFULLY SHORT TIME.

A BOOK OF 200 PAGES WILL TELL YOU WHO HAVE REGAINED HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY THE USE OF COMPOUND OXYGEN. THIS BOOK IS FILLED WITH THE SIGNED INDORSEMENTS OF MANY WELL KNOWN MEN AND WOMEN. IF YOU WOULD LIKE TO HAVE THE BOOK YOU WILL GET IT FREE OF CHARGE--POSTAGE PREPAID BY US, IF YOU WILL WRITE TO ANY ONE OF THE FOLLOWING ADDRESSES:

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES

And make it easy for you to buy of us no matter where you live.

$35 ORGANS
$500

$150
PIANOS
$1500

Yes, my dear, your Marchal & Smith Piano is a delightful one, the tone is so sweet and pure, the action so fairy-like, and the finish so elegant that nothing is left to wish for. Their Organs, too, are as sweet and beautiful as their Pianos.

I wrote and told them just what I wanted, and they sent it to me, agreeing to take it back and pay the freight both ways if I did not like it, but I could not be better pleased if I had a thousand to choose from. They send their catalogue free to every one who wishes to buy.

ESTAB. 1859.
INCOR. 1877

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, New York.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

Don't mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

GENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly. Will send for our "Copyrighted Methods" and give you profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours some. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PUBLISHING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

BAILEY'S
Compound light-spreading Silver-plated Corrugated Glass REFLECTORS
A wonderful invention for lighting Churches, Halls, etc. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue and price list free.
BAILEY REFLECTOR CO.
708 Penn Ave. Pittsburgh, Pa.

METAL CEILINGS.
BEST for Churches, old or new; for Schools, Stores and Residences.
ARTISTIC
H. S. NORTROP,
18 Rose Street, New York

$100.00 will be paid new contributors of short articles to Pheonological Journal. 1st prize $50. Journal containing full particulars, 15 cts. Fowler & Wells Co., H., 777 Broadway, New York.

SCOTCH ZEPHYRS.

This Week we shall place on sale 500 pieces of 29-inch Fine Scotch Zephyrs, choice styles, this Spring's importation, at 19 cents per yard.

Samples sent on request.

James McCreery &amp; Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.
DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can Now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.

THE MCDOWELL CO.,
6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

THIS BRIGHT NEW 1891

needs the brightest and best of music. The 2,000,000 readers of this ad. are all invited to provide themselves with music or music books from our complete and varied stock.

Send freely for lists and information.

SOME OF OUR NEWEST BOOKS.

Songs of Ireland. $1.00. Choice, revised collection of very favorite songs. 66 songs. 144 pages.

Potter's Responses and Sentences. 75 cts.; $6.75 doz. A timely and good collection, which will be welcomed by many choirs. More than 50 short pieces, with a number of Glorias, Chants, &c.

Prayer and Praise. Cantata. Ballad. A good and easy cantata, for a choir or Chorus. 50 cts.; $4.50 per dozen.

Masonic Ode. Fithian. A new, most convenient book of easy and good music, perfectly fitted for the masonic ritual. Much needed. 60 cts.; $6 doz.

Comic and Minstrel Songs. $1.00. 46 merry songs, well calculated to make time pass cheerfully.

Banner Folio. Violin and Piano. Winner. Large number of popular melodies, skillfully arranged for Violin, with Piano accompaniment. $1.00.

Mandolin and Piano Duets. Winner. About 75 popular airs for Mandolin & Piano. $1.00.

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

New Easter Music!

CHRIST EXALTED. A Service for Easter Sunday. Choir: familiar Hymns for the Congregation; new Choruses; appropriate Bible Readings; the whole carefully arranged for the Festival of the Resurrection, by the Rev. ROBERT LOWRY. 16 pages.

ANNUAL No. 15. An eight page collection of splendid Carols for Sunday Schools, Easter Festivals, by our popular authors. Price of either of the above, 5 cents each by mail: $4.00 per 100 by express, not prepaid. Any previous issue supplied at same price.

Send for Special Catalogue of Easter Anthems for your Choir.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago. 76 East 9th St., N. Y.

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT
PROF. RICE'S SELF-TEACHING SYSTEM. All can learn music without the aid of a teacher. Rapid, Correct. Established 12 Years. Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, Harmony. Send stamp for Music Journal. Circulars free. Address: G. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 243 State St., Chicago.

HOW TO BUILD A HOUSE.

If you are thinking about building a house you should send 25 cents for my new book containing plans and specifications for 25 houses, all sizes, from 2 rooms up, costing from $300 to $5,000. A book of great value to all who desire to build a house, and will suit you almost as well as if you paid $5 for a book. Sent post-paid on receipt of 25 cents. Address: J. B. OGILVIE, Publisher, 67 ROSE ST., New York.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

"THY BURDEN."

To every one on earth
God gives a burden to be carried down
The road that lies between the cross and crown,
No lot is wholly free;
He giveth one to thee.

Some carry it aloft,
Open and visible to any eyes;
And all may see its form and weight and size,
Some hide it in their breast,
And deem it thus unguessed.

Thy burden is God's gift,
And it will make the bearer calm and strong.
Yet, lest it press too heavily and long,
He says, "Cast it on me,
And it shall easy be."

And those who heed His voice,
And seek to give it back in trustful prayer,
Have quiet hearts that never can despair;
And hope lights up the way
Upon the darkest day.

Take thou thy burden thus
Into thy hands, and lay it at His feet.
And whether it be sorrow or defeat,
Or pain, or sin, or care,
Upon the darkest day.

It is the lonely load
That crushes out the life and light of heaven,
But borne with Him, the soul restored,
forgiven,
Sings out through all the days
Her joy, and God's high praise.

—Marianne Farningham.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

That extreme tired feeling and all affections caused or promoted by impure blood and low state of the system are cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Give it a trial. Sold by druggists.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY
DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken with pleasure by delicate persons and children, who, after using it, are very fond of it. It assimilates with the food, increases the flesh and appetite, builds up the nervous system, restores energy to mind and body, creates new, rich, and pure blood,—in fact rejuvenates
the whole system.

FLESH, NERVE, BLOOD, BRAIN.

This preparation is far superior to all other preparations of Cod-liver Oil; it has many imitators, but no equals. The results following its use are its best recommendations. Be sure as you value your health, get the genuine. Manufactured only by Dr. ALEX. B. WIL-BOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food
For Infants & Invalids.
A pure medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans
Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co.
(on every label), Palmer, Mass.

DR. TALMAGE says: "A great deal of sorrow is caused to young hearts and old by the thought that Christmas comes but once a year," but he continues, "why not extend the glorious season of joy, gladness and good-will throughout the year?" This beautiful thought has been brought rather forcibly to our attention of late by the hundreds of letters we daily receive, asking for "Christmas Boxes." What! Christmas Boxes in March, the idea! who ever heard of hanging up stockings in the Spring-time? But then the people have to use soap the year round and nearly twice as much is used in summer as in winter—you wouldn't think that—would you? But it is a fact, and if folks want "Sweet Home" Soap and wish to make the whole household merry with lots of useful, pretty, valuable and ornamental things, why not do it now as well as in December? and so we extend "Our Mammoth Christmas Box" offer for a limited time. Another thing! There was such an awful rush of orders last Christmas that some of our friends did not get the goods as soon as they expected. It ain't so now, you can have the Mammoth Christmas Box when you want it. Better order at once.

Very Soapfully Yours,
J. D. LARKIN & CO.,
Factories: Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Sts., BUFFALO, N. Y.

- Our Mammoth Christmas Box! -

OUR object in getting up this Mammoth "Christmas" Box is to introduce to the American people our "Sweet Home" Family Soap and fine Toilet Articles. They are the purest, best, and most satisfactory whether made in this country or England; every one who uses them once becomes our permanent customer. We propose a new departure in the soap trade and will sell direct from our factory to the consumer, spending the money usually allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, in handsome and valuable presents to those who order at once.

Our goods are made for the select family trade, and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial, we accompany each case with all of the useful and valuable presents named.

The "Christmas Box" will make 100,000 boys, girls, men and women, old and young, happy; because it contains the greatest lot of Christmas Presents ever seen for the money. Beautiful things! Something for every one in the family, father—mother—all of the boys and girls—the baby—and hired girl. Such fun opening the box you never heard of. It is a great surprise to all who get it. It contains so many of the very things everyone wishes to receive. Nowhere can such liberality be found.

We do not ask you to remit in advance, nor run any risks, nor take any chances. We merely ask permission to ship to you a box of these goods, and if after 30 day's trial you are fully convinced that the soap is all we claim, and the extras all we advertise, you can then pay the bill. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used. How can we do more?

To Get the Box simply write your name and address on a postal card and mail to us and we will ship you the goods on 30 day's trial, and you are under no obligations to keep the Box if it does not in every way meet your expectations. We know the great value of our articles, and are willing to put them to the severest kind of a test, hence will send you the box on 30 day's trial and if not satisfactory will remove it.

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it, but if readers of this paper remit in advance we will place in the box in addition to all the other extras a valuable present for the lady of the house. Articles that are near and dear to the heart of every woman, and that she will be proud of for years to come. Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn.

Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the box does not prove all they expect. Price of box complete, $6.00.

LIST OF CONTENTS.

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (full size) "SWEET HOME" FAMILY SOAP, enough to last an average family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes, and has no superior.

6 BOXES BORAXINE, (large size) for cleaning wood-work, washing dishes, dairy utensils, removing grease spots or stains from carpets, etc., or general house-cleaning, has no equal. Saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it. Remember BORAXINE is nothing but a fine quality of Soap and Borax pulverized together. It is pleasant for the hands and cannot injure the finest fabrics.

One-Fourth Dozen Modjeska Complexion Soap.

An exquisite beautifier. Producing that peculiar delicate transparency, and imparting a velvety softness to the skin which is greatly admired. It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples, and imperfections from the face. For all toilet purposes it is the luxury of luxuries. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use, or those whose skin is delicate.

One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.

A delicate, refined, delicious perfume for the handkerchief and clothing. The most popular and lasting perfume ever made.

One-Fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.

One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream. Soothing, Healing, beautifies the Skin, Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.

One Package Clove Pink Sachet Powder. Delicate, Refined, Lasting.

One Bottle (Fancy Patent Stopper) Modjeska Tooth Powder.

One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap.

OUR MAMMOTH "CHRISTMAS" BOX

Contains a great variety of Toys, Playthings, etc., for the Babies, and sundry useful and amusing things for the older folks. Such as Boy's Tools, Saws, Hatchets, Shovels, Rakes, Hoe, Fan, Spinner, "Crack Shots," Games, Jack Stones, Etc.

IT ALSO CONTAINS

One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder.
One Fancy Tidy.
One Glove-buttoner.
One Package "Steadfast" Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Gentlemen's Handkerchief, large.
Fourteen Patent Transfer Patterns for Stamping and Embroidering Table Linen, Toilet Mats, Towels, Ties, etc.
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Fancy Handkerchief.
One Illuminated Wall Match Safe (can be seen at night).
One Package Assorted Christmas Cards.
Two Collar Buttons (patented).

In addition to all of the above articles, we place in each box ONE ALBUM containing pictures of the following celebrities:

|                          |                        |
|--------------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Wm. E. Gladstone,     | 13. General Scott,     |
| 2. Bismarck,             | 14. Thomas A. Edison,  |
| 3. Daniel Webster,       | 15. Benj. F. Morse,    |
| 4. J. G. Whittier,       | 16. Joseph Jefferson,  |
| 5. George Bancroft,      | 17. Benj. Franklin,    |
| 6. Abraham Lincoln,      | 18. Henry M. Stanley,  |
| 7. Ulysses S. Grant,     | 19. Oliver Perry,      |
| 8. Robert E. Lee,        | 20. Goethe,            |
| 9. Gen. Sherman,         | 21. Schiller,          |
| 10. Thomas Carlyle,      | 22. Alex. Hamilton,    |
| 11. Commodore Faragut,   | 23. John Howard Payne, |
| 12. "Stonewall" Jackson, | Etc., Etc., Etc.       |

Remember, "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity, each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries.

Our Price for the Mammoth "Christmas" Box Complete, is Six Dollars.

J. D. LARKIN & CO., SENeca, HEACOCK & CARROLL STREETS, BUFFALO, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 8.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

REV. DR. TALMAGE'S SON AS AN EVANGELIST IN NEW YORK.

1. Mr. Frank De Witt Talmage—2. In front of the Union Square Theatre—3. Young Mr. Talmage Conducting THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Special Services in the Theatre. (See page 116.)

THE PLAGUES OF THE CITIES.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON ON GAMBLING PREACHED AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, LAST SUNDAY EVENING, FEBRUARY 22, 1891.

The Mummy of Pharaoh—The Ten Plagues of the Present Day—Noble Cities Afflicted—The Christian Founders of American Cities—New York's Benefactions—Every Citizen Interested in the Suppression of Gambling—What Gambling Is—Its Eight Hundred Seats—Their Costly Surroundings—An Awful Exchange—The Working of the Spell—Its Slaughter of Industry—Destroys Domestic Happiness—A Gambler's Farewell Letter—A Warning.

"Let my people go that they may serve me; for I will at this time send all my plagues." Exodus 9: 13, 14.

LAST winter in the Museum at Cairo, Egypt, I saw the mummy or embalmed body of Pharaoh, the oppressor of the ancient Israelites. Visible are the very teeth that he gnashed against the Israelitish brick-makers, the sockets of the merciless eyes with which he looked upon the overburdened people of God, the hair that floated in the breeze off the Red Sea, the very lips with which he commanded them to make bricks without straw. Thousands of years after, when the wrappings of the mummy were unrolled, old Pharaoh lifted up his arm as if in imploration, but his skinny bones cannot again clutch his shattered sceptre. It was to compel that tyrant to let the oppressed go free that the memorable Ten Plagues were sent. Sailing the Nile and walking amid the ruins of Egyptian cities, I saw no remains of those plagues that smote the water or the air. None of the frogs croaked in the one, none of the locusts sounded their rattle in the other, and the cattle bore no sign of the murrain, and through the starry nights hovering about the pyramids no destroying angel swept his wing. But there are ten plagues still stinging and befouling and cursing our cities and like angels of wrath smiting not only the first born but the last born.

Brooklyn, New York and Jersey City, though called three, are practically one. The bridge already fastening two of them together will be followed by other bridges and by tunnels from both New Jersey and Long Island shores; until what is true now, will, as the years go by, become more emphatically true. The average condition of public morals in this cluster of cities is as good if not better than in any other part of the world. Pride of city is natural to men, in all times, if they live or have lived in a metropolis noted for dignity or prowess. Cæsar boasted of his native Rome; Lycurgus of Sparta; Virgil of Andes; Demosthenes of Athens; Archimedes of Syracuse; and Paul of Tarsus. I should suspect a man of base-heartedness who carried about with him no feeling of complacency in regard to the place of his residence; who gloried not in its arts, or arms, or behavior; who looked with no exultation upon its evidences of prosperity, its artistic embellishments, and its scientific attainments.

I have noticed that men never like a place where they have not behaved well. Men who have free rides in prison-vans never like the city that furnishes the vehicle. When I see in history Argos, Rhodes, Smyrna, Chios, Colophon, and several other cities claiming Homer, I conclude that Homer behaved well. Let us not war against this pride of city, nor expect to build up ourselves by pulling others down. Let Boston have its Commons, its Faneuil Hall, and its magnificent scientific and educational institutions. Let Philadelphia talk about its Mint, and Independence Hall, and Girard College and its old families, as virtuous as venerable. When I find a man living in one of those places, who has nothing to say in favor of them, I feel like asking him, "What mean thing did you do, that you do not like your native city?" New York is a goodly city, and, when I say that, I mean the region between Spuyten Duyvil Creek and Jamaica in one direction, and Newark flats in the other direction. That which tends to elevate a part elevates all. That which blasts part, blasts all. Sin is a giant; and he comes to the Hudson or Connecticut river, and passes it, as easily as we step across a figure in the carpet. The blessing of God is an angel; and when it stretches out its two wings, one of them hovers over that and the other over this.

In infancy, the great metropolis was laid down by the banks of the Hudson. Its infancy was as feeble as that of Moses, sleeping in the bulrushes by the Nile; and, like Miriam, there our fathers stood and watched it. The royal spirit of American commerce came down to the water to bathe; and there she found it. She took it in her arms, and the child grew and waxed strong; and the ships of foreign lands brought gold and spices to its feet; and stretching itself up into the proportions of a metropolis, it has looked up to the mountains, and off upon the sea—the mightiest of the energies of American civilization. The character of the founder of a city will be seen for many years in its inhabitants. Romulus impressed his life upon Rome. The Pilgrims relaxed not their hold upon the cities of New England. William Penn has left Philadelphia an inheritance of integrity and fair dealing; and on any day in that city you may see in the manners, customs, and principles of its people, his tastes, his coat, his hat, his wife's bonnet, and his plain meeting-house. The Hollanders still wield an influence over New York.

Grand old New York! What Southern thoroughfare was ever smitten by pestilence, when our physicians did not throw themselves upon the sacrifice! What distant land has cried out in the agony of famine, and our ships have not put out with breadstuffs! What street of Damascus, or Beyrout, or Madras that has not heard the step of our missionaries! What struggle for national life, in which our citizens have not poured their blood into the trenches! What gallery of exquisite art, in which our painters have not hung their pictures! What department of literature or science to which our scholars have not contributed! I need not speak of our public schools, where the children of the cordwainer, and milkman, and glass-blower stand by the side of the flattered sons of merchant princes; or of the insane asylums on all these islands, where they who went cutting themselves, among the tombs, now sit, clothed and in their right minds; or of the Magdalen asylums, where the lost one of the street comes to bathe the Savior's feet with her tears, and wipe them with the hairs of her head—confiding in the pardon of him who said:

VOTARIES OF THE GAMING TABLE.

"Let him who is without sin cast the first stone at her." I need not speak of the institutions for the blind, the lame, the deaf the dumb, and the outcast; or of the thousand-armed machinery that sends streaming down from the reservoirs the clear, bright, sparkling, God-given water that rushes through our aqueducts, and dashes out of the hydrants, and tosses up in our fountains, and hisses in our steam engines, and showers out the conflagration; and sprinkles from the baptismal font of our churches; and with silver note, and golden sparkle, and crystalline chime, says to hundreds of thousands of our population in the authentic words of Him who said: "I will: be thou clean!"

THE WIFE'S ENTREATY.

All this I premise in opening this course of sermons on the Ten Plagues of these Three Cities, lest some stupid man might say I am depreciating the place of my residence. I speak to you to-day concerning the Plague of Gambling. Every man and woman in this house ought to be interested in this theme.

Some years ago, when an association for the suppression of gambling was organized, an agent of the association came to a prominent citizen and asked him to patronize the society. He said, "No, I can have no interest in such an organization. I am in no wise affected by that evil." At that very time, his son, who was his partner in business, was one of the heaviest players in Hearne's famous gaming establishment. Another refused his patronage on the same ground, not knowing that his first book-keeper, though receiving a salary of only a thousand dollars, was losing from fifty to one hundred dollars per night. The president of a railroad company refused to patronize the institution, saying: "That society is good for the defence of merchants, but we railroad people are not injured by this evil," not knowing that, at that very time, two of his conductors were spending three nights of each week at faro tables in New York. Directly or indirectly, this evil strikes at the whole world.

Gambling is the risking of something more or less valuable in the hope of winning more than you hazard. The instruments of gaming may differ but the principle is the same. The shuffling and dealing cards, however, full of temptation, is not gambling, unless stakes are put up; while, on the other hand, gambling may be carried on without cards or dice, or billiards, or a ten-pin alley. The man who bets on horses on elections, on battles—the man who deals in "fancy" stocks, or conducts a business which hazards extra capital, or goes into transaction without foundation, but dependent upon what men call "luck," is a gambler. Whatever you expect to get from your neighbor without offering an equivalent in money or time or skill, is either the product of theft or gaming. Lottery tickets and lottery policies come into the same category. Fairs for the founding of hospitals, schools and churches, conducted on the raffle system, come under the same denomination. Do not, therefore, associate gambling necessarily with any instrument, or game, or time or place, or think the principle dependent upon whether you play for a glass of wine, or one hundred shares of railroad stock. Whether you patronize "auction pools," "French mutuels," or "book-making," whether you employ faro or billiards, rondo and keno, cards, or bagatelle, the very idea of the thing is dishonest; for it professes to bestow upon you good for which you give no equivalent,

It is estimated that every day in Christendom eighty million dollars pass from hand to hand through gambling practices, and every year in Christendom one hundred and twenty-three billion one hundred million dollars change hands in that way. There are in this cluster of cities about eight hundred confessed gambling establishments. There are about three thousand five hundred professional gamblers. Out of the eight hundred gambling establishments, how many of them do you suppose profess to be honest? Ten. These ten professing to be honest because they are merely the ante-chamber to the seven hundred and ninety that are acknowledged fraudulent.

There are first-class gambling establishments. You go up the marble stairs. You ring the bell. The liveried servant introduces you. The walls are lavender-tinted. The mantels are of Vermont marble. The pictures are "Jephthah's Daughter," and Dore's "Dante's and Virgil's Frozen Region of Hell," a most appropriate selection, this last, for the place. There is the roulette table, the finest, the costliest, most exquisite piece of furniture in the United States. There is the banqueting-room, where, free of charge to the guests, you may find the plate, and viands, and wines, and cigars, sumptuous beyond parallel.

Then you come to the second-class gambling establishment. To it you are introduced by a card through some "roper-in." Having entered, you must either gamble or fight. Sanded cards, dice loaded with quicksilver, poor drinks, will soon help you to get rid of all your money to a tune in short metre with staccato passages. You wanted to see. You saw. The low villains of that place watch you as you come in. Does not the panther, squat in the grass, know a calf when he sees it? Wrangle not for your rights in that place, or your body will be thrown bloody into the street, or dead into the East River. You go along a little further and find the policy establishment. In that place you bet on numbers. Betting on two numbers is called a "saddle;" betting on three numbers is called a "gig," betting on four numbers is called a "horse," and there are thousands of our young men leaping into that "saddle," and mounting that "gig," and behind that "horse," riding to perdition. There is always one kind of sign on the door—"Exchange;" a most appropriate title for the door, for there, in that room, a man exchanges health, peace and heaven, for loss of health, loss of home, loss of family, loss of immortal soul. Exchange sure enough and infinite enough.

Men wishing to gamble will find places just suited to their capacity, not only in the underground oyster-cellar, or at the table back of the curtain, covered with greasy cards, or in the steamboat smoking cabin, where the bloated wretch with rings in his ears instead of his nose deals the pack, and winks in the unsuspecting traveller—providing free drinks all around—but in gilded parlors and amid gorgeous surroundings.

A young man, having suddenly heired a large property, sits at the hazard table, and takes up in a dice-box, the estate won by a father's lifetime sweat, and shakes it, and tosses it away. Intemperance soon stigmatizes its victim—kicking him out, a slaving fool, into the ditch, or sending him, with the drunkard's hiccup, staggering up the street where his family lives. But gambling does not in that way expose its victims. The gambler may be eaten up by the gambler's passion, yet you only discover it by the greed in his eyes, the hardness of his features, the nervous restlessness, the threadbare coat and his embarrassed business. Yet he is on the road to hell, and no preacher's voice or startling warning, or wife's entreaty, can make him stay for a moment his headlong career. The infernal spell is on him; a giant is aroused within; and though you bind him with cables, they would part like thread; and though you fasten him seven times round with chains, they would snap like rusted wire; and though you piled up in his path, heaven-high Bibles, tracts and sermons and on the top should set the cross of the Son of God, over them all the gambler would leap, like a roe over the rocks, on his way to perdition.

GAMBLER ROBBING THE BANK'S SAFE

Again, this sin works ruin by killing industry. A man used to reaping scores, or hundreds, or thousands of dollars from the gaming table will not be content with slow work. He will say, "What is the use of trying to make these fifty dollars in my store when I can get five times that in half an hour down at 'Billy's'?" You never knew a confirmed gambler who was industrious. The men given to this vice spend their time, not actively employed in the game, in idleness, or intoxication, or sleep, or in corrupting new victims. This sin has dulled the carpenter's saw, and cut the band of the factory wheel; sunk the cargo, broken the teeth of the farmer's harrow and sent a strange lightning to shatter the battery of the philosopher. The very first idea in gaming is at war with all the industries of society.

This crime is getting its lever under many a mercantile house in our great cities, and before long down will come the great establishment, crushing reputation, home, comfort and immortal souls. How it diverts and sinks capital may be inferred from some authentic statement before us. The ten gaming houses that once were authorized in Paris passed through the banks, yearly, three hundred and twenty-five millions of francs. Where does all the money come from? The whole world is robbed! What is most sad, there are no consolations for the loss and suffering entailed by gaming. If men fail in lawful business, God pities and society commiserates; but where in the Bible or in society is there any consolation for the gambler? From what tree of the forest oozes there a balm that can soothe the gambler's heart? In that bottle where God keeps the tears of his children, are there any tears of the gambler? Do the winds that come to kiss the faded cheek of sickness, and to cool the heated brow of the laborer, whisper hope and cheer to the emaciated victim of the game of hazard? When an honest man is in trouble, he has sympathy. "Poor fellow!" they say. But do gamblers come to weep at the agonies of the gambler? In Northumberland was one of the finest estates in England. Mr. Porter owned it and in a year gambled it all away. Having lost the last acre of the estate, he came down from the saloon and got into his carriage; went back; put up his horses and carriage and town house, and played. He threw and lost. He started home, and in a side alley met a friend from whom he borrowed ten guineas; went back to the saloon and before a great while had won twenty thousand pounds. He died at last, a beggar in St. Giles. How many gamblers felt sorry for Mr. Porter? Who consoled him on the loss of his estate? What gambler subscribed to put a stone over the poor man's grave? Not one!

THE SHARPERS GOT HOLD OF HIM.

Furthermore, this sin is the source of uncounted dishonesties. The game of hazard itself is often a cheat. How many tricks and deceptions in the dealing of the cards! The opponent's hand is oftentimes found out by fraud. Cards are marked so that they may be designated from the back. Expert gamblers have their accomplices, and one wink may decide the game. The dice have been found loaded with platina, so that "doublets" come up every time. These dice are introduced by the gamblers unobserved by honest men who have come into the play; and this accounts for the fact that ninety-nine out of a hundred who gamble, however wealthy they began, at the end are found to be poor, miserable, ragged wretches, that would not now be allowed to sit on the door-step of the house that they once owned. In a gaming-house in San Francisco a young man having just come from the mines deposited a large sum upon the ace, and won twenty-two thousand dollars. But the tide turns. Intense anxiety comes upon the countenances of all. Slowly the cards went forth. Every eye is fixed. Not a sound is heard until the ace is revealed favorable to the bank. There are shouts of "Foul!" "Foul!" but the keepers of the table produce their pistols and the uproar is silenced and the bank has won ninety-five thousand dollars. Do you call this a game of chance? There is no chance about it.

THEY THOUGHT HE WAS DEAD.

But these dishonesties in the carrying on of the game are nothing when compared with the frauds which are committed in order to get money to go on with the nefarious work. Gambling with its greedy hand has snatched away the widow's mite and the portion of the orphans; has sold the daughter's virtue to get the means to continue the game; has written the counterfeit signature, emptied the banker's money vault and wielded the assassin's dagger. There is no depth of meanness to which it will not stoop. There is no cruelty at which it is appalled. There is no warning of God that it will not dare. Merciless, unappeasable, fiercer and wilder it blinds, it hardens, it rends, it blasts, it crushes, it damns. It has peopled our prisons and lunatic asylums. How many railroad agents and cashiers and trustees of funds it has driven to disgrace, incarceration and suicide! Witness years ago a cashier of a railroad who stole one hundred and three thousand dollars to carry on his gaming practices. Witness forty thousand dollars stolen from a Brooklyn bank within the memory of many of you, and the one hundred and eighty thousand dollars taken from a Wall street insurance company for the same purpose! These are only illustrations on a large scale of the robberies every day committed for the purpose of carrying out the designs of gamblers. Hundreds of thousands of dollars every year leak out without observation from the merchant's till into the gambling hell. A man in London keeping one of these gambling houses boasted that he had ruined a nobleman a day; but if all the saloons of this land were to speak out, they might utter a more infamous boast, for they have destroyed a thousand noble men a year.

Notice also the effect of this crime upon domestic happiness. It has sent its ruthless plowshare through hundreds of families, until the wife sat in rags and the daughters were disgraced and the sons grew up to the same infamous practices or took a short cut to destruction across the murderer's scaffold. Home has lost all charms for the gambler. How tame are the children's caresses and a wife's devotion to the gambler! How drearily the fire burns on the domestic hearth! There must be louder laughter, and something to win and something to lose; an excitement to drive the heart faster and fillip the blood and fire the imagination. No home, however bright, can keep back the gamester. The sweet call of love bounds back from his iron soul, and all endearments are consumed in the flame of his passion. The family Bible will go after all other treasures are lost, and if his crown in heaven were put into his hand he would cry: "Here goes one more game, my boys! On this one throw I stake my crown of heaven." A young man in London on coming of age received a fortune of one hundred and twenty thousand dollars, and, through gambling, in three years was thrown on his mother for support. An only son went to a Southern city; he was rich, intellectual and elegant in manners. His parents gave him on his departure from home their last blessing. The sharpers got hold of him. They flattered him. They lured him to the gaming-table and let him win almost every time for a good while, and patted him on the back and said, "First-rate player." But, fully in their grasp, they fleeced him; and his thirty thousand dollars were lost. Last of all he put up his watch and lost that. Then he began to think of his home, and his old father and mother, and wrote thus:

"My beloved parents: You will doubtless feel a momentary joy at the reception of this letter from the child of your bosom, on whom you have lavished all the favors of your declining years. But should a feeling of joy for a moment spring up in your hearts when you should have received this from me, cherish it not. I have fallen deep—never to rise. Those grey hairs that I should have honored and protected I shall bring down with sorrow to the grave. I will not curse my destroyer, but oh! may God avenge the wrongs and impositions practised upon the unwary in a way that shall best please him. This, my dear parents, is the last letter you will ever receive from me. I humbly pray your forgiveness. It is my dying prayer. Long before you have received this letter from me the cold grave will have closed upon me forever. Life to me is insupportable. I cannot; nay, I will not, suffer the shame of having ruined you. Forget and forgive is the dying prayer of our unfortunate son."

The old father came to the post-office got the letter and fell to the floor. They thought he was dead at first; but they brushed back the white hair from his brow and fanned him. He had only fainted. I wish he had been dead; for what is life worth to a father after his son is destroyed? When things go wrong at a gaming table they shout "Foul! foul!" over all the gaming tables of the world I cry out: "Foul! foul! Infinitely foul!"

Shall I sketch the history of the gambler? Lured by bad company he finds his way into a place where honest men ought never to go. He sits down to his first game but only for pastime and the desire of being thought sociable. A slight stake is put up just to add interest to the play. Game after game is played. Larger stakes and still larger. They begin to move nervously on their chairs. Their brows lower and eyes flash, until now they who win and they who lose, fired alike with passion, sit with set jaws and compressed lips, and eyes like fire-balls to see the final turn before it comes.

A few years have passed and he is only the wreck of a man. Seating himself at the game ere he throws the first card, he stakes the last relic of his wife, and the marriage ring which sealed the solemn vows between them. The game is lost and staggering back in exhaustion he dreams. The bright hours of the past mock his agony, and in his dreams fiends with eyes of fire and tongue of flame circle about him with joined hands, to dance and sing their orgies with hellish chorus, chanting "Hail! brother!" kissing his clammy forehead until their loathsome locks, flowing with serpents, crawl into his bosom, and coiling around his heart pinch it with chills and shudders unutterable.

Take warning! You are no stronger than tens of thousands who have by this practice been overthrown. No young man in our cities can escape being tempted. Beware of the first beginnings! This road is a down grade, and every instant increases the momentum. Launch not upon this treacherous sea. Split hulks strew the beach. Everlasting storms howl up and down, tossing unwary crafts into the Hell-gate. I speak of what I have seen with my own eyes. I have looked off into the abyss, and I have seen the foaming, and the hissing, and the whirling of the horrid deep in which the mangled victims writhed, one upon another, and struggled, strangled, blasphemed and died—the death-stare of eternal despair upon their countenances as the waters gurgled over them.

The Temple in the Time of Christ. (See page 124.)

To a gambler's death-bed there comes no hope. He will probably die alone. His former associates come not nigh his dwelling. When the hour comes his miserable soul will go out of a miserable life into a miserable eternity. As his poor remains pass the house where he was ruined, old companions may look out a moment and say: "There goes the old carcass—dead at last," but they will not get up from the table. Let him down now into his grave. Plant no tree to cast its shade there, for the long, deep, eternal gloom that settles there is shadow enough. Plant no "forget-me-nots" or cglantines around the spot, for flowers were not made to grow on such a blasted heath. Visit it not in the sunshine, for that would be mockery, but in the dismal night when no stars are out and the spirits of darkness come down horsed on the wind, then visit the grave of the gambler!

DR. TALMAGE'S SON AS AN EVANGELIST.

A STIRRING APPEAL TO YOUNG MEN AT THE UNION SQUARE THEATRE.

While the Father Addresses a Crowded House at the Academy, the Son Speaks to an Equally Enthusiastic Audience over the Way—A Notable Event in Christian Work in the Metropolis.

(See illustrations on first page.)

PEDESTRIANS walking along Broadway on Sunday evening, the 22d inst., on approaching the neighborhood of Union Square, would have been puzzled to account for the enormous crowds that were assembled there. It has been no novelty to see the Square crowded on Sabbath evenings, for many months past, for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD special services at the Academy of Music, where the Rev. T. De Witt Talmage has been delivering his famous series of evangelical discourses, have drawn thousands together, no matter what the weather. But on this particular evening the crowds seemed greater than ever. While the usual multitude surged toward the Academy, there were hundreds who almost blocked the sidewalks in front of the Union Square Theatre, where it had been announced that Frank De Witt Talmage, the son of the great preacher would supplement his father's efforts by addressing the overflow.

Mr. Talmage who is now in his 23d year, has only lately graduated from college and is entered as a student at the Union Theological Seminary in New York. He is the only surviving son of the famous preacher and was born in Philadelphia in November 1867. He received his early education at the Polytechnic Institute in New York, and was also for a time a student at the Sing-Sing Military Academy. In 1886 he entered the New York University, and graduated from there in the spring of 1890, being named as the orator of his class. It is worthy of note here, by way of coincidence, that the father of the young student was the orator of his class in the same University in 1853. On leaving college, Frank De Witt Talmage at once decided to study for the ministry, and entered the Union Theological Seminary as before stated. He has already had the benefit of a year's experience on the lecture platform, being associated in a course in which the distinguished African explorer, Mr. Henry M. Stanley and Rev. Dr. Talmage were also included, and he has spoken at many of the leading cities throughout the country with marked success. At Nazareth, Pa., he addressed the farmers on the race-track before the grand stand, and held the attention of an audience of over 3,000 for an hour, making one of the grandest oratorical efforts ever heard in that region. Among other cities in which he has lectured, besides New York, are Minneapolis, St. Paul, Newark and Baltimore.

Having been for a number of years the companion of Dr. Talmage in his travelling trips through the United States and abroad, and his close and constant associate on all his lecturing tours, young Mr. Talmage has been fortunate in making the personal acquaintance of a very large number of the leading public men of America and Europe.

When the doors of the Union Square Theatre were opened, on Sunday evening, the house filled immediately and hundreds were unable to get in. Fifteen minutes after the opening hour there was not even standing-room. After the usual introductory exercises, young Mr. Tal-image took the platform and delivered a powerful address on the necessity of young men taking some decided stand in religious life and Christian work. He said:

"Most people believe in Christianity. Do you believe in Christ? 'Yes,' you answer. Do you believe that he came to save sinners and that you are one? 'Yes,' you answer. That is about all you have to believe? Then, why are you not a Christian? Because you are a moral coward, and dare not affirm your belief. The whole success of your religious life depends upon taking some decided stand. Jesus doing his miracles, always compelled action from those whom he would help, as when he said to him sick of the palsy 'Arise, take up thy bed and walk,' or as when he commanded the ten lepers, 'Go, show yourselves to the priests, and it came to pass that as they went, they were cleansed.' Your whole religious life depends upon taking some decided stand. Some people think the age of miracles is past. Untrue that! You take some decided stand, and God can work as great a miracle in you as when he changed the worst man in all England, into a disciple and made John Bunyan dream of heaven. Don't wait for any great manifestation—something that will make you saintly all of a sudden. Some people think that in order to be converted there must be a kind of explosion inside. Out will go the devil, and in will come goodness. That is absurd! You cannot become bad in a moment, or good in a moment. God works through well-established laws and man is always in a formative state. You are either getting better or worse. Reject this invitation to-day, and you will wander farther and farther away, and your heart will become harder and harder, and this invitation will become a joke, and you will commit the sin of having rejected Christ so often that you have no conscience left. But if you accept Christ, you will gradually grow better and better, till almost sainted by age. The goodness of our parents is due to this mellowing process. The saintliest are old men. The most diabolical are old men. Men either grow better or they grow worse, and most old men will tell you that the pivotal time of their life was when young men, as you or I, on some specific occasion, as is this the 22d day of February, 1891, they accepted or rejected Christ, and accepted or rejected him forever. From this day you travel heavenward or hellward. Many of you are now at the cross-roads. Look well to the sign-board. Eternity may hang upon the result."

Addresses were also delivered by the young preacher's classmates, Thomas J. McClellan and Henry Phillips, both of the Union Theological Seminary. The entire service was characterized by a deep feeling of religious enthusiasm. The young orator, in his manner of speaking, at times recalled the broad, vigorous style of his father. His oratory is natural and robust, while his choice of language is unconventional and strikingly bold. The large audience several times gave tokens of its appreciation of the efforts of the young evangelist, whose words made a powerful impression on all who heard them.

PREACHING THE KORAN.

(See illustration.)

In a Mohammedan mosque, the reading of the Koran and its exposition, form an important feature of the services. The pulpit is always placed in the south-east part of the edifice. In the direction in which Mecca lies, here is a niche toward which the devout Mohammedan turns when he prays. It is not customary for women to go to the mosque, but if they do they are separate from the worshippers.

THE OBSEQUIES OF GEN. SHERMAN.

(See illustration on page 124.)

THE esteem in which Gen. Sherman was held, not only by the men who had fought under him and knew him and loved him best, but by the general public, was manifested unmistakably in New York from the time that his death was announced until the day of his funeral. On Tuesday and Wednesday a steady stream of sad-faced people passed in and looked mournfully on the form of the famous soldier.

It was not much changed by death. The features bore the same firm, steady, calm expression, which they had worn in life. The body was clad in full General's uniform, with sash, and the right hand lying across the breast.

There was an imposing funeral procession on Thursday, when the General's remains were taken from his residence and started on their way to St. Louis. The body, placed on a caisson was followed by carriages containing the bereaved family. In the next carriage were the President and Vice-President of the United States. Then carriages containing the two ex-Presidents, the Cabinet and the Committees appointed by Congress, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and other organizations, and bringing up the rear, a long procession of Veterans. One significant feature of the parade was the presence, at their own request, of a considerable number of Confederate soldiers, who have recently organized under the name of the Confederate Camp of Veterans. They sent a delegation to Gen. Butterfield desiring the privilege of taking part in the mournful procession that they might thus express "their patriotism and their respect for Gen. Sherman." So attended by our most distinguished men and by the men with whom and against whom he had fought, the body of the famous general was borne, through streets decorated with emblems of mourning on its way to its last resting-place.

A Mohammedan Imam Preaching the Koran in a Mosque.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Stockholders of a Broken Bank in Chicago have had a remarkable experience. The Journal of that city states that the holders of the stock of the Third National Bank, which failed in 1877, have been called together to hear some good news from the Receiver. He announces that a block of real estate, in which some of the bank-stock was invested, and which fourteen years ago he reported as practically worthless, has suddenly become valuable, owing to its being near Jackson Park. He has been offered a million dollars for it. It seems the holders will thus receive far more than the face value of their shares. This, as the Journal says, is a unique experience for shareholders in a wrecked bank. It is not so, however, for the Christian. Though now the world regards his spiritual riches as worthless, the day is coming when it will be found that they are worth more than the material wealth of the whole world. (James 2: 5.)

A Confession in a New York Court failed in its object on February 17. At the January term of the Court a man was tried for burglary, was convicted and sentenced. His counsel came before the Court on Tuesday and moved for a new trial as a man had been found who confessed that he was the guilty party. The lawyer produced him, and he swore that it was he who had committed the burglary. The Recorder listened to his story but refused to grant the new trial, or to release the man previously sentenced. He had learned on investigation that the man making the confession was a convicted thief, who was, probably, seeking to take the place of the condemned man for a consideration and might have been his partner in the crime. The Recorder expressed his belief that the man previously convicted was certainly guilty, and declined to accept the self-accuser as his substitute, though he was disposed to hold him as an accomplice. It is well for the believer that his hope is based on the sinlessness of his Substitute. (II Cor. 5: 21.)

An Unlicensed Medical Practitioner caused some amusement in a New York court by a complaint on Feb. 18th. He had been put on trial for practising as a physician without a diploma and without the registration required by law. As this was the second time he had been before the court for the same offence the penalty was likely to be a heavy one. When the judge reminded him of his previous conviction he told a remarkable story. He said that a man came to him after his former trial and told him that he was a lawyer having great influence in the Court of Appeals. He offered his services, and promised that if the "doctor" would confide his case to him he would get the judgment of the lower court reversed. The "doctor" gave him money, and subsequently the lawyer informed him that the Court of Appeals had decided not to remit the fine imposed by the court below, but had granted the "doctor" permission to practice. His second offence, therefore, was, he now pleaded, not a wilful defiance of the court, but was due to misplaced confidence in the assurance of his legal adviser, who, he had now discovered, was not a duly qualified lawyer. The judge sentenced him to three months imprisonment and fined him a hundred dollars. In doing so he humorously sympathized with the bogus doctor in falling a victim to a bogus lawyer. It may be hoped that the poetic retribution will end there. The consequences might be far more disastrous, if, seeking the spiritual counsel, which both evidently need, they should be improperly directed by an unqualified clergyman and through trusting in false assurances of safety should lose their souls. (1st Cor. 6: 13, 14.)

THE SCHOOL-BOY'S PROBLEM.

A Story of the Sunday School Lesson for March 8.

"I THINK there must be a mistake in the book," said Edward Wright, as, after working some time over an arithmetical problem, he failed to get the right answer. He closed the book and went off to play, intending to offer his hypothesis to his teacher in the morning.

"You are wrong and the book is right," was the teacher's reply when Edward made his suggestion. "Did you draw a figure, as I have told you always to do in these problems?" the teacher asked.

"No; there is no need with this one," said the boy. "It is only to find how many yards of carpet are required for a room so many feet wide and so many feet long, leaving a strip two feet wide around the room uncovered. You have only to multiply the—"

"Better draw the figure, Edward, as I told you," said the teacher.

Edward went back to his place in the school. "What did he say?" asked the boy who sat next to him.

"Told me to draw a figure. It's nonsense. What is the use of drawing a figure of a simple thing like that. He's crazy about figures. They don't help you any."

"Well, Edward, have you solved your problem?" the teacher asked presently.

"I cannot get the answer in the book. I have gone over all my calculations again, but it comes out just the same."

"Did you draw a figure?"

"No, sir. It's clear enough. I have taken the two feet off the length of the room and off the width. Then the area is—"

"Stay and work it out after the other boys have gone home; you will be quiet then and can think it out better."

That was not a very agreeable arrangement for the boy, and he said to himself that if he stayed all day and all night, there would be no other answer than the one he had found originally. He saw the other boys go off joyfully to their play, and discontent settled on his brow as he sat at his desk with his problem still unsolved before him. He was sitting all alone in the room, listlessly sticking his knife into the desk, the picture of desolation, when Julia Andrews, the teacher's little daughter, looked in to find a book.

"What, you here, Edward!" she exclaimed. "I thought all the boys were gone. What is the matter?"

Edward was very fond of the child, and though he thought such matters as this that was worrying him were above her comprehension, he told her all about it. "Why don't you tell Papa?" she asked when he had finished. "I am sure he would help you. He likes you; I've heard him say so, often."

"I guess he doesn't, now," said the boy, sadly. "He only told me to draw a figure."

"And have you?"

"No; what's the use?"

"I would if I were you, whether it's use or not. Perhaps if you did Papa would help you."

The boy shook his head; but he took up his pencil and mechanically drew an outline of the floor of the room with its border of two feet. He started as he did so. "I see it," he exclaimed, "I see where I was wrong. I took off only two feet from the length and two from the width. I ought to have taken four feet off both. There are two feet at each side. He rapidly made his calculation on the new basis and found the result correct.

"Don't you wish you had drawn the figure, at first, Edward?" the teacher asked, when the boy reported the successful solution. "I saw where you had made your mistake, but it was not wise to point it out to you. I wanted you to find it out yourself, and you did so when you took my advice and drew the figure. You have learned more than you have any idea of."

The teacher was right. Edward Wright did not forget the lesson. He told the story many years afterward when he was a minister of the Gospel to a young college student who came to him in great distress of mind about his soul's salvation. The young man said he could not find peace. He said it seemed to him that God could not be the just Being he was described to be in allowing Christ to suffer, the innocent for the guilty. He had difficulties in coming to God that way. He thought if he repented and reformed that was all that was necessary. Yet he could not find peace.

Then Mr. Wright told him the story of his problem. "You remind me," he went on, "of a man who wants the right of entrance to a mansion and he goes to the door at which the owner and his family and friends enter, and insists on his right to go in that way. But the owner has made it a rule that strangers shall go in by another door the first time they come. It may seem to him an unnecessary and absurd restriction, but there it is and there seems to be no other way open to him. Should you not think him foolish if he persisted in continuing to go to that door which was always shut against him when a welcome was guaranteed him at the other door? Of course you would. Now just drop your questioning about God's reasons and God's justice and go right around to the sinner's door and you will have no more trouble. We have to walk in the way God appoints, even when we cannot see the reason of it, or we miss the blessing."

THE RENEWAL OF OUR PLANET.

Prophecies Respecting the Future of the Earth After its Purging by Fire.

BY REV. GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

THE apostle Peter, inspired by the spirit of prophecy, announced in language both clear and positive the dissolution of present cosmical conditions, and the renewal of the heavens and the earth. (II. Pet. 3: 10-14.) By the heavens are understood the atmospheric, or aerial heavens, by the earth we understand all things material and physical belonging to our planet. This radical change has never taken place. It was future to Peter; it is future to ourselves. Earth's predicted regeneration is yet a prophecy; her release from corruption is yet an unfulfilled promise. But the promise is sure, and the prophecy is pledged to literal fulfillment. The faithful God cannot lie; he cannot deny himself. Therefore we are to look forward hopefully, and to expect the grandest physical transformations which ever took place since all nature became enslaved through the curse consequent upon the sin of man.

We do but blunder when entertaining the thought that some Scriptures do not especially concern ourselves. Nay, more, we sin against divine wisdom by treating any part of the sacred canon as unworthy of careful and prayerful consideration. Do we not well to keep in memory these wholesome words: "Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope."

This planet is our temporary home: the abode of the human race. Care we not for its future? Have we no interest in its end? Every house-owner is interested in his own domicile. Yea, though he be absent from his home, though a sojourner in other lands, though seeking bread under foreign skies, to the household his heart will turn, for around it his affections cling.

So, also, should this round globe into which we are born, where we live, and whose bosom becomes our cemetery find a prominent place in our love. Is it not eminently proper that we make inquiry concerning its destiny? Shall it perish, or shall it prosper? Shall its light be quenched, or shall it become more glorious?

On facing this question, we thank God for the Bible—for the whole Bible; for its history, and for its prophecy. We know what constitutes history; do we know the genus of prophecy? Is it not the expression of God's thoughts concerning the future? Man's predictions of the future are not prophecies, but speculations. Some of these, as in the case of the French revolution, and our late civil war, may be correct. They may be possibilities, yea more, probabilities, but they are not absolute certainties. For certainty, absolute, unconditioned certainty is stamped only upon the page of revelation. God's prophetic word is that revelation. He has drawn aside the veil, and ages to come, both in their moral and physical features, stand outlined before us.

I am aware that in the discussion of Earth's re-genesis I enter on proscribed territory. Theologians have hung their danger-signals at its portals, while sentimentalists cry out against any future scene of glory but their airy and fanciful paradise. Where God is silent I am dumb; where he has spoken I seek only to re-echo his voice. And this I do, not as a master of oracles, but as an humble learner of the sacred Word. Therefore, I remark: We may not know with accuracy the processes by which God's purposes shall be accomplished; we may not readily, or accurately determine the relation of one prophetic event to another, nor discriminate between the events themselves in their systematic and chronological order. Nor must we dogmatize on dates and details which are wisely hid from our eyes. Our calculations, or mis-calculations, should be made with the ever-present consciousness of personal fallibility. Nor indeed is it profitable to indulge curiosity on questions upon which the light of prophecy refuses to shine.

I say this while I plead for a more universal and careful study of prophecy. True, the prophetic scriptures are not simple as the alphabet, nor clear as the sunlight. There is sufficient mystery and obscurity to excite diligent and patient investigation, and to demand earnest study, and prayerful comparison of Scripture with Scripture. Let not, therefore, the ridicule of the rationalist, nor the pseudo-philosophy of higher critics divert us from an earnest purpose to study all Scripture as the Word of God.

In the progress of our studies we may discover pet theories to be fallacious; we may find dogmatic interpretations exploded, and in the course of time hobby-horses slain under us. But even our own former mistakes should not discourage us, nor drive us from the fruitful field of Scripture prophecy, where we may glean and gather and eat to the full.

Take from the Bible its prophetic portions, and you reduce it to one-third its size. A goodly proportion of the Old Testament Scriptures which have become history were once prophecy. All that pertained to the first advent of Jesus, his rejection, suffering, sacrificial death and triumphant resurrection, was foretold long before his arrival on the shores of our world. Let us then take heed lest in our narrow and vulgar notions of limiting God's Word to history, doctrine and morals, we find ourselves condemning the Most High, by making light of his eternal counsels. It was he who gave us prophecy; it was his Spirit who declared that every Scripture is God-breathed and "is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." May it not be that the poverty of our equipment for Christian work results from our practical ignorance of the prophetic Scriptures?

God has spoken of the end of things, as he has of their beginning. He sketched the career of men and of nations. He revealed his will concerning individuals and multitudes. He informed us of Egypt's doom, of Nineveh's desolation, and of Babylon's overthrow. Nor has he left us to find out by intuition, by the light of history, by speculation, or by guess-work the future destiny of our earth. Prophecy is a lamp, and upon the predestined course of the planet does its clear light continue to shine.

(To be Continued.)

NAAMAN HEALED.

S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 8, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 5: 1-14. GOLDEN TEXT, PSALMS 103: 3.

Faith Grown Dim in the Land—The Syrian General to be an Example of God's Power—The Captive Girl's Magnanimity—The King of Syria Appealing to a King—Elisha's Message—The Sufferer Unceremoniously Treated—His Indignation—Yielding to the Entreaties of his Servants.

MANY lepers were in Israel in the time of Elisha the prophet, and none of them was cleansed saving Naaman the Syrian." (Luke 4: 27.) The prophet had been equally with Elijah, a witness to him "who quickeneth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were." (Rom. 4: 17). He had borne witness to his God as Jehovah Jireh," in the healing of the waters of Jericho, in the supply of water for the allied armies, in the increase of the widow's pots of oil, in the cure of the pottage for the sons of the prophets, in the multiplication of the twenty loaves to feed a hundred men. He must also be a witness to the power of Israel's God in the healing of the body.

In Elijah's days, nothing short of famine would arouse the people to recognise the hand of their God. But the same God who withheld the rain of heaven according to the word of Elijah was ready, and more than ready, to supply the need of those who would trust in him.

Faith in God

had become very rare and very imperfect in the land, men had forgotten God's promises to the widow. "Many widows were in Israel in the days of Elias," but no Israelitish widow was found with sufficient knowledge of God to trust him for temporal necessities; it must needs be that a woman of Sarepta should be chosen to maintain the prophet, who could trust God only for supplies, at a time when the widows of Israel must have sorely suffered. Faith in Jehovah Ropheka "the Lord that healeth thee," had also waxed so dim that not one could be found in the land of Israel who could trust his body to its Maker for healing.

Thus it came to pass that God found means to bring a heathen general in contact with his prophet, that his own faithless people might learn that their God changed not, and that he who had healed his people in the wilderness was their physician still, just as far as they yielded themselves to him and trusted him.

God had blest the Syrian general, Naaman, and by him had given deliverance to Syria. But he had purposes of blessing for him far beyond the success of his arms, and the consequent renown which should accrue to him. It was no accident, and it was no proof of God's anger against him that it is recorded;

"But He was a Leper,"

A man isolated from his kind by a loathsome disease, who might in other circumstances be ruined by the selfish and senseless flattery of those who have their own ends to serve, may be peculiarly open to a call from God, for which his terrible affliction may not unfit him. By a little slave girl, but one who had learned before the time of Christ, one of his truest lessons, "By love serve one another," Naaman heard of Israel's prophet. This girl-witness for God sought not her own. Forgetting her own wrongs, she loved her enemies, and from her heart, and by her action, sought the good of her greatest enemy, who had torn her from her home and friends. This was a spirit so unknown in Syria that the words of this maiden, backed by such a life, told upon Naaman's wife, then upon Naaman, then upon the king, and the court of Syria! "Would God my lord were with the prophet that is in Samaria! for he would recover him of his leprosy." It was the word of a prophet, spoken by a simple child, who had learned to know her God, and to count on him in her days of exile! No leper had been healed in Israel in that generation, yet this maid spoke with certainty because she knew her God.

The king of Syria had no other idea of a God than of a fabulous personage, the belief in whom belonged to the vulgar, and was a useful help in the superstition which accompanied it to maintain a certain hold upon the minds of the people. But he looked upon religion with its priests and prophets as being altogether subject to the will of kings. Therefore he wrote a letter to Jehoram, king of Israel, to the intent that he had sent his servant Naaman to him that he might heal him of his leprosy. Nothing so angers an unspiritual man as a personal appeal to him to put to the test the spiritual and supernatural. Many rulers will argue and reason, criticize or preach, but they know not Elijah's God who answers by fire. To seek an answer to prayer, to treat God's promises as an actual reality, and put them to the proof; this is beyond the depth of

An Unspiritual Man,

and he is ready to suspect of any evil motive one who demands it of him. "Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? Wherefore consider, I pray you, and see how he seeketh a quarrel against me." The glory of Israel's God was no object in the eyes of the King of Israel; the misery and suffering of the poor leper did not touch his selfish heart; himself was his idol, and nothing which did not touch him personally had weight with this heartless man. When God was about to deliver him from the threatened destruction of his army, all he had to say for God was: "The Lord hath called these three Kings together to deliver them into the hands of the King of Moab" (II. Kings 3: 10, 13), and now he is as suspicious of the King of Syria as he had been of the God of Israel! Full of self, he conjures up imaginations that God and man are plotting against him! Truly "the wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous are bold as a lion."

The prophet Elisha heard of the coming of Naaman, and sent to the King, saying: "Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? Let him come now to me, and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel."

It was a new experience for the popular warrior to be treated with so little ceremony. Could it be possible that a cure for the leprosy was known in Israel, and that the King was unacquainted with it? Was this prophet a man of greater importance than the King himself, that he should give orders to so great a personage as Naaman to come from the King's palace to him? Probably already wounded in his cherished self-importance, he "came with his chariot and horses, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha." But here he was treated with still less ceremony. It simply sufficed to the prophet to send him a message by a subordinate, "Go and wash seven times in Jordan," as though he had been a mere swineherd!

Naaman's Personal Vanity

was stung to the quick: this treatment was unbearable to the pride of his natural heart, and, simply exasperated, he gives vent to his indignation, and says: "Behold, I thought, he will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper. Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the waters of Israel? May I not wash in them and be clean? So he turned and went away in a rage." It was too galling. He felt he was completely taken in, he boiled with anger that he should have been so credulous as to trust that silly child in Syria; he was mad at the uncereemonious treatment which he met with; neither King nor prophet were caring to look at, or speak to him, in spite of all the fame he had acquired in Syria, and now to be told to take a simple bath! It was absurd in the extreme, he was not going to be a laughing stock to his followers and his friends at home, he would get back to Syria where he was somebody as quickly as possible.

But Israel's God had an eye of love on the angry, mortified man; he knew all the bitterness of that disappointed natural heart; and would reveal to him something more than physical healing, something which would make healing worth having, make his healed body a blessing in the world. If Elisha had answered to the picture of Naaman's imagination, the prophet would have filled the horizon of the Syrian, he would have known him as the great and wonderful healer whose presence and touch had power. But God and his prophet were working to another end. Physical healing, except it brings its subjects nearer to God, is of little blessing, and may be a positive curse. Naaman's conceptions rose no higher than the thought that either Elisha or common water had curative power or virtue. He was to find that, behind the prophet and behind the waters of Jordan, he was to meet the living God. "I am the Lord that healeth thee." There was something ingenuous and frank in this heathen man; he was open to conviction; he had not despised the little maid, and now, when his servants attempt to expostulate with him, Naaman does not turn away "My father," they say, "if the prophet had bid thee do

Some Great Thing

wouldst thou not have done it? How much rather when he saith to thee, Wash and be clean?" The honest, commonsense of the servants in the hand of God triumphed over the pride of Naaman's heart; "he went down, and dipped himself seven times in the Jordan, according to the saying of the Man of God." It was a kind of death and resurrection, death to his own will, to his cherished pride of heart, to his idolatry, to his past altogether. The humiliation to which he had been subject had broken up the fallow ground of his heart, and prepared the way for his receiving God. This is often the purpose of sickness as God permits it, and when it is an accepted humiliation, and the sufferer, instead of kicking against the discipline of God by seeking in every way to get cured, quietly sits at the feet of Jesus to know what he is saying, then, as with Naaman, when he yielded to the humiliation and to God's way of dealing with him, God is free to work a cure. Naaman met with God under the despised waters, and the seventh time of his dipping in them, "his flesh came again like the flesh of a little child and he was clean."

The sinner wants to be some great one, to establish his own righteousness; or to do some great thing, and lay God under an obligation. But in the presence of the crucified Jesus there is no room for man to glory. "Wash, and be clean," he says to every sinner alike, and when the sinner is cleansed, then he knows not his own righteousness, but his God.

A CHRISTIAN FUNERAL IN JAPAN.

AN event described in a letter from Japan, to the Spirit of Missions which recently occurred in the capital city of Japan has a very hopeful significance. It was the funeral of a native Christian lady, Mrs. Katsura, the wife of Lieutenant-General Katsura, the vice-minister of war. It is said that over 2,000 persons were in attendance, among whom were three cabinet ministers, a very large delegation of army officers of all ranks, and a number of foreign diplomatic officials. A large military band was detailed to furnish voluntaries before and after the services, though the music for the service proper was by the church choir.

A sermon was delivered by a native minister, the Rev. Paul Knamon. The sermon was devoted to setting forth the Christian's hope of a blessed immortality through faith in and obedience to Christ, and it was listened to with marked attention. Never before in Japan has a Christian preacher addressed such an audience, and some of those present were deeply moved as they remembered that less than eighteen years before, a man affiliated with the same branch of Christ's Kingdom died in prison in Kyoto, a martyr to his faith; while now the highest officials of the realm, with uncovered heads, respectfully listen to Christian preaching, and outwardly, at least, share in Christian worship; and the sincerity of the new toleration is emphasized by the presence of the band, under military orders, to aid in the service.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

FISHING FOR SOULS.

GET men into the Kingdom of God. Who cares about the way you get them in? I went to the Adirondacks with a hunting and fishing apparatus loaned me by a friend. The apparatus was worth five hundred dollars. If the trout and deer of Saranac Lake, and John Brown's Tract could have understood my baggage, they would have been very apprehensive. Such reels! Such bait boxes! Such cartridges! Such Bradford flies! Such pocket flasks for soda water and lemonade! Suffice it to say I did not interfere with the piscatory or zoological world. While I was laboriously getting ready, a mountaineer with an old blunderbuss shot three deer. I found that splendid apparatus did not imply execution. What is true in the woods is true in the Church. All our elaborate and costly theological apparatus is a failure, if we cannot catch souls.

HYPNOTISM.

AS has been reported in the newspapers, a distressing case of what is called hypnotism recently came under my observation, a lady from Indianapolis having visited the East in order to get rid of a "spell" cast upon her. And now if you ask me what I think of hypnotism, I answer, I think it a dastardly and villainous humbug. That we may influence each other toward right or wrong is most certain, but it is a power of persuasion, or a power of example, or a power of association. Hence we naturally become good if we go with the good; intelligent if we go with the intelligent; refined if we go with the refined; or bad if we go with the bad; vulgar if we go with the vulgar; boorish if we go with the boorish. But that you can compel me to do right or compel me to do wrong, I deny with an emphasis red hot with indignation. The Bible, which is our only guide, makes it plain that every man and every woman is a free agent. If you have the power by what is called animal magnetism or what I shall call infernal magnetism, to compel me to do wrong, where is my free agency? The old Book says: "If thou be wise thou shalt be wise for thyself, but if thou scornest, thou alone shalt bear it." No one can shirk responsibility by throwing it off on others. What is the meaning of the "Thou shalt nots" of the Ten Commandments, if we have no power to resist evil, if some one with a bad eye can make us morally collapse; if some overpowering influence can first kill our uncle and then chase us from Indianapolis to Oregon and from Oregon to Brooklyn? If you, my reader, feel that there is such a spell on you, you are in a state of incipient insanity, and you need a doctor and a doctor right away. Your difficulty is cerebral or nervous. There are only two forces that can overpoweringly affect you, and the one is divine and the other satanic. The divine influence is helpful, is gracious, is elevating, is saving, is heavenly, while the satanic is depraving and damnable. But even the satanic enthrallment will snap if you appeal for the divine release.

We need to resign the habit of ascribing to others our own deficits. Eve thought that the serpent had hypnotized her, and Adam thought that Eve had hypnotized him, but all three got punished; the snake by being pursued of all the clubs of the ages, and our first parents by being ejected from their homestead, leaving us, their descendants, to scramble for a living. If things go wrong, the husband is apt to blame the wife and the wife the husband, and the brother the sister, and the sister the brother, and the associate his associate. The besotting doctrine of hypnotism, becoming more and more prevalent, always puts the blame upon others. The Christian religion teaches us to put the blame upon ourselves. We are apt to go out into the world trying to get all the people right with reference to ourselves. The simple fact is that our hardest job is to manage ourselves. The people who control themselves have no great difficulty with others. Stand up in a manly, Christian independence. If we do wrong, confess it to God and try again. There is not a being in the universe, except God, who could hinder you from being honest and good and useful and holy; and God never yet stopped a man or woman travelling in the right direction, but always helps the struggling soul seeking for something higher and better.

And here let me advise you to stop pottering with those strange and queer and destructive systems sometimes called by one thing and sometimes by another. Ever and anon some philosophic or religious crank starts a new theory about God or the soul or humanity. No system is so absurd that it does not have disciples. If some one should propose building a railroad from the top of Trinity Church to the moon, there are those who would rush down and take the stock. Stick to your Bible and try everything by that standard. That is the Book which will stand with its system of morals and religion five hundred years after all the volumes of hypnotism and pantheism and agnosticism and all the other volumes of diabolism shall have been so long forgotten in the world's libraries that the book-worms which devoured them will starve on the shelves because there is nothing more for them to eat.

A few days ago I crossed the New York and Brooklyn bridge in a thick fog. I had no trouble in crossing for, all the time, I had something solid under me. But all the tug-boats and craft of every sort in the river beneath were sounding the whistle and blowing the fog-horn and making a terrible racket lest they run into something, or something run into them. Some of them, I suppose, got their sides smashed in and some of them landed in the wrong place. I hope that some of them reached the right wharf. So, I thought, there is a fog of doubt and mystery arising on almost all subjects. But the Bible builds for us a solid bridge to walk on. Down in the uncertain waters many systems of philosophy and religion go struggling through the thick mists, swept by the uncertain tides and blowing their fog-horns, and they know not where they are or where they will land. Why don't they come up on the bridge? It has one end founded on the Word of God and the other end of the bridge built on the beach of heaven. There may be fogs of mystery on the bridge as well as fogs of mystery on the waters beneath; but sure footing, solid pathway and certain terminus.

How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,
Hath he laid for your faith in his excellent Word!
What more can he say than to you he hath said,
Who unto the Saviour for refuge have fled?

BRIEF NOTES.

Rev. Dr. Talmage has promised to preach on Camp-Meeting Sunday, at the Ocean Grove Camp-Meeting.

It is rumored that the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, the famous London preacher, has received a call to the pulpit of St. Paul's M. E. Church, New York.

Rev. E. P. Telford has closed a three-weeks' meeting in Hedding M. E. Church, Jersey City. Over a hundred persons have entered the inquiry-room during the services, seeking salvation. The church has been crowded throughout. Last Sunday Mr. Telford commenced labor at Highland Ave. M. E. Church, Sing Sing.

Rev. Thomas Harrison expects to close his services in Seventeenth Street M. E. Church, New York, on Sunday, March 1st. All day jubilee services will be held to rejoice over the ingathering of over four hundred souls. It has been a wonderful time, such as the church has never before witnessed in the whole of its history.

Mr. E. E. Bliss has been holding some remarkably successful union services, at North Adams, Mass. The Congregational Baptist and Methodist Churches have been crowded at each service, and the North Adams Transcript says that about two hundred persons have given evidence of conversion. The meetings for men only have been especially blessed.

The publisher of this journal often receives inquiries as to the standing of sundry loan and investment companies. He is unable to give reliable information on the subject. Investors, however, will do well to remember that in this country, where capital to an enormous extent is always seeking good investment, the offer of a high rate of interest should always inspire caution. Excessive interest and good security seldom go together.

Mr. George W. Wheeler, of the Central Union Mission, Washington, D. C., asks us to acknowledge the receipt by him of the following sums for the support of Mr. J. McLain Brown's work in Tokio, Japan, whose portrait appeared in this journal on January 28th: Wm. Fell, $25; Dr. E. H. Hunt, $2; J. P. Lewis, $12; Mrs. J. Saunders, $5; "A. B.," Quincy, Ill., $2; Bridgeton, N. J., $5; S. P. Gordon, $5; F. J. Priest, $4.50; W. J. Rodda, $1; "Friend to the cause of Christ, $1; Miss S. E. Fox, $5; Miss N. Orr, $3; Mrs. Ashland, $2; J. H. Garratt, $5.

Several American clergymen who have visited Mr. C. H. Spurgeon's Orphanage have expressed an earnest wish that the Orphanage choir should make a tour in this country. Their entertainments in England have been much enjoyed and have resulted in considerable addition to the funds of the Orphanage. Their singing and their hand-bell ringing on 120 bells have delighted many audiences. We learn that the suggestion of the American visitors is being favorably considered.

The Committee of the National Temperance Society has issued its call for the Tenth National Temperance Convention. It is to be held on July 15, at Saratoga Springs, N. Y. All temperance societies of whatever name are cordially invited, as well as representatives of religious organizations. Arrangements as to railroad fare and hotel accommodation are being made. Inquiries may be sent to Mr. J. N. Stearns, 58 Reade St., New York.

The tenth annual meeting of the International Medical Missionary Society was held in New York on Feb. 17. Mrs. Isabella Davis, the wife of a medical missionary in Turkey, gave a deeply interesting account of the work there. Dr. George Dowkontt, the indefatigable and consecrated director of the mission, said that there were now fifty-two students under his care preparing for work in foreign fields. The mission also supports eight dispensaries in New York and Brooklyn. All its work has been done during the past year on an income of $9,964, which shows how extraordinarily economical the administration has been. It is a privilege to help in the support of such a grand mission. Contributions may be sent to Dr. George D. Dowkontt, 118 East Forty-fifth Street, New York.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Copyright Bill Passed in the Senate—Windom's Successor—The February Floods—A Notable Trust Company Falls—Chill's Fighting General—A Canadian Patriot.

It is Regarded in Political Circles at the National Capital as fairly settled that ex-Governor Charles Foster, of Ohio, will be chosen by President Harrison to succeed the late Secretary Windom as head of the Treasury Department.

The portfolio is said to have been tendered to him a few days ago. The ex-Governor came very near going into President Harrison's original Cabinet, as Postmaster-General. Amid all the storms of Ohio politics he has been the steadfast ally of Senator John Sherman and it is believed he will have the benefit of that statesman's experience in financial affairs. His views on the finances are said to harmonize with those held in the East, and there is no reason to fear that the new Secretary will do other than follow in the conservative path Mr. Windom outlined. Mr. Foster was twice elected Governor of the Buckeye State and has been in Congress during several terms. Since his retirement from Congress six years ago, he has held no office. A portrait of the ex-Governor is given above.

A Fatal Railroad Accident Occurred in New York on Friday last, causing the death of six persons and injuring many others. A train of sleeping-cars, which had come in on the Harlem Road the night before, was proceeding slowly through the Fourth Avenue Tunnel on its way to Mott Haven to be cleaned up for its next night's trip, when a train for New Haven followed it on the same line of rails into the tunnel. There was a dense fog and the rear train going at the rate of fifteen miles an hour dashed into the train ahead almost before the engineer had seen its rear lights. The cars were overturned and in a few moments the splintered cars were burning fiercely. Many injured persons were able to scramble out of the tunnel, but when the flames were subdued six dead bodies, those of four men a woman and a boy were found in the wreck horribly burned and mutilated. It is claimed that there was a danger signal at the entrance to the tunnel but the fog and a driving sleet may have prevented the engineer of the rear train being warned by it of the obstruction ahead.

A Day and Night of Terror were Passed in Johnstown Pa., on the 17th inst. The Conemaugh River was in flood, being swollen by the heavy rains, and burst its banks inundating the towns and villages along the valley where the frightful devastation and loss of life were experienced on the occasion of the flood several years ago. People fled for their lives, in skiffs, wagons, and carriages, and made for the surrounding hills. Railroads were useless for the time and bridges along the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers, and Tuna and Stony Creeks were in danger of being swept away. Fortunately, with the cessation of the rains, the flood abated. No loss of life is reported, but the damage to the poor in these flooded valleys is very great and much suffering must ensue.

The Week was an Unusually busy one in Congress, the most important event in legislation being the passage in the Senate of the Copyright Bill. The Sherman amendment to admit copyrighted books, etc., printed in foreign countries, on payment of tariff duties, was adopted by a vote of 36 to 24, and the Bill itself passed by 36 to 14. The Bill requires that maps, dramatic or musical compositions, engravings, cuts, prints, photographs, chromos or lithographs, must be printed from plates executed in the United States. The importation of copyrighted books, maps, engravings, etc., printed abroad is prohibited, except where they are for personal use and not for sale, but copyrighted works of foreign authors may be imported on payment of tariff duties. In the House of Representatives, the Committee on Coinage reported unfavorably on the Free Coinage Bill, which practically decides the fate of the measure.

Another Romish Assault is to be Made on the public schools of America, according to the cable dispatches from Rome. This time the assailant is to be the Supreme Pontiff in person, who is preparing a letter to Cardinal Gibbons on the subject. It is learned that the letter will be of a specific character, indicating a distinct policy to be pursued by the Romish Church in the United States with the view of renewed insidious attempts to impregnate the schools with the doctrines of Rome, and with the expectation, doubtless, of finding pliant legislators ready to do the bidding of the Vatican and its agents.

A Number of Influential Bodies have Lately urged upon the Postmaster-General the adoption of a one-cent rate of letter postage. It is hardly likely that any such measure will receive serious consideration by the present Congress; but as public sentiment throughout the country is growing in its favor, the movement cannot be without its impression on our national legislators. Some time ago a memorial was sent to Congress on the subject by a business association at Syracuse, N. Y., and this has been followed by others of the same kind from Exchanges, Chambers of Commerce and Boards of Trade throughout the country. The next Congress will probably be asked to take up the question of national penny postage in earnest.

The Fate of Jose Balmaceda, the Chilean President, will in all probability be decided during the present week by the issue of the coming battle at Santiago. General Baquedano, the Commander of the army (whose portrait we give in this column), is a tried and loyal veteran, who won laurels in the late war with Peru and who, in earlier campaigns, often led the Chilean arms to victory. Will the old warrior be able to stem the tide of rebellion and to administer a crushing defeat to the forces that are now advancing by land and sea on Santiago? An insurgent reverse would simply prolong the rebellion; a Balmacedist defeat would end it, by sweeping away its cause.

One of the Signs of the Times is the Formation of the New England Cremation Society, which was organized at Boston, on the 17th inst. Strange to say, there are many eminent names associated with the organization. The Secretary read letters from Bishop Potter of New York; Lucy Stone, the well-known writer and lecturer; Rose Elizabeth Cleveland, sister of the ex-President; Rev. Dr. Tiffany of Zion Church, New York; Rev. Dr. Heber Newton, of New York; Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Boston; Thomas Wentworth Higginson, the author; Professors Taussig and Norton of Harvard, and others, all approving cremation as a method of disposing of the dead. While giving the body to the fire is more in accordance with heathen rites than with Christian customs, and while the new idea will probably never be popular in this country, it has unquestionably secured a considerable following, on sanitary grounds alone.

The Parliamentary Campaign in Canada is being prosecuted on both sides with unabated energy. Last Wednesday an enthusiastic audience filled the Academy of Music in Toronto to listen to Sir John Macdonald's first speech in that city since the struggle commenced. The Premier is a vigorous fighter and he denounced his opponents in no measured terms. He reiterated his charge that their policy was practically treason and declared that if adopted it would inevitably lead to the absorption of the Dominion in the United States.

He was strongly supported by Sir Charles Tupper, one of Canada's most popular statesmen, whose portrait is here given. Sir Charles is a native of Nova Scotia and is seventy years of age. He was Premier of that province for some years until its union with the other Provinces in 1867, and represented it in the conference at which the terms of union were arranged. Since that time he has held several important offices and in all cases of difficulty with the mother country he has been the statesman selected to go to England to secure proper regard for the interests of the Dominion. Sir Charles is a physician by profession and was for many years President of the Canadian Medical Association.

Financial Circles Received a Shock in the Intelligence that the capital stock of the American Loan and Trust Company, one of the largest institutions in the United States, had been impaired to the extent of over $400,000. One effect of the news was to excite a run on the Company at its offices in New York City, but the run was short lived, for, on the second day, when it was announced that Mr. Russell Sage had advanced $200,000 to the Company, confidence returned. With the assistance extended and by a reduction of its capital, it was thought that the Company would be enabled to weather the storm, but on Wednesday the 18th inst., it suddenly closed its doors. It is now said that there will be a complete reorganization on a basis that will secure all the present creditors and satisfy every depositor. Until the Banking Department concludes its examination it will be impossible to state just how the impairment occurred. The books of the concern are correct. There are, however, some securities in the Company's hands of undetermined value. One railroad, on whose bonds it loaned $364,000, is about to be sold under foreclosure.

For two Years Past, the Little Island of St. Helena, the last exile of Napoleon, has been the prison of the son of King Cetewayo, the famous Zulu king, and of the other chiefs who were expatriated when England took possession of their country. Many appeals have been made for the release of these chiefs, but the British government is inexorable and will not permit them to return to Zulu-land to disturb affairs there. Their chief offence was in rebelling against the rule of King Usibepo, whom England supported. Now the prospect is that these doughty warriors will live the rest of their lives in banishment.

THE SOURCE OF BLESSING.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

The World Lauding Destroyers—Jesus an Incarnate Blessing—In His Life and Since His Ascension—I. Living Witnesses of the Fact—Through the Removal of the Curse—By Actual Experience—Of Rescue—Of Conversion—By Help in Trouble—II. Have Seen Other Men Blessed—In Fortune—In Morals—Mentally—The Missionaries' Mistake—III. The Entire World to be Blessed in Christ.

"Men shall be blessed in him: all nations shall call him blessed." Psalm 72: 17.

THERE are many famous names in human history; but many of them are connected with deeds which have brought no blessing upon mankind. To bless, and to be blessed, is the noblest sort of fame; and yet how few have thought it worth the seeking! To be set aloft upon a column, or represented by a public statue, or to have poets ringing out your name, it seems to be necessary to grasp the sword, and to hack and slay your fellow-men. Is it not too sadly true that when men have been cursed by one of their leaders they henceforth call him great? O misery, that wholesale murder should be the shortest method of becoming illustrious!

There is one name that will last when all others shall have died out; and that name is connected with blessing, and only with blessing. Jesus Christ came into the world on purpose to bless men. Men, as a race, find in him a blessing wide as the world. While he was here he blessed, and cursed not. All around him, both by speech and act, and thought, he was

An Incarnate Blessing.

All that came to him, unless they wilfully rejected him, obtained blessings at his hands. The home of his infancy, the friends of his youth, the comrades of his manhood, he blessed unsparingly. To bless men, he labored. To bless men, he parted with everything and became poor. To bless men, at last he died. Those outstretched hands upon the cross are spread wide in benediction, and they are fastened there as if they would remain outstretched till the whole world is blessed. Our Lord's resurrection from the dead brings blessings to mankind. Redemption from the grave, and life eternal he has won for us. He waited on earth a while, until he ascended, blessing men as he went up. His last attitude below the skies was that of pronouncing a blessing upon his disciples. He is gone into the glory; but he has not ceased to bless our race. He spends his time still in making intercession for transgressors, that the blessing of God may rest upon them; while his Spirit, who is his Vicegerent here below, is evermore occupied with blessing the sons of men. Our Lord Jesus will soon come a second time, and in that glorious hour, though his left hand must deal out justice, still his right hand will lavish blessing. His chief end and bent in his coming will be that he may largely bless those loving hearts that watch for his appearing. Christ is all blessing.

I. First, We ourselves are #### Living Witnesses

that men are blessed in Christ. You and I do not pretend to be great sages, famous philosophers, or learned divines; but we feel when a pin pricks us, or when a dog bites us. We have sense enough to know when a thing tastes well or ill in the eating. We know chalk from cheese, as the proverb hath it. We know somewhat about our own wants; and we also know when we get those wants supplied. We have not mastered the extraordinary, but in the common-place we feel at home. A man is none the worse witness in court because he does not know all the technical terms used in science. A judge is never better pleased than when he sees in the witness-box some plain, blunt, honest fellow, who will blunder out the truth. We will speak the truth at this time, so far as we know it, whether we offend or please. Every man is to speak as he finds; and we will speak concerning Jesus Christ as we have found him.

We bear witness that we have been blessed in him. We believe—and faith grasps the first blessing—that we have received a great blessing in Christ by the removal of a curse which otherwise must have rested upon us. No curse now remaineth: only blessing abideth, Hallelujah! If our Lord had done nothing else for us but the rolling away of the curse, he would have blessed us infinitely, and we would have blessed him for ever.

Follies Resigned.

The negative being removed, we had a positive actual experience of blessing, for God has blessed us in Christ Jesus, and we know that none are more blest than we are. We are now not at all the men that we used to be as to our inward feelings. Our joy is usually as great as formerly our sorrow used to be. We feared our sorrow would kill us: we now sometimes think that our joy is more likely to do so, for it becomes so intense that at times we can scarcely bear it, much less speak it. Yes, blessed be his name, the Lord Jesus has made life worth living! It is no longer "something better not to be." We must speak well of the condition into which he has introduced us, since we have known his name. "Well, Jack, old fellow," said one who met a man who had lately joined the church, "I hear you have given up all your pleasures." "No, no," said Jack; "the fact lies the other way. I have just found all my pleasures, and I have only given up my follies." Every Christian man can confirm that way of putting it.

Now, there are some of us who, if we were asked to tell what blessings we have received from Christ, would scarcely know where to begin, and when we had once begun, we should never leave off unless it were from sheer want of time or strength. Brethren, certain of us owe all that we have to the influence of the Lord Jesus. From our birth we were

Indebted to the Lord Jesus

Christ. Some of us had the great felicity to spring of godly parents: before we knew the meaning of language, that softly sweet name of Jesus Christ was sung in our ears. The comforts of our home—and they were many—we owed them all to Jesus, for his love made our parents what they were, and created a holy, happy atmosphere around us. He might have left our father to frequent the drunkard's haunt, and might have suffered our mother to be what many mothers are, unworthy of the name, and then our childhood would have been utter wretchedness, and our home the nursery of vice. Since that, we have had to shift for ourselves, and have left the parental roof; but I, for one, have been casting my thoughts back, to see if I could remember any good thing that I have which I do not owe to the Lord Jesus Christ. Many of you would hardly have had a friend in the world if it had not been that Jesus introduced you to his disciples, and they have been the best friends you have ever had, or ever will have. They have deeply sympathized with you, and as far as they could they have helped you. Amongst the best things you have are your Sabbaths; but they are his days—his resurrection days. Your Bible, too, is a priceless treasure; but that is his Testament—his legacy of love. The mercy-seat is a storehouse of wealth; but he is that mercy-seat, and his own blood is sprinkled on it. You have nothing, dear friend, that you do not owe to Jesus, the fountain of salvation. You are blessed in him.

Blessing in Trouble.

Dear friends, the Lord has greatly blessed us in the name of Jesus in times of very special trouble. You remember the loss of that dear little child. How blessed you were in Jesus when he came and solaced you! You remember your father's death, or the loss of your husband, or the death of the dearest earthly friend. Ay, then in such times you knew how precious Christ could be, and how blessed you were in him! Some of you have passed through the deserts of poverty. You have frequently been very hard pressed; but still, though you cannot tell how, you have had just enough. You are yet alive though death seemed certain.

You have been "Blessed in him," and so you have survived every storm. Some of you have had little enough of earthly comfort, yet you have not been unhappy. I have sometimes admired a dog for his economical use of comforts. When it has been a long, rainy day, the sun has just peeped out, and there has been a gleam of sunlight on the floor: I have seen him get up and wag his tail, and shift his quarters so as to lie down where the bit of sunshine was. It is a fine thing to have just that state of mind—never to go sullenly into the shadow, but always cheerfully to accept and make the most of it. There is something, after all, to be thankful for—something for which to praise the name of God. And if the Lord Jesus Christ had taught us nothing else but that—the practice of lying down wherever there is a trace of sunshine, and, better still, of always finding sunshine in his dear name—we are bound to say that we have been "blessed in him."

The Square Yard of Sunshine,

Well, every year will teach us more fully how blessed we are in Jesus; and there will come a day the last of our earthly days, when we shall know on a higher scale how blessed we are in him. Brother, you think it will be hard to die. You may not find it so. One, when he was dying, said, "Is this dying? Why, it is worth while going through all the troubles of life, even for death's own sake, if it be like this, for I have such heavenly enjoyment as I never could have imagined." Some of God's saints are very needlessly anxious about dying. I knew one to whom it was always a burden, and he went to bed one night, and he never woke any more—thus answering his own fears, for he did not even know when he passed away, but died in his sleep. He was gone, gone, gone to heaven without a pang. When you see how believers pass away to be with their Lord in glory, you have a commentary upon the words of my text—"Men shall be blessed in him."

But do you see them? Their spirits have ascended unto God, their Father. How full of bliss they are! Disembodied they are, but they are not destroyed. Their poor earthly frames are still in the grave, yet are their liberated spirits supremely blest; for they are "forever with the Lord," and they are blessed in him. Wait ye but a very little while, and the trumpet shall ring out from the angel's mouth, "Awake, ye dead, and come to judgment;" and then shall men be blessed in him, if indeed "in him."

II. Our second head was to be a practical one: we can only give a few minutes to it. We in Christ. Our observation confirms our experience. If this were the proper time, I could narrate many instances—which I could also confirm by producing the individuals—in which men have been remarkably blessed in Christ. What social changes we have seen in those who have believed in him! They have not been the same persons: in many respects they are new. I have known persons at whose houses I have visited—well, you could not have believed that the man who lodged in the house, where he was first found, could ever have risen to occupy a room in a house at all like that in which he came to reside. The room in which I conversed with him was a palace to the dog-hole in which he once existed. There was a change in his dwelling. There was a change in his wife. You would hardly know the woman; she is so different from the poor wretched slave who called him "husband" with a sigh and a sneer. She is here now, sitting with him, and they are as happy as angels. I shall not point them out, but they are as good as any of you. We have known the case in which, from rags—absolute rags—the coming of Christ into the soul has lifted a man into competence, and respectability.

Have Seen Other Men Blessed

Godliness has a gain about it—an honest, worthy gain for the life which now is. It teaches men habits of thrift, and prudence, and temperance; and delivers them from the thralldom of drunkenness, and other vices, by which the major part of poverty is occasioned. It is worth mentioning even such blessings as these, as the poor little children know. They used to run away when father came in, for they were afraid of him; but now, instead of that, they are watching for the time when his work is done, to go toddling down the street to meet dear father, for the luxury of being brought home in his arms. Our Lord Jesus Christ has blessed some men and some women at such a rate that the devil himself would not have the impudence to say it was not a blessing.

What a moral change have we seen in some! They could not speak without an oath, but the habit of profane swearing ended in a minute, and they have never been tempted to it since. Rash, bad-tempered men, who would break up the furniture of the house in their passion, have become as gentle as lambs. Such furies usually become quiet, peaceable, and long-suffering: grace has a marvellous influence upon the temper. The change that we have seen in some men has been as complete as that which could have been wrought by that fabled mill, into which the legend says that they put old men, and turned the handle, and ground them young again. Truly a far greater renovation is wrought in mind and heart where Jesus comes. Men are "blessed in him."

A Blessing to the Mind.

Then, as to mental blessing. What have we seen? This have I seen: here is one case of many. A young man, who had fallen into sin, came to me in deep despair of mind. He was so desponding that his very face bore witness to his misery. He wore the aspect of one who could not live much longer as he then was. I had tried to set the Gospel clearly before him on the previous Sabbath, but he told me that he could not grasp it, for that by his sin he had reduced his mind to such a state that he felt himself to be little better than an idiot. He was not speaking nonsense either, for there are vices which destroy the intellect. I told him that Jesus Christ could save idiots—that even if his mind was in a measure impaired as the result of sin, yet there was quite enough mind left to be made glad with a sense of pardon, seeing there was more than enough to make him heavy with a sense of guilt. I cheered that brother as best I could, but I could effect nothing by my efforts. Soon the Lord Jesus Christ came to him, and he is now a happy, earnest, joyful Christian.

The Missionaries' Mistake.

The practical point is, brothers and sisters, since we want to do good, let us preach up our Lord Jesus Christ as the sovereign balm for every sinner's wound. When the Moravian missionaries first went to Greenland, they tried to tell the Greenlanders about the existence of a God, and they spent some months in such preliminary subjects before they came to the Gospel; but they never gained the attention of the people. Discourses upon such necessary subjects as the Godhead, and the immortality of the soul, and the like, were flavorless to the Greenlanders. It happened one day that one of the missionaries, translating the Gospel according to John, read out these words: "God so loved the world, that he gave his Only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." "What is that?" said the Greenlanders. "What is that? We never heard the like of that. Why have you not told us that before?" Nothing had been done till the missionaries came to the Gospel itself. Then they reached the Greenlanders' heart—awakened his dormant intellect, and led him to Jesus.

Oh, let us keep on with the subject of Christ crucified! Whatever there is not in our shop-window, let us always have

Christ as the Chief article of our heavenly commerce. Whatever there may lack of grace and beauty in our speech, and our outward appearance, may there be no lack of Jesus Christ, set forth among the sons of men; for "men shall be blessed in him," and not without him. Great schemes of socialism have been tried and found wanting; let us look to regeneration by the Son of God, and we shall not look in vain. Nothing has come of new-fangled preaching, from the first day till now; but never has the old faith of Jesus failed. Men have been blessed in Jesus, and they shall be blessed in him as long as the race shall exist.

III. Lastly, this whole matter is to extend till The Entire World shall be Blessed in Christ. Even at this moment the whole world is the better for Christ. But where he is best known and loved, there is he the greatest blessing. What snatched many an island of the southern sea from barbarism and cannibalism? What, but Jesus Christ preached among them? Men have been blessed in him in Europe, America, Asia, and everywhere. Africa, and other lands still plunged in barbarism, shall receive light from no other source but that from which our fathers received it centuries ago—from the great Sun of righteousness.

Men shall be blessed in Christ, because where he comes oppression cannot live. You may tell me that the governor of such an empire is a despot. Oh, yes; but despots cannot long flourish where there is an open Bible. Tyrannies may last a generation or two, but all the world knows that their time is short. They will go down: they must go down where Christ is lifted up. That inspired Book is a testimony for human liberty, louder than all others. It is a declaration of the rights of men under King Jesus: despotism must fall before it sooner or later. We, in this country, owe our liberties, beyond everything, to the Christianity which is the outflow of a present

Christ Among Us.

What saves us from war at this moment? What influence is it that is always contrary to war, and always cries for peace? Why, it is the Christian element among us which counts anything better than bloodshed! Let the Christian element spread, and it will be a power to bless mankind. It shall, in proportion as it spreads, put down evil, and foster good.

May every nation be ruled by just and righteous laws! May every nation be willing to submit exterior disputes to the arbitration of justice! It will be so one day. The nations shall be friends, and all men shall feel that they are members of one great family. "Do ye unto others as ye would that they should do to you," is the sum of the moral teaching of our divine Lord; and if that be followed, it will bring about a halcyon era, the like of which the world has never seen. If his Spirit will come and renew men's hearts, and teach them to love and to obey the Lord their God, then shall nations call the Redeemer blessed, and from every corner of the whole earth, the song shall go up, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever!" Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The Origin of the Tenement House.*

THE first tenement New York knew, bore the mark of Cain from its birth, though a generation passed before the writing was deciphered. It was the "rear house," infamous ever after in the city's history. There had been tenant-houses before, but they were not built for the purpose. Nothing would probably have shocked the original owners more than the idea of their harboring a promiscuous crowd; for they were the decorous homes of the old Knickerbockers, the proud aristocracy of Manhattan in the early days. It was the stir and bustle of trade, together with the tremendous immigration that followed upon the War of 1812 that dislodged them. In thirty-five years, the city of less than a hundred thousand, came to harbor half a million souls, for whom homes had to be found. The comfortable dwellings in streets along the East River front, fell into the hands of real-estate agents and boarding-house keepers; and here, says the report to the of the old residents in the once fashionable Legislature of 1857, when the evils engendered had excited alarm, "in its beginning the tenant-house became a real blessing to that class of the industrious poor whose small earnings limited their expenses, and whose employment in workshops, stores, or about the warehouses and thoroughfares render a near residence of much importance." Not for long, however. As business increased, and the city grew with rapid strides, the necessity of the poor became the opportunity of their wealthier neighbors, and the stamp was set upon the old houses, suddenly become valuable, which the best thought and effort of a later age has vainly sought to efface. Their large rooms were partitioned into several smaller ones, without regard to light or ventilation, the rate of rent being lower in proportion to space or height from the street; and they soon became filled from cellar to garret with a class of tenantry living from hand to mouth, loose in morals, improvident in habits, degraded and squalid as beggary itself. . . . Still the pressure of the crowds did not abate, and in the old garden where the stolid Dutch burgher grew his tulips or early cabbages, a rear house was built, generally of wood, two stories high at first. Presently it was carried up another story and another. Where two families had lived ten moved in. The front house followed suit if the brick walls were strong enough, and that question was not always asked. It was rent the owner was after; nothing was said in the contract about either the safety or the comfort of the tenants.

A Mixed Crowd.

When once I asked the agent of a notorious Fourth Ward alley how many people might be living in it, I was told: One hundred and forty families, one hundred Irish, thirty-eight Italian, and two that spoke the German tongue. Barring the agent himself, there was not a native born individual in the court. The answer was characteristic of the cosmopolitan character of lower New York, very nearly so of the whole of it, wherever it runs to alleys and courts. One may find for the asking, an Italian, a German, a French, African, Spanish, Bohemian, Russian, Scandinavian, Jewish, and Chinese colony. Even the Arab, who peddles "holy earth" from the Battery as a direct importation from Jerusalem, has his exclusive preserves at the lower end of Washington Street. The one thing you shall vainly ask for in the chief city of America is a distinctively American community. There is none, certainly not among the tenements.

The Irish Landlord.

Here the Irishman's revenge is complete. Victorious in defeat over his recent as over his more ancient foe, the one who opposed his coming no less than the one who drove him out, he dictates to both their politics, and, secure in the possession of the offices, returns the native his greeting with interest, while collecting the rents of the Italian whose house he has bought with the profits of his saloon. As a landlord he is picturesquely autocratic. An amusing instance of his methods came under my notice while writing these lines. An inspector of the Health Department found an Italian family paying a man with a Celtic name twenty-five dollars a month for three small rooms in a ramshackle rear tenement—more than twice what they were worth—and expressed his astonishment to the tenant, an ignorant Sicilian laborer. He replied that he had once asked the landlord to reduce the rent but he would not do it. "Well, what did he say?" asked the inspector. "If you speak thata way," quoted the Sicilian, "I fira you and your things in the streeta." And the frightened Italian paid the rent. In justice to the Irish landlord it must be said that like an apt pupil he was merely showing forth the result of the schooling he had received, re-enacting, in his own way, the scheme of the tenements. It is only his frankness that shocks. The Irishman * From How the Other Half Lives: Studies among the tenements of New York, by Jacob A. Riis. No one has any conception of the miseries silently endured by the poor of New York until he reads this book. It is a revelation! A useful one, too, if it should awaken "the half" that has enough and to spare to the awful responsibility of allowing so much want and wretchedness to exist at our doors unmitigated. Pp. 304. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

THE OBSEQUIES OF GENERAL WILLIAM T. SHERMAN IN NEW YORK. (See Page 117.)

1. Carrying the Casket from the House to the Funeral Car—2. Gen. Sherman's Horse led Riderless in the Funeral Procession—3. The Procession Passing through Washington Square.

does not naturally take kindly to tenement life, though with characteristic versatility he adapts himself to its conditions at once.

THE TEMPLE IN THE TIME OF CHRIST.

(See Illustration on page 116.)

SO minute are the details contained in the Talmud of the dimensions and proportions of the Temple in which Christ walked and taught, that it is possible to form a very accurate idea of its general appearance. Students who have examined the record, which is as detailed as an architect's specification, and have compared it with the incidental references contained in Josephus, tell us that it was such an edifice as that represented in the accompanying picture. Though it is spoken of as the third temple, it was practically the second temple renovated and embellished. When Herod undertook to rebuild it, the priests opposed his pulling down the existing temple, fearing that his designs were more elaborate in design than he could execute. The temple itself was reconstructed in a year and a half. The rebuilding of the courts and outbuildings occupied eight years, and the work was not completely finished for a much longer period. It was in reference to these protracted building operations that the Jews said to Jesus: "Forty and six years was this temple in building." (John 2: 20.)

THE GOSPEL IN CHILI.

The Revolution interfering with Missionary Work there—Rev. Mr. Allis and his good Work in Santiago.

THE revolutionary outbreak in the Chilean Republic, which was at first confined to a few of the seaboard cities, has now spread over the entire country and unsettled all classes of society. Among those who have felt the most serious interference from this cause are the Protestant missionaries.

The Rev. John Mather Allis, who for the last seven years has been a missionary of the Presbyterian Church at Santiago, and who is now in this country on a brief visit, tells an interesting story of the progress of mission work there. Since 1865, the Presbyterian Board has had its missionaries in various parts of the Chilean Republic hard at work in the Master's service, and they have accomplished glorious results. Several strong and well-supported churches have been established in Santiago, the capital, and many more throughout the Republic. In the capital, the congregations are, for the most part, drawn from the middle and lower classes; very few of the wealthy attending the services. This is particularly the case at the Church of La Santissima Trinidad (The Most Holy Trinity), of which Mr. Allis is pastor. Some Americans and a few Europeans attend, but, as a rule, foreigners go to the 'English' church there. "To fully comprehend our field," Mr. Allis explained, "one must understand the people themselves. The Chileans form two groups: the upper classes who are descended from the old Spanish families, and the peons, the descendants of the Indians. The latter greatly predominate. Then there is a growing middle class of artisans, and among them we find the most encouragement. We have four distinct branches of work: preaching, going about from town to town doing mission work, our schools, and our missionary press. The principal thing is to get people to think. There has been a great change in public opinion in Chili in the last twenty years. Many of the old-time evidences of bigotry and devotion to Rome have disappeared, and there is greater liberality and harmony with modern ideas on the part of both rulers and people."

Mr. Allis' purpose in coming to the United States at this time is to raise money for a new school building in connection with his church at Santiago. Larger facilities are urgently needed for the accommodation of the classes. Among the scholars are a few young lads, the sons of peons or Indian parents. All display an intelligence and a desire for religious instruction that is most encouraging. These youths are ripe material for the earnest mission worker. On Easter night, a year ago, the Church of the Holy Trinity was destroyed by an incendiary fire. Pastor and people were not dismayed by this calamity, however, and succeeded in securing from the English residents of Santiago and Valparaiso, and from the insurance companies, sufficient funds to immediately begin the erection of a new building, which was dedicated in December last. It is a handsome structure, capable of seating some three hundred and fifty persons. There was a great assemblage present at the dedication services and extra meetings were held several days thereafter, the English congregation worshipping with that of Mr. Allis in the new building. Mr. Allis, believes that, with God's blessing, and the generous assistance of his people, he may be able to increase his usefulness greatly in Santiago, especially among the young men, for whom the new school building is intended.

The latest advices from the disturbed Republic indicate no cessation of hostilities. The probabilities still point to the ultimate retirement of President Balmaceda. There are in Chili five political parties: the Clericals or Conservatives, the Liberals, the Radicals, the aristocrats and the middle class who proclaim themselves Democrats. The policy of the President has offended and finally split his own party—the Liberals—who have heretofore accorded him the heartiest support, and now Balmaceda, with only the remnant of a party behind him, finds himself opposed by all the other parties and a very powerful faction of his own party besides. This condition of affairs has lost the Liberals their control of the Congress, where they formerly had a majority. The political trouble which culminated in the present revolution may be briefly summarized: Balmaceda, taking advantage of the opportunities afforded by his office, plotted to secure the succession to a candidate of his own selection. With this view all the patronage at the command of the government was controlled for the benefit of personal friends and supporters. He had favored as his successor, Don San Fuentes, a wealthy candidate, and the people naturally resented this attempt at dictation, although San Fuentes would unquestionably have been a popular candidate apart from Balmaceda's influence. Then the President endeavored to form a Cabinet pliable enough to suit his views and Congress tried to prevent it. There was a great deal of wire-pulling on the part of the Executive, and the result of it all was that the Congress decided to force the climax by refusing to pass the budget, without which the government could not levy taxes or make appropriations for the different departments. The people sided with the Congress. They wanted the elections to be untrammelled. Cabinet after Cabinet was formed, but the situation did not improve.

Finally the President dismissed his Cabinet and prorogued the Congress. Last June, although he was appealed to repeatedly to summon the Congress, the President refused, and the Government thereafter continued to exercise its functions without authority from Congress. This is the popular claim. It was the view, moreover, that was taken of the situation by many Liberals who had formerly supported Balmaceda. Even the Archbishop of Santiago found it necessary to express sympathy with the opposition to his unauthorized rule.

According to the cable dispatches the Government troops have lately sustained a series of defeats and the insurgents are said to be marching on to the capital, flushed with victory, intending here to make a final effort to overthrow Balmaceda and that part of its armies which has remained loyal to him, amid all the troubles of the last eight months. A picture of the Hall of Congress or "Chamber of Deputies" is here given.

ROMA.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c.

Four Maidens in a Dilemma.

THEY were in a hotel in Paris on the way to Rome. I may as well introduce them at once. Miss Margaret Pelham from New York; her cousin, Miss Carolyn Pelham, from London; Mademoiselle Marie Dulongne, from a villa near Paris; and Signorina Camilla Mattioli, originally from Forlitti, a pretty village between Florence and Milan, but lately from London. They were travelling under the escort of Mr. John Pelham, the bachelor uncle of the American and English girls.

Now, their dilemma was this. Their chaperon had just received a telegram that Sir Overton Embury, an old friend, and the best patron of a Whitechapel Industrial School, was very ill in Germany. The rector must leave for Berlin at very evening, and the young ladies would have to go back to London, giving up their trip to Rome, which, according to the perversity of their age and sex, they were very little inclined to do.

"I must go to Italy—my father's beautiful Italy," said Camilla Mattioli, with gentle, but unyielding emphasis. She was sitting upon an ottoman in careless attitude. Her large eyes were raised to Margaret Pelham's face. They were as full of brightest sunshine and deepest shade as the skies of her own Italy. A keen ear could catch her timid voice that firmness that holds for ever. "Can we not go on, my queen?"

The American girl had been busy upon some other affair about the room. She stopped for a moment beside Camilla, and passed her shapeless hand caressingly over her friend's wavy, black hair.

"Set your little heart at rest, my dear. We are going on—to Italy—to Rome." Her smooth, even tones made Camilla glance up into her face again. Margaret went on more lightly. Of course Uncle John will be shocked. He expects some fearful catastrophe to befall. But we'll get consent, and prove by the outcome that we are to be trusted."

The Chamber of Deputies, Santiago, Chili.

She stood at the moment where the March sunshine wrapped her in its radiancy of life and coloring. The light rippled through the fluff of chestnut curls that seemed to overbear the decorous dignity of the Grecian knot upon the back of her fine head. One of the maids came in with a piece of work that she had been doing for Miss Carolyn. Her Irish eyes took in the brightness of the picture.

"Ye 'd jist ort to seen Miss Margert," she said to Boggins when she went back. "Sure an' she was jist as foine as one o' thim saints in the cathedurl windies, on a sunshiny day."

"Ho, dear!" sighed Boggins, "She's fine enough, is that poor, dear, silly young Hamerican, but she 'll get hus hall hinto some dreadful trouble hunless she gets pulled hup, goin' down there where they 'ave the hinqquisition, and Fox's book o' martyrs, and hall such goin's on."

"She looked moighty purty anyhow," nodded Ann, "as brouight and splendid as a tall, young rose tree."

Margaret stepped to the table to replace a flower that had toppled out of the vase, and Camilla's eyes followed her, noting the sweet queenliness of her bearing.

Since I have begun photographing I will finish the group. You have already seen the Italian girl, lithe, elastic, graceful. Marie Dulongne, the daughter of a French Marquis, was a pretty, little charming brunette, with the movement of easy elegance. The questioning and sometimes querulous look in her beautiful eyes, indicated, not so much the weakness, as the hunger of an unfed soul. Carolyn Pelham was a blonde, of good type, and excellent training, a straight forward, practical, matter-of-fact, young person, whose character was plainly stamped on her cleanly-cut, well-made features.

The young ladies were all in simple, Directoire travelling suits. There was a hint of severe respectability about Carolyn's dress. Margaret's and Marie's were quite alike, though that of the French girl had touches of unconscious art, while the dress of the American hinted at freedom from the tyrannies of fashion. Camilla's attire had a grace and fitness of its own.

"Ze queen says zat ve sall go on to Rome," said Marie, with a pretty braid of wrinkles on her forehead. "But vill ze uncle let us go on by oorselves? I am glad for zis vonce zat my fazzer is in America, and ze Count is in Russia.

being. The Italian girl fancied for the moment that the face of her friend looked like an exquisite vase through which a light was shining.

"He whose we are, and whom we serve will send us on, and take care of us. You know we wouldn't dare go a step without him, even if we had a regiment of Uncle Johns. Now, girls, do you want me to talk to the good Uncle? He'll be hard to manage. You remember what I read about Queen Esther this morning. When I go in unto our king, you must do as her maidens did."

Camilla was ready to engage herself for any amount of fasting and prayer; though she was puzzled to think how the Eternal One could be brought to notice the small doings of four little maidens who proposed to go journeying by themselves.

"I vill say ze rosary vone dozen times," said Marie. "Ze holy muzzer vill help; zough you ozzers do not sink much of her prayers. She vill know I haf to go now I haf got started."

Uncle John's step was heard in the next room. "Now, girlies," laughed Margaret, "works as well as faith. Get Uncle John in condition with slippers, dressing-gown, tea, and chat. If we could only wait for dinner, we'd be surer; but we can't. He'll have us ticketed back to London. Get him in good humor, and then go yor' ways and leave him to me."

A tepid shiver, a fizz of interjections, a chorus of little laughs, and off they fluttered for their part of the programme.

"Just a minute, girls," Margaret threw after them, "don't forget to put on the bits of bright ribbon that delight the masculine eye."

"Si, si, si," laughed Camilla, tossing back a kiss from the tips of her fingers.

A half hour later when Margaret entered the room, the merry, little doves, had succeeded in getting the good rector into quite an amiable frame of mind. It was only a temporary soothing, however, for as soon as he was alone with his American niece, he awoke again to the fact that there was important business on hand that must be settled at once.

"It is really very, very extr'ord'n'ry," he said, rising, and beginning to walk vigorously back and forth. "Fancy me, a clergyman of six and sixty, in such very embarrassing circumstances—a Pelham, too. We are not a family given to eccentricities—not at all."

Margaret rose and kept step with him. Her

Zey would perish, if zey knew I tak' such dreadful risk," and he: dainty, little hands fell into her lap, every finger striking an attitude of helplessness.

"I have neither father nor Count to look after me," said Margaret, "so I shall have to use my own judgment."

"This falling ill of Sir Overton is really a very awkward thing," said Carolyn, with solemnly uplifted brows. "Most inopportune—most inopportune."

"It's going to keep Uncle John in Germany till it's too late for us to go to Rome," and Margaret looked out of the window as intently as if the way out of the dilemma lay in that direction. Turning again to the rest, she said, "We are going." There was a touch of reverence in her voice caught only by Camilla's quick ear. It was like the shading out of a tone used in addressing a superior hands were clasped behind her, as in Millais' picture. She was a trifle the taller, and she turned her laughing face toward his, looking down into his kind, perplexed eyes.

"You darling, blessed uncle, few men dare hope to be preserved from these bewildering women as you have been; but the Philistines are upon you."

"I knew I'd have my hands full," he grumbled; "but I allowed myself to be wheedled into this; and now Sir Overton must fall ill, and my school to be his residuary legatee. It is really very, very extro'd'n'ry. If Junkins hadn't turned the rectory out of the windows with his repairs—"

"I am sorry, Uncle John, we girls bother you so. You were very kind to —"

"You don't bother me," he interrupted, "and I am not at all kind." Having shot off that little contradiction he went on more amiably. "I'd be a brute not to want you to enjoy your little run over the Continent; but really, this is very annoying."

"Travel is safe and easy," remarked Margaret, "in compartments 'For ladies only.' One can't pick up a trusty courier every day; but there are plenty of people travelling southward this time of the year."

"Yes; but the idea of trusting every English gentleman, even, that one might meet, with four young ladies!" And he raised his brows a trifle higher as if he hoped he had more sense than to think of such a thing.

Margaret paced on in silence at his side, while he talked and gesticulated himself into and out of every plan that came into his mind. When he drew up at last to the starting point, at his wits' end, she suggested quietly that perhaps they might go on alone.

"Preposterous!" he exclaimed. "Never! Such a party! Fancy! Carolyn might get out, but the rest of you! Marie's father, and her intended husband, Count Guiscal, hold me responsible for her safety. And, Camilla—you never know what those Italians are up to! Her father, an expriest, and Mazzini's bosom friend! I have got to take care of her. I should feel as though I ought to be had up, if I neglected that duty."

"Uncle John," she dropped her bantering tone, and rallied her dignity, "if you'll trust me, I'll take care of them, and bring them all back to England, safe and sound."

"You!" he cried with startling emphasis. "You! You Americans think yourselves equal to anything."

"Our best English trait," she replied coolly. His only response was a semi-articulate mutter and growl.

"You see," she laughed, "we Americans are only a fresh edition of the English, with revisions, illustrations and sundry sprightly emendations. An insular people becomes intense behind its sea walls. We, other English, have had a wide continent upon which to broaden ourselves. Now, Uncle John," she struck an air and tone of harangue that always amused him because he thought it so preposterously American, "persecutions, military conscriptions, revolutions and what not have sent us some of the best European blood. None of us are aboriginal. Celts loose our tongues. Italians give us taste. Germans, make us studious. Hollanders, painstaking. The French throw in mercury, and the Spanish, dignity. We not only think that we can do everything, but we can do more in most lines than our various, unmixed, European cousins dare attempt."

His face was full of amused bewilderment to hear the girl run on at such an absurd rate. "You're good blood, yourself, anyway," he threw in at her first pause, "whatever the rest may be over there."

"My mother was Scotch-Irish," she said starting anew to tire him out in this steep-chase of talk. "You see, Uncle John," and she laughed merrily again, "I am a typical American; one-half English, though it would take genealogical omniscience to tell just how much that means of Britain, Roman, Dane, Saxon, and Norman: one-quarter each, of Irish and Scotch. See what a list of conquering bloods my particular globules would have to answer to, at roll call. Can't I manage three excellent, young women three or four months?"

She stopped, clasped her hands over his arm and looked laughingly into his face. "I can compare muscle with any of your English girls, and that means a great deal," He nodded. "I have money enough."

"How much, no mortal can find out," he threw in by way of a side thrust.

"I am presumably equal to the commissary department of this little expedition," she went on. "As to speech, we have a fair stock of English, French, and Italian. My mother had rare common sense; and she did her best to teach me its general principles. I have my 'A. M.,' which stands for a supposed amount of study under competent teachers. I am twenty-four years old. I have been alone in the world a year. I am a very old person, Uncle John, I must have lived at least half a century."

"But my dear child," said the rector, his English loyalty to facts beginning to shake his position, "what about the matrimonial embarrassments? The chief end of a woman's life is to make a good marriage. What she most needs is a guardian to keep her from throwing herself away on some good-for-nothing who puts up a pitiful face."

"Well, Uncle John, look us over. Marie is engaged. Carolyn would have had Goldthorpe Gordon long ago if it hadn't been for the English contrariety of conscience that made her afraid of undue influence. I'll keep Camilla under my wing."

"And you?" he asked, bluntly.

They took two or three silent turns the length of the room. Perhaps he would ask some other question. It might not be quite right for her to be so reticent in all personal matters toward one who stood so nearly in the place of her father. Her step was heavy, as if "ten layers of birth-days" had suddenly fallen on her head. It was a costly confidence that the rector had asked, and he would not imperil it by haste. So he waited till she chose to reply.

"I am safe on that score, Uncle John," she said at length. "I have had my dream." Her next pause was even longer than the other. "Jerome Goodyear and I were college class-mates. We knew each other too well those four years ever to care for anyone else. Father couldn't understand that Jerome's circumstances made no difference. I was the only one. I had money enough. Anybody with good brain and principle can get position in America. It was that fearful pride of blood."

"Where is the young man now?" asked the clergyman. He sided instinctively with his brother's opposition to the girl's whim. Women seldom have sense about such matters. The young lady was her own mistress, and she might be taking affairs into her own hands.

"He went into the Italian army,—He fell at Dogali," the last words just above her breath.

"Dogali! Oh—ah—yes—that battle that the Italians had down there in Africa."

Now if the Rev. John Pelham had been of any other than most staunch and sturdy English blood, he would have taken the poor child in his arms when he felt the trembling of her cold hand; but that was not according to the Anglo-Saxon habit of repression: so he blew his nose sonorously, and took refuge in a grumble about those "very very extr'ordin'ry circumstances."

However, after an infinity of cautions, and head shakings, and a due amount of telegraphing, the evening train steamed toward Turin, with the four ladies and two maids, while Mr. Pelham took his way toward Berlin.

(To be Continued.)

THE BEST

protection against sudden changes in the weather is to purify the blood
with

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

It vitalizes
and enriches
the life-current, and makes the weak strong.

Has Cured Others will cure you.

Send us $1.00 for sample of the

Victor Fountain Pen.

Guaranteed 14 Karet Gold. Can return if not satisfied.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,

301 Broadway, New York.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Purifies the Blood

At the coming of spring the blood should be purified, as impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint of impurity, drives out scrofulous humors and germs of disease, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

N. B. If you make up your mind to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to take any other.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, 41¢; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

Wives! Sons! DAUGHTERS!

We will send you for three months FARM POULTRY the best poultry paper, if you send us ten names of persons who keep hens (few or many), also 25 cents for one pack of Sheridan's Condition Powder.

POULTRY for PROFIT

We will send for 25¢ or 15¢ if you mention this paper, FARM POULTRY, a 20 page magazine, six months Sample copy free. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

NOTHING ON EARTH WILL

MAKE HENS LAY LIKE SHERIDAN'S CONDITION POWDER

Highly concentrated. Dose small. In quantity costs less than one-tenth cent a day per hen. Prevents all diseases. If you can't get it, we send by mail post-paid. One pack, 25¢. Five $1. 2 1/4 lb. can $1. 8 cans $5. Express paid. Testimonials free. Send stamps cash. Farmers' Poultry Guide (price 25¢) free with 3 orders or more. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

BUY THE WRINGER THAT SAVED THE MOST LABOR IN OUR PURCHASE GEARS

Saves half the labor of other wringers and costs but little more. Crank is attached to either roll.

EMPIRE

Does not GREASE the CLOTHES. Solid White Rubber Rolls. Warranted.

Also "DAISY" and "VOLUNTEER" WRINGERS, Clothes Drying Bars, etc. Agents everywhere. EMPIRE WRINGER CO., Auburn, N. Y.

"If you have the world's wealth you need the world's ease." There's great comfort in a house cleaned with

SAPOLIO.

All housewives use it. Try a cake.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves.

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

"Once Tried, Always Used."

Ask your Grocer for it, take no other. (64)

BAKER'S BREAKFAST COCO

Delicious, nourishing, absolutely pure. Costing less than one cent a cup.

Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" free by

E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to address

CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia

400 RECITATIONS AND READINGS.

We will send to any address receipt of 35 cents, a handsome book, bound in cover, and containing 400 of the best recitations issued. Address,

J. S. OGILVIE, 57 Rose Street, New York

Agents Wanted to sell our NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK

MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. L.

LONGING FOR A MEDIATOR.
A POOR Indian woman longed for one to stand between her and God. She knew nothing of the true God, but she felt that there must be a Holy One, and that she, as a sinner, had offended him, and could not come near him unless some one stood between her and him. She heard that the Christians had a Book which could tell her what she wanted to know. But she could not read, and she was so old and too feeble to learn. She went for a pundit (that is, a learned man) to come and read aloud to her. He came. A Bible was given to him. He thought it did not much matter where he began, so he read the first chapter of St. Matthew's Gospel. She listened to all the long names, and as the grave old man went steadily through, she thought, "What a great Prince this must be! He has such a long line of ancestors!" Then as the pundit read on, she felt, "This is the Prince to stand between me and God," and when she heard the name "Jesus," "He shall save his people from their sins," she believed with all her heart and found peace.

REFUSING TO GIVE UP THE BIBLE.
A PARCEL of Scriptures was sent to a Piedmontese town which is wholly under the influence of the priests, and where most illegal persecution is continually suffered by a zealous Christian, who in vain appeals to the authorities. In such strongholds of Satan, where public preaching is impossible, the Word of God wins its way silently into many a home. A poor woman begged about Campello, who was converted from Popery to Protestantism, to give her a Bible, and on her promising to read it, and not give it away to the priest, he did so. After some time the priest called and told her she must give up the Bible, it was not fit for her to read. She refused, saying it could not be a bad book, for it had taught her about Jesus, and had made her so happy! "Besides," she added, "ever since it has been in my house my cupboard has been always full, while before it was often empty."

APPEARING TO HER DYING CHILD.
A LITTLE girl lost her mother at an early age—too early to fix the loved features in her remembrance. She was as frail as she was beautiful; and, as she grew, she seemed, as if in answer to her mother's prayer, to turn instinctively heavenward. The Christ-loving and prayer-loving child was as the cherished one of the bereaved family. But she faded away early. She would lie upon the lap of the friend who took a mother's kind care of her, and, throwing one wasted arm around her neck would say, "Now tell me about my mother." And when the old tale had been repeated, she would ask, softly, "Take me into the parlor, I want to see my mother." The request was never refused; and the affectionate child would lie for hours contentedly gazing on her mother's portrait. The parting hour came at last; and weeping friends assembled to see the little child die. "Do you know me, darling?" sobbed close to her ear one of her relations; but it awoke no answer. All at once a brightness, as if from the upper world, burst over the child's colorless countenance. The eyelids flashed open, the lips parted, the wan subsiding hands flew up, in the little one's last impulsive effort, as she looked piercingly into the far above. "Mother!" she cried, with surprise and transport in her tones; and passed with that breath to where that mother had gone before. Said a godly man; who stood by that bed of joyous death, "If I never believed in the ministration of departed ones before, I could not doubt it now."

ENGLISH DECORATED
Dinner Set, No. 45, 112 Pieces.
Premium with an order of $20.00.
Packed and delivered at depot for $9.00 cash.

THIS BRIGHT NEW 1891
needs the brightest and best of music. The 2,000,000 readers of this ad. are all invited to provide themselves with music or music books from our complete and varied stock.
Send freely for lists and information.

- SOME OF OUR NEWEST BOOKS.
- Songs of Ireland. $1.00. Choice, revised collection of very favorite songs. 66 songs. 144 pages.
  - Potter's Responses and Sentences. 75 cts.; $6.75 doz. A timely and good collection, which will be welcomed by many choirs. More than 50 short pieces, with a number of Glorias, Chants, &c.
  - Prayer and Praise. Cantata. Ballard. A good and easy cantata, for a choir or Chorus. 50 cents; $4.50 per dozen.
  - Masonic Ode. Fithian. A new, most convenient book of easy and good music, perfectly fitted for the masonic ritual. Much needed. 60 cts.; $6 doz.
  - Comic and Minstrel Songs. $1.00. 46 merry songs, well calculated to make time pass cheerfully.
  - Banner Folio. Violin and Piano. Winner. Large number of popular melodies, skillfully arranged for Violin, with Piano accompaniment. $1.00.
  - Mandolin and Piano Duets. Winner. About 75 popular airs for Mandolin & Piano. $1.00. Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

New Easter Music!
CHRIST EXALTED. A Service for Easter Sunday. Anthems for the Choir: familiar Hymns for the Congregation; new Choruses: appropriate Bible Readings; the whole carefully arranged for the Festival of the Resurrection, by the Rev. ROBERT LOWRY. 16 pages.

ANNUAL No. 15. An eight page collection of the splendid Carols for Sunday Schools, Easter Festivals, by our popular authors. Price of either of the above, 5 cents each by mail; $4.00 per 100 by express, not prepaid. Any previous issue supplied at same price.

Send for Special Catalogue of Easter Anthems for your Choir.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
81 Randolph Street, Chicago. 76 East 9th St., N. Y.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

$100.00 will be paid new contributors of short articles to Phenological Journal. 1st prize, $50. Journal containing full particulars, 15 cts. Fowler & Wells Co., H., 777 Broadway, New York.

TURN ON THE LIGHT
TURN IT OUR WAY. WE HAVE A CLEAN RECORD OF 21 YEARS AND WOULD LIKE TO HAVE YOU LOOK AT IT. A RECORD OF HEALTH RESTORED AND DISEASES CURED BY COMPOUND OXYGEN.
COMPOUND OXYGEN IS A CONCENTRATION OF OZONE. IT IS CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY, AND IS COMBINED WITH OTHER POWERFUL REMEDIAL AGENTS. IT IS RELEASED FROM THE INHALING APPARATUS, WHICH ACCOMPANIES EVERY TREATMENT, BY HEAT. YOU INHALE IT: AT ONCE A WARM, OXYGENATED VAPOR PENETRATES EVERY PORTION OF THE LUNGS, AND A GENIAL GLOW OF RETURNING STRENGTH PERVADES THE SYSTEM. NOT TRANSIENT STRENGTH; FOR THE GOOD AND THE GAIN OF COMPOUND OXYGEN REMAIN WHEN THE TREATMENT IS DISCONTINUED. IN THIS NATURAL WAY, THAT IS: BY THE USE OF NATURE'S OWN VITALIZED NOURISHMENT, A ROBUST CONDITION OF VIGOR IS MAINTAINED. THAT IS THE BEST SPECIFIC KNOWN FOR ANY FORM OF DISEASE. IT IS BETTER THAN THE BEST MEDICINE.

A BOOK OF 200 PAGES WILL TELL YOU WHO HAVE BEEN RESTORED TO HEALTH AND STRENGTH BY THE USE OF COMPOUND OXYGEN. IT IS FILLED WITH THE SIGNED INDORSEMENTS OF MANY WELL KNOWN DIVINES, COLLEGE PRESIDENTS, AND OTHER PROFESSIONAL MEN AND WOMEN.

THIS BOOK WILL BE SENT ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE TO ANY ONE WHO WILL WRITE TO
DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.
120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. 58 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA

OR we give this set as a Premium to those who get up a Club of $20.00 for our Teas, Spices and Extracts. We are Importers of Tea, Coffee and Crockery, and sell direct to Consumers. We want YOU to send for our 120-page Price and Premium List. It tells the whole story. Costs you nothing. Will interest and pay you. We have hundreds of other sets, Plain and Decorated.

THE LONDON TEA COMPANY,
805 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NEW MODEL "HALL."

A PERFECT TYPEWRITER. BEST MANIPULATOR. TERMS TO AGENTS LIBERAL. PORTABLE, INEXPENSIVE. WRITES ALL LANGUAGES. Read Mr. Howell's Opinion.
"I wish to express my very great satisfaction with the Hall typewriter. Impressions and alignment are both more perfect than any other typewriter that I know, and it is simply a pleasure to use it. It is delightfully simple and manageable. (Signed) W. D. HOWELLS.
Send for Catalogue and Specimens of Work.
Address N. TYPEWRITER CO., 10 Temple Pl., Boston.

THE DOLLAR TYPEWRITER
THIS IS THE TYPE USED: ABCDEFGHI $1

NEW YORK, OCT. 23, 1890
DEAR SIR,
THE DOLLAR TYPEWRITER DOES THE QUALITY OF WORK AS "REMARKABLE" AS SPEED, SILENCE, (CAN WRITE 20 WORDS A MINUTE)

A perfect and practical Type Writing machine for only ONE DOLLAR. Exactly like cut; regular Remington type; does the same quality of work; takes a fool's cap sheet. Complete with paper holder, automatic feed, metal type wheel & inkling roll. It manifolds & uses copying ink; in fact does all of the work of a $100 machine. Speed, 15 to 25 words a minute. Size, 3 1/2 x 13 inches; weight, 12 oz. MENTION THIS PAPER. Satisfaction guaranteed. Circulars free. AGENTS WANTED. Sent by express for $1.00; by mail, 15c extra for postage. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N. Y. City.

TYPEWRITERS.
Largest like establishment in the world. First-class Second-hand Instruments at half new prices. Unprejudiced advice given on all makes. Machines sold on monthly payments. Any Instrument manufactured shipped, privilege to examine. EXCHANGING A SPECIALTY. Wholesale prices to dealers. Illustrated Catalogues Free.

TYPEWRITER 70 Broadway, New York.
HEADQUARTERS. 144 La Salle St., Chicago.

AGENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly. Should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PURCHASING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

Three Great Books FOR RELIGIOUS READERS.

Dr. Strong's Our Country.
More than 130,000 sold. Paper 25 cts. cloth 50 cts.
One of the most powerful books that have come from the American press during the present century. It portrays America's material, social and religious condition and tendency, and points out the perils which threaten her future. The wide circulation of this book has given an extraordinary impulse to the work of holding America for the highest political, social and religious, national life.
"Words are feasible in the recommendation of this book."—Pulpit Treasury.

Dr. Pierson's Crisis of Missions.
Paper, 35 cents, cloth $1.25.
"One of the most important books to the cause of Foreign Missions, and through them, to Home Missions also, which ever has been written. It should be in every library and every household. It should be read, studied, taken to heart and prayed over."—Congregationalist.

Dr. Cuyler's How to be a Pastor.
Cloth, 75 cents.
"The fruit of large native sense, long experience, wide observation, and devout consecration."—Congregationalist.
"If any man living understands the subject of this little book it is Dr. Cuyler."—Independent.
"Ought to be read by all pastors, young or old."—N. Y. Tribune.

Send for our list of books for practical Christian Workers.
The above books mailed postpaid on receipt of price by
THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers.
740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

SAFE INVESTMENTS.
We have in the twenty years of our experience loaned
TWENTY MILLION DOLLARS
without loss to any customer.

We are glad to send our pamphlet giving full particulars to any one applying for it.
Our Assets, April 30, 1890, $3,342,202.

AMERICAN INVESTMENT CO.,
150 Nassau Street, New York City.
E. S. ORMSBY, President. A. L. ORMSBY, Vice. H. E. SIMMONS, Pres'ts.

100,000 DRESSMAKERS HAPPY.
DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885 1885-1886
No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.
Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.
THE McDOWELL CO.
6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

PRECIOUS PROMISES.

THERE'S a promise, O, how precious!
For the sin-stained soul to know;
Pouring o'er his guilt and vileness,
Cleansing with its crimson flow.
*Though your sins may be as scarlet,
I will make them white as snow.*

—Isa. 1: 18.

There's a promise, O, how precious!
When by care and sorrow pressed;
Lifting all life's weary burdens,
From the worn and troubled breast.
*Come to me all ye that labor,
And I'll surely give you rest.*

—Matt. 11: 28.

There's a promise, O, how precious!
'Midst the storm of life's wild sea;
Sounding sweet above the tumult,
Bidding doubt and fear to flee.
*I in perfect peace will keep thee,
If you stay your mind on me.*

—Isa. 26: 3.

There's a promise, O, how precious!
When you reach the Jordan's side;
Gleaming o'er the surging billows,
As you face its death-cold tide.
*When thou passest through the waters,
I will close by thee abide.*

—Isa. 43: 2.

There's a promise, O, how precious!
Rising 'bove the billow's roar;
Shining through the mist and shadows
That conceal the heavenly shore.
*In my father's house in glory
Thou shalt dwell forevermore.*

—II. Cor. 5: 1.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

A good appetite usually indicates good health. Hood's Sarsaparilla creates and sharpens the appetite and tones the digestive organs. It cures dyspepsia and sick headache.

GRAND NEW FLOWERS.

The Wonderful Manettia Vine—the most magnificent flowering vine in cultivation—price 25c. Fuller's new Giant Pansy Seed, 10 packages, magnificent sorts, 25c. Selection of 12 choice packages of flower seeds, 25c.; 12 packages Vegetable Seeds, 25c.; Fuller's Grand New Seedling Gladioli, 12 fine mixed bulbs, 25c. The Excelsior Pearl Tuberose, spikes of pure white, double flowers of great fragrance, 6 large bulbs, 25c., 12 for 40c. Beautiful Catalogue sent free. J. ROSCOE FULLER & CO., Floral Park, N. Y.

POSTAL NOTES

received for DEWEY'S system of Sign-words. TIME, LABOR, SPACE. Saved in making Preacher's Notes, Much of the labor saved in writing Teacher's Notes, and great facility easily acquired in Student's Notes, by using these Signs for abbreviating. Invaluable in MSS. Inclose 50 cts. for these Word-signs NOW. Box 1027. W. W. DEWEY, Cadillac, Mich.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Casior, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 1/2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey St., New York.

For boy or man as an educator, or as a source of amusement or income, at a small expense, get one of our Specimen Book of type, cuts, etc., 5 cents. Circular sent free. Amateurs' Guide Book, 15 cents.

DO YOU WANT

TO RECEIVE read and distribute sample copies of over thirty different holiness papers and magazines of the pure Bible and Wesleyan type, and aid in their more general circulation, "Spreading scriptural holiness over these lands?" If so, send me a silver dime, and your name and address will be printed on my Holiness Exchange Mail List, which goes to all publishers of holiness literature. Write name and address plainly. Address J. H. PADGETT, Printer, Ennis, Texas.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

DR. TALMAGE says: "A great deal of sorrow is caused to young hearts and old by the thought that Christmas comes but once a year," but he continues, "why not extend the glorious season of joy, gladness and good-will throughout the year?" This beautiful thought has been brought rather forcibly to our attention of late by the hundreds of letters we daily receive, asking for "Christmas Boxes." What! Christmas Boxes in March, the idea! who ever heard of hanging up stockings in the Spring-time? But then the people have to use soap the year round and nearly twice as much is used in summer as in winter—you wouldn't think that—would you? But it is a fact, and if folks want "Sweet Home" Soap and wish to make the whole household merry with lots of useful, pretty, valuable and ornamental things, why not do it now as well as in December? and so we extend "Our Mammoth Christmas Box" offer for a limited time. Another thing! There was such an awful rush of orders last Christmas that some of our friends did not get the goods as soon as they expected. It aint so now, you can have the Mammoth Christmas Box when you want it. Better order at once.

Very Soapfully Yours,

J. D. LARKIN &amp; CO.,

Factories: Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Sts., BUFFALO, N. Y.

- Our Mammoth Christmas Box! -

LIST OF CONTENTS.

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (full size) "SWEET HOME" FAMILY SOAP, enough to last an average family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes, and has no superior.

6 BOXES BORAXINE, (large size) for cleaning wood-work, washing dishes, dairy utensils, removing grease spots or stains from carpets, etc., or general house-cleaning, has no equal. Saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it. Remember BORAXINE is nothing but a fine quality of Soap and Borax pulverized together. It is pleasant for the hands and cannot injure the finest fabrics.

One-Fourth Dozen Modjeska Complexion Soap.

An exquisite beautifier. Producing that peculiar delicate transparency, and imparting a velvety softness to the skin which is greatly admired. It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples, and imperfections from the face. For all toilet purposes it is the luxury of luxuries. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use, or those whose skin is delicate.

One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.

A delicate, refined, delicious perfume for the handkerchief and clothing. The most popular and lasting perfume ever made.

One-Fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.

One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream. Soothing, Healing, beautifies the Skin, Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.

One Package Clove Pink Sachet Powder. Delicate, Refined, Lasting.

One Bottle (Fancy Patent Stopper) Modjeska Tooth Powder.

One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap.

OUR MAMMOTH "CHRISTMAS" BOX

Contains a great variety of Toys, Playthings, etc., for the Babies, and sundry useful and amusing things for the older folks. Such as Boy's Tools, Saws, Hatchets, Shovels, Rakes, Hoe, Top, Spinner, "Crack Shots," Games, Jack Stones, Etc.

IT ALSO CONTAINS

One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder.
One Fancy Tidy.
One Glove-buttoner.
One Package "Steadfast" Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Gentleman's Handkerchief, large.
Fourteen Patent Transfer Patterns for Stamping and Embroidering Table Linen, Toilet Mats, Towels, Ties, etc.
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Fancy Handkerchief.
One Illuminated Wall Match Safe (can be seen at night).
One Package Assorted Christmas Cards.
Two Collar Buttons (patented).

In addition to all of the above articles, we place in each box ONE ALBUM containing pictures of the following celebrities:

1. Wm. E. Gladstone,
2. Bismarck,
3. Daniel Webster,
4. J. G. Whittier,
5. George Bancroft,
6. Abraham Lincoln,
7. Ulysses S. Grant,
8. Robert E. Lee,
9. Gen. Sherman,
10. Thomas Carlyle,
11. Commodore Faragut,
12. "Stonewall" Jackson,
13. General Scott,
14. Thomas A. Edison,
15. Benj. F. Morse,
16. Joseph Jefferson,
17. Benj. Franklin,
18. Henry M. Stanley,
19. Oliver Perry,
20. Goethe,
21. Schiller,
22. Alex. Hamilton,
23. John Howard Payne,
- Etc., Etc., Etc.

Remember, "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity, each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries.

Our Price for the Mammoth "Christmas" Box Complete, is Six Dollars.

J. D. LARKIN & CO., SENeca, HEACOCK & CARROLL STREETS, BUFFALO, N. Y.

FACTORIES: SENeca, HEACOCK & CARROLL STREETS, BUFFALO, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN FERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 9.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

PRESBYTERIAN MISSION WORK IN CHILI—PORTRAIT OF REV. JOHN M. ALLIS, OF SANTIAGO—A GROUP OF NATIVE SCHOLARS.

THE PLAGUES OF THE CITIES.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON ON DRUNKENNESS AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, LAST SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 1, 1891.

Noah's Double Work—No Excuse for Him—The World's Advance on a Bad Road—An Arch-Fiend's Mission to this World—The Cauldron he Built—His Awful Boast—What Crooked Whiskey Means—The Drunken Father's Will—An Urgent Demand for Christian Decision—A Natural Evil—Individual Suffering—The Mother of a Drunken Son—A Vast Multitude Waiting for Something to be Done—From the Church Door to a Violent Death—The Waterloo of Alcoholism.

"Noah planted a vineyard; and he drank of the wine and was drunken." Genesis 9 : 20, 21.

HIS Noah did the best and the worst thing for the world. He built an ark against the deluge of water, but introduced a deluge against which the human race has ever since been trying to build an ark—the deluge of drunkenness. In my text we hear his staggering steps. Shem and Japhet tried to cover up the disgrace, but there he is, drunk on wine at a time in the history of the world when, to say the least, there was no lack of water. Inebriation, having entered the world, has not retreated. Abigail, the fair and heroic wife, who saved the flocks of Nabal, her husband, from confiscation by invaders, goes home at night and finds him so intoxicated she cannot tell him the story of his narrow escape. Uriah came to see David, and David got him drunk, and paved the way for the despoliation of a household. Even the Church bishops needed to be charged to be sober and not given to too much wine, and so familiar were people of Bible times with the staggering and falling motion of the inebriate, that Isaiah, when he comes to describe the final dislocation of worlds says: "The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard."

Ever since apples and grapes and wheat grew the world has been tempted to unhealthy stimulants. But the intoxicants of the olden time were an innocent beverage, a harmless orangeade, a quiet syrup, a peaceful soda water, as compared with the liquids of modern inebriation, into which a madness, and a fury, and a gloom, and a fire, and a suicide, and a retribution have mixed and mingled. Fermentation was always known, but it was not until a thousand years after Christ that distillation was invented. While we must confess that some of the ancient arts have been lost, the Christian era is superior to all others in the bad eminence of whisky and rum and gin. The modern drunk is a hundred-fold worse than the ancient drunk. Noah in his intoxication became imbecile, but the victims of modern alcoholism have to struggle with whole menageries of wild beasts and jungles of hissing serpents and perditions of blaspheming demons. An arch-fiend arrived in our world, and he built an invisible cauldron of temptation. He built that cauldron strong and stout for all ages and all nations. First he squeezed into the cauldron the juices of the forbidden fruit of Paradise. Then he gathered for it a distillation from the harvest fields and the orchards of the hemispheres. Then he poured into this cauldron capsicum, and copperas, and logwood, and deadly nightshade, and assault and battery, and vitriol, and opium, and rum, and murder, and sulphuric acid, and theft, and potash, and cochineal, and red carrots, and poverty, and death and hops. But it was a dry compound, and it must be moistened, and it must be liquefied, and so the arch-fiend poured into that cauldron the tears of centuries of orphanage and widowhood, and he poured in the blood of twenty thousand assassinations. And then the arch-fiend took a shovel that he had brought up from the furnaces beneath, and he put that shovel into this great cauldron and began to stir, and the cauldron began to heave, and rock, and boil, and sputter, and hiss, and smoke, and the nations gathered around it with cups and tankards and demijohns and kegs, and there was enough for all, and the arch-fiend cried: "Aha! champion fiend am I. Who has done more than I have for coffins and grave-yards and prisons and insane asylums, and the populating of the lost world? And when this cauldron is emptied, I'll fill it again, and I'll stir it again, and it will smoke again, and that smoke will join another smoke—the smoke of a torment that ascendeth for ever and ever. I drove fifty ships on the rocks of Newfoundland and the Skerries and the Goodwins. I have ruined more senators than gather this winter in the national councils. I have ruined more lords than are now gathered in the House of Peers. The cup out of which I ordinarily drink is a bleached human skull, and the upholstery of my palace is so rich a crimson because it is dyed in human gore, and the mosaic of my floors is made up of the bones of children dashed to death by drunken parents, and my favorite music—sweeter than Te Deum or triumphal march—my favorite music is the cry of daughters turned out at midnight on the street because father has come home from the carousal, and the seven-hundred-voiced shriek of the sinking steamer, because the captain was not himself when he put the ship on the wrong course.

"Champion fiend am I! I have kindled more fires, I have wrung out more agonies, I have stretched out more midnight shadows, I have opened more Golgothas, I have rolled more juggernauts, I have damned more souls than any other emissary of diabolism. Champion fiend am I!"

Drunkenness is the greatest evil of this nation, and it takes no logical process to prove to this audience that a drunken nation cannot long be a free nation. I call your attention to the fact that drunkenness is not subsiding, certainly that it is not at a standstill, but that it is on an onward march, and it is a double-quick. There is more rum swallowed in this country, and of a worse kind, than was ever swallowed since the first distillery began its work of death. Where there was one drunken home there are ten drunker homes. Where there was one drunkard's grave there are twenty drunkards' graves. It is on the increase. Talk about crooked whiskey—by which men mean the whiskey that does not pay the tax to government—I tell you all strong drink is crooked. Crooked Otard, crooked Cognac, crooked schnapps, crooked beer, crooked wine, crooked whiskey—because it makes a man's path crooked, and his life crooked, and his death crooked, and his eternity crooked.

If I could gather all the armies of the dead drunkards and have them come to resurrection, and then add to that host all the armies of living drunkards, five and ten abreast, and then if I could have you mount a horse and ride along that line for review, you would ride that horse until he dropped from exhaustion, and you would mount another horse and ride until he fell from exhaustion, and you would take another and another, and you would ride along hour after hour, and day after day. Great host, in regiments, in brigades. Great armies of them. And then if you had voice stentorian enough to make them all hear, and you could give the command, "Forward, march!" their first tramp would make the earth tremble. I do not care which way you look in the community to-day, the evil is increasing.

I call attention to the fact that there are thousands of people born with a thirst for strong drink—a fact too often ignored. Along some ancestral line there runs the river of temptation. There are children whose swaddling-clothes are torn off the shroud of death. Many a father has made a will of this sort: "In the name of God, amen. I bequeath to my children my houses and lands and estates; share and share shall they alike. Hereto I affix my hand and seal in the presence of witnesses." And yet perhaps that very man has made another will that the people have never read, and that has not been proved in the courts. That will put in writing would read something like this: "In the name of disease and appetite and death, amen. I bequeath to my children my evil habits, my tankards, my wine-cup, my be theirs, my destroyed reputation shall be theirs. Share and share alike shall they in the infamy. Hereto I affix my hand and seal in the presence of all the applauding harpies of hell. From the multitude of those who have the evil habit born with them this army is being augmented. And I am sorry to say that a great many of the drug-stores are abetting this evil, and alcohol is sold under the name of bitter. It is bitters for this, and bitters for that, and bitters for some other thing, and good men deceived, not knowing there is any thralldom of alcoholism coming from that source, are going down, and some day a man sits with the bottle of black bitters on his table, and the cork flies out, and after it flies a fiend and clutches the man by his throat and says: "Aha! I have been after you for ten years. I have got you now."

THE DRUG STORE DRUNKARD.

down with you! down with you!" Bitters! Ah! yes. They make a man's family bitter, and his home bitter, and his disposition bitter, and his death bitter, and his hell bitter. Bitters! A vast army, all the time increasing.

It seems to me it is about time for the 7,000,000 professors of religion in America to take sides. It is going to be an out-and-out battle with drunkenness and sobriety, between heaven and hell, between God and the devil. Take sides before there is any further national decadence, take sides before your sons are sacrificed and the new home of your daughter goes down under the alcoholism of an embruted husband. Take sides while your voice, your pen, your prayer, your vote may have any influence in arresting the despoliation of this nation. If the 7,000,000 professors of religion should take sides on this subject it would not be very long before the destiny of this nation would be decided in the right direction.

Is drunkenness a state or national evil? Does it belong to the North, or does it belong to the South? Does it belong to the East, or does it belong to the West? Ah! there not an American river into which its tears have fallen and into which its suicides have not plunged. What ruined that Southern plantation—every field a fortune, the proprietor and a family once the most affluent supporters of summer watering-places? What threw that New England farm into decay and turned the roseate cheeks that bloomed at the foot of the Green Mountains into the pallor of despair? What smitten every street of every village, town and city of this continent with a moral pestilence? Strong drink.

THE DRUNKEN SON'S END.

To prove that this is a national evil I call up the States in opposite directions—Maine and Georgia. Let them testify in regard to this. State of Maine says: "It is so great an evil upon us we have anathematized it as a State." State of Georgia says: "It is so great an evil upon us here that ninety counties of this State have made the sale of intoxicating drink a felony." So the word comes up from all parts of the land. Either drunkenness will be destroyed in this country or the American government will be destroyed. Drunkenness and its institutions are coming into a death-grapple. Gather up the money that the working-classes have spent for rum during the last forty years, and I will build for every working-man a house, and lay out for him a garden, and give his sons in broadcloth and his daughters in silks, and stand at his front door a prancing pair of sorrels or bays, and secure him a policy of life insurance so that the present home may be well maintained after he is dead. The most persistent, most overpowering enemy of the working classes is intoxicating liquor. It is an anarchist of the centuries, and has boycotted and is now boycotting the body and mind and soul of American labor. It annually sends industry out of a large percentage of its earnings. It holds out its blasting solicitation to the mechanic or operative on his way to work, and at the noon-spell, and on his way home at eventide. On Saturday, when the wages are paid, it snatches a large part of the money that might come to the family and sacrifices it among the saloon-keepers. Stand the sons of this country side by side, and it is fully estimated that they would reach from New York to Chicago.

This evil is pouring its vitriolic and damnable contents down the throats of hundreds of thousands of laborers, and while the ordinary strikes are ruinous both to employers and employees, I proclaim a universal strike against strong drink, which strike, if kept up, will be the relief of the working classes and the salvation of the nation. I will undertake to say that there is not a healthy laborer in the United States who, within the next twenty years, if he will refuse all intoxicating beverages and be saving, may not become a capitalist on a small scale.

Oh! how many are waiting to see if something cannot be done for the stopping of intemperance! Thousands of drunkards waiting who cannot go ten minutes in any direction without having the temptation glaring before their eyes or appealing to their nostrils, they fighting against it with enfeebled will and diseased appetite, conquering, then surrendering, conquering again and surrendering again, and crying: "How long, O Lord! how long before these infamous solicitations shall be gone." And how many mothers are waiting to see if this national curse cannot lift! Oh! is that the boy who had the honest breath who comes home with breath vitiated or disguised? What a change! How quickly those habits of early coming home have been exchanged for the rattling of the night-key in the door long after the last watchman has gone by and tried to see that everything was closed up for the night! Oh! what a change for that young man who we had hoped would do something in merchandise, or in artisanship, or in a profession that would do honor to the family name long after mother's wrinkled hands are folded from the last toil! All that exchanged for startled look when the door-bell rings, lest something has happened; and the wish that the scarlet fever twenty years ago had been fatal, for then he would have gone directly to the bosom of his Saviour. But alas! poor old soul, she has lived to experience what Solomon said; "A foolish son is a heaviness to his mother."

Oh! what a funeral it will be when that boy is brought home dead! And how mother will sit there and say: "Is this my boy that I used to fondle and that I walked the floor with in the night when he was sick? Is this the boy that I held to the baptismal font for baptism? Is this the boy for whom I toiled until the blood burst from the tips of my fingers, that he might have a good start and a good home? Lord, why hast thou let me live to see this? Can it be that these swollen hands are the ones that used to wander over my face when rocking him to sleep? Can it be that this swollen brow is that I once so rapturously kissed? Poor boy! how tired he does look. I wonder who struck him that blow across the temples? I wonder if he uttered a dying prayer? Wake up, my son; don't you hear me? wake up! Oh! he can't hear me. Dead! dead! dead! 'O Absalom, my son, my son, would God that I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!'"

I am not much of a mathematician, and I cannot estimate it; but is there any one here quick enough at figures to estimate how many mothers there are waiting for something to be done? Ay, there are many wives waiting for domestic rescue. He promised something different from that when, after the long acquaintance and the careful scrutiny of character, the hand and the heart were offered and accepted. What a hell on earth a woman lives in who has a drunken husband! O Death, how lovely thou art to her, and how soft and warm thy skeleton hand! The sepulchre at midnight in winter is a king's drawing-room compared with that woman's home. It is not so much the blow on the head that hurts as the blow on the heart. The rum fiend came to the door of that beautiful home, and opened the door and stood there, and said: "I curse this dwelling with an unrelenting curse. I curse that father into a maniac, I curse that mother into a pauper. I curse those sons into vagabonds. I curse those daughters into profligacy. Cursed be bread-tray and cradle. Cursed be couch and chair, and family Bible with record of marriages and births and deaths. Curse upon curse." Oh! how many wives are there waiting to see if something cannot be done to shake these frosts of the second death off the orange-blossoms! Yea, God is waiting, the God who works through human instrumentalities, waiting to see whether this nation is going to overthrow this evil; and if it refuse to do so, God will wipe out the nation as he did Phoenicia, as he did Rome, as he did Thebes, as he did Babylon. Ay, he is waiting to see what the Church of God will do. If the Church does not do its work, then he will wipe it out as he did the Church of Ephesus, Church of Thyatira, Church of Sardis. The Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches to-day stand side by side with an impotent look, gazing on this evil, which costs this country more than a billion dollars a year to take care of the 800,000 paupers, and the 315,000 criminals, and the 30,000 idiots, and to bury the 75,000 drunkards. Protagoras boasted that out of the sixty years of his life forty years he had spent in ruining youth; but this evil may make the more infamous boast that all its life it has been ruining the bodies, minds and souls of the human race.

Put on your spectacles and take a candle, and examine the platforms of the two leading political parties of this country, and see what they are doing for the arrest of this evil and for the overthrow of this abomination. Resolutions—oh! yes, resolutions about Mormonism! It is safe to attack that organized nastiness two thousand miles away. But not one resolution against drunkenness, which would turn this entire nation into one bestial Salt Lake City. Resolutions against political corruption, but not one word about drunkenness, which would rot this nation from scalp to heel. Resolutions about protection against competition with foreign industries, but not one word about protection of family and church and nation against the scalding, blasting, all-consuming, damning tariff of strong drink put upon every financial, individual, spiritual, moral, national interest.

THE SABBATH-BREAKER'S DOOM.

I look in another direction. The Church of God is the grandest and most glorious institution on earth. What has it in solid plalanx accomplished for the overthrow of drunkenness? Have its forces ever been marshalled? No, not in this direction. Not long ago a great ecclesiastical court assembled in New York, and resolutions arraigning strong drink were offered, and clergymen with strong drink on their tables and strong drink in their cellars defeated the resolutions by threatening speeches. They could not bear to give up their own lusts. I tell this audience what many of you may never have thought of, that to-day—not in the millennium, but to-day—the Church holds the balance of power in America; and if Christian people—the men and the women who profess to love the Lord Jesus Christ and to love purity and to be the sworn enemies of all uncleanness and debauchery and sin—if all such would march side by side and shoulder to shoulder, this evil would soon be overthrown. Think of three hundred thousand churches and Sunday Schools in Christendom marching shoulder to shoulder! How very short a time it would take them to put down this evil, if all the churches of God, transatlantic and cisatlantic, were armed on this subject!

Young men of America, pass over into the army of tetotalism. Whiskey, good to preserve corpses, ought never to turn you into a corpse.

Tens of thousands of young men have been dragged out of respectability, and out of purity, and out of good character, and into darkness by this infernal stuff called strong drink. Do not touch it! Do not touch it!

At the front door of our Church in Brooklyn, a few summers ago, this scene occurred: Sabbath morning a young man was entering for divine worship. A friend passing along the street said: "Joe, come along with me; I am going down to Coney Island, and we'll have a gay Sunday." "No," replied Joe; "I have started to go here to church, and I am going to attend service here." "O Joe," his friend said, "you can go to church any time! The day is bright, and we'll go to Coney Island, and we'll have a splendid time." The temptation was too great, and the twain went to the beach, spent the day in drunkenness and riot. The evening train started up from Brighton. The young men were on it. Joe, in his intoxication, when the train was in full speed, tried to pass around from one seat to another and fell and was crushed. Under the lantern, as Joe lay bleeding his life away on the grass, he said to his comrade: "John, that was a bad business, your taking me away from church; it was a very bad business. You ought not to have done that, John. I want you to tell the boys to-morrow when you see them that rum and Sabbath-breaking did this for me. And, John, while you are telling them, I will be in hell, and it will be your fault." Is it not time for me to pull out from the great organ of God's Word, with many banks of keys, the tremolo stop? "Look not upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color to the cup, when it moveth itself aright. At the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder."

But this evil will be arrested. Blucher came up just before night and saved the day at Waterloo. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon it looked very badly for the English. Generals Ponsonby and Picton fallen. Sabres broken, flags surrendered, Scots Grays annihilated. Only forty-two men left out of the German brigade. English army falling back and falling back. Then Napoleon rubbed his hands together, and said:

"Aha! aha! we'll teach that little Englishman a lesson. Ninety chances out of a hundred are in our favor. Magnificent! magnificent!"

He even sent messages to Paris to say he had won the day. But before sundown Blucher came up, and he who had been the conqueror of Austerlitz became the victim of Waterloo. That name which had shaken all Europe and filled even America with apprehension; that name went down, and Napoleon, muddy and hatless, and crazed with his disasters, was found feeling for the stirrup of a horse, that he might mount and resume the conflict.

Well, my friends, alcoholism is imperial, and it is a conqueror, and there are good people who say the night of national overthrow is coming, and that it is almost night. But before sundown the Conqueror of earth and heaven will ride in on the white horse, and alcoholism, which has had its Austerlitz of triumph, shall have its Waterloo of defeat. Alcoholism having lost its crown, the grizzly and cruel breaker of human hearts, crazed with the disaster, will be found feeling in vain for the stirrup on which to remount its foaming charger. "So, O Lord let thine enemies perish!"

MISSIONARY WORK IN CHILI.

THE MORAL AND RELIGIOUS CONDITION OF THE PEOPLE OF THAT UNHAPPY REPUBLIC.

A Startling Picture of a Land where the Fear and Knowledge of God are almost Unknown and where Official Corruption and widespread Immorality Prevail—Superstition and Idolatry—What the Missionaries are Doing to Let in the Light of the Gospel.

(See Illustrations on first page.)

IN its issue of last week, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD gave a very brief and incomplete outline of the missionary work that is now going on in the capital of the disturbed Chilean Republic. To-day we are enabled to present to our readers a much more comprehensive review of the moral and spiritual condition of that unfortunate country—facts which conclusively prove that the utmost energies of Christians everywhere are needed to spread the Gospel of Christ among the Chileans. The recent experience of Chili furnishes a remarkable lesson, as illustrating the calamities which God sometimes suffers to befall a nation that forgets him and deliberately chooses the path of wickedness rather than righteousness. At the present time, when the Republic is torn asunder by revolution, its commerce destroyed and its people warring, brother against brother, it is most instructive to read the following description of the religious state of the nation, as given in the columns of the Herald, one of the leading papers, published in Santiago, the capital:

Graduates of the Christian Institute Internacional, Santiago, Chili.

"All thinking men," it says, "recognize that we are in an epoch of transformation and change, in which the moral and social order suffers deeply. Religion, politics, society—everything in the social organism, is affected by an evil, which grows constantly worse, and in regard to which there seems to be no remedy. The ancient beliefs have lost their force in the minds and hearts of the upper classes of society. These upper classes are under the yoke of a sterile and petrified traditionalism. Unfortunately, nothing takes the place of this departed faith, only a blind unbelief, or a sad and degrading materialism. With an enormous increase of public wealth, there has been introduced disorder and dishonesty in finances; the electoral contests are contests of fraud and abuse; although there exist most complete and suitable laws, they are only laws on paper. Family ties are weak and relaxed. Parental authority is exercised less and less. To-day a boy of fifteen years will scarcely submit to the guidance of his parents, and frequently he indulges in the practices and follies of a man of the world.

"Respect to virtue and purity in women is rarely found in the heart of young men, but the tendency is to blot and debase this noble though weak part of human nature. This generation advances in its knowledge of science and letters, but in regard to the majority, there is no teaching by which the heart is trained—nothing of the knowledge and fear of God. The prevailing philosophy follows the motto quoted by the apostle: 'Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die.' So the thirst for pleasure is insatiable, the anxiety to get money with which to minister to these pleasures is a hot fever. The methods of gaining money are of no importance; all means are good if they only produce the end desired. Fortunes are amassed with the tears and sweat of the poor; overreaching in exchange, high rates of interest, and rapine, inspire and direct pecuniary transactions. Drunkenness is a wave which submerges both the upper and the lower strata of society, and threatens to deluge the present generation in alcohol. The ministers see, in their pastoral visitations, the terrible effects of alcoholic poison among the working-classes.

"In the midst of this lamentable social condition—of this sea of iniquity—what are the spiritual guides of the people doing, these religious masters, who claim to be the only depositaries of celestial graces? (the Catholic Church.) Alas! all they have done is to throw a mantle of hypocrisies over these repugnant wounds, and to cover with vain religious ostentation or show, this shame which they have not recognized nor have cared to avoid, much less tried to restrain. What they are doing is to enjoy the pleasures of life, to surround themselves with large fortunes, and to prepare secretly and with astute plans, to obtain control of the government of the nation. What matters it to them, what have they in common with the religion of purity, of abnegation, and the love of Christ? In the religion of the mass, of the retreats of holy water, may be seen the miserable substitute which they have put for Christ's work of redemption. Thus they have emasculated religion as a moral power, having cast out the immense moral force of the Gospel. The only and effective remedy for these social and moral evils is the Gospel, which is the power of God unto salvation."

The centre of Christian activity in this unhappy land is at Santiago. Concerning the work that is now being done there and elsewhere in Christ's cause, the Rev. John Mathe Allis, Missionary of the Presbyterian Church in that city, who is now visiting New York, gives most hopeful and encouraging accounts. For a number of years past, Mr. Allis has been the President of the Chili Mission and has had charge of the Presbyterian Theological School at Santiago. The school has graduated a number of students for the ministry and others are now following its course of study. In Santiago there are about 1,000 German residents and about 400 English and Americans. In Valparaiso there are probably 3,000 English-speaking people and as many Germans. In the south of Chili, a whole province is settled by Germans, and there are many foreign colonies throughout the country and quite a number of English and German churches, including Union churches, Methodist, and Church of England. The South American Missionary Society of London has several missions at different points, but mainly among the English-speaking people.

Then the Mission of Bishop Taylor has a number of important schools, and there are a few English Methodist Churches and one Chilean church, besides several stations for Spanish preaching, all belonging to the Taylor mission. Among the schools of this mission, the largest is in Santiago—a school for girls—having two hundred and fifty pupils. The latter has its headquarters in a fine, commodious building.

The Presbyterian Church has had a mission in Chili since the reunion. Its preachers and assistant workers have four leading lines of active service, as was explained in last week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, the most important being that in the schools; for it is through the young men and women of the nation that the heart of Chili must be touched and regeneration secured if at all. The Presbyterian Escuela Popular, or public school for the poorer classes, has two hundred and fifty pupils and is housed in a building furnished rent free by a Christian English merchant.

The Presbyterian Instituto Internacional at Santiago is a college and seminary with one hundred and sixty pupils, but its quarters are in a dilapidated old dwelling-house. Moreover, it is about to be deprived of its present quarters, meagre as they are, the building being doomed to demolition. With a suitable edifice, and sufficient accommodations, much good work might be accomplished and the attendance would soon be doubled. In the Institute, special evangelical Bible instruction is given, and among its pupils are many from the wealthier classes in Chili, Peru and Bolivia. It is almost self-sustaining. "When the present building is torn down," Mr. Allis says, "it will be imperative to build, as a house of suitable size is not to be obtained." It is for the purpose of awakening public interest in this laudable Christian enterprise and securing funds for that purpose that Mr. Allis is now visiting this country. His project has the full approval of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions in New York, and it is believed that the school is destined to sustain an important relation to the evangelization of Chili. The Institute is now in its thirteenth year. There are connected with it nine professors or instructors, and as through this channel the best youth of three of the leading South American Republics are to be reached and trained in the Christian doctrine, it is a work that needs no further commendation to those who have at heart the progress of the Gospel in foreign lands.

On the first page of this issue we give a portrait of Mr. Allis together with a group of the scholars at the Escuela Popular. On page 132 are the portraits of six students for the ministry, who have graduated from the Institute. There are surely a wide field and abundant opportunities for mission work in a land which even the Chilians themselves admit to have been degraded by the malign influence of a selfish and careless priesthood, and the flagrant immorality of its rulers. It is a tremendous work which the Chili Mission has undertaken, but, by God's blessing and with energy among the laborers in the vineyard, it cannot fail to secure some measure of success. Its progress, even amid all the difficulties that surround it, has been encouraging. It rightly regards education as the most direct means of remedying the evils under which the nation has suffered, and combating the Jesuit influence which dominates everything in the Republic. It is only through the religious instruction of her youth that the redemption of Chili is to be accomplished.

THE NECROPOLIS NEAR CAIRO.

THE accompanying picture is that of the ancient cemetery near Cairo, in which are many tombs of famous warriors and pashas. One of the most remarkable is that of a pasha who erected a monument having five domes, each being for a memorial of a member of his family. Hired mourners still attend it and make dolorous lamentation. Dr. Z. T. Sweeney, who visited the necropolis a few years ago, says, that they were wailing as if their hearts would break; but after they had finished the prescribed quantity of mourning, they went out as merrily as children leaving school, laughing and joking together as if they had not shed visitor, and snatching up her baby ran into a bed-room and locked herself in. The elephant amused herself until her keeper returned, by smashing crockery and breaking up chairs and tables. When he came back he drove her out of the room to the head of the stairs, but could not induce her to descend. She had not learned that art and was afraid to venture. Carpenters were employed to build an inclined plane from the window to the yard, and on February 24th, the elephant after being in the house three days and nights, was persuaded to walk out of the window on the artificial declivity. She missed her footing when about half-way down, and rolled over bodily into the yard. She found, as some men famous in history have done, that in forcing themselves up to a high position for which they were not fitted and doing mischief there, they were preparing the way for a humiliating and painful fall. (Isa. 14: 12-17.)

A Family Quarrel has Arisen Out of a Marriage at Scranton, Pa. A young business man of that town recently paid a visit to a married sister living in a village a few miles away. He was attracted by the appearance of a girl who was helping her with the housework. His sister noticed that he was fascinated and spoke to him on the subject. She said that she should discharge her servant if he paid her any attention. The young man protested and declared that she was the daughter of respectable parents, was intelligent and well educated. His sister, however, thought that he would disgrace himself and his family if he married a servant, and eventually sent the girl away to prevent the match. The young man followed her and, finding his first impressions of her worth confirmed on further a tear. They had, however, done vigorously all that they were paid to do, which was so much to their credit. Some of the tombs, especially those of the Mamelukes, are exceedingly elegant, the domes supported by finely carved transparent marble columns.

GRAVES AND MOSQUE OUTSIDE CAIRO, EGYPT.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

An Elephant in a House in New York Caused some inconvenience to the residents, and some excitement among outsiders last week. The elephant's proper quarters were in a stable adjoining the house, which she shared with some llamas and zebus, all being the property of a well known animal-dealer. The stable opened into a yard which was the common exercise ground of the animals, in which the elephant was acquiring the education that is to fit her for a position in a circus. Among the accomplishments she has already attained is that of walking upstairs. On February 21st she put her acquirement to an embarrassing use. Her keeper had gone out on urgent business and forgot to feed her before leaving. The elephant slipped her leg out of the chain which is used to keep her from wandering and went out into the yard. The door leading to the adjoining house stood open and the elephant squeezed through. She came to a flight of stairs and went up. The mistress of the house was terror-stricken at seeing her ponderous er acquaintance, has married her. The sister now refuses to see him and is said to feel the "disgrace" keenly. It is a pity that she should distress herself and others over such a matter. If she will study her New Testament she will have less respect for class distinctions and will learn a better way of estimating the value of others than by wealth and station. (Acts 10: 8.)

A Strange Thoughtfulness was manifested by a man whose sudden death in New York on February 23rd., brought the characteristic into notoriety. He was a travelling salesman hailing from Milwaukee Wis., who frequently came to New York on business. He had a presentiment that his death would be sudden and probably while he was on one of his journeys. On a card he had written his name and address and those of his friends in various cities. His height, weight, size of gloves and boots were all recorded, and to these he had added his coffin-measure. "It was well," he said to the hotel clerk, "to keep such information handy in case anything happened." When he was found dead from apoplexy in his room the clerk searched for the card, found it and put the information to use. It may be hoped that this was not the only preparation for the contingency that the man made. His foresight would be absurdly at fault if, while providing for details of no importance to him, he neglected to secure through Christ an entrance into eternal felicity. (Matt. 6: 33).

A FATAL CRIME.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for March 15. Numbers 32: 23: "Be sure your sin will find you out."

"IF Persis is to leave home at all, I guess this is as good a chance as any," said Mr. Markham, talking over with his wife the prospects of their eldest daughter. "I don't see," he continued, "why she should go. She'd ought to stay home and help you. She's eighteen now, and she could take a deal of work off your hands. You need it now with all the boys growing up, to cook and sew for. It's all nonsense her talk about not being a burden and earning her own living. What she wants is to earn money to spend on dress, so she can go around like the city girls."

"I presume we'll have to let her go, father," the wife answered. "She's dead set on it. I'm sort o' disappointed, too. I hoped she'd be contented to stay. But it's kind o' dull here. She won't have so much work. She will only have to wait on a widow lady who lives all alone; and the wages is good. We'll have to consent."

The father came to the same conclusion after another talk with his daughter; but he did so reluctantly. There were three boys in the family, younger than Persis. Then a gap, the reason of which was told in two headstones in the cemetery, and then came another little boy, now under two years old—Harry, the pet of the family. Persis was needed at home, but, as her mother said, she was set on going away. So at last the parents yielded, and Persis went to her new home.

The change was very gratifying to the girl. Mrs. Strachan was kind, did not want much attention and the house-work was very light. She did not think Mrs. Strachan was rich, for she dressed very plainly in deep mourning and wore no jewelry, but she seemed to have enough money to live comfortably. It was a pretty little house that she lived in, with conveniences that Persis scarcely understood at first, and all the rooms were beautifully furnished. Persis peeped into them all, the first day, except one room which was locked. It was always locked, Persis found, for she tried the door every day. She grew curious about that room, and one day asked Mrs. Strachan if she should not go there and clean up. The widow became much agitated, when Persis put the question, but she made no reply, only shook her head and turned away.

Persis had been in the place three months and had bought herself a new hat, and a new sacque and a pair of high-heeled shoes, when Mrs. Strachan told her that she was going to visit some friends and would be away two weeks. If Persis thought she would be lonely in the house by herself she might go home, or she might stay and keep things straight. The prospect of having two weeks to herself pleased Persis and she elected to stay. If she went home, she would have to do more work.

On the first day of Mrs. Strachan's absence Persis went leisurely about her work examining the various things in the rooms her mistress used, with more minuteness than she could do when the lady was at home. She even tried on one of Mrs. Strachan's dresses, and was delighted with the effect as she saw herself reflected from the long mirror. She kept it on for an hour and was delighted with its silken rustle as she walked from room to room. It seemed to her that if she had such a dress she would look better in it than Mrs. Strachan did. This was true, for Mrs. Strachan was ten years older than Persis and her beauty was dimmed by sorrow. Persis wondered whether she dare put that dress on some pleasant evening for a walk in the public park. There were some young folks, whose acquaintance she had made, who ought to see how she could look when she was really well-dressed.

Continuing her exploration after the dress was taken off and replaced in its press, Persis noticed a key in a small drawer. She wondered what that key fitted. The thought of the mysterious locked room flashed across her mind and she hurried off to see if this was the key of that room. Yes, it turned and Persis entered. There seemed to be nothing to make a mystery of. It had evidently been a child's bed-room. There was a pretty little bed and a boy's toys on the shelves and some picture and story-books. There was a closet in the room where the boy's clothes were still hanging and in the drawers there was his linen and boyish treasures. He must have been the same age as Harry, Persis thought. She took down a little suit and held it up. How pretty Harry would look in it! She wished Mrs. Strachan would give it to her for him. It was of rich black velvet with such beautiful buttons. Why should the dress lie idle here where the moths would get in it? It was a shame! Persis hung it up again with regret. There was not much else of interest in the room. A lady's clothing was thrown carelessly over a chair. Persis looked at it and knew it was Mrs. Strachan's. The dress was good but evidently an in-door dress and rather worn. But the other things were very nice. Persis envied Mrs. Strachan as she felt their silky softness of texture. Her curiosity satisfied, she locked the room again and put the key back in its place.

The thought of that room and its contents troubled Persis all that week. She had her little triumph of wearing her mistress' dress in the park, and that dereliction seemed to render her less able to resist temptation, as one fault paves the way for more serious ones. At last, the very day before Mrs. Strachan was to return, when Persis knew if she was to have that suit for Harry at all, it must be then, she went into the room and took it. It would make it no worse to take something else, and so Persis took some of Mrs. Strachan's clothing from the room for her own wear. Mrs. Strachan never went into the room, so Persis did not dread discovery.

Not long afterward, Persis got a letter from home. Her mother begged her to thank her mistress for the beautiful suit she had "given" her, which fitted Harry perfectly. The boy was ailing just then, but the mother thought he would soon be well again. It was only a feverish cold and sore throat. Persis was not to be anxious about him. Persis was not feeling well herself, and she told Mrs. Strachan, who gave her leave to go home and see her brother and nurse herself. "Don't neglect a sore throat," she said. "It was just so my poor little Harold's illness first showed itself."

Persis started guiltily. Could it be possible that in stealing that clothing she had put her own life as well as Harry's in peril? She knew there were such things as germs of disease; she had heard of them at school, but she said nothing. She felt very ill before she reached her home, and her conscience made her anxious and miserable.

"I'm most sorry you've come, Persis," said her mother. "Harry's a deal worse, and the doctor says it's catching. I'm afraid you'll catch it, coming out of another air. But, child, how ill you look yourself. What is the matter?"

"I am ill, mother, let me go to bed right away."

Persis looked like the shadow of her former self when she sat up for the first time after a long and dangerous illness. "What are you crying for, mother?" she asked. "Anyone would think you were not glad I am better. Send Harry in to see me."

"That's the trouble, Persis," the mother answered. "We were afraid to tell you before, when you asked. Poor Harry is dead. It seemed almost a mercy he was taken, the poor child suffered so. It was dreadful, and he was so patient and good. He knew he was going. One of the last things he said was, that he should never wear the pretty suit again."

"I think I'll go back to bed again, mother," Persis said. "I am not strong enough to sit up yet. Poor Harry! Oh! I think my heart will break."

They wrote Mrs. Strachan in answer to her inquiries, that Persis had apparently almost recovered, but had suffered a relapse. They were sorry to tell her, too, that the little boy to whom she had so kindly sent that beautiful suit, was dead. They thanked her for her kindness to their daughter, but were afraid it would be a long time before she was well enough to return, if she ever did.

Mrs. Strachan shuddered as she read the letter. It was all plain to her, but she would not afflict the stricken parents by disclosing their daughter's wickedness. "Poor, weak girl!" she said to herself. "How she must reproach herself! I wish I had burnt those things as I ought to have done. Then the temptation would not have come to the girl to commit the sin that has brought such a punishment."

GEHAZI PUNISHED.

S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 15, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 5: 15-27. GOLDEN TEXT, NUMB. 32: 23.

Naaman Anxious to Pay for his Cure—Bearing a Reward from his King—His Ascription of the Healing to God—Humility Before Elisha—The Prophet's Refusal of the Gift—Gehazi's Worldly Reasoning—His Crafty Invention to Deceive Naaman—Treasure Purchased with a Lie—A Common Purchasing Currency—A Second Lie Needed to Sustain the First—The Sin Detected—The Retribution.

WHEN the king of Syria sent Naaman to the king of Israel to request healing at his hands, he had provided, out of his royal treasury, a handsome money compensation for the king or the prophet in Israel so as to relieve himself from any sense of obligation. Neither he nor Naaman knew at this time with whom the distinguished leper would have to do; they thought of man only as possessing the power to heal.

Naaman's first impulse on finding himself healed was to acknowledge the hand that had wrought the work: "Behold now I know that there is no God in all the earth but in Israel." Would to God that all who have known the Lord as their Healer had as true and just a view of what is due from them to God as this heathen man had! Naaman's second impulse was to deliver the king's magnificent reward into the right hands. But to whom should he give it? Certainly not to the king, for he had washed his hands of the whole case. The prophet had certainly directed him to the Jordan, and through following this direction he had received healing; it would be more appropriate to offer it to him. "Now therefore, I pray thee," he says, "take a blessing of thy servant."

Thy Servant!

and he stands before Elisha! Things have greatly changed, since, an hour or two ago, the great man had come with all the display of his chariot and his horses to the house of Elisha. Instead of giving the rich gift of the king of Syria in a manner in which a superior would bestow anything upon an inferior, Naaman entreats Elisha to receive it as a favor, "I pray thee take a blessing from thy servant." But the prophet could not look upon anything in a personal light—he belonged to another.

Riches had no Attraction

for this man who had seen his master taken away without dying into heaven; earth and earthly things had lost their lustre and their value for him. Those who are truly looking for the Lord's return and are ready to meet him when he comes to take them away to meet him in the air after he has raised "them which sleep in Jesus," (1. Thess. 4: 14-17), must of necessity sit thus loose to things of time and sense. (Luke 21: 36.) Elisha stood like his master, before the Lord God of Israel, and considered, not what affected him, but what touched the honor of his God: "As the Lord liveth before whom I stand, I will receive none." His work was to stand aside, that Naaman be hindered in no way from making acquaintance with his God. And Naaman saw in this very thing a witness that the true prophets of the God of Israel were disinterested men, having no purpose of their own to serve—a contrast indeed to the time-serving heathen priests and prophets with whom perhaps he had been well acquainted, and whose tricks he knew something of.

While Elisha was bent upon bearing witness to his God, as to the spirit which actuated his prophets who stood before him, Gehazi, Elisha's servant, was occupied in conceiving and carrying out a plan for his own selfish ends, which should totally misrepresent Elisha and give the lie to his words. The Shunammite's instinctive distrust of Gehazi now finds its justification. Himself was really Gehazi's god; he saw a chance of making something out of Naaman the Syrian and, utterly heedless of how it might affect the honor of God, or the reputation of his master, he carries out his purpose. "Behold my master hath spared Naaman the Syrian in not receiving at his hands that which he brought; but, as the Lord liveth, I will run after him, and take somewhat from him." Elisha looks upon Naaman as an immortal soul to be won for his God, who may, perhaps, be a witness for him, in Syria; Gehazi regards him simply in the light of his money value to him. In his eyes, Elisha had lost the main chance with Naaman. How strange it seems, that this man could have lived continually in the presence of a man who was himself always in the presence of God, and yet whose spirit was so different!

Gehazi followed after Naaman, whose reverence for the prophet was such that he lighted down from his chariot to meet even his servant! Gehazi was ready with his story; he could not say that Elisha had changed his mind, so he invented a contingency, which to a mind as crooked as his own, would not seem inconsistent with the position Elisha had taken up; and he himself might secure an advantage. He would represent Elisha as asking for the sons of the prophets what he would not receive for himself. There are thousands who do this kind of thing continually, but it is crooked; it does not savor of God's spirit. So he said: "My master hath sent me, saying, Behold even now there be come to me from Mount Ephraim two young men of the sons of the prophets; give them I pray thee a talent of silver, and two changes of raiment." Naaman, only too glad to show his gratitude, and never doubting that the story was true, urged upon Gehazi to take two talents of silver and two changes of raiment; and the whole cavalcade of the Syrian general halted until two of his servants had borne the treasure to Gehazi's house, and deposited it there.

To all appearance, the plan had answered, Gehazi had done a good stroke of business, he had only taken money from a man who was more than ready to give; he himself had grown rich without any trouble, and the only price he had had to pay was

A Lie.

Could he afford it? Lying transactions in the way of business are more common than transparent and straightforward ones. Can men afford to make gain at the expense of a lie? "All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone: which is the second death."

Gehazi, "let the men go, and they departed. But he went in, and stood before his master," looking no doubt as innocent as he could make himself look. But there was One looking on, to whom the secrets of all hearts are manifest, and Elisha was already acquainted with what had occurred. "Whence comest thou, Gehazi?" "Thy servant went no whither." One lie cannot stand alone, it always needs the support of a second. Greed may seem to answer in the world, lying may prosper for a time in an atmosphere in which untruth can flourish. But in the presence of a man or men who live in the clear light of the presence of God, hidden things cannot remain hidden, wrong things must and do come to light. Bright things can bear the light. "Went not mine heart with thee when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee?"

Poor miserable Gehazi! His sin had found him out; like Adam, his miserable covering had failed to hide him, and he stood in all his naked treachery before God, and before his prophet! Oh how vain it is for man to attempt to hide himself from God, and from his prophets to whom he reveals his secrets! David discovered this when he wrote, "If I say, surely the darkness shall cover me, even the night shall be light about me; yea, the darkness hideth not from thee: but the night shineth as the day; the darkness and light are both alike to thee." (Ps. 139: 11, 12.) "Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord." (Jer. 23: 24.)

Elisha waived entirely all that could touch his own reputation. He might easily have been vexed and indignant that the selfish, wicked greed of Gehazi had compromised his character for disinterestedness, and taken off the edge from the very testimony to an unearthly spirit which would give his words weight with the Syrians. But the prophet had no reputation to care for but his God's, and that he could leave with him. But he appeals to Gehazi on higher ground: "Is it a time to receive money, and to receive garments, and olive yards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and men servants, and maid servants?" Should such considerations come in when the witness for God in the land of Syria is at stake? Can you, a prophet's servant, so lower the testimony of your God as to let the last impression on the mind of this new convert be how much you can get out of him? Unclean Gehazi, earthly-minded follower of the heavenly-minded, thou comest into the heritage which Naaman's confession of God has left for such as deny him. Take the gold, and take the garments, but take the leprosy with them; it becomes an entail on thee, and on all thy posterity. And the liar who came into the prophet's house, went out a "leper, as white as snow." Thus sin in a prophet's house is judged of God.

THE PLAN OF THE APOCALYPSE.

The Arrangement of the Book as a Forecast of Future Events.

BY GEORGE H. PEMBER.

EVERY Christian ought to have some idea of the general scheme of the Apocalypse—that last gift of the Lord Jesus to his people, that book, without a little understanding of which, it is unlikely that any Christian will be kept from the delusions, religious and political, which are now overspreading the earth. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear, the words of the prophecy, and keep the things that are written: for the time is at hand."

The beloved apostle was suffering affliction, on the barren island of Patmos, "for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ," when the revelation was made to him. He was, as he tells us, "in spirit on the Lord's day." By the words "in spirit" John explains his own condition: he was not, like Paul on a similar occasion, uncertain in regard to it, but fully aware that he was out of the body and on the plane of spirit. "In the Day of the Lord," on the contrary, has reference to the external surroundings in which he found himself, and furnishes us with a general clue for the interpretation of the visions. A strictly analogous description may be found in the second verse of the fourth chapter, where he says: "And immediately I was in spirit; and, behold, a Throne."

While, then, in spirit, and disengaged from earthly things, John suddenly heard behind him a great voice, like that of a trumpet, saying: "What thou seest, write in a book, and send it to the Seven Churches." At the sound of this voice John turned, and beheld a vision which, at first, may have suggested to him the Holy Place of the Temple. But it was not the Temple: for he quickly perceived an absence of familiar objects; there was neither altar of incense, nor table of shew-bread. What he saw was the heavenly Sanctuary arranged for the present parenthetical dispensation.

Standing, then, in the midst of the golden lamps was the majestic form of the high priest who has entered into the heavens, now to appear in the presence of God for us. John did not, however, see him in the heavenly holy of holies turned toward God in intercession, but in the holy place watching the lamps, that is, directing and judging his Church. He was not yet clad in the robes of glory and beauty; for his dress apparently corresponded to the linen garments which were used in ordinary priestly service, and especially by the high priest on the great day of atonement. And although even this was far from being the fulness of his glory, yet the beloved disciple fell at his feet as dead.

Then the Lord touched him, and again John heard the loving words, "fear not," and was strengthened to receive the command—"Write the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which shall come to pass after these." It was thus evidently implied that the revelation to be written by the apostle would consist of three distinct parts; unless, therefore, we can so divide the Apocalypse, it is useless to think of interpreting it.

Now in regard to the first division there can be no difficulty: "the things which thou sawest" can only refer to the vision of the heavenly Sanctuary, by which the difference between the Christian Church and the Jewish system had been exhibited, and the solemn fact revealed that the Lord's eyes of flame are ever upon those who profess to be his.

"The things that are"—or a prophetic outline of the phases of the nominal Church which were to succeed each other during the present age—naturally follow in the next chapter. They are also continued in the third, but no further; for in the first verse of the fourth chapter, John sees a door opened in heaven, and hears a voice saying, "Come up hither, and I will show thee the things which must come to pass after these." Henceforth the Church disappears from the prophecy; and the very name occurs no more till we come to the sixteenth verse of the twenty-second chapter, where "the Churches" are indeed mentioned, but merely as those to whom testimony is given, and not as having any part in the scenes of terror which shall characterize "the things that must be after these."

It will thus be seen that the plan of the Apocalypse presents no serious difficulty, provided that we remember its threefold division, and interpret it by means of the great clue, the prophecy of the Seventy Weeks. We may sum up its contents as follows.

Chap. 1, is a vision of the heavenly Sanctuary prepared for these present times.

Chaps. 2 and 3, reveal the whole career of the visible Church, from the close of the Apostolic period until the Lord comes.

Chaps. 4 and 5, exhibit the preparations in heaven for the judgments of the Last Week.

Chaps. 6—18, describe the appalling culmination of wickedness in the last seven years: they also foretell the judgments by which those who corrupt the earth shall be destroyed, while the remnant of Israel is being purged and delivered from the oppression of the world. These chapters are generally consecutive: we have first the seals, the seventh of which includes the seven trumpets; and then the last trumpet is developed into the seven vials, the final plagues by which the wrath of God is completed. Chaps. 11.—15, seem to be a parenthesis inserted for the purpose of supplying details of the times of the seals, trumpets, and vials. The seventeenth chapter is partly concerned with the previous history of the Woman and the Beast, in order that the last scene in their joint history may be better understood: the eighteenth describes the fall of Babylon the Great.

Chaps. 19.—22, treat of the appearing of the Lord, of the destruction of his enemies, and of the setting up of his Kingdom. Then there is a brief notice of a rebellion which will follow the loosing of Satan from the abyss at the end of the thousand years, and also of the last judgment; and the prophecy closes with a description of the Heavenly City.

If it be thus interpreted, the Revelation is no longer a sealed book.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

HOME STRUGGLES.

NINE hundred and ninety-nine households out of the thousand are subjected to economy—some under more and some under less stress of circumstances. Especially if a man smoke very expensive cigars, and take very costly dinners at the restaurants, he will be severe in demanding domestic economies. That is what kills tens of thousands of women—attempting to make $5 do the work of $7. How the bills come in! The woman is the banker of the household; she is the president, the cashier, the teller, the discount clerk, and there is a panic every few weeks. This thirty years' war against high prices, this perpetual study of economies, this lifelong attempt to keep the outgoes less than the income, exhausts millions of housekeepers. Oh, my sister, this is a part of the divine discipline. If it were best for you, all you would have to do would be to open the front windows and the ravens would fly in with food; and after you had baked fifty times from the barrel in the pantry, the barrel, like the one of Zarephath, would be full; and the shoes of the children would last as long as the shoes of the Israelites in the wilderness—forty years. Besides that, this is going to make heaven the more attractive in the contrast. They never hunger there, and consequently there will be none of the nuisances of catering for appetites. And in the land of the white robes they never have to mend anything, and the air in that hill country makes everybody well. There are no rents to pay; every man owns his own house, and a mansion at that.

AS GOOD AS OTHERS.

IT is a simple fact that we have very few specimens of eminent Christian character in our day. We are apt to be contented with being just about what our fellows are. If they have gained fifteen degrees of spiritual life, we want just fifteen degrees and no more. We look at some man moderately consistent in the Church of God, and we say, "If I could only have his faith, I would be satisfied; if I could only have his consecration to God, that would do." And we struggle on a little until we come to that plane, and stop and seat ourselves in some prayer-meeting, and look around and find ourselves about as good as the ordinary run. We need to recognize the fact that there is all around about us in this day a depressed religious atmosphere. There are no persons in the Church of God at this day, if there ever have been, whom we can afford to copy. I remember very well, when at school, if the master made a mistake in the copy-plate, I made the same mistake all the way down on every line, to the bottom of the page. And depend upon it, when we attempt to copy any man's Christian character, we copy all the slips, all the faults, and all the deficits. There is only one great example, and that is the example of Jesus Christ, so perfect that it is beyond all criticism, and the nearer we come to that the nearer we come to a thorough consecration to God.

I will say that if there were in your employ in the store a boy so unfaithful to your interests as we have been to our Master, you would not have patience with him for a single week. After the first day you would have discharged him. You would have said to such an one: "You have no regard for my interests. I am certain that you can never faithfully serve me with your ideas of what is right in a store." Yet God has sent us out in the world. He has offered us the largest wages; he has told us our chief business is to serve him; and yet at what a very poor rate we have gone on in his service. I think the very first thing to do is to explore our own spiritual beggary. I think the Church of Christ will never march to a higher standard of Christian character until it finds out its own leanness in its present condition. Oh! for more faith and consecration. Instead of being satisfied when we have come up beside those who are just ordinary Christians in the Church, we must surpass them in our spirit of zeal, and in our faithfulness of service.

HIS OWN LAWYER.

BOOKS setting forth forms for deeds, mortgages, notes, and contracts are no doubt valuable. It should be a part of every young man's education to know something of these. We cannot for the small business transactions of life be hunting up the "Attorney at Law" or the village Squire. But economy in the transfer of property, or in the making of wills, is sometimes a permanent disaster. There are so many quirks in the law, so many hiding-places for scamps, so many modes of twisting phraseology, so many decisions, precedents, and rulings, so many John Does who have brought suits against Richard Roes, that you had better in all important business matters seek out an honest lawyer. "There are none such!" cries out the reader. Why, where have you lived? There are as many honest men in the legal profession as in any other, and rogues more than enough in all professions. Many a farmer, going down to attend Court at the county-seat, takes a load of produce to the market, carefully putting the specked apples at the bottom of the barrel, and hiding among the fresh ones the egg which some discouraged hen, after five weeks of "setting," had abandoned; and having secured the sale of his produce, and lost his suit in the "Court of Common Pleas," has come home denouncing the scoundrelism of attorneys. You shall find plenty of honest lawyers if you really need them; and in matters involving large interests, you had better employ them. Especially avoid the mistake of making your own "Last Will and Testament" unless you have great legal skillfulness. Better leave no will at all than one inefficiently constructed. The "Orphan's Court" could tell many a tragedy of property distributed adverse to the intention of the testator. You save twenty to a hundred dollars from your counsel by writing your own will, and your heirs pay ten thousand dollars to lawyers in disputes over it. Perhaps those whom you have wished especially to favor will get the least of your estate, and a relative against whom you always had especial dislike will get the most; and your charities will be apportioned differently from what you anticipated—a hundred dollars to the Bible Society, and three thousand to the "Hook and Ladder Company."

BRIEF NOTES.

At the regular meeting of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy, held yesterday, in Hamilton Hall, Columbia College, New York, Prof. A. B. Curtis, of Medford, Mass., read a paper on Kant's Philosophy.

Several clergymen will address meetings to-morrow (March 5) in a large hall in London commemorating the day prospectively as the anticipative anniversary day of the translation of 144,000 watchful Christians to heaven without dying on March 5, 1896, five years hence.

Bishop Taylor of Africa said recently that eight of the hardest African missionary stations were managed by women, of which the most difficult was carried on by a little Canadian. He did not give her name, but stated that she was among the wildest tribes, and doing the best work of all.

The Addresses on Prophecy delivered at the Baptist Prophetic Conference in Brooklyn last November, have now been revised by the authors and published in book form under the title Primitive Paths. The book contains nine Addresses and may be had for one dollar by addressing Mr. Albert Needham, Manchester, Mass.

Rev. Thomas Harrison has consented to remain another week at the Seventeenth St. M. E. Church, New York. The services were to have closed with the jubilee last Sunday, but so general was the desire for a continuance and so manifest are the tokens of Divine blessing that the Evangelist yielded and will hold services all this week.

An interesting Chinese service was held recently at the Presbyterian Chinese Mission, Clinton Place, New York. Dr. W. J. White, who has been laboring as a missionary at Canton and is in this country on a visit, preached a sermon in Chinese to a large audience of Chinamen and at the close a young Chinese carpenter was baptized by Dr. Alexander, of the University Place Church.

The Lenten services at St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, New York, have been more interesting than usual this year. The Rector, W. S. Rainsford, has invited eminent clergymen of other denominations to occupy the pulpit. Among them are: Dr. Lyman Abbott, Dr. A. F. Schauffer, Dr. Washington Gladden and Prof. Charles A. Briggs.

The Brooklyn Young Women's Christian Association is about to commence the erection of a handsome building. A large plot of ground in Schermerhorn Street was donated to the Association some time ago by the late Mr. S. B. Chittenden, and Mr. C. D. Wood has given $125,000 to the building fund as a memorial of his late wife. Besides this the Association has raised $88,000 toward the cost of the edifice.

Rev. B. Fay Mills has been holding services at Marietta, Ohio. The place has a population of over 8,000, and no auditorium was large enough to hold the crowds. Excursions by railroad and steamer brought large numbers from the surrounding country. Many of the stores closed during the hours of service, as did also the schools. About 1,000 persons expressed a desire to commence a Christian life. The work began with the Sabbath schools; then it extended to the college students and to the business men, who were influenced in large numbers.

Rev. Somerset Gardner has been conducting services in the Bishop Cummins Memorial Church, Baltimore, Md. Bishop J. A. Latane writes: "Mr. Gardner's services during the past ten days have been attended with very happy results. The attendance on the part of our own people, and from neighboring congregations, and from those in the community who rarely attend church, was very good and continued so to the close of the services. Mr. Gardner's preaching is mainly expository of the Word, and is characterized by great simplicity, earnestness, directness and faithfulness. Every sermon is full of the very marrow and fatness of the Gospel. His labors in the church will, I am sure, be long and gratefully remembered by both pastor and people. I commend him most heartily to my brethren in the ministry, and believe his faithful preaching will prove a blessing to any parish which may engage him for special evangelistic work."

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Copyright Bill—Should the Bible be on the Free List?—The Chillan War—California Floods—The Women's National Congress—A Noble Philanthropist III—Another Polar Expedition, Etc.

The Copyright Bill, which was Delayed last week in Congress, in order to give the Appropriation Bills a chance, this week goes into the hands of a Conference Committee of both Houses for consideration. Some of the leading features of the Bill as it now stands, with amendments, were explained in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Should the proposed amendments be accepted and the Bill pass in its present form, it would go very far towards shutting out foreign books from the American market. There is, however, one book that should be an exception, and in order to emphasize this view, the editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, a few days ago dispatched the following message by wire to the House and Senate conferees:

"BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK, March 1, 1891.—In the name of religion, I would ask that your Conference Committee, if within its power, would so amend the Copyright Bill as to allow the Bible, in whatever language and from whatever land, to enter free. There should be no duty on the Bible, and it would be a glorious thing for our American Congress to set an example to the nations of the earth by placing the Bible on the Free List. Kindly lay this before the Committee.

T. DE WITT TALMAGE."

We cordially invite the co-operation of the Christian press throughout the country in securing this object—an untaxed Bible.

A Commercial Congress, at which Twenty-seven States and Territories will be represented, is called for the 15th of April, at Kansas City, to continue one week. It will consider economic questions affecting Western interests. It will be without political significance, beyond the fact that it will endeavor to secure greater recognition in the line of national legislation for Western needs and that, naturally, those representatives who will best aid these interests will have its approval and support.

There are Few on This Side of the Atlantic who do not know by reputation, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, whose noble and munificent charities have made her name a household word in England. The aged philanthropist—she is now seventy-eight—is in ill-health and it is said that her physicians entertain little hopes of being able to restore her. The Baroness is the daughter of Sir Francis Burdette, and was born in 1814. From her grandfather, the eccentric banker, Thomas Coutts, she inherited a fortune of nearly $12,000,000 much of which has been spent in the founding of schools, institutions for the education of girls, church-building and missionary enterprises. Thousands of emigrants have been helped by her, and when the Irish were starving in 1880, she surprised the world by a woman's generosity and drew her check for $2,500,000 for their relief. For her many good deeds Queen Victoria raised her to the peerage in 1872. A portrait of the Baroness is given in this issue.

That the North Pole still Possesses a Strange fascination for the daring explorer is sufficiently shown by the increasing number of attempts made to reach that seemingly inaccessible latitude. The latest expedition to be projected is that organized by Civil Engineer Robert E. Peary, of the United States Navy, a sturdy son of Maine, who proposes to start from St. John, N. F., about May 1st, 1891, in a whaling steamer, in which he will go as far north as possible and then strike across Greenland on foot. He will be accompanied by one or two companions and a small party of natives and will have as little baggage as possible. The expedition is purely a private enterprise.

The new Surgeon-General of the United States Army, appointed by President Harrison to succeed the late Dr. Baxter, is Colonel Charles Sutherland, a native of Pennsylvania. He is about sixty years of age and has been promoted from the humblest post to that of brevet Lieutenant-Colonel. He stands very high in the medical profession. Dr. Sutherland belongs to a family that has been distinguished in the Keystone State for its piety and energy in good works. He is greatly beloved in the army where his influence has always been that of a Christian soldier. A portrait of the new Surgeon-General is given above.

One of the Saddest Episodes of The Revolt in Chili, occurred during the recent fighting at the port of Iquique. The town after having been captured by the insurgents was retaken by the Balmacedist army, but on the 19th of February the insurgent fleet appeared and began to bombard the place. A force of marines was landed and some terribly hot fighting followed. The town was pillaged and great excesses were committed after the bombardment, and when the government troops under Colonel De Soto had surrendered to the fleet. The principal stores and residences were looted. Many unprotected women had sought shelter there, and they and their children fell victims to the fury of the insurgents, who seemed to be mad with a craze for blood. About two hundred innocent persons are thus believed to have perished. No foreign residents were killed. An armistice was arranged by the commander of the English cruiser Warspite, and considerable property saved that would have been destroyed otherwise.

One of the Most Remarkable Escapes from death ever recorded was that of four miners who, after being entombed alive in a flooded mine at Jeanesville, Pa., for nineteen days, were rescued, while 600 feet below the surface and three-quarters of a mile from the mouth of the mine. The air pressure kept back the water in the high pocket where they were hidden. When found, the quartette of prisoners lay on the ground, weak and unable to speak from starvation and exhaustion. When the relief party issued from the mouth of the mine, at four o'clock in the morning with the glad news, the crowd of men and women assembled there joined with trembling voices in the hymn: "Praise God, from all whom blessings flow." The bodies of nearly a score of their comrades were found in the flooded mine before the survivors were reached.

California has been Flood-swept During the past week in many sections, notably at San Bernardino, Colton, Los Angeles, and along the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads. Bridges, buildings and embankments have been swept away, and in many places great land- slides have occurred, blocking the railroads and doing immense damage. A most serious situation was experienced at Yuma, in Arizona, where, the destruction of the entire town was threatened by the unprecedented rise in the Colorado river to thirty-four feet 3 inches—the highest ever known. The Gila river was also raging and portions of houses, trees and dead animals were coming down the stream. There are about one thousand and two hundred people in Yuma, and unless the population succeed in escaping to high ground a heavy loss of life may result. In the Gila Valley many farms are abandoned, and thousands of head of cattle have perished. It is impossible to estimate the losses by these floods, which are caused by the recent heavy rains and melting snows.

Canadian Loyalty to England has been Stirred to its depths by the publication of the correspondence between Editor Farrer, of Toronto, and Congressman R. R. Hitt, of the United States, on the subject of annexation. This was the correspondence hinted at by Sir John Macdonald a week ago. In one of the letters, Mr. Farrer declares that the Commercial Union movement is dead, as far as Canada is concerned and that "a very large number of people are inclined to think we (the Canadians) had better make for annexation at once." All the letters are in the same vein. The writer, in letters to other prominent Americans, urges like views. These documents and the responses from Americans are denounced by the loyalist leaders as part of a plot to force Canada into the Union. The fact that the Tories are so worked up over the matter would seem to indicate that there is more truth than romance in Editor Farrer's presentation of the prevailing annexation sentiment throughout the Dominion. Sir Richard Cartwright declares that the annexation scare has already driven a million Canadians out of the Dominion. The campaign is the hottest ever known in Canada.

The Eyes of Women all over the Country have been directed, during the week, to the National Capital where the first Triennial Council of the women of the United States has been holding its sessions. It has been attended by hun- dreds of ladies who have made their mark in the various professions, including Miss Susan B. Anthony, Julia Ward Howe, Mrs. May Wright Sewall, Rev. Anna Shaw, Mrs. Zoraida Wallace and many others. The President of the Council,

Miss Frances E. Willard (whose portrait we give in this column) in her opening address, reviewed the progress of woman in the nation during the past three years. Interesting addresses were also made on a variety of topics including "Woman's share in the Control and Care of the Dependent Classes," "Women in the Churches," "Our Mother Age," "God's Women," "Occupation of Women," "Temperance" etc. May Wright Sewall was elected President of the Council for the ensuing three years to succeed Miss Willard. The latter lady, who is now about fifty years of age, is a New England woman of rare intellectual ability. She has been successively teacher, public speaker, College President, Temperance crusader, and editor. The last ten years of her life have been devoted mainly to the temperance cause which has no more eloquent advocate or successful organizer.

ENTANGLED IN THE LAND.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

The Escape of the Israelites Out of Egypt—Pharaoh Encouraged to Pursue—The Basis of his Hope of Success—They Were in a Difficult Country—Their Position Like that of New Converts—Often in Difficult Environment—I. Early Dangers—Dealing with Old Friends—In the Family and Society—In Business—Troubled by Doctrines and Hard Texts—By Hypocritical Professors—By Mental Difficulties—II. Security Under the Trial.

"For Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, they are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in." Exodus 14: 3.

ISRAEL was clean escaped from Egypt. Not a hoof of their cattle was left behind; nor foot of child or aged man remained in the house of bondage. But though they were gone, they were not forgotten by the tyrant who had enslaved them. They had been a very useful body of workers; for they had built treasuries and storehouses for Pharaoh. Compelled to work without wages, they cost the tyrant nothing but the expenditure of the lash. His exactions of forced labor had grown intolerable to the people; but the building erected had been a joy to the lord of Egypt. When they were quite gone, Pharaoh woke up to a sense of his loss; and his attendants felt the same; so that they cried, "Why have we done this, that we have let Israel go from serving us?" Then they resolved to drive them back again, and they thought it easy to do so; for they said "They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in." Thus men thought; but the Lord thought otherwise.

Satan's Escaped Slaves.

Do not I speak to some at this hour who, during the last few months, have, by the power of the Lord's gracious hand, escaped out of the bondage of sin? You have got clean away from your old master. With a high hand and an outstretched arm has God brought you forth into liberty. But your former master and his friends have not forgotten you. You were once a valuable servant to Satan, and he will not willingly lose you. One of their hopes of driving you back is the belief that you are entangled by your circumstances and surroundings. They conceive that you have got into serious difficulty through your conversion, and that you cannot find your way out of your perplexity. I am going to speak to the raw recruits, "from Egypt lately come"; hoping that, by the blessing of the Holy Spirit, they may be cheered in pressing forward, and may feel that they can never go back to their old sins.

I. One of

Our Early Dangers

is this: we may become entangled in the land; the wilderness may shut us in. That entanglement takes a great many shapes. I will only hint at a few of them. Dealing with old friends is a frequent one. The man is a new creature in Christ Jesus, and since his friends find that he is so, they trouble him. His foes are they of his own household. How is the youth to make an open confession of Christ before his infidel father? Possibly the convert is a wife. How is she to be a Christian if she is married to an ungodly husband? Our earthly loves have great power over us, and it is right that they should; but herein comes a hindrance to spiritual life. Because of household opposition Satan says, "He is entangled in the land." The adversary thinks that you have not the courage to stand up against your relatives, and will not dare to confess your Lord before your wife, or your father. We shall see now whether the Lord has brought you out, or whether you are running off on a mere whim of your own: the devil will not be slow to apply the test.

In some cases the entanglement is not so much that of the family as of society. I have personally known one or two friends moving in high circles who have said to me, "As soon as I am known to be a Christian, my friends will cut my acquaintance." In other circles the same difficulties occur. The workshop has its trials as well as the drawing-room. "Ah!" says Satan, "the man came out, and confessed himself a Christian the other night, but I know where he works, and there is not a man in the place who will sympathize with him. He will be entangled in the land." It happens that one begins in the morning with a joke, a second comes on with an oath, a third follows suit with a sharp and bitter observation. All day long they give the new convert such handfuls of mud as they can find, and the hope of the evil one is that thus he will be forced back on his old ways. The same thing happens on the farm, or on board ship, or in the barrack-room; old companions want to have our society, and are not pleased with the silent rebuke which is implied in our separating from them. You know more about this than I do; but I wonder not at Satan saying, "They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in."

Business Difficulties.

To some, the entanglements come from having to deal with new matters. All things have become new, and among the rest even their ordinary business wears a different aspect. It used to be conducted in such and such a way; but now, on examination, the man says, "I am a Christian, I cannot do as I have done; and yet, how can I alter it?" It is a very simple matter to fall into those ways of trade which are questionable; but it is not quite so easy to quit them, and yet to gain a livelihood. It is no small thing for the convert to set himself right with the world in his changed mode of dealing; yet this has got to be done, and done with decision, too, or there is no escaping from evil.

We have known others bewildered with doctrinal difficulties. When a man's soul is renewed he begins to think, and he desires to understand many things which aforetime were indifferent to him. He meets with that most plain and precious truth, that "Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners," and he is well satisfied with that declaration. Still, as he grows, he seeks more knowledge, and longs to understand the deep things of God. Possibly, as a young beginner he goes beyond his depth. We have seen minds quite bewildered, where to us all things have seemed plain.

I have known people

Stumble Over Hard Texts.

"What means this text? What means that passage? What means the other Scripture?" You would be astonished if you knew how many people are disturbed in mind, lie awake at nights, and are likely to lose their faith in Christ, over Scriptures which are as cheering as can be when once they are understood. They get their heads muddled by things too high for them. People are more frivolous now, as a rule, and this evil is rare. Still, there are to be found, here and there, thoughtful persons, not yet fully instructed in the faith, who are puzzled and confounded as the infinite glory of revealed truth opens up before their astonished gaze. They will know hereafter; but for the present they are sorely troubled and perplexed, and their cruel enemy rejoices that "They are entangled in the land."

Far worse is the case of those who are entangled through strange discoveries. They came in among professed believers, and they supposed that all Christians were perfect (which, by the way, is a mere supposition), and now they have met with a certain loud professor who has acted very dishonorably and unkindly towards them, and they cry out with astonishment, "How is this?" We who know by experience and observation that Judas may be looked for among common disciples, since he appeared among the chosen twelve, are not so staggered when we see a hypocrite. We now expect to see black sheep, even in the choicest flock; but the new convert is sorely grieved and stumbled when he finds out the melancholy fact that all men are not what they seem.

It may be that, in his earliest days, the young convert finds out with surprise that his own heart is brimming over with sin. He thought that he was so changed that no sin remained in him, no temptation from without could move him. He hoped that he was so sure of the truth of God that he should never doubt, and now he has to cry, "Lord, help mine unbelief," for he can hardly decide whether he believes or not. He has discovered another law in his members warring against the law of his mind, and bringing him into captivity. He finds that when he would do good evil is present in him; and this inward conflict between the flesh and the spirit comes upon him as

A Terrible Surprise.

When beginners get into this rough road, they are taken by surprise, and know not what to do. What if, at the back of all this, too, we should be assailed with special trials? Suppose it should be that, ever since you have been a Christian, you have not prospered in worldly concerns as you did before. It will seem strange. When you were a man of the world, and were an enemy of God, you had plenty of money, and a host of friends; but now that you have become a Christian, your means and your friends are gradually melting away. It may be the case: I have known such an instance. Yet it is not hard to explain this in several ways. The Lord would not have us follow him for the sake of what we get from him. He would have servants who, having counted the cost, would lose estate and repute, yea, and life itself, sooner than turn aside from the way of their Lord. Perhaps you are being educated to this point of faithfulness.

Possibly, once more, some may be much beset on the road to heaven by

Mental Difficulties.

I do not often say much about these things; because there are plenty of preachers who, by mentioning difficulties, are really spreading them. Certain clever gentlemen of the cloth may think it their duty to sow doubts among their hearers; but I have no such ambition. They may imagine that they are answering the questions which they suggest, but it seems to me that they are merely advertising them to many of those who were previously unaware of them. Everything is now attacked. There is no part of the Bible which some critic would not take away from us. It may be, young friend, that you cannot answer all the objections which you hear. Do not wonder if you cannot. God's Word is sure, be the difficulties what they may. Know what you do know, and believe what you do believe, and get a firm grip of undoubted verities; and though, when you are worried with the doubts and hypotheses of philosophers and the like, Satan will say, "They are entangled in the land," let him see that your worry is soon ended by a childlike faith in the living God."

II. I have thus shown you what our danger is. Now, secondly, let us think of

Our Security Under the Trial.

My text is, "Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, They are entangled in the land, the wilderness hath shut them in." Upon this I make the first observation, that this is not true. It is only what Pharaoh said. And so when Satan says, "They are entangled in the land," is it not true; it is only one of the sayings of the father of lies. "They say"—says one. Well, what do they say? Let them say it: their saying will not make it true. Our adversaries say that our cause is defeated. Is it? "Ah!" say they, "we have shut him up. The man cannot answer us; we have crushed his faith, and argued his confidence to death." Have you? By the grace of God we stand fast in the once-delivered faith, after all your sophistries and boasts. You say that we are entangled; but we are not. "Show us," say they, "the way in which you will get out of the wilderness." No, that we cannot do; but, if you will wait awhile, the Lord will show you that, by leading us graciously through the divided sea, and it may be also by drowning you therein, as he did the Egyptians when the waters overwhelmed them. Israel could not guess her way, but Israel could wait till God revealed it. Newly-emancipated one, thou art shut in with doubts and difficulties suggested by carnal reason; but, I pray thee, believe thy God.

My next observation is this: that though Pharaoh said, "They are entangled in the land; the wilderness hath shut them in," yet they had a guide. We, too, have a Guide. In providence we are not left without a Leader, and in spiritual things we are not left without the Spirit of God, who shall lead us into all truth. Young traveller, you are not turned out alone into a wild wilderness to find a path: the Good Shepherd goes before you; follow him as the sheep follow their shepherd. He never led his flock in the wrong direction yet. Do what he bids you, and you are safe.

The Way Prepared.

Remember, next, that the Lord had appointed a way for these people. There was not only a Guide, but a way. But where was that way? Mountains blocked them on either side. They could not turn back, for Pharaoh shut up that route. Where should they go? The reedy Red Sea rolled across their front. Harken! Their way is across the bottom of that sea, and up from its depths to the other shore. A strange path! "It is no way at all," cries unbelief. Tried believer, the Lord will make a way for you where no foot has been before. That which, like a sea, threatens to drown you, shall be a highway for your escape.

I had once a friend, an upright, gracious man, a gentleman whom God had prospered. He had, when engaged in a bank, acted uprightly in a matter in which his superiors judged him to be foolishly scrupulous, and therefore dismissed him. He could not do wrong; and so he was left with a wife and family, without a situation, and as everybody told him, irretrievably ruined, because of his

"Foolish Conscientiousness."

He was afterward for years the head of that very bank. In a singular way, the Lord made his discharge the means of his advancement, so that he rose, step by step to be the master where he had been the rejected servant; and this, humanly speaking, would not have come about had it not been for the incident mentioned. Have faith that God can turn the evil into good, and that which threatens to annihilate you will be the means of your enlargement. Look you well to your integrity, and the Lord will look to your prosperity. The way of faith is not a common turnpike road, which every careless traveller may traverse without care or study.

Note well that the Lord would not only find them a way, but, at the same time, overthrow their enemies. You have come up out of Egypt, O young believer, but the taskmasters are at your heels! There may come a decisive moment, after which they shall never pursue you again. Those who seek your soul are to be destroyed, so that there shall not be one of them left. I believe that many a young convert hates sin, and hates all evil habits, but these evils keep dogging his footsteps, and seem as if they would master him; and then there comes a time of great struggle and tremendous battling without and within; on that he fights the matter out. It is a triumphant thing when a man gets clean away from the world, and is reckoned as dead to it. He has burnt his boats, and has landed on the shore, from which he never can go back again, but must fight out the battle against sin even to the end. When a man is sworn into the army of Christ for eternity, and the world has cast him out, there is nothing for him but to go right ahead. Everything that he has is now staked on the cross of Christ. Happy man to have come to such a pass—to be once for all crucified to the world, and the world crucified to him!

One Desperate Field

Remember, also, dear friends, that when these people were thought to be hopelessly entangled, they were about to see the Lord perform for them a work which would be most helpful to their ultimate conquest of Canaan; for when Pharaoh and his chariots were drowned in the sea, Palestine heard of it, and all the natives thereof began to tremble. That day in which a convert has to fight out the battle once for all with himself shall give him strength for all future conflict, and smooth his pathway into the land that flows with milk and honey. You must not think, young Christian, because you are saved from guilt, that everything is done, and the warfare ended! There is a life-long conflict for you before you obtain possession of your inheritance; and, it may be that, if now, when you are in special trouble, you are found faithful, all the rest of the road will be cleared from similar troubles. Now shall the Egyptians be drowned in the sea.

Why had the Lord led the people so far if he would not help them still? Do I hear some one say, "I fear that I shall never get out of my difficulties"? Yet you believe that the Lord has brought you out from the dominion of Satan? Tell me, has God brought you so far to let you perish? He has broken off the yoke of sin; he has given you a hope in Christ, and you are a changed man. Do you think that he would do all this for you, and then leave you? Come, my brother, has of Egypt, by the precious blood of the Lamb, that you should die in the wilderness? Do you believe that Jesus has redeemed you to let you be lost after all? If he has set you on the way to the eternal inheritance, he will surely bring you into it. God is never defeated or turned aside. "He shall not fail nor be discouraged." Comfort one another, therefore, with such words as these.

The Lord Brought You Out

If you, my friend, will come and cast yourself on Christ, and take him to be your Saviour once for all, he will save you now with an everlasting salvation. He saith, "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life." Jesus himself has said it, "I give unto my sheep eternal life; and they shall never perish, neither shall any man pluck them out of my hand." Believe for this with heroic faith. Believe for eternal salvation in Jesus Christ, who is able to work in you a lifelong escape from sin. According to your faith, so shall it be. Oh, no. The devil may say that we are entangled in the land, the wilderness has shut us in; but we shall get out of the labyrinth right enough. Is it not written; "Sin shall not have dominion over you: for ye are not under the law, but under grace"? We shall yet sing unto the Lord who hath triumphed gloriously. Our sins and our fears hath he thrown into the sea. So be it. Hallelujah! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

The Luxury of the Empire.*

ONE of the ladies of the palace of the Empress Josephine, Madame de Remusat, said, "I seem to be recalling a dream, but a dream resembling an Oriental tale, when I describe the lavish luxury of that period, the disputes for precedence, the claims of rank, the demands of everyone." Yes, in all that there was something dream-like, and the actors in that famous spectacle which is called the empire, that great show-piece with its scenery now brilliant, now terrible, but ever changing, must have been even more astonished than the spectators.

Court Trivialities.

In essentials all courts are alike. On a greater or smaller scale they are rank with the same pettinesses, the same chattering gossip, the same trivial squabbles as the porter's lodge, ante-chambers, and servants' quarters. If we examine these things from the standpoint of a philosopher, we shall find but little difference between a steward and a chamberlain, between a chambermaid and a lady of the palace. We may go further and say that as soon as they have places and money at their disposal, republicans have courtesies as much as monarchs, and everywhere and always there are to be found people ready to bow low if there is anything on the ground that they can pick up. Revolutions alter the form of Government, but not the human heart; afterwards, as before there exist the same pretensions, the same prejudices, the same flatteries. The incense may be burned before a tribune, a dictator, or a Caesar, there are always the same flattering genuflections, the same cringing.

* From The Court of the Empress Josephine. By Imbert de Saint-Amand. Translated by Thomas Sergeant Perry. The historian in this volume brings the history of this unhappy woman down to the period when the suggestions of divorce were made to her by men in her husband's confidence, but still repudiated by herself. It was the period of her glory, but the time of her most torturing anxiety, for the shadow of that senseless and bootless crime grew more ominous from year to year. It is a volume of thrilling interest and historical value. Pp. 334; price, $1.25; published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Josephine's Anxieties.

At that time, Josephine was anxiously wondering whether she was to be crowned. Her brothers-in-law became more venomous in their intrigues against her, and desired not only that she be excluded from any part in the coronation, but also that she should be condemned to divorce. Joseph Bonaparte was never tired of saying that Napoleon ought to marry some foreign princess, or, at least, some daughter of an old French family, and he skilfully laid stress on his own unselfishness in urging a plan which would necessarily remove himself and his descendants from the line of inheritance. The Emperor's sisters showed the same hostility toward Josephine, whom they hated, though she well deserved their love. Since Napoleon maintained an absolute silence as to his intentions concerning the coronation, the Bonapartes already imagined that she was going to be divorced, and hence exhibited an untimely delight which displeased the Emperor and brought him closer to his wife. At last, tired with family bickerings, he suddenly put an end to them and filled Josephine with joy by telling her that she was to be crowned at Notre Dame.

Contrasts in a Palace.

The Palace of Fontainebleau, where the Pope and Emperor were then living in triumph, was later to be to both an accursed spot. The Pope was to return to it a prisoner, maltreated though old, and there the Emperor was to drink the cup of despair, of humiliation to the dregs. It was there that conquered, broken, betrayed by fortune, he was to sign his abdication. It was there that he was to utter those heartrending words: "It is right; I have received what I deserved. I wanted no statues, for I knew that there was no safety in receiving them from any other hands than those of posterity. A man to keep them while he lives, needs constant good fortune. I think of France, which it is terrible to leave in this state, without frontiers when it had such wide ones! That is the bitterest of the humiliations that overwhelm me. To leave France so small when I wished to leave it so great!" It was there that, overcome by immeasurable grief, the conqueror of so many battles wished to seek in suicide a refuge from the tortures of thought, and that he was to fail to find death, he who on the battle-field had squandered so many lives.

The Coronation.

There had been a long negotiation at Rome to ascertain whether the Emperor would be crowned by the Pope or would crown himself. The question was left uncertain, and Napoleon had said that he would settle it himself at Notre Dame when the time came. Still Pius VII. was fully convinced that he was going to place the crown on the sovereign's head. He had handed him the ring, the sword, the cloak, the hand of justice, the sceptre, and was about to do the same thing with the crown. But the Emperor, who had ascended the last step of the altar, and was following every motion of the Pope, grasped from his hands the sign of sovereign power and proudly placed it on his own head. The Pope, outwitted and surprised, made no attempt at resistance. After thus crowning himself, Napoleon proceeded to crown the Empress. This was the most solemn moment in Josephine's life; the moment which dispelled all her incessant dread of divorce, the brilliant verification of her fondest hopes, the completion of her triumph. Napoleon advanced with emotion to this companion of his happiest days to the woman who had brought him happiness; she was kneeling before him, shedding tears of joy and gratitude, with her hands clasped and trembling. He recalled all that he owed her: his happiness for thanks to her he had been blessed with a requited love; his glory, for it was she who in 1796, had secured for him the command of the army of Italy, the origin of all his triumphs. He must have been glad at this moment that he had not followed his brother's malicious suggestions and had not separated from his dear Josephine. He thought her more gracious, more touching, more lovable than ever, and it was without an outburst of happiness that he placed the imperial diadem on her charming and cherished head.

THE LATE MR. A. M. MACKAY.

THE LATE MR. A. M. MACKAY.

THOUGH for some six years past the name of this intrepid pioneer missionary has been familiar alike to the religious public, and to all who are interested in African exploration, very little was known of him apart from his labors and perils. So much however was known of those, and so intense was the admiration of his courage and devotion, that a more than ordinarily cordial welcome will be given to the brief biography by his sister, which has just been published by Messrs. A. C. Armstrong & Son of New York. It tells us what we were most desirous of knowing about his personal character and private life, for the study of the character of a man so noble, so self-sacrificing as Mackay was known to be, cannot fail to have an inspiring influence on the student.

As a portrait of Mr. Mackay and a sketch of his labors in Uganda, appeared in this journal immediately after the intelligence of his death was received, we simply add to the matter then accessible a brief resume of the new facts contained in the biography, and heartily commend the book itself to the perusal of all our readers.

Alexander M. Mackay was born October 13, 1849, in the little Scotch manse of Rhynie, near Aberdeen. His father, the Free Church minister of the parish, was an ardent student, and during the long winters, when extensive parochial visiting was impossible, he devoted his attention to scientific pursuits. That he was a scholar of no small attainments is evident from the fact that among his personal friends and correspondents were such men as Hugh Miller, Sir Roderick I. Murchison, Professor Piazza Smythe, and Mr. A. Keith Johnston, the famous geographer. Until the attainment of his fifteenth year the boy had no instructor but his father, and could not have had a better one. He was then sent to the grammar school at Aberdeen, where he made rapid progress. His intensely practical turn of mind was already manifested, for his holidays were spent in visits to a shipbuilding yard, to a carding mill and to a photographic studio, in all of which he gained knowledge, which afterward was turned to useful account in his missionary work in Africa.

A GROUP OF MR. MACKAY'S CONVERTS IN UGANDA.

The turning-point in his life came with his mother's death, which occurred while he was at school. She had been deeply concerned about his spiritual welfare, and had offered many prayers for his conversion. Her last gift to him, left in his sister's hands, was accompanied by a dying message. It was the Bible which her husband had given her on her wedding-day, and her message was an appeal to him to search it diligently. His sister gave him the message and the book, and added her own entreaties to those of the lips then silent in death. Twelve years afterward he wrote to his sister from Uganda, "You have more to do with my coming out to Africa than you know of."

He chose the profession of civil-engineering as his vocation, and labored hard to fit himself for success in it. During his study, however, he was an earnest teacher in the Sunday School and in the Ragged Schools established by Dr. Guthrie, in Edinburgh. In 1873, he went to Berlin to study, supporting himself by working as a draughtsman in the School of Engineering at Moabit, and there, too, he found time for religious work. It was while he was in Berlin that the idea of giving himself to missionary work took deep root in his mind. He believed that Mohammedanism had achieved its triumphs by giving to savage peoples a higher civilization than they had, and that Christianity could win its way by a like principle. He felt sure that, as a civil-engineer, he would be of immense value to a people who did not know how to develop their territory, and while helping them would have opportunity of preaching the Gospel. He learned that the Church Missionary Society needed just such a man as he to take charge of a settlement for liberated slaves at Mombasa. He would have to superintend the making of roads, the erection of buildings, and above all, be able to give spiritual instruction to the benighted people. Mackay promptly offered himself. The Society however, had already engaged a man for the post at Mombasa, but Mackay's qualifications and his self-sacrificing spirit were so fully appreciated that he was offered the still more difficult position at Uganda. This he accepted, and in November, 1878, he arrived on his field of labor.

How he won the confidence of the semi-maniac king; how he remained in the country after Bishop Hannington had been murdered, and all his own seven companions had fallen victims either to the king or the climate; how he labored on, teaching the people, in daily peril of death, and how, finally, he laid down his life in the Master's cause—we have already told in these pages. For the complete story, in all its beautiful details, so pathetically told by his beloved sister we must refer our readers to her book.

THE WESLEY CENTENARY.

The Centennial Anniversary of the Death of John Wesley, on March 2, 1791.

THE centennial anniversary which was celebrated on Monday last, appeals probably to more hearts than any that has been commemorated by this generation. It was a hundred years ago on March 2nd, that the great and good man, whose quaint portrait, engraved from an old print, appears on the next page, passed from the scene of his labors. What those labors did under the blessing of God for this world, none can fully realize. Their fruits have multiplied in every generation that has followed, and the great religious denomination which sprang from them is at this day one of the most zealous, the most enthusiastic and the most aggressive of those which are laboring for Christ in the world. Methodists, as a class, believe in Christ and his atoning work as the one sure means of the redemption of the world, and without diverting their attention to the discussions which are disturbing other denominations, follow the example of the great apostle, and know nothing among men save Jesus Christ and him crucified. Their system of church government, which is a model of administrative organization, their energy and their munificence, render their Church one of the greatest factors at this day in the evangelization of the world. It is, therefore, a fitting thing that this centenary should be celebrated, not by Methodists only, but by all men who love the Lord Jesus, and offer the prayer, "Thy kingdom come."

The facts of John Wesley's life and work are familiar to all Christian readers. It is necessary here, therefore, only briefly to recapitulate some of the most prominent. He was born on June 17, 1703, in the little country rectory of Epworth, in Lincolnshire, England, a picture of which is here given. He was one of nineteen children with whom the good rector and his wife were blessed. John was trained at the Charterhouse and at Oxford University, was ordained a clergyman of the Church of England, and for a time acted as his father's curate at Wroote and Epworth. Subsequently (in 1735), he crossed the Atlantic and labored as a missionary in Georgia. In 1737 he returned to England. In May of the following year he experienced such an enlightenment that he declared he had never been really a Christian before. He soon afterward commenced open-air preaching, and the other evangelistic efforts which brought upon him the persecution of Bishop Warburton and the clergy. Many churches were closed against him, but Wesley rented an old building in London which the Government had erected for the casting of cannon, and which in his hands became the famous "Foundry," a classic name in Methodist annals. The City Road Chapel, a picture of which appears here, eventually superseded the "Foundry" as the headquarters of the new denomination. It was here that his remains lay in state for several days after the valiant soldier of Christ, worn out with labor and persecution, had passed to his reward.

The Birth-place of John Wesley.

City Road Chapel, London.

In the talkativeness of the first hours of a journey that comes usually from the excitement of getting under way, the young ladies discussed various plans for the enjoyment of their life in Rome.

"We don't want society," said Carolyn; "we have enough of that in London."

"My fazzer and ze Count prefair me to be varee quiet," said Marie. "Zey vill be glad to have me lairn somezing. Zey both say zat ze convent schools teach nozzing—nozzing; and I cannot see vy zey send me zere," dropping her hands despairingly.

"We'll learn all we can, my pet," said Margaret, encouragingly. "You will be a wise, little woman, by the time the Count gets you.

"Now, Christianity is kindness and tolerance, or it is nothing. We must make up our minds to prove ourselves actual disciples of Christ by ignoring any little remarks that any of the party may make clashing with our notions. We know and love each other well after our three months together in London. Like wise husbands and wives, we will not be hurt, no matter what might be said from each other's point of view." They all assented. "A woman's sensibilities are her strength," Margaret went on, "and also her weakness. When we learn to use our feelings for good, and, at the same time, keep them out from under foot, we are equal to any emergency. This trip will give us good practice."

"Si, si," said Camilla, while the others looked solemnly and quizzically puzzled.

"I wonder if we could agree to have family prayer?" queried Margaret. "That is what we call our domestic worship, in America. My mother always insisted upon it; and since I have been alone, I have kept it up with my guests and people."

"Margaret is the Head of the Church—the chief Pontiff," said Camilla.

"You can use my prayer-book, if you like," said Carolyn.

"Or mine," said Marie. "Zen I would not forever forget ze Saints' days."

"Perhaps," said Margaret, "it will be best for us to read the Bible, one of us, aloud. Then repeat together our Lord's Prayer; and after that, for a few minutes each, pray in silence in whatever form best suits her conscience. In the Bible God speaks to us; and it is more important that we heed his words, than that we address him in a particular form of speech."

The next morning our four southward-flitting birds threw off the meshes of the dream-net, shook out their wings, smoothed their plumage, chirruped their merry good-mornings, and were ready, each in her corner of the compartment, to note the unusual things to be seen from the car windows. Their train was winding about along a way surveyed for it by a river, one of those natural engineers, into the very heart of the Alps.

Later in the day there were tunnels after tunnels, and at length a prolonged darkness.

"Mt. Cenis at last, I verily believe," said Carolyn, who had carefully studied out, and duly announced every hamlet and ruin from Baedeker.

Soon after Mt. Cenis, came glimpses of hill-side vineyards. Villages at the foot of the mountains across the valley, and a river dashing along two or three hundred feet below.

"Come, girls," said Carolyn, "a penny for your thoughts. I am sure you must have done a lot of fine thinking."

"I would know ve vere in Italie," and Marie showed daintily her even, white teeth, "by ze

ROMA.

A NEW SERIAL STORY,

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c.

(Continued from page 126.)

En Route for Rome.

AFTER seeing the maids well settled in a second-class compartment, Queen Margaret proceeded with her little party to a similar one in the next coach. Camilla demurred because she feared that the others, though they could well afford first-class accommodations, were going second-class on account of her own short purse. Carolyn demurred also. "Why—eh—to be sure—we think nothing of going second-class at home—but—it is different on the Continent—you know."

When the train was under way, Margaret explained that the "sleepers" were quite unlike those at home; and after due consideration she and Marie, who had been commissioned to buy the tickets, had concluded that with plenty of wraps, they could spend the two nights quite comfortably in a second-class compartment; and without damage to their health or self-respect.

"We can change to first-class at any station," she said. "Shall we?" As no one felt like taking the responsibility of so doing, she went on: "By this means we save about a hundred dollars—twenty pounds of your money, Lyn. And now, girls, let's have the fun of giving away our little savings. I shall claim the right to pay Camilla's share, as it was my whim. What shall we do with it?"

There was a hum of gentle propositions, in which figured the names of sundry convent schools, charity chapels, girls' parlors, etc. Like all deliberative bodies, they waited for the "cut and dried" plan which somebody who has the thing most at heart, has taken pains to make. So as the train sped on, Margaret aired her enthusiasm for the evangelization of Italy, especially of its army, and for the Bible as the chief agent. So it was decided that the hundred dollars should be put into Bibles to be distributed by the Military Church in Rome. The others were glad to have her settle the matter, though they failed to see the consistency between her hatred of war, and her taking the Soldiers' Church as a fad.

Rev. John Wesley, Died March 2, 1791.

About our studies, girls; suppose we plan to be each as independently industrious as possible. Each to go at her own sweet will through a church, or museum, or book, without bothering herself about the rest. Two, or even three of us, may start off on such an expedition without discourtesy. We have all been brought up so differently, there will be no earthly use in our trying to be all pleased with the same thing at the same time."

"Si, si," said Camilla. She had plenty of will of her own, yet from the glow in her pleasant eyes, it was plain that what pleased Margaret would be her choice.

"Now about a more important matter," bits of color. Ze boy viz ze scarlet cap, ze girl viz ze red and green kerchief over her head, ze donkee viz ze bright tassel. Italian love gay, strong colors, as vell as my own people."

"And what have you been thinking about, Lyn?" asked Margaret.

"O, plenty of things. Did you notice how they shingle their cottages with stones, and back them up the side hill, usually about a big church?"

"Making the best of hard circumstances," said Margaret, "as your Londoners do with their resolute cheerfulness in a fog."

"Ah—yes—but what were you thinking of, cousin?"

"O, a good many things—too preachy to tell. Tunnels mainly. Not a cheerful topic."

"Ve must have ze sermon," insisted Marie. Margaret shook her head.

"The Queen must set a good example," said Camilla.

"Well, then; the tunnels set me thinking of the discipline by which my Heavenly Father has rid me of my selfish ambitions. I think the hardest trials have been like the tunnels by which you reach the St. Gothard Pass. There are seven of them in which the train describes a circle. It rumbles away in the dark, on a straight line for all you can tell: but you find that it goes up over a hundred feet in each loop. By those spiral climbs you get over the mountain."

"And must ve climb toward ze heaven zat way?" asked Marie, anxiously.

"What little climbing I have done has been by tunnelling through mountains of selfishness," replied Margaret. "Tunnel after tunnel, discipline after discipline, till we come to a Mt. Cenis, that seems as though it would never end. We would certainly suffocate in the gloom. When we die to self and the world, we come out into an Italy of assured, restful, happy Christian life."

Camilla kept back a sigh that threatened to become a sob; and then the sunshine rippled over her face again. Snatching her friend's hand to her lips she whispered, "Our Queen will find her summer in Italy."

"You haven't told me what you were thinking about, Camilla," said the persistent Carolyn.

"How could I think?" asked the Italian laughing. "We have just met the spring climbing the Alps from Italy; and my heart is singing with the birds, and dancing with the daffodils."

They changed cars in Turin. Their compartment door stood open, while they waited for the train to start. A tricky, little whiff of air snatched Camilla's handkerchief, and let it flutter down on the platform, directly before a couple of gentlemen who were pacing back and forth. One of them captured the trifling, little truant, and returned it to Camilla, raising his hat with an easy grace that would have become the habitue of a king's court. He seemed not to glance into the compartment; but he saw that there were three other young ladies, all foreigners, and his eyes claimed kinship with his country-woman welcoming her back to Italy.

"A supairb bow," said Marie, when his ears were at a safe distance.

"He speaks beautifully," said Camilla. Her ear had taken in thirstily a word of his speech as he passed. "The Tuscan language in Roman lips.

Our beautiful tongue.' Oh, our beautiful tongue!"

"He's fine looking," said Carolyn.

"If he were an Englishman," said her cousin teasingly, "he would be atrociously handsome. Did you notice his magnificent forehead, and how his glossy, black curls set off his complexion?"

"His nose is sure to be big, if he is a Roman," said Carolyn.

"Roman noses are hard to conquer," remarked Margaret. "The one that gentleman wears would have fitted Julius Cæsar. I don't exactly like his eyes, though. You can't see down into them one inch. You never could tell what was coming next, sunshine, or lightning. Now look at that American walking beside him, his jaunty little felt hat set back of his head, and his hair tumbled off his forehead. You can see straight down through his open, honest, generous eyes into his big soul. He looks crude, and loosely put together, beside your Italian, as if when they made him, they had so large an order to fill, they could not spend much time with the joints and finishing: but you wouldn't be afraid to trust that man to the world's end."

Camilla's face clouded over. "Your Americans cannot be more generous than my Italians. They have always been free. They have not been forever obliged to choose between liberty and the dungeon on one hand, and ecclesiastical tyranny on the other. It spoils the eyes to look two ways at once." Then she added, in a whisper, and in her own tongue, "They have not had a faith that soars to Heaven and sinks to the depths of Hell!"

"What do you think he is, girls?" asked Carolyn. "He belongs to the stage or opera, doesn't he?"

"A nobleman," said Marie.

"A scholar," said Margaret. "What is he, Camilla?"

"How can I tell?"

"But what do you think?"

"I think he has been a priest, and is not now."

At that moment the two gentlemen, Italian and American, passed near the compartment door. The Roman was pouring forth a torrent of round, smooth, liquid vocables, gesticulating in that quick, graceful manner, that makes every muscle of every finger contribute to the emphasis. As they passed, Camilla caught the words, "The liberties of the Italian people." She had first heard that phrase, lying in her father's arms, her curly head tucked under his whiskers, her eyes fixed on the deep, prophetic face of Mazzini. They came to mean volumes to her during the terrible stress and strain of the long, troubled years. She glanced up; and her eyes blazing with the dark fire of patriotism, met those of the stranger. It was as if one beacon light had flashed to another, across a wild glen, a gleam of victory.

Alas, Uncle John! You should never have given consent for those misguided, young women to venture forth from under your protecting wing. But, after all, what difference would it have made, if you had been sitting in that very compartment, that very hour? Even an Englishman must yield to the inevitable.

Margaret saw the glance; and a sentence upon which the changes are rung in the Boston lectures on matrimony, buzzed through her head. "They looked into each other's eyes."

"He moves with the grace of a Roman senator," said Carolyn, "with his cloak thrown over his shoulder like a toga; though of course," she added, fearing that the precise facts might not bear out her statement, "one does not know exactly how Roman senators did move, never having seen them in actual life."

"Ze cloak is more graceful zan ze overcoat," remarked Marie, as the train began to move.

"So the sculptors think," said Margaret. "A novelist would as soon patronize a pug-nosed, cross-eyed, hunch-back for a heroine, as a sculptor attempt a fine effect with tailor-made garments."

"The Italians have natural grace," remarked Carolyn.

"How can they help it?" asked Margaret. "Anybody would catch the trick of being gracefully statuesque, if he could look upon masterpieces of draped dignity, every time he went to market."

(To be Continued.)

CONSUMPTION

in its early stages
can be cured
by the prompt use of

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

It soothes
the inflamed tissues,
aids expectoration,
and hastens
recovery.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.
Lowell, Mass.

200,000

Estey Organs have been sold in the last fifty years.

An enormous number! No other Organ has been so popular. No other Organ has had such a sale.

We want to secure the best conception of 200,000 Organs. We ask some reader of this paper to give us an illustration of the number 200,000 which will show how great it is.

Here is one specimen illustration.

"Light travels 200,000 miles a second."

If some power should convey an organ to the sun with the speed of light, and there leave it, returning without loss of time for a new organ, and so continuing until all had been thus delivered, it would require six years, even at this inconceivable speed."

This is a good illustration. Perhaps you can do better. Will you not try?

ESTEY ORGAN CO., Brattleboro', Vt.

Branch Offices: { 159 Tremont Street, Boston.
831 Broadway, New York.
18 North 7th Street, Philadelphia.
State and Jackson Streets, Chicago.
916 Olive Street, St. Louis.
Marietta and Broad Sts., Atlanta, Ga.

An interesting Book of Facts (containing 24 pages with 46 illustrations) entitled, How Large is 200,000, will be mailed free; one copy to one address.

March April May

Are the best months in which to purify your blood. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost, and just now the system craves the aid of a reliable medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling. It increases in popularity every year, for it is the ideal spring medicine.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, 41; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar.

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It In The House.

Dropped on Sugar, Children Love to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

SCOTT'S

EMULSION

DOES CURE

CONSUMPTION

In its First Stages.

Be sure you get the genuine.

"Maybee was ne'er a gude honey-bee."
May be you use

SAPOLIO!

May be you don't! Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap. Try it in house-cleaning.

Better than Tea and Coffee for the Nerves

VAN HOUTEN'S COCOA

The Original--Most Soluble.

Ask your Grocer for it, take noother. 165

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school, science lessons, stories, games, occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers and mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Alice E. Stockham & Co., 161 LaSalle St., Chicago.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

AGENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly. Should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PURCHASING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

THE TRACT ON THE TEMPLE WALL.

MR. T. S. BOTHAM, a missionary, writing from Fung-tsiang, observes: "We had one instance of what a single tract can do, even in China, toward making known the Gospel. At a village near Lin-yui-Hien, we were surprised to find the people had an intelligent knowledge of the outlines of the Gospel. I asked them what they had heard, and they took me to see a tract pasted on the wall of a temple. They did not know how it came there, but I afterward learned that Mr. Bland had passed through early one morning, and not seeing anyone about, pasted up a tract and went on his journey. It is a very common sight to see our tracts pasted on walls of temples, and in villages, but a rare thing to find one tract having so great an influence. We spent two days in that village, and though the people were so busy with their harvest that we could only get a short time with them, many learnt the way of salvation more perfectly. The work in Fung-tsiang is still against wind and tide. Though here a little open opposition now, there is much to remind us that we are only as sheep among wolves. We have made some friends, and there are many interested in the Gospel, but the opposition of the officials is almost vicious, though, as they suppose, concealed from us."

SAVED BY A TEAR.

"GETTING into a railway carriage near a certain town in England, I observed a young fellow attentively reading the Bible. His hair being suspiciously short, marked him as a rail-bird 'growing his feathers.' Venturing to ask why he took such an interest in the Work of God, he volunteered the following story: 'In a moment of temptation I fell, was tried and sentenced to a term of penal servitude. There was in the prison a young assistant chaplain whose duties took him past the cell where I was at work. His look of sympathy always cheered me; and, though his duties did not allow him to visit the prisoners in that cell, I often saw him looking kindly at me. Once I saw a tear on his cheek. I felt I could die for that man, and I wondered what I could do to please him, the thought struck me that he would be pleased to see me reading my Bible. The next morning, when he passed by my half-open cell door, he looked in, saw me reading, and smiled. I continued to read regularly, discovered my condition is a lost sinner, trembled, on further study found the Saviour, and then rejoiced. I have never spoken to that young clergyman, nor does he know of my change of heart, but I

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP FOR CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE GUMS. REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS PAIN. CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

owe my conversion to the tear on his cheek, which led me to search the Scriptures. I was discharged from prison this morning, and am now going home to my dear old mother in the village of N—. We draw a veil over that meeting and the happiness of parent and child, although we did not leave him till we saw him enfolded in those arms of love, and then went on our way."

CHRIST UNDER WATER.

THE Rev. C. H. Spurgeon says: "At a prayer-meeting a brother exclaimed, 'O Lord, I bless thee that I have enjoyed thy presence on the water, and in the water, and under the water.' A friend thought this a singular remark, and so he followed the good man, and sought an explanation. 'Why,' said the brother, 'I was once a sailor, and I found the Lord with me on the water in many a voyage; I was wrecked, and he was my Friend in the water; and after that I became a diver, and, blessed be his name, the Lord Jesus has been precious to me when I have been fathoms down.' Where can a believer be cast in Providence, and find it impossible to abide in fellowship with his Lord?"

Cut this out

With your name and place of residence written on the dotted lines below.

If you will do this and send it to Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa., you will get by return mail, a Book of 200 pages filled with the names, address, and signed indorsements of many well known Divines, College Presidents, and other professional men and women who have been restored to health and strength by the use of Drs. STARKEY & PALEN'S COMPOUND OXYGEN.

You will get this Book FREE OF CHARGE.

Name _____

Place of residence _____

Clipped from the CHRISTIAN HERALD.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES

And make it easy for you to buy of us no matter where you live.

$35 ORGANS
$500

$150
PIANOS
$1500

Yes, my dear, your Marchal & Smith Piano is a delightful one, the tone is so sweet and pure, the action so fairy-like, and the finish so elegant that nothing is left to wish for. Their Organs, too, are as sweet and beautiful as their Pianos.

I wrote and told them just what I wanted, and they sent it to me, agreeing to take it back and pay the freight both ways if I did not like it, but I could not be better pleased if I had a thousand to choose from. They send their catalogue free to every one who wishes to buy.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, New York.

Taking Things Easy is simply taking Pearline to do your work. In the laundry or about the house it is a servant in itself. It takes away drudgery as well as dirt; it brings comfort as well as cleanliness. You can use it on anything with safety; you can use it on everything with profit.

Beware

of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them. PEARLINE sells on its merits, and is manufactured only by JAMES PYLE, New York.

Special Offering

—OF—

SILKS THIS WEEK.

ON THE MAIN FLOOR:

A beautiful assortment of our $2.50 quality of Colored Faille Francaise, $1.50 per yard.

IN THE BASEMENT:

300 pieces of Figured China Silks, in Black and Colored Grounds, 27 inches wide, at 75 cents per yard. Their actual value is $1.25.

Several hundred pieces, various designs and colorings, at 60 cents and 65 cents per yard, worth $1.

James McCreery & Co

Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

Perfect Fitting Dresses.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An Invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

The Breath of Spring is in the Air.

Time to practice EASTER MUSIC, is it not?

Send for our Fine List of Carols, Anthems, &c., or for Easter Alleluias [5 cts., 50 cts. per doz.] Rosabel, or Our Easter Offering [15 cts., $1.44 doz.] a Cantata by Lewis.

MUSICAL SOCIETIES

should wind up the season by practicing such Cantatas as Don Munio [$1.50, $13.50 doz.], Wreck of Hesperus [35 cts., $2.40 doz.], 91st Psalm [60 cts., $5.40 doz.], Ballard. [Send for our list of 150 Cantatas.]

FAIRS AND EXHIBITIONS

are made successful by introducing easy Cantatas, like Dairy Maid's Supper [20 cts., $1.80 doz.], Lewis, or Garden of Singing Flowers [40 cts., $3.60 doz.], or Rainbow Festival [20 cts., $1.80 doz.], Lewis.

BOYS and GIRLS

who sing will be delighted to take part in the brilliant flower cantata, New Flora's Festival [40 cts., $3.60 doz.], New Flower Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.], Kingdom of Mother Goose [25 cts., $2.18 doz.], Gipsey Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.]. Send for lists.

Much attractive Exhibition Music is found in School Collections.

Children's School Songs [35 cts., $3.60 doz.], Golden Boat [50 cts.], charming action songs by Mrs. L. O. Chant, First Steps in Song Reading [30 cts., $3.00 doz.].

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

New Easter Music!

CHRIST EXALTED. A Service for Easter Sunday. Choir: familiar Hymns for the Congregation; new Choruses; appropriate Bible Readings; the whole carefully arranged for the Festival of the Resurrection, by the Rev. ROBERT LOWRY. 16 pages.

ANNUAL No. 15. An eight page collection of splendid Carols for Sunday Schools, Easter Festivals, by our popular authors. Price of either of the above, 5 cents each by mail: $4.00 per 100 by express, not prepaid. Any previous issue supplied at same price.

Send for Special Catalogue of Easter Anthems for your Choir.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
81 Randolph Street, Chicago. 76 East 9th St., N. Y.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK.
American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct., Boston, St. Louis.

MUSIC SELF TAUGHT

PROF. RICE'S SELF-TEACHING SYSTEM. All can learn music without the aid of a teacher. Rapid, Correct. Established 12 Years. Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, Harmony. Send stamp for Music Journal. Circulars free. Address G. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 243 State St., Chicago.

MY THREE-FOLD REST.

I.

"Come unto Me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."—Matt. 11 : 28.

FROM sin and sins, dear Lord I rest—
Altar and Priest and Sacrifice Thou art;
By law and sin no more oppress,
I share in Thy beatitude a part.
My yesterdays are covered by Thy blood;
To-day my only shelter is Thy power;
To-morrow Thou wilt be as strong and good
As in the past most gracious hour.

II.

"Take My yoke upon you, and learn of Me : for I am meek and lowly in heart ; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—Matt. 9 : 28.

I rest by serving at Thy will—
Thy yoke is easy and Thy burden light;
And peace grows deep and deeper still,
As my obedience proves Thy might.
I hold my powers alone for Thee—
Use them in loving errands of Thy grace;
And calm me, though I may not see Thy methods, as before Thy face.

III.

"There remaineth, therefore, a rest to the people of God."—Heb. 4 : 9.

And yet the noblest rest remains
In sweet reserve for hope and love;
It hath no place for sighs or pains,
'Tis kept a glad surprise above.
Oh, rest untroubled and serene,
In Thy bright presence, spotless Lamb!
Fit me each day, by every scene
For robe and harp, for crown and palm.
—Stone.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The tortures of dyspepsia and sick headache, the sufferings of scrofula, the agonizing itch and pain of salt rheum, the disagreeable symptoms of catarrh are removed by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

A Prize Seed Advertisement.

The adv't last week headed, "Only Good Seeds Bring Forth Good Crops," was awarded the first prize of $50.00 cash by W. Atlee Burpee & Co., the Philadelphia Seedsmen. In competition for the prize offered, 689 advertisements were received. The advertisement in well worth a careful reading and will be followed the next three weeks by three other successful prize advertisements, all of which are novel in display and conservative in expression; they are well worth attention as being the emanations of some of the best minds in this country on the subject.

In ordering any of the seeds advertised, or in writing for Burpee's Farm Annual for 1891, you will confer a favor, both upon the advertisers and upon ourselves, by naming this paper.

After La Grippe USE WILBOR'S PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Almost as palatable as cream. It can be taken with pleasure by delicate persons and children, who, after using it, are very fond of it. It assimilates with the food, increases the flesh and appetite, builds up the nervous system, restores energy to mind and body, creates new, rich, and pure blood,—in fact, rejuvenates the whole system.

FLESH, NERVE, BLOOD, BRAIN.

Be sure, as you value your health, get the genuine. Manufactured only by Dr. A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. 31-2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label). Palmer, Mass.

DR. TALMAGE says : "A great deal of sorrow is caused to young hearts and old by the thought that Christmas comes but once a year," but he continues, "why not extend the glorious season of joy, gladness and good-will throughout the year?" This beautiful thought has been brought rather forcibly to our attention of late by the hundreds of letters we daily receive, asking for "Christmas Boxes." What! Christmas Boxes in March, the idea! who ever heard of hanging up stockings in the Spring-time? But then the people have to use soap the year round and nearly twice as much is used in summer as in winter—you wouldn't think that—would you? But it is a fact, and if folks want "Sweet Home" Soap and wish to make the whole household merry with lots of useful, pretty, valuable and ornamental things, why not do it now as well as in December? and so we extend "Our Mammoth Christmas Box" offer for a limited time. Another thing! There was such an awful rush of orders last Christmas that some of our friends did not get the goods as soon as they expected. It aint so now, you can have the Mammoth Christmas Box when you want it. Better order at once.

Very Soapfully Yours,
J. D. LARKIN & CO.,
Factories: Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Sts., BUFFALO, N. Y.

- Our Mammoth Christmas Box! -

OUR object in getting up this Mammoth "Christmas" Box is to introduce to the American people our "Sweet Home" Family Soap and fine Toilet Articles. They are the purest, best, and most satisfactory whether made in this country or England; every one who uses them once becomes our permanent customer. We propose a new departure in the soap trade and will sell direct from our factory to the consumer, spending the money usually allowed for expenses of traveling men, wholesale and retail dealers' profits, in handsome and valuable presents to those who order at once.

Our goods are made for the select family trade, and will not be sold to dealers, and to induce people to give them a trial, we accompany each case with all of the useful and valuable presents named.

The "Christmas Box" will make 100,000 boys, girls, men and women, old and young, happy; because it contains the greatest lot of Christmas Presents ever seen for the money. Beautiful things! Something for every one in the family, father—mother—all of the boys and girls—the baby—and hired girl. Such fun opening the box you never heard of. It is a great surprise to all who get it. It contains so many of the very things every one wishes to receive. Nowhere can such liberality be found.

We do not ask you to remit in advance, nor run any risks, nor take any chances. We merely ask permission to ship to you a box of these goods, and if after 30 day's trial you are fully convinced that the soap is all we claim, and the extras all we advertise, you can then pay the bill. But if you are not satisfied in every way, no charge will be made for what you have used. How can we do more?

To Get the Box simply write your name and address on a postal card and mail to us and we will ship you the goods on 30 day's trial, and you are under no obligations to keep the box if it does not in every way meet your expectations. We know the great value of our articles, and are willing to put them to the severest kind of a test, hence will send you the box on 30 day's trial and if not satisfactory will remove it.

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it, but if readers of this paper remit in advance we will place in the box in addition to all the other extras a valuable present for the lady of the house. Articles that are near and dear to the heart of every woman, and that she will be proud of for years to come.

Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn.

Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the box does not prove all they expect. Price of box complete, $6.00.

LIST OF CONTENTS.

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (full size) "SWEET HOME" FAMILY SOAP, enough to last an average family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes, and has no superior.

6 BOXES BORAXINE, (large size) for cleaning wood-work, washing dishes, dairy utensils, removing grease spots or stains from carpets, etc., or general house-cleaning, has no equal. Saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it. Remember BORAXINE is nothing but a fine quality of Soap and Borax pulverized together. It is pleasant for the hands and cannot injure the finest fabrics.

One-Fourth Dozen Modjeska Complexion Soap.

An exquisite beautifier. Producing that peculiar delicate transparency, and imparting a velvety softness to the skin which is greatly admired. It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples, and imperfections from the face. For all toilet purposes it is the luxury of luxuries. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use, or those whose skin is delicate.

One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.

A delicate, refined, delicious perfume for the handkerchief and clothing. The most popular and lasting perfume ever made.

One-Fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.

One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream. Soothing, Healing, beautifies the Skin, Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.

One Package Clove Pink Sachet Powder. Delicate, Refined, Lasting.

One Bottle (Fancy Patent Stopper) Modjeska Tooth Powder.

One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap.

OUR MAMMOTH "CHRISTMAS" BOX

Contains a great variety of Toys, Playthings, etc., for the Babies, and sundry useful and amusing things for the older folks. Such as Boy's Tools, Saws, Hatchets, Shovels, Rakes, Hoe, Top, Spinner, "Crack Shots," Games, Jack Stones, Etc.

IT ALSO CONTAINS

- One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
- One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder.
- One Fancy Tidy.
- One Glove-buttoner.
- One Package "Steadfast" Pins.
- One Spool Black Silk Thread.
- One Gentlemen's Handkerchief, large.
- Fourteen Patent Transfer Patterns for Stamping and Embroidering Table Linen, Toilet Mats, Towels, Ties, etc.
- One Lady's Handkerchief.
- One Child's Fancy Handkerchief.
- One Illuminated Wall Match Safe (can be seen at night).
- One Package Assorted Christmas Cards.
- Two Collar Buttons (patented).

In addition to all of the above articles, we place in each box ONE ALBUM containing pictures of the following celebrities:

- |                          |                        |
|--------------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Wm. E. Gladstone,     | 13. General Scott,     |
| 2. Bismarck,             | 14. Thomas A. Edison,  |
| 3. Daniel Webster,       | 15. Benj. F. Morse,    |
| 4. J. G. Whittier,       | 16. Joseph Jefferson,  |
| 5. George Bancroft,      | 17. Benj. Franklin,    |
| 6. Abraham Lincoln,      | 18. Henry M. Stanley,  |
| 7. Ulysses S. Grant,     | 19. Oliver Perry,      |
| 8. Robert E. Lee,        | 20. Goethe,            |
| 9. Gen. Sherman,         | 21. Schiller,          |
| 10. Thomas Carlyle,      | 22. Alex. Hamilton,    |
| 11. Commodore Faragut,   | 23. John Howard Payne, |
| 12. "Stonewall" Jackson, | Etc., Etc., Etc.       |

Remember, "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity, each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries.

Our Price for the Mammoth "Christmas" Box Complete, is Six Dollars.

FACTORIES: J. D. LARKIN & CO., SENECA, HEACOCK & CARROLL STREETS, BUFFALO, N. Y.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 10.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

EVANGELICAL WORK IN MEXICO.

Portrait of Rev. Francisco Puerto—1. Church of San Jose De Gracia—2. City of Mexico—3. A Convent Now Used as a Barrack—4. Cathedral of Puebla.

THE PLAGUES OF THE CITIES.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON ON CORRUPT LITERATURE AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, LAST SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 8, 1891.

The Misery of the Egyptians—Objects of Worship Inconveniently Multiplied—The Scourge of Unclean Literature—Filling the Charnel-Houses of All Lands—The Vendors of Bad Books—The Abuse of the Mails—The Need of Enforcing Preventive Laws—The Best Antidote in Pure Literature—A Clergyman's Gift of a Book—The Mortality of Books—Lady Stanhope's Preparation for the Advent.

"And the frogs came up and covered the land of Egypt. And the magicians did so with their enchantments, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt." Exodus 8: 6, 7.

HERE is almost a universal aversion to frogs, and yet with the Egyptians they were honored, they were sacred, and they were objects of worship while alive, and after death they were embalmed, and to-day their remains may be found among the sepulchres of Thebes. These creatures, so attractive once to the Egyptians, at divine behest became obnoxious and loathsome, and they went croaking and hopping and leaping into the palace of the king, and into the bread-trays and the couches of the people, and even the ovens, which now are uplifted above the earth and on the side of chimneys, but then were small holes in the earth with sunken pottery, were filled with frogs when the housekeepers came to look at them. If a man sat down to eat, a frog alighted on his plate. If he attempted to put on a shoe, it was preoccupied by a frog. If he attempted to put his head upon a pillow, it had been taken possession of by a frog. Frogs high and low and everywhere; loathsome frogs, slimy frogs, besieging frogs, innumerable frogs, great plague of frogs. What made the matter worse, the magicians said there was no miracle in this, and they could by sleight-of-hand produce the same thing, and they seemed to succeed, for by sleight-of-hand wonders may be wrought. After Moses had thrown down his staff and by miracle it became a serpent, and then he took hold of it and by miracle it again became a staff, the serpent-charmers imitated the same thing, and knowing that there were serpents in Egypt which by a peculiar pressure on the neck would become as rigid as a stick of wood, they seemed to change the serpent into the staff, and then, throwing it down, the staff became the serpent. So likewise these magicians tried to imitate the plague of frogs, and perhaps by smell of food attracting a great number of them to a certain point, or by shaking them out from a hidden place, the magicians sometimes seemed to accomplish the same miracle. While these magicians made the plague worse, none of them tried to make it better. "Frogs came up and covered the land of Egypt, and the magicians did so with their enchantment, and brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt."

Now that plague of frogs has come back upon the earth. It is abroad to-day. It is smiting this nation. It comes in the shape of corrupt literature. These frogs hop into the store, the shop, the office, the banking-house, the factory,—into the home, into the cellar, into the garret, on the drawing-room table, on the shelf of the library. While the lad is reading the bad book the teacher's face is turned the other way. One of these frogs hops upon the page. While the young woman is reading the forbidden novelette after retiring at night, reading by gaslight, one of these frogs leaps upon the page. Indeed, they have hopped on the news-stands of the country, and the mails at the post-office shake out in the letter-trough hundreds of them. The plague has taken at different times, possession of this country. It is one of the most loathsome, one of the most frightful, one of the most ghastly of the ten plagues of our modern cities. There is a vast number of books and newspapers printed and published which ought never to see the light. They are filled with a pestilence that makes the land swelter with a moral epidemic. The greatest blessing that ever came to this nation is that of an elevated literature, and the greatest scourge has been that of unclean literature. This last has its victims in all occupations and departments. It has helped to fill insane asylums and penitentiaries and almshouses and dens of shame. The bodies of this infection lie in the hospitals and in the graves, while their souls are being tossed over into a lost eternity, an avalanche of horror and despair. The London plague was nothing to it. That counted its victims by thousands, but this modern pest has already shoveled its millions into the charnel-house of the morally dead. The longest rail-train that ever ran over the Erie or Hudson tracks is not long enough nor large enough to carry the beastliness and the putrefaction which have been gathered up in bad books and newspapers of this land in the last twenty years. The literature of a nation decides the fate of a nation. Good books, good morals. Bad books, bad morals.

I begin with the lowest of all the literature, that which does not even pretend to be respectable—from cover to cover a blotch of leprosy. There are many whose entire business it is to dispose of that kind of literature. They display it before the schoolboy on his way home. They get the catalogues of schools and colleges, take the names and post-office addresses, and send their advertisements and their circulars and their pamphlets and their books to every one of them.

In the possession of these dealers in bad literature were found nine hundred thousand names and post-office addresses, to whom it was thought it might be profitable to send these corrupt things. In the year 1873, there were one hundred and sixty-five establishments engaged in publishing cheap, corrupt literature. From one publishing house there went out twenty different styles of corrupt books. Although over thirty tons of vile literature have been destroyed by the Society for the Suppression of Vice, still there is enough of it left in this country to bring down upon us the thunderbolts of an incensed God.

In the year 1868, the evil had become so great in this country that the Congress of the United States passed a law forbidding the transmission of bad literature through the United States mails; but there were large loops in that law through which criminals might crawl out, and the law was a dead failure—that law of 1868. But in 1873, another law was passed by the Congress of the United States against the transmission of corrupt literature through the mail—a grand law, a potent law, a Christian law—and under that law multitudes of these scoundrels have been arrested, their property confiscated, and they themselves thrown into the penitentiaries where they belonged.

Now, my friends how are we to war against this corrupt literature, and how are the frogs of this Egyptian plague to be slain? First of all, by the prompt and inexorable execution of the law. Let all good post-masters and United States district attorneys, and detectives and reformers concert in their action to stop the plague. When Sir Rowland Hill spent his life in trying to secure cheap postage not only for England, but for all the world and to open the blessing of the post-office to all honest business and to all messages of charity, and kindness and affection, for all healthful intercommunication, he did not mean to make vice easy or fill the mail bags of the United States with the scabs of such a leprosy.

It ought not to be in the power of every man who can raise a one-cent stamp for a circular, or a two-cent stamp for a letter, to blot a man or destroy a home. The postal service of this country must be clean, must be kept clean, and we must all understand that the swift retributions of the United States Government hover over every violation of the letter-bag law.

There are thousands of men and women in this country, some for personal gain, some through innate depravity, some through a spirit of revenge, wish to use the great avenue of convenience and intelligence for purposes of revengeful, malicious, and debolic. Wake the law. Wake up all its perils. Let every court-room on this subject be as Sinai thundrous and awful. Let the convicted offenders be sent for the full term to Sing Sing or Harrisburg.

THE LEOPARD'S CLUTCH.

I am not talking about what cannot be done. I am talking now about what is being done. A great many of the printing presses that give themselves entirely to the publication of corrupt literature have been stopped or have gone into business less obnoxious. What has thrown what has kept off the rail-trains of this country for some time back nearly all the leprous periodicals? Those of us who have been on the rail-trains have noticed a great change in the few months and the last year or two. We have nearly all those vile periodicals been kept off the rail-trains for some time back? Who effected it? These societies for the purification of railroad literature gave warning to the publishers and warning to railroad companies, warning to conductors, and warning to the boys, to keep the infernal stuff off the trains.

Many of the cities have successfully prohibited ed the most of that literature even from going on the news-stands. Terror has seized upon the publishers and the dealers in impure literature, from the fact that over a thousand arrests have been made, and the aggregate, time for which the convicted have been sentenced to the prison is over one hundred and ninety years and from the fact that about two million of their circulars have been destroyed, and the business is not as profitable as it used to be.

"THAT BOOK SAVED MY SOUL."

How have so many of the news-stands of our great cities been purified? How has so much of this iniquity been balked? By moral suasion? Oh, no. You might as well go into a jungle of the East Indies and pat a cobra on the neck, and with profound argument try to persuade it that it is morally wrong to bite and to sting and to poison anything. The only answer to your argument would be an uplifted head and a hiss, and a sharp, reeking tooth struck into your arteries. The only argument for a cobra is a shot-gun, and the only argument for these dealers in impure literature is the clutch of the police and bean soup in a penitentiary. The law! The law! I invoke to consummate the work so grandly begun!

Another way in which we are to drive back this plague of Egyptian frogs is by filling the minds of our young people with a healthful literature. I do not mean to say that all the books and newspapers in our families ought to be religious books and newspapers, or that every song ought to be sung to the tune of "Old Hundred." I have no sympathy with the attempt to make the young old. I would rather join in a crusade to keep the young young. Boyhood and girlhood must not be abbreviated. But there are good books, good histories, good biographies, good works of fiction, good books of all styles with which we are to fill the minds of the young, so that there will be no more room for the useless and the vicious than there is room for chaff in a bushel measure which is already filled with Michigan wheat.

Why are fifty per cent. of the criminals in the jails and penitentiaries of the United States under twenty-one years of age? Many of them under seventeen, under sixteen, under fifteen, under fourteen, under thirteen. Walk long one of the corridors of the Tombs prison in New York and look for yourselves. Bad books, bad newspapers, bewitched them as soon as they got out of the cradle. Beware of all those stories which end wrong. Beware of all those books which makes the road that ends in perdition seem to end in Paradise. Do not glorify the dirk and the pistol. Do not call the desperado brave or the libertine gallant. Teach our young people that if they go down into the swamps and marshes to watch the jack-o'-lanterns dance on the decay and rottenness, they will catch the malaria and death.

"Oh!" says some one, "I am a business man, and I have no time to examine what my children read. I have no time to inspect the books that come into my household." If your children were threatened with typhoid fever, could you have time to go for the doctor? Could you have time to watch the progress of the disease? Would you have time for the funeral? In the presence of my God I warn you of the fact that your children are threatened with moral and spiritual typhoid, and that unless the thing be stopped, it will be to them a funeral of body, funeral of mind, funeral of soul. Three funerals in one day.

My word is to this vast multitude of young people: Do not touch, do not borrow, do not buy a corrupt book or a corrupt picture. A book will decide a man's destiny for good or for evil. The book you read yesterday may have decided you for time and for eternity, or it may be a book that may come into your possession to-morrow.

A good book—who can exaggerate its power? Benjamin Franklin said that his reading of Cotton Mather's Essays To Do Good, in childhood gave him holy aspirations for all the rest of his life. George Law declared that a biography he read in childhood gave him all his subsequent prosperities. A clergyman, many years ago, passing to the Far West, stopped at a hotel. He saw a woman copying something from Doddridge's Rise and Progress. It seemed that she had borrowed the book, and there were some things she wanted especially to remember. The clergyman had in his satchel a copy of Doddridge's Rise and Progress, and so he made her a present of it. Thirty years passed on. The clergyman came that way and he asked where the woman was, whom he had seen long ago. They said: "She lives yonder in that beautiful house." He went there and said to her: "Do you remember me?" She said: "No, I do not." He said: "Do you remember a man gave you Doddridge's Rise and Progress thirty years ago?" "Oh, yes; I remember. That book saved my soul. I loaned the book to all my neighbors, and they read it and they were converted to God, and we had a revival of religion which swept through the whole community. We built a church and called a pastor. You see that spire yonder, don't you? That church was built as the result of that book you gave me thirty years ago." Oh, the power of a good book! But, alas! for the influence of a bad book. John Angel James, than whom England never had a holier minister, stood in his pulpit at Birmingham and said: "Twenty-five years ago a lad loaned to me an infamous book. He would loan it only fifteen minutes and then I had to give it back; but that book has haunted me like a spectre ever since. I have in agony of soul, on my knees before God, prayed that he would obliterate from my soul the memory of it; but I shall carry the damage of it until the day of my death." The assassin of Sir William Russell declared that he got the inspiration for his crime by reading what was then a new and popular novel, Jack Sheppard. Homer's Iliad made Alexander the Warrior. Alexander said so. The story of Alexander made Julius Caesar and Charles XII, both men of blood. Have you in your pocket or in your trunk, or in your desk at business a bad book, a bad picture, a bad pamphlet? In God's name I warn you to destroy it.

THE CHAMPION OF THE TOILETUM.

(From an ancient print in the "Mozarabic Missal," 1770.)

Another way in which we shall fight back this corrupt literature and kill the frogs of Egypt is by rolling over them the Christian printing-press, which shall give plenty of healthful reading to all adults. All these men and women are reading men and women. What are you reading? Abstain from all those books which, while they had some good things about them, have also an admixture of evil. You have read books that had two elements in them—the good and the bad. Which stuck to you? The bad! The heart of most people is like a sieve, which lets the small particles of gold fall through, but keeps the great cinders. Once in awhile there is a mind like a loadstone, which, plunged amid steel and brass filings, gathers up the steel and repels the brass. But it is generally just the opposite. If you attempt to plunge through a fence of burrs to get one blackberry, you will get more burrs than blackberries. You cannot afford to read a bad book, however good you are. You say: "The influence is insignificant." I tell you that the scratch of a pin has sometimes produced the lock-jaw. Alas, if through curiosity, as many do, you pry into an evil book, your curiosity is as dangerous as that of the man who would take a torch into a gunpowder mill merely to see whether it would really blow up or not. In a menagerie, a man put his arm through the bars of a black leopard's cage. The animal's hide looked so sleek, and bright and beautiful. He just stroked it once. The monster seized him, and he drew forth a hand torn, and mangled, and bleeding. O, touch not evil even with the faintest stroke! Though it may be glossy and beautiful, touch it not, lest you pull forth your soul torn and bleeding under the clutch of the black leopard. "But," you say, "how can I find out whether a book is good or bad without reading it?" There is always something suspicious about a bad book. I never knew an exception—something suspicious in the index or style of illustration. This venomous reptile almost always carries a warning rattle.

The clock strikes midnight. A fair form bends over a romance. The eyes flash fire. The breath is quick and irregular. Occasionally the color dashes to the cheek, and then dies out. The hands tremble as though a guardian spirit were trying to shake the deadly book out of the grasp. Hot tears fall. She laughs with a shrill voice that drops dead at its own sound. The sweat on her brow is the spray dashed up from the river of death. The clock strikes four, and the rosy dawn soon after begins to look through the lattice upon the pale form that looks like a detained spectre of the night. Soon in a mad-house she will mistake her ringlets for curling serpents, and thrust her white hand through the bars of the prison, and smite her head, rubbing it back as though to push the scalp from the skull, shrieking: "My brain! my brain!" Oh, stand off from that! Why will you go sounding your way amid the reefs and warning buoys, when there is such a vast ocean in which you may voyage, all sail set? We see so many books we do not understand what a book is. Stand it on end. Measure it, the height of it, the depth of it, the length of it, the breadth of it. You cannot do it. Examine the paper and estimate the progress made from the time of the impressions on clay, and then on to the bark of trees, and from the bark of trees to papyrus, and from papyrus to the hide of wild beasts, and from the hide of wild beasts on down until the miracles of our modern paper manufactories, and then see the paper, white and pure as an infant's soul waiting for God's inscription. A book! Examine the type of it. Examine the printing of it and see the progress from the time when Solon's laws were written on oak planks and Hesiod's poems were written on tables of lead, and the Sinaitic commands were written on tables of stone, on down to Hoe's perfecting printing-press. A book! It took all the universities of the past, all the martyr fires, all the civilizations, all the battles, all the victories, all the defeats, all the glooms, all the brightnesses, all the centuries to make it possible. A book! It is the chorus of the ages—it is the drawing-room in which kings and queens and orators and poets and historians and philosophers come out to greet you. If I worshiped anything on earth I would worship that. If I burned incense to any idol, I would build an altar to that. Thank God for good books, healthful books, inspiring books, Christian books, books of men, books of women, Book of God. It is with these good books that we are to overcome corrupt literature. Upon the frogs swoop with these eagles. I depend much for the overthrow of iniquitous literature upon the mortality of books. Even good books have a hard struggle to live. Polybius wrote forty books; only five of them left. Thirty books of Tacitus have perished. Twenty books of Pliny have perished. Livy wrote one hundred and forty books; only thirty-five of them remain. Æschylus wrote one hundred dramas; only seven remain. Euripides wrote over a hundred; only nineteen remain. Varro wrote the biographies of over seven hundred great Romans. All that wealth of biography has perished. If good and valuable books have such a struggle to live, what must be the fate of those that are diseased and corrupt and blasted at the very start? They will die as the frogs when the Lord turned back the plague. The work of Christianization will go on until there will be nothing left but good books, and they will take the supremacy of the world. May you and I live to see the illustrious day!

THE VICTIM OF THE NOVEL.

Against every bad pamphlet send a good pamphlet; against every unclean picture send an innocent picture; against every scurrilous song send a Christian song; against every bad book, send a good book; and then it will be as it was in ancient Toledo, where the Toletum missals were kept by the saints in six churches, and the sacrilegious Romans demanded that those missals be destroyed, and that the Roman missals be substituted; and the war came on, and I am glad to say that the whole matter having been referred to champions, the champion of the Toletum missals with one blow brought down the champion of the Roman missals. So it will be in our day. The good literature, the Christian literature, in its championship for God and the truth, will bring down the evil literature in its championship for the devil. I feel tingling to the tips of my fingers and through all the nerves of my body, and all the depths of my soul, the certainty of our triumph. Cheer up, O men and women who are toiling for the purification of society! Toil with your faces in the sunlight. "If God be for us, who, who can be against us?"

Lady Hester Stanhope was the daughter of the third Earl of Stanhope, and after her nearest friends had died she went to the far East, took possession of a deserted convent, threw up fortresses amid the mountains of Lebanon, opened the castle to the poor and the wretched and the sick who would come in. She made her castle a home for the unfortunate. She was a devout Christian woman. She was waiting for the coming of the Lord. She expected that the Lord would descend in person, and she thought upon it until it was too much for her reason. In the magnificent stables of her palace she had two horses groomed and bridled and saddled and caparisoned, and all ready for the day in which her Lord should descend, and he on one of them and she on the other should start for Jerusalem, the city of the Great King. It was a fanaticism and a delusion; but there was romance, and there was splendor, and there was thrilling expectation in the dream! Ah! my friends, we need no earthly palfreys groomed and saddled and bridled and caparisoned for our Lord when he shall come. The horse is ready in the equerry of heaven, and the Imperial Rider is ready to mount. "And I saw, and behold a white horse, and he that sat on him had a bow; and a crown was given unto him: and he went forth conquering and to conquer. And the armies which were in heaven followed him on white horses, and on his vesture and on his thigh were written, King of kings, and Lord of lords." Horsemen of heaven, mount! Cavalrymen of God, ride on! Charge! Charge! until they shall be hurled back on their haunches—the black horse of famine, and the red horse of carnage, and the pale horse of death. Jesus forever!

The Building in Mexico Formerly Used by the Inquisition.

CHRISTIAN HONORS IN JAPAN.

GRATIFYING news is sent to the Missionary Herald by a missionary in Japan, in reference to the new Parliament, an account of the opening of which with a picture appeared in this journal on February 4. The missionary says: "The most important matter at the outset was the choice of three names to be submitted to the Emperor, from which he was to appoint a President of the House of Representatives, together with three names for the office of Vice-President. It is a notable fact that the person who received the highest number of votes and who was subsequently appointed by the Emperor, was Mr. Nakashima, of whom The Japan Mail says he not only professes to be, but is, a staunch disciple of Christianity." The vernacular newspapers of Japan speak in terms of warm approval of this choice. The fact is recognized that the office is one of immense difficulties. Few, if any, positions in the empire are more important, but the qualifications of Mr. Nakashima for the place, his high moral character, and his intellectual abilities are recognized on all sides. Subsequently the position which many regard as the next most responsible, that of Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, was filled by the choice of Mr. Shimana Saburo, a well-known Christian. Will certain newspapers now retract their assertions that the missionaries in Japan reach only the lower classes?"

REV. FRANCISCO PUERTO.

The Persecuted Evangelist of the Church of Jesus in Mexico, His Labors and Sufferings.

(See Illustrations on first page.)

IN our Christian land and in these days when religion is fashionable, we do not fully realize what it is to be persecuted for the faith. True, missionaries tell us of the danger they encounter in Africa and China, and how their converts are ill-treated and sometimes killed for professing their faith in Christ. But those things happen in strange, far-away lands where the people are savage and barbarous. It is, therefore, a little startling, to learn that a similar persecution prevails near home and that near our own borders a man who boldly preaches salvation through Jesus only, is in danger of injury and death. Yet the man whose portrait appears on our first page this week is a living witness of the fact. He bears on his body the wounds which he received from the enemies of the Gospel in Mexico. Twice he has been shot, once he was stabbed, and thrice heavy stones were flung at him causing him serious injuries. The vindictive hatred which prompted these savage attacks upon him was aroused solely and exclusively by his preaching. "Father, forgive them," he prays as his Master did, "they know not what they do," and desires nothing better than that he may be enabled to continue his work among his persecutors.

A few years ago a little Protestant congregation in the town of Atzala, in the State of Puebla, Mexico, became the object of hatred in the town. It was increasing in numbers, and men who joined it were filled with the missionary spirit and went out among the neighbors telling them of the joy which came into their hearts through the new-found faith. Others came and were blessed. As the congregation grew, jealousy worked in the hearts of the priest of the town and persecution arose. One day the church was attacked by a howling mob, armed and thirsting for blood. The people fled. Unarmed as they were, they were pursued by the persecutors with shouts of, "Down with the heretics." A number of them took refuge in the courthouse, but they were followed, and twenty-one of them, including the native pastor, were killed. News of the tragedy was sent to Bishop H. C. Riley, in the city of Mexico, and he succeeded in obtaining from President Diaz protection for the surviving members of the congregation. They had asked that a new pastor might be sent to them, but the bishop felt reluctant to ask any man to go to a place of such danger. He mentioned the request, however, to the young men in the institution who were being trained for pastors, and there was prompt response from one who was not only ready, but eager to go.

This volunteer was Francisco Puerto. His antecedents had been remarkable. He had been teacher of a school at Santa Cruz, in the State of Morelos, Mexico, where he had rendered himself somewhat conspicuous by the vehemence of his opposition to the work being done by a little band of earnest evangelical Christians in that town. But by God's providence there fell into his hands a pamphlet showing the scriptural authority for Protestant teaching, which had been prepared by the great and good Manuel Aguas, the Mexican priest, whose portrait here given. Puerto read it and became concerned. He borrowed a Bible from one of the members of the despised church and read it with avidity. It was a new book to him. Night after night, when his school was dismissed, he studied it far into the morning hours. Eventually, he was so thoroughly convinced, that he united with the Church of Jesus. Longing to be better equipped for labor in the cause of Christ, to which he now resolved to devote his life, he went to the City of Mexico and applied for admission to Bishop Riley's Seminary. The Bishop was deeply interested in his story, but was obliged to reject his application, as the Seminary funds were too straitened to allow of an increase in the number of students. Puerto went away, sadly disappointed, but he made another effort. He proposed to enter the Seminary as a servant. He declared that he did not care how arduous or menial the work was, he would do it gladly in return for the opportunity of study. On those terms he was admitted, and proved a most diligent student. He was also in earnest evangelist, and was eventually ordained. It was he who now proposed to go to the post of danger at Atzala and preach the Gospel.

His offer was accepted. So successful were his labors there that the little church increased, in spite of persecution, from fifty to three hundred members. Acts of overt violence were restrained by the force that, in obedience to the orders of President Diaz, maintained order in the town, but the hatred of the enemy was not diminished. Puerto was waylaid time and again as he went on preaching excursions to the neighboring towns, and several times he narrowly escaped death. He was shot at, and on two occasions the bullet struck him, but his life was providentially preserved. At another time, dismounting from his horse to open a gate, he was attacked by a man armed with a knife, who charged him with perverting all Atzala by his Bible teaching, and declared his life was forfeit. Puerto succeeded in remounting his horse and escaped, though with a terrible wound which hid him aside from his work for a long time. Again and again stones were hurled at him with murderous intent, but in spite of danger, he remained faithful to his work.

After eight years he was needed in the Capital and he returned. For four years he had charge of the fine stone church of San Jose de Gracia, a picture of which appears on the first page. There his labors were much blessed. His life, however, was often in jeopardy. Two attempts were made to poison him, but both failed through the timely administration of an antidote. Thrice he has been in prison for conscience sake. As a soldier in the forefront of the battle he has suffered much, but has lost none of his faith or zeal.

Puerto is now on a visit to New York. He speaks lightly of his dangers and sufferings but dwells much on God's mercy and protecting care. His object in coming, as he tersely states, is to tell the Christians of the United States how sorely his countrymen need the Gospel and how promising is the present opportunity of giving it to them. There is a population of over twelve millions in the country, a large proportion of whom have not heard the Gospel preached in its purity and power. Full liberty of worship and the right to preach is now secured by law. Missionary operations, however, have met with difficulties in Mexico which are peculiar to that country. Mr. Puerto explains these difficulties on patriotic grounds. The Mexicans have strong jealousies and dread annexation. They suspect foreign missionaries from the United States of being agents insidiously preparing the way for that end, and they are prejudiced against them at the outset. Mr. Puerto's hope for the evangelization of the land is based on native effort. The Church of Jesus in Mexico is a native national church, and that organization appeals to the people from their midst. It has already done a grand work among the poor. It has forty congregations in the various States, has two commodious churches in the capital, and a band of earnest, devoted preachers, proclaiming the Gospel to the people and visiting them in their homes. The only difficulty in the way of its indefinitely extending its work, is one of money. Its pastors want to distribute evangelical literature far and wide, to get the Word of God into the hands of the people and to send its evangelists to new towns in distant districts. God has so blessed the efforts already made, that there is the most abundant encouragement to extend the work.

Puerto becomes almost breathless and his face lights up with enthusiasm as he tells of what has been done and of what may be done with a little help. He says, he wants the Christians of the United States to know of the opportunity, and he is sure that they will give the rising church all the money it needs. He believes that they only need to know, and the money will come. The enthusiasm of the man is contagious. He comes from the front of the battle with his scars to bear witness to his valor, and the message he brings to the Church is of victory and the need of present help to press forward. It is like a soldier's message that ammunition is needed for the regiment that is bearing the brunt of the conflict. It appeals to every Christian heart. Many of our readers have already contributed to this work in the past, and have thus helped to advance it to its present position of vantage. They will be glad to hear Mr. Puerto's report, and others may join them in the effort. Contributions may be sent to Mr. J. P. Heath, 43 Bible House, N. Y.

Manual Aguas, the Converted Mexican Monk.

THE INQUISITION IN MEXICO.

(See Illustration on page 148.)

THE picture here given is of a place in which the Christian visitor reverently bares his head. It is hallowed as the scene of many martyrdoms. The building which is in the City of Mexico was once the Inquisition. There many faithful Christians were imprisoned and in the open court many were burned to death. Its suppression was not achieved until the year 1820. When it was finally overthrown, the horrors which were exposed were appalling. In the passages which crossed the courtyard underground, evidences were found of the tortures inflicted on the hapless prisoners. Manacles and instruments of torture were brought out amid the execrations of the spectators. It had been in full sway for two hundred and forty-six years. The Brazero or burning-place where those were burned whom torture and imprisonment had failed to subdue, was near the church of San Diego. One bigoted chronicler mentions with much satisfaction the burning there of "twenty-one pestilent Lutherans." It is a place of sad yet glorious association.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Why Lamps are Used so Extensively in New York and other great cities when gas and electricity can be had, was explained recently to a reporter by a dealer in lamps. He said that he sold more of them every year, and not to poor people, but to the wealthy. "They are," he said, "greatly valued by fashionable ladies. The light shed by them is subdued, soft and mellow in its effect, and lends an æsthetic touch of animated color to the faces of pallid and tired-out women at five o'clock teas and other social gatherings. The hard, unsympathetic glare of gas or electricity is too searching, and reveals too clearly all those little defects which feminine tact wants to conceal or modify by means of the softer lamplight." There is the same shrinking on the part of persons conscious of moral and spiritual blemishes from the light of God's Word and from faithful preaching. But they are only postponing the exposure, and with terrible consequences. (Luke 12: 3.)

The Romantic Reunion of a Husband and wife was described recently to the reporter of a Philadelphia journal. A hair-importer in that city states that a beautiful lady, shabbily dressed in deep mourning, called at his store and asked him if he would buy her hair. It was long and of a delicate auburn shade much in demand. The dealer willingly agreed, and the lady let down her hair. While he was cutting it off she wept. She said that only dire poverty and the urgent necessity of obtaining money to buy food for herself and child had made her willing to sell her hair. Her husband had always greatly admired it, but he was dead, having perished in a shipwreck. All her money was gone and she had wandered from city to city in a futile search for employment. The hair-dealer was very sorry for her and, thinking that if her case were known some kind person might assist her, he wrote a brief statement of the circumstances, which was published in a newspaper. A few days later a tall, bearded man called on him and begged for a sight of the hair. It was shown him and he at once recognized it as that of his wife. He said he had been saved from the wreck but had been cast on an island far out of the track of steamers, and it had been over a year before he could get back to America. Then his wife had disappeared and he had been unable to get any trace of her until the hair-dealer's letter gave him a clue. The dealer gladly gave him the wife's address and the husband hurried away to find her and relieve her wants. Thus the sacrifice which the wife mourned was the means of bringing her a joy beyond her hopes. Still greater happiness has sometimes come from what seemed to be misfortunes. There are many who through the loss of property have been led to seek and find eternal riches. (Phil 3: 8.)

A Hydrophobia Fund has been Established for New Jersey. In 1877, when five little boys were bitten by a rabid dog in Newark, and Dr. William O'Gorman advocated the Pasteur treatment, a large sum of money was contributed by the general public through the newspapers. The children were sent to Paris, and successfully treated by Pasteur's assistants, and when all expenses had been paid, $776.35 remained out of the fund, in bank in Newark. Last week the trustees of the fund turned the money over to the New York Bacteriological Institute, on the understanding that indigent patients from New Jersey be treated free of charge for five years. It may be that persons bitten by dogs in other States may be deterred from coming to New York for treatment by the expense involved, but it may be safely predicted that no citizen of New Jersey in like case will fail to come. He will surely avail himself of the right of free treatment. He will not act as those do who, with the poison of sin in their veins, and in danger of eternal death, neglect the offer of the Great Physician to save them without money and without price. (Isa. 1: 18.)

THE EMPEROR AND THE HERETIC.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for March 22. "Fear not for they that be with us are more than they that be with them." II. Kings 6: 16.

HOW to deal with the servants of God when their words have been embarrassing to rulers of the earth, has always been a perplexing problem. It would seem a simple matter for a great potentate to arrest the inconvenient talker and imprison him or put him to death; but the process has always been beset with difficulties. When the king of Syria sent "horses and chariots and a great host" to capture one man, and he not a warrior defended by his troops, he was only showing his sense of the difficulty that other kings have felt since his time. God, who rules the world, sees to it that his servants shall be hedged about; and though we see not the horses and chariots of fire which Elisha's servant was permitted to see, it has often been manifested in history that circumstances have combined to prevent the good man being injured with impunity.

One of the most conspicuous examples on record is that of the brave man who on April 16, 1521, arrived in Worms in response to a summons from the mighty Emperor of Germany. The Diet of the Empire was assembled there and he was to appear before it. The Emperor had been exhorted to put him to death. His friends had begged him not to go and had bade him farewell before he started, with premonitions that they would never see him again. Again and again on his long journey messengers reached him from persons in Worms interested in his welfare warning him against coming. One of them, mixing with the men high in imperial favor, heard that the Emperor was being urged to violate the promise of safety he had given and was assured that there would be no sin in breaking a promise given to a heretic. He knew that the Emperor was accustomed to lend a willing ear to the counsels of these men and he dispatched a messenger who met Luther outside the gates and begged him not to enter Worms. "Go and tell your master," said Luther to the messenger, "that even should there be as many devils in Worms as there are tiles on the house-tops, still I would enter it." "There are so many bishops and cardinals at Worms," said another, "they will burn you and reduce your body to ashes as they did with John Huss." "Though they should kindle a fire," Luther answered, "all the way from Worms to Wittenberg, the flames of which reached to heaven, I would walk through it in the name of the Lord." And so he went on, confident in the divine protection.

When the news of his arrival reached the Emperor, the Privy Council was summoned and the Emperor asked for advice. The Bishop of Palermo promptly gave it, "Let your imperial majesty," he said, "get rid of this man at once. Did not Sigismund cause John Huss to be burnt? We are not bound to give or to observe the safe conduct of a heretic." The spirit of justice, however, was invoked by those favorable to Luther who protested against his being condemned unheard.

Luther appeared before the Diet on the next day. It was a spectacle the world will never forget. There was an assemblage that might well strike awe into the heart of the bravest man. The Emperor whose sovereignty extended over a great part of the old and new world was seated on his throne. Near him was his brother the Archduke Ferdinand, and around, six electors whose descendants were to wear royal crowns, twenty-four dukes, wielding practically independent sovereignty, thirty archbishops, bishops and abbots, a great number of princes and barons. In all two hundred and four illustrious persons beside the Papal nuncios who had come there thirsting for the blood of the heretic. In all that brilliant throng not one could be counted a sure and firm friend of the man who stood before them to be judged. Yet he, the son of a humble miner, the preacher already excommunicated, was unmoved.

"If you do not retract," said the Chancellor, when Luther had defined his position, "the Emperor and the states of the empire will consult what course to adopt against an incorrigible heretic." To which Luther replied, "May God be my helper; for I can retract nothing." What that answer involved every one knew, and no one more clearly than the man who uttered it. The Emperor announced his intention the next day of proceeding "against Luther and his adherents by every means calculated to destroy them." With the Emperor in this mind, with the cardinals, archbishops and abbots eager for his death, fierce, implacable and vigilant, remorseless to an extent that none ever reach, but those who hold office as religious teachers, it seems little short of a miracle that Luther left Worms alive and lived afterward to continue his labors and die a natural death. To the last he ascribed his preservation to God, who of old sent horses and chariots of fire to surround Elisha and protect him from the king. "The devil himself," he was wont to say, "guarded the Pope's citadel: but Christ made a wide breach in it, and Satan was constrained to confess that the Lord is mightier than he."

THE PROPHETIC INTERVAL.

The Interposition of the Present Parenthetical Dispensation as Outlined in Zechariah and in Matthew.

BY GEORGE H. PEMBER.

IT is indicated (Dan. 9: 25-27) that the four hundred and ninety years were to be intermitted just before the cutting off of Messiah: Is there any other notice in Scripture of the setting aside of his covenant with the Jews at that time? We shall find one in the eleventh chapter of Zechariah, of the contents of which the following is a slight sketch:

The prophet begins with a description of terrible destruction (Zech. 11: 1-3), the reason for which is given in the subsequent verses. Then Judah is set before us as a flock destined for slaughter, whose rulers are swayed only by selfish motives: their possessors the Romans, their sellers the Herodians, and their shepherds the Pharisees and Sadducees, all join in oppressing them.

Christ's Two Official Staves.

But the Lord undertakes to feed them, especially distinguishing the poor of the flock; and as Moses had his rod, so Christ takes two staves significant of his office, one of which he calls Beauty, or rather Favor, and the other Bands. By the first the full outpouring of God's love was secured to the nation. By the second, even if they lost for a time the favor of God, they would still be held together as a covenant people.

Having himself undertaken to be Shepherd, the Lord proceeds to cut off in one month three hireling shepherds whom his soul abhorred. These were probably the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians, the silencing of whom we may find in the twenty-second chapter of Matthew. Then, because their soul abhorred him, he declared that he would no longer feed them, and broke his staff called Favor, giving as his reason, "That I might break my covenant which I had, made with all the people."

Nevertheless, the poor of the flock, as many as believe on him, continue to wait on the Lord, and he still feeds them—it is the covenant with all the people which is broken; but of the rest of the nation he demands the wages of his service in anticipation of his betrayal, and is priced at thirty pieces of silver. Then the second staff, Bands, is broken; for the Jews go on to smite the Judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek, and can, therefore, no longer be held together as a covenant nation at Jerusalem, but are given up to be scattered from their city. Such is an outline of the prophecy to the end of the fourteenth verse, after which comes the interval revealed to Daniel; and, consequently, we are at once carried from the betrayal of the Messiah and the dispersion of the Jew to the idol shepherd, the Antichrist, who will destroy the flock in the last week, and he himself be overthrown "when the Chief Shepherd shall appear." (I. Pet. 5: 4.)

The Interval in Matthew.

A similar outline may be traced in the dispensational Gospel of Matthew. For both the Forerunner and the Lord Himself begin their ministry with the cry, "Repent, for the kingdom of the heavens has come nigh." The four hundred and eighty-three years [sixty-nine weeks of years] were drawing to a close; but the dreary interval would not be necessary if Israel could at that time repent and receive the Anointed Prince.

In the fifth, sixth, and seventh chapters, the laws of the kingdom are delivered by the King, who speaks throughout on the authority of his own word, and finally reveals himself to the multitude as the future judge of the quick and the dead. The leaders of Israel did not, however, hail him as the long-expected Messiah, but disliked his teaching, and they became more and more determinedly opposed to him as he multiplied the signs of his power. Consequently, he soon began to hint that in the restoration of the kingdom, and spoke of a future absence of the Bridegroom, during which the children of the bridechamber should mourn. (Matt. 9: 15.) Nevertheless, when he looked on the multitude, he was moved with compassion, "because they were harassed and scattered abroad, as sheep having no shepherd." (Matt. 9: 36.) And so he renewed his offer, and, by sending out his twelve disciples, again appealed to the hearts of the people with the stirring proclamation, "The kingdom of the heavens has drawn nigh." (Matt. 10: 7.) But there was no adequate result: for he presently began to complain of the waywardness of his generation, and to upbraid those cities wherein most of his mighty works had been done, because they repented not. (Matt. 11: 16-24.)

There Must be Delay

In the twelfth chapter, the malice and opposition of the rulers is still more marked; and, unable to deny his acts of power, they dare to say, "This fellow doth not cast out demons but by Beelzebub the prince of the demons." Then at length he began to show that his soul also abhorred them: his mouth spoke terrible things, and he declared that their despised privileges should bring down the thunder of God's judgment upon their heads.

Having predicted the fate of the Jews, the Lord proceeded, on the same day (Matt. 13: 1), to foretell what should follow; to speak of the branches of the wild olive tree which should be grafted in after the breaking-off of the natural branches; to reveal, though as yet only in parable, something of the great mystery which had been hidden from past ages. It is as though he had left it open to them to decide by their obedience or disobedience, whether should be fulfilled immediately after the sixty-ninth, or whether there should be a wearisome interval of discipline. Henceforth the character of our Lord's preaching was changed, and we find from Luke that, as he drew nigh to Jerusalem for his death, he spake a parable to show that the first offers were withdrawn, and that the kingdom of the heavens could not now immediately appear. (Luke 19: 11.) A little later, probably in the same hour, he was standing on the brow of Olivet, and, while gazing from thence at the fair scene spread out before him, wept as he uttered the memorable lamentation: "If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things which belong unto thy peace! But now they are hid from thine eyes." For Messiah was about to be cut off, and city and sanctuary should be destroyed.

The Last of Daniel's Weeks

Nevertheless, he entered into the city on this last day of the four hundred and eighty-third year of Daniel's period, and he did so "riding upon an ass and upon a colt the foal of an ass," that, by the simultaneous fulfilment of two great prophecies, he might make a last appeal to the rebel Jews. But it was all in vain: the enthualism of the populace was only momentary, while the malice of the rulers was greatly intensified.

In the prophecy which he immediately afterwards delivered on the Mount of Olives, the Lord fills in that part of Daniel's outline which was yet future, even mentioning the prophet by name. He hints at the destruction of the city and sanctuary after his own decease, and then passes on to notice what should happen in the days immediately preceding the fulfilment of the times of the Gentiles and simultaneous completion of the last seven years of God's dealings with the Jews in Jerusalem. And thus, in the New Testament also, the great interpreting revelation given to Daniel is found to be the key of all prophecy which concerns the Jew.

ELISHA'S DEFENDERS.

8. LESSON FOR MARCH 22, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 6: 8-18. GOLDEN TEXT, II. KINGS 6: 16.

An Advance on Elijah's Mission—A New Lesson—The Plans of the Invader of Israel—Elisha Reveals Them to the King—The Ambush Avoided—A Traitor's Presence Suspected—Elisha's Agency Perceived—The Soldiers Sent to Capture Him—Tranquillity Based on Faith—The Soldiers Entrapped—The Effect in Syria.

ELISHA never lost sight of his vocation. Called to follow Elijah, a man whose life was lived far more with God than with man, whose very existence by the brookside, and in the widow's house was a miracle, Elisha had inherited from him an eye for the unseen. (II. Cor. 4: 18.) But this man of God must translate into common, ordinary life the knowledge he had gained of the will, and power, and love of his God. "He that cometh to God must believe that he is;" such was especially the testimony of Elijah; "and that he is a Rewarder of them that diligently seek him" (Heb 11: 6); such was more particularly the testimony of Elisha. God as God, in his very Being, was the witness of the one, God in his working for his people, that of the other. Both these men had to do with kings as well as with ordinary men; but the state of the court or the simplicity of the poor man's home were alike in the eyes of these men of God, passing things, neither to be envied nor despised.

God was at work in Israel, and his witnesses were increasing in the land, but the king and the great mass of the people were yet without God. He permitted trial to come upon them; the king of Syria warred against Israel. Naaman was no longer field-marshal, or we should hear of him in some way at this juncture. If he was still living, we may well conceive that he would resign his post rather than fight a hand against Israel or Israel's God. Ben-hadad himself, seems to have taken the command, and he held a council of war as to the place where he would make his camp. No reporters were present, all men sworn to secrecy, yet intelligence of his plans reached Jehoram, king of Israel. Ben-hadad moved his camp, but a second time, and yet a third, the king of Israel became aware of his movements. How could he understand anything so mysterious? The king of Syria knew not the living God who doeth nothing "but he revealeth his secret to his servants, the prophets." (Amos 3: 7.)

There is a Witness

Present in every assembly; in the most secret of secret councils, he listens to all that is said, and takes notes; he hears and sees all that transpires. "Woe unto them that seek deep to hide their counsel from the Lord, and their works are in the dark, and they say, who seeth us? and who knoweth us?" (Isa. 29: 15.) God earned over Jehoram's soul. He had begun his reign by putting away the image of Baal, (I. Kings 3: 2,) and thus manifested more fear of God than his father Ahab. But he would not give up the golden calves, he clung to Jeroboam's sin. God had sent deliverance to him in the war against Moab, and now he sends his prophet to say to him, "Beware that thou pass not such a place, for thither the Syrians are come down." Repeatedly the warning was given, and defeat avoided, and Jehoram knew that God had succored him.

Benhadad was perplexed: to ensure privacy he held his privy council in his bedchamber, lest curious ears should be listening, and some busy tongue conveying tidings to the enemy. But all to no purpose, his plans were known still in Israel; and at last, driven to desperation, he summons all his trusted advisers, determined to discover who is the traitor, and says, "Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?" "None, my lord O king; but Elisha, the prophet that is in Israel telleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in thy bedchamber." What! the prophet through whose counsel Naaman had been restored—was he the foe who was keeping him at bay? It was for the king of Syria. He had, for a second time, been brought in contact with supernatural power, the power of God, and each time in connection with this prophet; would he yield to Elisha's God? The king could no longer remain neutral, he must either acknowledge God and his prophet, or show his enmity by seeking Elisha's life? He does the latter: at any cost Elisha must be taken prisoner! And Elisha knew the attitude of the king of Syria regarding him. But behind and above him he saw his Almighty God. When the heathen king thought it necessary to send a whole army to seize one single and unarmed man, we may be sure he feared the supernatural something about Elisha which made him to be a power. The prophet gave substantial evidence to the fact that a man who stands before God is to be feared.

A Serious Moment

The Syrian king surrounded the whole city of Dothan for the sake of one man, and counted with absolute certainty on the apprehension of Elisha. The prophet knew all that was taking place, but he

Could See What Was Hidden

from other eyes. When his servant arose in the morning and looked with terror upon the hosts of Syria, learning what their mission was, and cried, "Alas, my master, for what shall we do?" Elisha answered in calm assurance: "They be more that be with us than they that be with them." He prayed God to open his servant's eyes, and between the hosts of Syria and his master he saw, to his amazement, "the mountain was full of chariots of fire and horses of fire round about Elisha." God's hosts would contend with the Syrian hosts; and who could question on which side victory should be? A man who lives in God's presence is always conscious of God's resources; they are far more real to him than any arm of flesh; and this gives to praying people such a wonderful calm, such fearlessness; they cannot be taken by surprise. Elisha knew that, come what might, his God was master of the situation, and he quietly waited until the visible hosts, all unconscious of the invisible, came to the very spot where he was. But the invisible were still around him. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them." (Ps. 34: 7.)

God's prophets sometimes pray what seem to be

Strange Prayers.

If God had not taught Elijah to pray that the rain of heaven might be stayed, to teach the votaries of Baal the power of the living God, Elijah would never have prayed such a prayer. Now Elisha prays unto the Lord: "Smite this people, I pray thee, with blindness." The prophet was in the secret of the Lord's purpose in this prayer, as Elijah had been in his. The answer was instantaneous: the hands of the armies of God covered every eye of the Syrian soldiers, and the whole army of Syrian veterans were helpless in the hands of the man whom they were commissioned to take prisoner? And Elisha took the command of the blinded hosts, saying: "This is not the way, neither is this the city, follow me: and I will bring you to the man whom ye seek. But he led them to Samaria." Dothan was the city they sought, only because Elisha was there. Oh, what a picture of God's over-ruling was this! The man whom Syria and Syria's king dreaded, the man to overcome whom he counted the expense of a considerable army was worth the while, walking at the head of that army, the only one who could see the way before him! This is the true position of every one who sees God; to such, all enemies are blind and powerless; difficulties cease to be; all things are subject to God; "the Lord reigneth."

Elisha "led them to Samaria," and once in the midst of the royal city and surrounded by the army of Israel, he prayed in their hearing, "Lord, open their eyes."

The Invisible Hosts

took away the veil, and, to their surprise, and in great fear, the Syrians found themselves in a trap, and at the mercy of their foes! The ungenerous Jehoram said, "My father, shall I smite them? shall I smite them?" "Thou shalt not smite them;" was the prophet's answer: "Would'st thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with thy sword, and with thy bow? Set bread and meat before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master." "If thine enemy be hungry, give him bread to eat; and if he be thirsty, give him water to drink." (Prov. 25: 21.)

What must have been the startling wonder of the Syrian soldiers? Imagine one of them going home to his wife, and, as the first action on his return, taking all his household gods, and destroying them utterly, and then relating his story. Imagine the wonder of the Syrian wife when she heard how the army had surrounded Dothan, and had closed in around the doomed prophet, and how, at that very instant, he had prayed to the God of Israel to smite the army with blindness, and before a hand could be raised against him, his God had answered his prayer, and every Syrian soldier was in the dark. Then there was the silent march of the blinded army with the prophet at their head, led whither he would in their helplessness, and the unwelcome consciousness that at last they had reached a strange city, and were at the mercy of the inhabitants, and then the prophet's second prayer,

"Lord, Open the Eyes

of those men," the instantaneous answer, the recovered sight which made known to them their position, surrounded by their Israelitish foes; then the moment of terror, when king Jehoram put the question to the prophet, "Shall I smite them?" and the unspeakable dread of a terrible massacre, and then, stranger than all, the most unexpected answer of the prophet, and the still more unexpected provision, and the testimony that the people of God can love their enemies. Could it be otherwise than that husband and wife should bow to the God of Israel, and that many a home in Syria would be lit up with joy, and gladness in the new knowledge of Israel's God? O, how the power and love of their new-found God would thrill these until now heathen hearts, how they would long for more knowledge of him whose power they had felt in their own bodies, and whose care for his own prophets had caused them such amazement!

Now we can understand how Elisha could pray such a prayer, and how, when prompted to it by the Spirit of God, he could trust him to justify himself in the result. A true prophet walks with blinded eyes, seeing God, and leaving him to see the rest, he is independent of how others may judge of what he does, he leaves all to God in perfect confidence that he will do right. From this time, "the bands of Syria," this part of the army, "came no more unto the land of Israel." The king of Syria must find others, who had no such dealings with God, for his next campaign against Israel; Elisha's deliverance had been fruitful in making known his God to the heathen Syrians.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE CHIEF OF METHODISM.

THE two men who have most affected the religious destiny of the world were Martin Luther and John Wesley. A few years ago the work of the immortal German was commemorated by vast assemblages throughout Christendom. No wonder that last week at the anniversary of John Wesley's departure the secular press as well as the religious press, other denominations of Christians as well as his own, are by sermon and poem, by especial worship in grand cathedral and in plain meeting-house, reviving and deepening and heightening the memories of the great founder of Methodism.

Others may speak of what he has done through his own denomination, but I celebrate what he has done for all the sects of religionists. The tendency of the ages in matters of religion was toward the formalistic and the conventional. Religion on stilts has been the detriment of many churches. John Wesley, more than any other man that ever lived, crashed into the conventionalities, and stamped on formalism, and kindled a warmth that melted the pious frigidities. The spirit of great religious awakenings was incarnated in the great apostle born at Epworth, Lincolnshire. There will not be a revival of religion between now and the end of time that will not be obligated to the name and the achievements of that man of God who, on March 2, 1791, relinquished earth for heaven.

I hope the Lord has allowed him to come out on the celestial battlements, or still nearer, this commemorative time, so as to hear some of the applaudatory things said of him, for surely he had a hard time when on earth, and heard words of contempt and caricature and execration and but few words of praise. From the hour when a boy John Wesley from the parsonage on fire climbed down over a ladder of men formed to allow him to escape from an upper story, until he closed his work, the story of his trials and persecutions was a tragedy. Even Christian men sometimes failed to understand him. So good a man as Mr. Toplady, the author of the "Rock of Ages," said of John Wesley that his forehead was petrified and his cheek impervious to a blush, and that he had been hatching blasphemy. While such uncanny words were said inside the church, the world outside exhausted on Wesley its billingsgate and acrimony. Worst of all was his domestic suffering. As if the outside world could not do enough against him those nearer home persecuted him. His elder brother, Samuel, wrote to his mother expressing his contempt for him, and protested against her going to hear this younger brother preach, and remonstrated in contemptuous terms at what he called her becoming one of Jack's congregation. Added to this his wife's scandalous tongue brought upon him perpetual criticism all over England.

In addition to the large trials which beset his path innumerable petty annoyances barked at him. While in Savannah, Ga., the grand jury indicted him for a long list of offences. He attended seven sessions of the court ready to prove his innocence on all the charges, but they would not allow him to make answer, so he escaped in the night in a boat, landing twenty miles away, and then trudged the swamps four days and nights in hunger and thirst and fatigue, and took ship at Charleston for England. That is the way America treated John Wesley alive. Most appropriate is it that our country do now by way of atonement as far as possible what it can for the wrongs inflicted more than a hundred years ago. But that has been the world's habit in the treatment of its best men and women. Curse them while living. Praise them after they are dead. Christ held up to view the habit of ante-mortem outrage followed by post-mortem eulogy, as he pointed to some fine tombstones raised over people who had been badly treated while living and said: "Woe unto you, scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites, because ye build the tombs of the prophets and garnish the sepulchres of the righteous and say if we had been in the place of our fathers we would not have been partakers with them in the blood of the prophets." Thank God, the day has come when all Christendom honors the name of John Wesley.

Amid the high things said of him throughout these days of commemoration I notice a lack of recognition of him as a hymnologist. His brother Charles Wesley wrote so many more songs that the world is apt to forget that John Wesley wrote any. Some of the mightiest hymns dropped from his pen, hymns that will live as long as eternity, for though after the new song of heaven rises there may be no more use for earthly rhythm, the songs we sang on earth will forever be a part of our most thrilling reminiscence. John Wesley wrote that battle-shout, "Give to the winds thy fears," and he put into English, that German hymn of condensed evangelism, "Jesus, Thy blood and righteousness," and presented to the church of all ages those buoyant stanzas, "Thee will I love, my strength and tower," and other doxologies on which great congregations have many times been lifted heavenward. Because Charles Wesley may have had stronger wings and taken higher flights in poesy is no reason why in the centennial of Methodism we should fail to recognize that John Wesley, the preacher, and John Wesley the organizer, was John Wesley, the inspired hymnologist.

What must be his heavenly reward! Just think of him a hundred years in heaven. But I hope he has been somewhere near enough to earth to hear some of the fine things said last week about him. He heard while on earth the mean side, the lying side, the persecuting side, and it seems to me it is high time that he heard from human lips as well as from angelic the grateful side, the grand side, the glorious side.

BRIEF NOTES.

At the Fulton Street Daily Prayer-Meeting, during the past six months, requests for prayer have been received from over twenty-six hundred persons.

The American Home Missionary Society's receipts for the week ending February 28, were a few dollars short of $11,000. For the month they were about $46,000.

Evangelist E. E. Davidson has been holding revival services at East Boston, Mass. All the evangelical churches in the neighborhood have united in the work, and many conversions are reported.

Rev. R. W. Dale, D. D., will preside at the approaching International Congregational Council in London, and Rev. E. P. Goodwin, D. D., of Chicago, will preach the Council sermon.

A circle of King's Daughters has been organized in Paris. The movement grew out of the efforts made recently during a visit to the French capital, of some Christian ladies from the United States.

Our readers will rejoice to learn that Bishop Fallows, whose illness was reported in these columns recently, has recovered after some weeks of complete rest, and has resumed his labors.

Mr. Hudson Taylor's visit to Australia has led to fifty-eight candidates offering for mission work in China. Seventy-six baptisms at various stations of the China Inland Mission are reported by the last mail.

Dr. George F. Pentecost's labors in India are arousing a deep religious feeling throughout the empire. The Bombay Guardian speaks of the expectation of a rich harvest being general in all the churches, and adds, "The showers of blessing are beginning to come."

The Non-Partisan Woman's Christian Temperance Union of New York, holds its meetings at ten o'clock A. M., the second and fourth Monday of each month in the Ladies' parlor of the Broadway Tabernacle, corner of 34th Street and Sixth Avenue.

Very successful services have been held during the past two weeks, in the Baptist Church of the Redeemer, in New York. They have been conducted by the pastor, assisted every evening by the pastor of some Baptist or Presbyterian church in the city.

Rev. J. M. Hare has been holding special services every evening during the past two weeks in the Baptist Church, Phoenixville, Pa., of which he is pastor. Over fifty conversions have taken place, and there are a large number of inquirers in a hopeful state.

The Union Meetings held at Hudson, N. Y., by Rev. B. Fay Mills, have been wonderfully blessed. Mr. Mills is now holding services in his brother's church at Providence, R. I. He expects shortly to commence labor at Westfield, N. J.

The Empress of Austria is making a pilgrimage to Jerusalem, where great preparations are being made to receive her with the honor due to her rank. She is the first reigning empress to visit the city since the Empress Helena the traditional discoverer of the cross.

Notice is given that there have already been received 10,800 applications for tickets to the Christian Endeavor Convention to be held in Philadelphia on March 26. As the hall in which it is to be held will hold only 7,000, some applications will have to be refused, and no one can enter without a ticket.

A missionary in Japan, recently heard of an insane girl who was kept in a cage and cruelly treated. He gained access to her and obtained permission to have the care of her. His kind treatment and gentle influence have succeeded in restoring her to reason. The Japanese regard her cure as miraculous.

Mr. George W. Wheeler of the Central Union Mission, Washington, D. C., asks us to acknowledge the receipt by him of the following sums for the support of Mr. J. McLain Brown's work in Tokyo, Japan, whose portrait appeared in this journal on January 28: C. C. Hatch, $3; J. V. Wheeler, 50c.; M. L. Meredith, $2; August Pfans, $1.50; D. J. Ennis, $10; J. W. Rowe, $2.50; J. K. Look, $10; "One Friend," Knoxville, $5; Mrs. Annie Cooper, $3; George Bollman, $10; S. Williams, $1; Fred Smith, $1.50; Pliny Craft, $1.

Mr. S. H. Hadley, Superintendent of the Jerry McAuley Water Street Mission, New York, acknowledges with thanks the receipt of the following sums from readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in response to the appeal recently made in this column: William McDermott, $10; Elizabeth S. Washburn, $10; C. B. H., $5; A Friend, $5; "For Christ's Sake," $5; Mrs. John H. Nettleton, $5; G. North, $3; Benjamin Stiles, $3; R. W. George, $2; "Daisy," $2; Martin Travis, $2; Laura C. Steading, $1; "Reader of the C. H.," $1; Edward Krause, $1; Olive L. Osburn, $1; "W," N. J., $1; Nems, $1; "R. M.," $1; "A Drunkard's Daughter, 25 cents. Total, $59.25.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Close of Congress—The Copyright Bill Passed—The Canadian Elections—Italy's New Premier—A Week of Storms—Massacre in Madagascar—South Dakota's New Senator, Rev. James H. Kyle.

The Fifty-first Congress Closed its Labors on Wednesday, March 4th, amid scenes of unusual excitement, especially in the House of Representatives. The usual resolution of thanks to the Speaker was adopted by a strictly partisan vote, amid frantic cheering and counter-cheering, which was renewed several times. Through all the trying scene, Speaker Reed retained his coolness, and his brief valedictory speech, marking his retirement and the end of the session, was as calmly elegant and deliberate as any of his previous utterances. A great, fragrant, floral trophy, borne to the Speaker's desk, seemed to stifle all the ill-feeling for both sides immediately united in applause. Then, while the Republicans sang: "Marching Through Georgia" and the Democrats the "Doxology," the Congress dissolved. One of the last measures to be passed was the Copyright Bill which was immediately sent to President Harrison who appended his signature. It goes into effect on July 1. The Sherman amendment (explained in a recent issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD) was stricken out. Another eleventh-hour measure was the General Deficiency Bill, appropriating $28,000,000 which the Senate passed at 11:30 A.M. with a rush, although warned by one of the members that it probably contained as many errors as the great Tariff Bill. In all, the late Congress passed 3053 bills, of which 2166 became laws. Fourteen of its bills were vetoed by the President. It had eighteen election contests to decide, and worked more hours than any American Congress ever did before. The more important measures passed besides those already named, were the Postal Subsidy Bill, Indian Depredation Claims Bill, Timber and Pre-emption Law Repeal Bill, and the Direct Tax Refund Bill. It also passed ninety-three bills for the erection of new public buildings, to cost $12,600,000, only four of which were vetoed. A portrait of the retiring Speaker is given above.

Italy's New Premier, the Marquis de Rudini, has been successful in allaying the apprehensions of the country as to the policy to be pursued by the new ministry. He is all for peace and retrenchment; he distinctly disavows a reform policy; he will maintain all Italy's alliances and will "prove to the world that we have no aggressive intentions." This is very reassuring to France, but, of course, is equivalent to the disruption of the Triple Alliance, which included Italy, Germany and Austria. At the same time, it is regarded as the best thing that could have happened for the peace of Europe. De Rudini, whose portrait is given above, has always been a Moderate in politics. In the present temper of the country, Crispi's return to power is far from being an improbability.

The Expiring Congress found no Time to Consider the Brussels Treaty for the suppression of the African slave-trade, and of the traffic in rum and fire-arms, carried on by foreigners in that country. The measure was killed in the Senate on the last day of the session, mainly on the ground that the ratification of the treaty would lead to entangling alliances, interference with "private business enterprises," etc. The odious rum-traffic, next to slavery, has been the curse of Africa, yet, in Congressional eyes, it is deserving of protection!

From Madagascar comes the News of a Frightful massacre, instigated by Ramiasatra, a despotic Governor of the Province of Belanond. The people of Belanond had appealed to the general government against Ramiasatra's oppression, and he, resenting this action, ordered his troops to fall upon them. A three-days' butchery followed, in which nearly 300 men, women and children of the leading families were killed. Many were dismembered, beheaded, and their bodies cast to the dogs. The women were most inhumanly treated. A band of the survivors was forced, under threat of death, to pile up the skulls of their dead friends as a trophy.

A New United States Senator, who will doubtless be heard from during the next session, is the Rev. James H. Kyle, whom the South Dakota Legislature chose as Gideon C. Moody's successor, by a combination of Democratic and Farmers' Alliance votes. He was born in Xenia, Ohio, in 1853, and is a very young man to attain the Senatorial dignity. He was graduated from Oberlin College, Ohio, in 1873, and then studied theology in the Western Theological Seminary at Allegheny, Pa., where he finished in 1882. For a while he served as pastor of a Congregational Church in Salt Lake City. Five years ago he went to Yankton, Dakota, and at present is financial secretary of Yankton College. He has been a member of the State Legislature. In a recent speech at Pierre, S. D., the new Senator defined his position as follows: "When two forces acting in opposite directions meet, they produce a new force, which continues to move in a direction different from either of the other forces. This new force is called in mechanics a resultant. To-night I feel that I am a resultant—formerly a Republican, then an Independent and now that I have been elected by both parties I am an Indecrat." A portrait of the reverend Senator is given above.

Heavy Storms were Experienced in Many parts of the country during the week. In the Eastern and Middle States, severe electrical storms, very unusual at this season, occurred. Terrific thunderstorms visited Massachusetts and Rhode Island. A lightning bolt struck a vessel near Gloucester, prostrating the crew. Churches, hotels and other buildings were also struck by the electric fluid. A great gale raged in Virginia. The James River was a raging flood and over twenty lives are believed to have been lost. In the West, the floods in Arizona and California (mentioned in last week's issue), are reported as having caused the loss of nearly one hundred lives, besides great destruction among live stock and buildings. At Yuma, Arizona, alone, over two hundred and fifty houses were wrecked. At Jakemo, a town a little above Yuma, the river Gila was seven miles wide and people were driven to take refuge in the tree tops.

A Significant Letter, as Foreshadowing the future policy of our Government in dealing with the South American Republics, was written by Secretary Blaine to a Rochester, N. Y., manufacturer, a few days ago. "Just measure of reciprocity is believed to be secured by the present arrangement," he wrote, "upon terms which appear to be the most advantageous to the general productions and manufactures of the United States; but experience may in due time suggest enlargement of the interchange so begun, besides clearing the way for similar arrangements with other Governments." This is interpreted at Washington as a hint of still more reciprocity treaties with the South American Republics, during the present administration.

One of the Most Picturesque Figures in European politics, for many years, was M. Musurus, formerly Turkish Ambassador at London, who died a few days ago. Musurus was a Greek Christian merchant, and began his public career as secretary to the Prince of Samos, whose daughter he afterward married. He was successively Minister of the Ottoman Government at Athens and Vienna and, when he assumed the Ambassadorial office in London, it was with the title of Pasha. For thirty years he was a well known character in the great metropolis, foremost in all philanthropic movements and in many respects progressive beyond the average of his fellow-countrymen. He is credited with using his diplomatic talent and his influence with the Sultan in many cases for the benefit of the persecuted Christians in Turkey, who, but for his intercession, must have suffered far more than they did from the fanaticism of the Moslem population. His portrait appears in this column.

The Canadian Election Was Full of Surprises. Up to the very last moment, Sir John Macdonald's party believed they would win the battle. While the Liberals were hopeful, they were not nearly so sanguine as the Government. Everywhere in the Dominion, the significance of the election, as showing the real attitude of the country on the annexation question, was fully appreciated. Laurier and Cartwright, two leading Liberals, the night before voting, declared that such was the temper of the people, that nothing short of bribery and unlimited corruption could avert a Government defeat. The reciprocity idea put forward by Sir John and the Conservatives did not excite the attention they expected. Almost all the Liberal leaders united in denying any complicity in the intrigues said to have been going on at Washington. The voting, on March 4, resulted in a fair majority for the Conservatives, Sir John Macdonald's majority in the Dominion Parliament being reduced from 50 to between 30 and 40.

This indecisive result is a disappointment for both parties. The Liberals declare that the government used wholesale bribery, and the Catholic Church influence to avert a crushing defeat. They had hoped for a triumph for free and unrestricted commercial intercourse with the United States. At Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, and Halifax the contest at the polls was the hottest ever known, the election almost becoming, at the principal points, a question of "annexation or no annexation." The Liberals made gains everywhere, except in the maritime provinces. Hugh Macdonald, son of the premier was elected and so also was Minister of Finance, George E. Foster. The Liberal leaders, including Hon. Wilfred Laurier, were elected by increased majorities. Mr. Laurier's portrait is given in this column. The Liberal leader is of French origin. He is forty-seven years old, the son of a farmer and a lawyer by profession. As an orator he is unexcelled in the Canadian Parliament, and he speaks equally well in French or English. His speech protesting against the execution of Louis Riel for treason was probably the finest piece of oratory ever heard in Canada.

A CALL TO DUTY.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

A Divine Decree no Ground for Idleness—An Encouragement to Enthusiastic Labor—I. Responsible Office—Believers as Watchmen—The Watchman Among the Ashes of Pompeii—As Spokesmen—For God and to God—As Remembrancers—II. A Remarkable Caution—To Take no Rest—Prayer to be Unceasing—Not in Routine—Not Spasmodically—III. A More Remarkable Charge—Persistence with God—Importunity Influential with God.

"I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the Lord, keep not silence, and give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth." Isaiah 62: 6, 7.

IN the opening verses of this chapter our Lord declares that he will not rest till his purpose of grace is accomplished. "For Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest." His soul is set upon the perfection of his Church. There is never a moment when the heart of Christ ceases to beat high with desire for the salvation of his redeemed. From the dreadful work of making atonement he stayed not his hand, but set his face like a flint towards it, till he could say, "It is finished:" and now the following work of the outgathering of his people he carries on with quenchless zeal, never staying his divine intercession, never withholding his hands from wielding that "all power" which is given him in heaven and in earth.

Learn from this fact a valuable lesson, that Christ's determination to perform a work, his decree that so it shall be, is no argument for our idleness, but is the best plea and encouragement for our endeavors. "If it is to be," cries one, "I need not do anything." Nay, friend, thou arguest slothfully. On the contrary, the earnest heart will reason itself into immediate and confident action. If it were not to be, to what purpose my zeal? Even if I do not know whether it is to be or not to be, if I think it desirable, I will labor for it with anxiety; but if I am assured that the Lord has appointed it, I labor with might and main, feeling a holy confidence in doing the work of the Lord. Since he wills it, we will it; and so it shall be.

I. In my text I see three things, which I will mention one by one. The first is ## Responsible Office—

"I have set watchmen upon thy walls." In times of war every fortified city had upon its walls certain watchmen, so placed as to see eye to eye: that is to say, the eye of one sentinel reached to the eye of another, and so they encompassed the city round about. Whoever passed that way by day or night, they challenged him; and if he turned out to be a foe, they gave an alarm, and straightway men-at-arms came forth from the guard-room, and the city was protected against surprise. God's people, and especially the stronger, the more instructed, and the most experienced of them, should act as watchmen upon the walls, for Christ's sake.

Observe what manner of watchmen we ought to be. It is written, "I have set watchmen." We are under divine command. In the old Roman days, when a sentry was placed in his position by his centurion, he never thought of quitting his post. There was found in Pompeii among the ashes, a sentry, standing in his place with his javelin in his hand: he had not flinched amid the deadly shower which fell from the volcano and buried the city. His centurion, in the name of the emperor, had set him there, and there he stood. How steadfast and immovable ought those to be, whom the Lord himself has set in their place in connection with his Church!

These watchmen guarded the city of cities, "thy walls, O Jerusalem." The legionary who guarded old Rome felt that, if he did not fight for his native city, he would be base indeed. If we are set to guard the Church of God, what shall I say to him who sleeps at his post, or proves a traitor? If you do not throw your whole strength into the guarding of such a cause as this, what will arouse you? No word has yet been invented which can set forth the perfidy of the man who betrays the cause of Christ and of the Gospel; he is the murderer of souls. God has set us to guard his own city, and we must not slumber. See, brethren, your responsible office: watchmen of God's setting, watchmen on the walls of God's own city!

But, in the next place, we are to be spokesmen; for we are never to hold our peace, but make mention of the Lord. Believers are to speak for God to the people. If you have the ability and the commission, speak to the great congregation. You have both ability and commission, each one of you, to speak to those round about you.

Be Always Ready

to speak a word in season. Keep a shot in the locker; never run short of a good word for those whom God's providence puts in your way. If there be nobody near to whom you can speak for God, then in your solitude speak to God for your fellow-men.

A third office is brought before us in the marginal reading, and in the new version: "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take no rest." This is a singular expression—"The Lord's remembrancers." I find the same word elsewhere translated "recorder"; and truly we are to be the Lord's recorders, and keep in memory his great goodness. A high office is that of Remembrancer to the King of kings. Every Christian holds this eminent position. Oriental kings maintained an officer whose business it was to remind the king of those promises which he had made aforetime. He said this to that courtier, that to the other; but his majesty had plenty of other things to think of, and therefore, every now and then, his Remembrancer would say, "Please your majesty, you promised to do this and that; may it please you to perform your word." I find that a Remembrancer was also appointed in our English courts to remind the officers of their duty to their sovereign; and this is also a part of our work—to remind the world that there is a God, and that he claims obedience from his creatures. Brethren, fulfil your office!

II. My second head is

A Remarkable Caution:

"Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest." I quote the best translation. Take no rest from prayer. Be always praying. If not always in the act of prayer, be always in the spirit of prayer. "Pray without ceasing." Not only reason, but wrestle with God in prayer. Sometimes pray without words, and sometimes with them. Pray alone, and often pray with brethren. There is special prevalence in the prayer of two or three. "If two of you shall agree on earth as touching anything that they shall ask, it shall be done for them of my Father which is in heaven." Gather in the greater congregations for prayer. "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together, as the manner of some is"; as, I regret to say, the manner of many churches has come to be in these days. Oh, my brethren, I beseech you, both as individuals and as a church, do not restrain prayer. "Watch and pray"—that precept is a condensation of our text.

Never rest from prayer because you are weary of it. Whenever prayer becomes distasteful, it should be a loud call to pray all the more. No man has such need to pray as the man who does not care to pray. When you can pray, and long to pray, why then you will pray; but when you cannot pray, and do not wish to pray, why then you must pray, or evil will come of it. He is on the brink of ruin who forgets the mercy-seat. When the heart is apathetic toward prayer, the whole man is sickening for a grievous disease.

Never rest from prayer because you have prayed enough. Does anyone say, "I have long been prayerful and watchful, and I shall now take things more easily?" Yes. I saw a good man taking it easy the other day: he was riding upon a bicycle with both feet off the pedals, and with the brake in full force. I did not blame the cyclist; but one thing was quite clear—he was going down the hill. He would not have had his feet on the rests in that fashion if he had been upon the up-grade. Brother, whenever you begin to put your legs up, and have no more work to do, you are going down hill, and there is no doubt about it. The way to heaven is up hill, and every inch of the way will need effort.

Do not fall into the habit of praying as a matter of routine. "Ye that are the Lord's remembrancers, take ye no rest," I have heard of soldiers sleeping while on the march, and I have known some good people sleep while praying, till I have thought that their prayers were a kind of pious snore. They go on with the old phrases without considering what they mean by them. The

Petitions "As Per Usual."

It is dreary work when we have the shell of prayer before us, but have no oyster in it. The brother's lips are here in prayer, but his soul has gone home to his shop, or to his farm. The sails of his mill go round as the wind blows, but he is not grinding anything—there is no grist in the mill, no intelligent, loving desire. Let us get out of the ruts of phrases and set petitions. Mere routine religion is hateful and yet how easily we all fall into it!

Brethren, take no rest, so as to pray by fits and starts. Look at what has been done in many churches: they plan to have a grand time, and possibly they succeed. Everybody comes up to the prayer meetings, and all appear to be in earnest about the conversion of souls. There is great excitement, and probably much good is done. But after that there is a reaction, a stupor of indifference. As in nature, after high hills deep valleys; so it is with some religious communities. We say of a man, in the proverb, "he is as sound asleep as a church." Yes, very good; nothing does sleep so soundly as a church; and especially after a time of excitement. Men who are at one time lively beyond measure, are apt at another time to sleep beyond waking. After a high wind there may come a lull, wherein everything droops, and stagnation reigns supreme. The Lord save us from spasmodic religion!

Only one more observation: avoid setting any time to God in your prayers. A wife said that she would pray for her husband for ten years, and if he was not converted then, she would conclude that there would be no use in further pleading. To that good wife I would say, "You are right in praying ten years, but you must not limit the Holy One of Israel. Who are you, to put your finger down on the almanac and say, 'God shall answer me or I will pray no more'? Plead for your husband as long as he lives." "Well," says one, "I have been praying a long time for a favor, and I am inclined now to cease pleading for it." If you have a question about the rightness of the prayer, do not persevere in a mistake. Solve as quickly as possible the question as to the correctness of the request; for if you waver on that point, your prayer will be of that wavering kind which meets no acceptance with the Lord. If you are asking what you know the Lord has promised, you may pray with confidence, and you may even spend the last breath in your body in praying for it.

On Such a Day,

III. And so I come, in the last place, to dwell upon the third matter, which is very singular. The charge to take no rest was notable, but here is a still more remarkable charge:

"Give Him No Rest."

What a word is this! I speak with solemn awe upon me. When the Lord condescends so greatly, we must be doubly reverent. Give God no rest! I am amazed at such a command.

I see then, first, very clearly, that importunity is here commanded. "Give him no rest" is our Lord's own command to us concerning the great God. I do not suppose any of you ever advised a beggar to be importunate with you. Did you ever say, "Whenever you see me go over this crossing, ask me for a penny. If I do not give you one, run after me, or call after me all the way down the street. If that does not succeed, lay hold upon me, and do not let me go until I help you. Beg without ceasing." Did any one of you ever invite applicants to call often, and make large requests of you? Oh, no! Importunity is a common enough thing when men are seeking earthly boons; but it is so sadly rare in heavenly concerns, that the Lord has to exhort us to be importunate with him.

Importunity is influential with God. How vividly the Saviour sets this forth in his parables! The poor widow seeks justice of an unrighteous judge. She had a good case, and she appeared in court where she might expect it. "My Lord, hear my suit!" She meets with no response: the harsh magistrate declares that he cannot attend to her. The court is occupied with other cases. At the first pause the widow is heard crying, "My Lord, there is now an interval; will you hear me?" She is sternly refused. Another day she appears, and another, and another: her case is urgent, and she is in terrible earnest to be heard. She is put out of the court, once and again. Then the order is given that she shall be kept out. But she gets in somehow, and her voice, so touching and piercing, is heard in season and out of season, seeking to be delivered from her adversary. Just as the court is closing she cries, "My lord!" and is answered, "Have not I told you many times before that I cannot attend to you?" "But, my lord!" He turns on his heel, and is gone to his home.

Begging For Justice

The next morning he is at breakfast, when the servant says, "A person begs to see you, sir. She has been at the door very often, and she will not go away." "What is she like?" "Well, it is a woman dressed in mourning—no doubt a widow." "Drive her away. She is a common nuisance!" He goes to the court, and there is the woman, and

She Begins Again.

Then the judge says to himself, "Though I fear not God, nor regard man; yet because this widow troubleth me, I will avenge her, lest by her continual coming she weary me." The Lord puts that woman's importunity before us as a model, and as an encouragement. "And shall not God avenge his own elect, which cry day and night unto him?" Pray like that widow. Do not take "No" for an answer.

Study that other picture. A man has a friend, who arrives at his door in the dead of night. The friend has been walking a long, long way, and is worn out. When he gets to the door, he says, "I am glad I have got here at last. I lost my way in the burning heat of the sun, and it has taken me many hours to find the track and reach thy door. Give me, I pray thee, a morsel of bread, for I am near to die of hunger." "I have not a morsel in the house: I have nothing to set before thee. Come in and try to sleep; for food I have none." "Alas! I could not sleep, I am so faint with hunger; I pray thee, find me food, or I shall perish." The compassionate householder resolves to go down the street to a friend, and beg from him three cakes. He knocks at the door, but he has no answer. He knocks, and knocks, and calls aloud to his neighbor. The answer comes from the top of the roof that the man is in bed, and cannot rise at that unearthly hour to

Search For Bread.

The householder is not to be put off, for his friend is dying of hunger; and so he knocks and shouts, and ceases not. The man in bed on the roof tries to sleep, but the noise is too great, and the children are being frightened, and asking what is the matter. He hears the pleadings of his friend, and again reminds him that the request is unreasonable at such an hour; but this does not end the matter. Knock! Knock! Knock! Call! Call! Call! "I will not go down!" vows the man in bed. "I will not go away!" says the man below. He keeps up an incessant shout and clatter. Again you hear knock! knock! knock! The man has turned on the other side, and tried to go to sleep, but he cannot manage it; that knocking is too vigorous. Although he will not help him because he is a friend, "yet because of his importunity he will rise and give him as many as he needeth." After this manner pray ye, and ye shall prevail. Oh, for grace to knock till God's door is opened! You may have what you will if you understand the art of importunity.

"Give him no rest!" Importunity would not have been commanded had it not been right for us, and prevalent with God. How safely may we commend what the Lord commands! God is to be moved by the importunate prayers of his people. He will hear; he must hear, if we will pray with persistent faith.

I exhort you who fear the Lord, and are his appointed remembrancers, to be much in prayer, and in testimony. Pray and preach. Keep not silent. Tell out the simple Gospel. The more you tell of pardon bought with blood the better. I saw my dear brother, Archibald Brown, this week, and he told me of a poor fellow in East London who had been visited by a soul-winning brother. He had been

A Wild and Wicked Man.

He was ill, and the missionary visitor talked long with him. It seemed to make no impression, till one day he explained substitution to him, and the man asked pointedly, "If I believe in Jesus, do you tell me that he took all my sins upon himself?" "Yes, he bore all your sins in his own body on the tree." "Well, well," the man cried, "if he took them, I have not got them." "No," said the other, "that is the glorious truth. The Lord suffered for your sins." "Then I shall not have to suffer for them?" "No," said the visitor. "Your sin is put away." "Never heard that before," said the rough man; "that is the wonderfulest thing I ever heard. I believe it. Blessed be God, I believe it, and I am saved!"

Soon after, his son came in—another fellow of the Bill Sykes order—and the visitor began exhorting him. The older man cried out, "Give him that little bit; that will do it." Just so, "that little bit will do it." The visitor told the story of Jesus dying in the sinner's stead, and the little bit did the work. Our chief business should be to cry, "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." We must bid men look to Jesus and live. Keep not silence. Publish this salvation far and wide. Preach the cross, and plead the blood. Preach and pray for Jesus: he is all in all. Keep his sacrifice to the front, and God will bless his own word. Oh, that he may now grant us a glorious period of genuine grace-work! Amen.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

A Study of Kingsley.*

CHARLES KINGSLEY was a man with a boy's heart; a hater of cruelty and injustice, and also with a brave, indomitable belief that his own country and his own cause were generally in the right, whatever the quarrel. He loved England like a mistress, and hated her enemies, Spain and the Pope, though even in them he saw the good. He is forever scolding the Spaniards for their cruelties to the Indians, but he defends the English treatment of the Irish, which (at that time) was neither more nor less oppressive than the Spanish performances in America. "Go it, our side!" you hear this good Kingsley crying; and one's heart goes out to him for it, in an age when everybody often proves his own country to be in the wrong. Simple, brave, resolute, manly, a little given to "Robustiousness," Kingsley transfigured all these qualities by possessing the heart and soul of a poet. He was not a very great poet, indeed, but a true poet—one of the very small band who are cut off, by a gulf that can never be passed, from mere writers of verse, however clever, educated, melodious, ingenious, able and refined. He had the real spark of fire, the true note; though the spark might seldom break into flame, and the note was not always clear. Never let us confuse true poets with writers of verse, still less with writers of poetic prose. Kingsley wrote a good deal of that—perhaps too much: his descriptions of scenes are not always as good as in Hereward's ride round the fens, or when the tall Spanish galleon staggers from the vengeance of man to the vengeance of God, to her doom through the mist, to her rest in the sea. Perhaps only a poet could have written that prose; it is certain no writer of poetic prose could have written Kingsley's poems. His songs are his best things; they really are songs, not merely lyric poems.

* From Essays in Little, by Andrew Lang. These essays are analyses of the characters and writings of men of eminence in literature with an expression of opinion as to their influence on the public, and the permanent effect on society. Pp. 205; price, 6s.; published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, N. Y.

The truth about Charles Kingsley seems to be that he rather made a brave and cheery noise in this night-battle of modern life, than that he directed any movement of forces. He kept cheering, as it were, and waving his sword with a contagious enthusiasm. Being a poet, and a man both of heart and of sentiment, he was equally attached to the best things of the old world and to the best of the new world, as far as one can forecast what it is to be. He loved the stately homes of England, the ancient graduated order of society, the sports of the past, the military triumphs, the patriotic glories. But he was also on the side of the poor: as "Parson Lot," he attempted to be a Christian socialist.

Johnson's Estimate of Bunyan.

Dr. Johnson once took Bishop Percy's little daughter on his knee, and asked her what she thought of the Pilgrim's Progress. The child answered that she had not read it. "No?" replied the Doctor; "then I would not give one farthing for you," and he set her down and took no further notice of her. This story proves that the Doctor was rather intolerant. We must not excommunicate people because they have not our taste in books. The majority of people do not care for books at all. There is a descendant of John Bunyan alive now, or there was lately, who never read the Pilgrim's Progress. Books are not in his line. Nay, Bunyan himself, who wrote sixty works, was no great reader. An Oxford scholar who visited him in his study found no books at all except Bunyan's own and Foxe's Book of Martyrs. Yet little as the world cares for reading, it has read Bunyan more than most. One hundred thousand copies of the Pilgrim are believed to have been sold in his own day, and the story has been done into the most savage languages, as well as into those of the civilized world.

Bunyan's Home.

Bunyan himself, "the wondrous babe," as Dr. Brown enthusiastically styles him, was christened on November 30, 1628. He was born in a cottage long fallen, and hard by was a marshy place, "a veritable slough of despond." Bunyan may have had it in mind when he wrote of the slough where Christian had so much trouble. He was not a travelled man: all his knowledge of people and places he found at his doors. He had some schooling, "according to the rate of other poor men's children," and assuredly it was enough. The great civil war broke out, and Bunyan was a soldier; he tells us not on which side. Dr. Brown and Mr. Lewis Morris think he was on that of the Parliament, but his old father, the tinker, stood for the king, Mr. Froude is rather more inclined to hold that he was among "the gay gallants who struck for the crown." He does not seem to have been much under fire, but he got that knowledge of the appearance of war which he used in his siege of the city of Mansoul. One can hardly think that Bunyan liked war—certainly not from cowardice, but from goodness of heart. He married very young, and poor. He married a pious wife, and read all her library The Plain Man's Pathway to Heaven, and The Practice of Piety. He became very devout in the spirit of the Church of England, and he gave up his amusements. Then he fell into the Slough of Despond, then he went through the Valley of the Shadow, and battled with Interior of the Prison of Yeniseisk, Siberia.

Apollyon . . . . If he had not been cast into jail for preaching in a cottage, he might never have "dreamed" his immortal dream nor become all that he was. The leisures of jail were long. In that "den" the muse came to him, the fair, kind Muse of the House Beautiful. He saw all that company of his, so like, and so unlike Chaucer's: Faithful, and Hopeful, and Christian the fellowship of fiends, the truculent Cavaliers of Vanity Fair, and Giant Despair, with his grievous crab-tree cudgel: and other people he saw who are with us always,—the handsome Madam Bubble, and the young woman whose name was Dull, and Mr. Worldly Wiseman and Mr. Facing Bothways, and Byends, all the persons of the comedy of human life.

THE SIBERIAN PRISONS.

How Mr. George Kennan Explored the Russian Convict Establishments and Exposed Their Horrors.

THE revelations Mr. George Kennan has made of the miseries endured in Siberia by the political offenders who are living there in enforced exile have horrified the whole civilized world. A mystery hung over the subject, for few beside Russians had been through Siberia, and they knew that it was dangerous to tell what they knew. Men and women belonging often to aristocratic and sometimes noble families would suddenly disappear from Russian society. When some indiscreet person inquired what had become of them the whispered answer would be the one word, "Siberia," and the inquirer knew that it was unsafe to ask further. The word meant a living death, but of its details little was known till Kennan went there, lived and talked with the sufferers and told their story to the world in all its hideous reality.

George Kennan, whose portrait is given above, is forty-six years of age. He is a native of Norwalk, Ohio, of Scotch-Irish descent. His father was a lawyer from Western New York, and his mother the daughter of a clergyman. The family was poor and Kennan, though ardently longing for a college education, was obliged to abandon his desire that he might help with the domestic finances. At the age of twelve he began work in a telegraph office. He was even then a hard worker and diligent student of such books as he could borrow. Promotion came to him rapidly, especially during the war when the qualities of patient endurance of hardship, courage and presence of mind in sudden emergencies which have always distinguished him were of special value. At the age of twenty he was one of the most valued employees of the Western Union Company.

At that time (1865) the project was entertained of a telegraph line from this country to Europe by way of Alaska, Behring Sea and Siberia. The first Atlantic Cable had failed, and there was a general impression that the only practicable mode of telegraphic communication with Europe must be by land. An expedition to survey the route was organized and Kennan at his own urgent request was assigned a place in it. During that journey, he acquired a thorough knowledge of the Russian language, and saw much of the country. He was courteously received by Russian officials, visited the prisons, and studied the exile system. He returned with a strong prejudice against the Nihilists, EX-EMPRESS FREDERICK OF GERMANY.

(See article on next page)

and a firm belief in the justice and clemency of the Czar's rule. He expressed the conviction in newspaper articles and in lectures that the Nihilists were "mentally unbalanced fanatics and assassins," and such severity as the Czar had used with them was a necessity.

In 1885 Mr. Kennan made another journey in Siberia, spending a year and a-half in the inhospitable land. He had been longing for this opportunity ever since his former visit, but even if he desires it he never dare go again. His defence in this country of the Czar's government was known in Russia and in Siberia, and it secured for him unusual courtesies and liberty of travel. But he came into personal contact with the exiles, lived with them in their huts, heard their stories and witnessed their sufferings. He returned in 1886 to tell a very different story from the one he had told before. Such a scathing denunciation of the Russian Government as he has issued, such a merciless exposure as he has made of the cruelties, outrages and persecutions perpetrated by Russian officials on the men and women in their power, could not be surpassed. He brought back portraits of many of the exiles, he talked with them, and has related their histories, he saw the barbarities practiced on men and women, boys and girls, and he related them with strict fidelity. The result has been a feeling of indignation a scorn and loathing for the Russian Government throughout this country, and wherever the English language is spoken such as has never been felt for any Government. Mr. Kennan gives facts, detailed statements with date and place and leaves his readers to form their own conclusions. It is the most effective arraignment that could have been made. Of any other government it might be hoped that the force of public opinion might produce shame, and an attempt at reformation, but unhappily no such hope can be cherished of the Russian Government. It goes from bad to worse.

Mr. George Kennan, the Friend of the Siberian Exiles.

THE FOUNTAIN AT NAZARETH.

One of the Familiar Scenes of Christ's Boyhood—A Well made Sacred by Holy Associations.

(See Illustration on next page.)

NEXT to Jerusalem, there is no place so sacred to the traveller in the Holy Land as the Village of Nazareth—the scene of the Saviour's boyhood. It is a grand, old village, beautiful in its surroundings, simple and even primitive in the life led by its people. It was of Nazareth that Rev. Dr. Talmage, speaking of his recent tour in the Holy Land, said: "First of all, it is clean, and that can be said of few of the Oriental villages. It has been the scene of battles, passing it from Israelite to Mohammedan and from Mohammedan to Christian, the most wonderful being that where 25,000 Turks were beaten by 2,100 Frenchmen, Bonaparte commanding. . . . This town is beautifully situated in a great green bowl, the sides of the bowl the surrounding fifteen hills. . . . There is the very well, called, 'The Fountain of the Virgin,' to which by his mother's side, Jesus trotted along, holding her hand. It is the only well in the village, and it has been the only well for 3,000 years."

There is no more delightful spot than this old well, which stands at one end of the village, surrounded by olive groves and wide pleasant spaces. Here the women of the village gather and gossip with each other, as they draw the sparkling water from its cool depths. While two or three are drawing at once, sometimes as many as seventy-five women, with pitchers on head or shoulders, stand around chatting and retailing the latest talk of the neighborhood, or even of Nablous, a village some little distance from Nazareth. It is in the morning that one sees the largest gatherings at the old well, when the villagers go to draw water for cooking the early meal. Children play around, and the whole scene—the picturesque groupings, the richly-colored native dresses and the merry laughter and soft chatter mingling in the morning sunshine—makes a delightful picture. There is little doubt that the Saviour in his boyhood days, often joined the merry groups of little children that played around this old well, which, though now falling to decay as to its surroundings, still retains its freshness and the purity of its springs, through all the changes of centuries.

TREES YIELDING WATER.

A EUROPEAN traveller, on his way from the coast of Madagascar to the capital, Tananarivo, in the interior, had emptied his water flask, and was suffering from thirst. He asked one of the natives of his party when he should be able to obtain water. "Any time you like it, sir," said the native, smiling. The natives conducted him to a group of tall, palm-like trees, standing in a cluster on the edge of the forest, with straight trunks and bright green, broad leaves growing from the opposite sides of the stalk, and making the tree appear like a great fan. "You think it is a fine tree," said the native, "but I will show you what it is good for." He pierced the root of one of the leaf-stems at the point where it joined the tree, with his spear, whereupon a stream of clear water spurted out, which the European caught in his water can, and found cool, fresh, and excellent drink. The native who had spoken went on, "This tree, which is good for us in more ways than one, we call the 'travellers' tree.'" "The leaves drink in the rain that falls on them, and when it has passed all through them it becomes very pure and sweet."

AN EMPRESS DIPLOMATIST.

The Ex-Empress Frederick's Visit to Paris Stirs up all Europe.

EMPEROR WILHELM is said to be greatly chagrined at the result of his effort at peace-making. The visit of the ex-Empress Frederick, to Paris has widened the breach between the two nations, and her cavalier treatment by press and people has resulted in Germany withdrawing all courtesies from Frenchmen—entering Alsace-Lorraine. During the stay of the Empress in the French Capital, she was ignored by the high government officials (whose duties of hospitality, it might be supposed, would have prompted them to accord the distinguished visitor a courteous reception), abused by the Boulangist organs, and dogged by their spies wherever she appeared. On the last day of her visit, a demonstration had been arranged by the Boulangists, but the Empress avoided it by driving to a special train. At Calais she embarked on the royal yacht for London. Her mother, Queen Victoria, it is reported, was indignant over the treatment she received and when the Prince of Wales suggested that it would be advisable for the ex-Empress to leave France, Victoria exclaimed: "What! Turn my daughter out of Paris? Nonsense!" The general opinion seems to be that the unfortunate episode has brought France and Germany a step nearer war.

The Fountain of the Virgin, Nazareth.

ROMA.

A NEW SERIAL STORY,
Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c.

(Continued from page 142.)

The Dogali Column.

THE good rector had arranged that the young ladies should go to the Continental Hotel, just across the piazza from the station. While they were waiting for breakfast, Margaret took up the morning paper, La Tribuna.

"Bravo! Bravissimo!" she exclaimed, addressing Camilla; "that monument to Giordano Bruno is under way, at last."

"Bene! Bene!" cried the Italian girl.

"Where?" asked Carolyn, turning away from the window through which she had been watching, with a half-amused, half-serious air, the people passing in the street below.

"Why, — in the Campo dei Fiori, where they burned him."

"Here in Rome, I suppose?"

"To be sure; where else would it be?" laughed Margaret, laying down the paper, over the columns of which her eyes had been racing.

"The students did it!" cried Camilla. "The students and the soldiers are too much for the tyrants. Dear old Mazzini! How he did work to scatter the fire of free thought among the young men! He began away back when my father was a young priest."

"Was your father a priest?" asked Carolyn, with surprise.

"Yes; in his young days. He went into one of Mazzini's secret societies, where young men were taught Italian liberty; and that made short work of his priestly servitude."

"Didn't you tell me that there is a bust of Bruno on the Pincion?" asked Margaret.

"Yes; that was a part of Mazzini's plan. The young who walk there for pleasure will catch the calm, deep beauty of the faces of our noble Italians. Little children will spell out their names. 'Who was Giordano Bruno?' 'Gariibaldi?' 'Savonarola?' So the story of their great lives will go down from generation to generation."

"If you girls were not so tremendously clever," said Carolyn, "it would be for my advantage. It is really very funny to hear you run on when one is quite in darkness about the whole subject. Now if you will kindly tell one who this Giordano Bruno was, and what he did, and who burned him, and why, one would not feel so absurdly stupid."

"Bravissimo!" exclaimed Margaret, who was in high spirits, judging from the brilliancy of her eyes. "You see, my most excellent cousin, Giordano Bruno was a Neapolitan gentleman of the sixteenth century, a priest. Tiring of the stupid round of convent duties, he took to lecturing on Aristotle and the heavens. The Church made it uncomfortable for him, and he went over to our blessed England; but he found it dull business getting either faith or science into the heads of our stupid ancestors; so he worked his way back to this ethereal, thunderous Italy, taking in the Genevan Calvinists. Their decrees were a little hard for him; but he liked their practical free grace. That was really the head and front of his offending; so in Venice a friend handed him over to the Holy Office, a piece of satanic enginery more unmitigatedly diabolical than anything Dante ever dreamed out for his Inferno."

"The Inquisition?" asked Carolyn, solemnly.

"Yes; that slaughter-house of piety and thought. They shut him in their dungeons with twenty others. Finally they concluded to end the slow torture by making a bonfire of him, 'to light men on a piece.'"

"They have come to appreciate him," said Carolyn. "It seems they are building him a monument."

"The students do," replied Margaret. "They have been fighting for this ten years. They have finally succeeded in making the ghostly fathers eat a mouthful of their own fire. You see, the king and parliament have to walk softly, while ninety per cent. of their subjects are under the thumb of their worst enemy. Poor as the country is, they have to set to account of Signor Gioacchino Pecci, as they call the Pope, several millions of francs a year. The people laugh at the joke, but it would never do to tamper with their superstitions."

"It is really quite unaccountable, this getting up of the monument," said Carolyn.

"Indeed it is. The students' petition went dancing from Pilate to Herod, as they say. The Parliament sent it to the municipality, and they sent it back, and so they kept it going. Last winter the young men went hissing and shouting under the windows of senators, pro and con, and the soldiers had merry times escorting them back to their rooms. Actually, the elections turned on the question of this monument."

At that moment Marie appeared in a charmingly fresh toilet: and the breakfast was brought in. After a psalm of thanks for their safe arrival Margaret went to her room for her hat and Newmarket.

"Whither away, my queen?" asked Camilla.

"O, I must go out, and look around. I have assumed a great responsibility, you know, and I must show myself competent, or Uncle John will never trust me more. You must all tuck your heads under your wings for a nap."

"Where the queen goes, I go:" and Camilla ran away for her hat and wrap.

"In the fierce light that beats upon a throne," quoted Margaret, "must my every step be attended?"

Upon the Piazza della Stazione, where Via Cavour ends, Margaret was turning to the left, when her purpose flashed across the mind of the Italian girl, who, in some unaccountable way, had caught a hint of the American officer who fell at Dogali. Around at that end of the station was the column erected to the memory of the Dogali heroes. Their names were upon its pedestal. There were five hundred of them: and the name of Piazza had been changed to Cinque Cento in their honor. Margaret was going to look for Jerome's name on the column. Camilla tried to draw her in another direction. Let's go down Via Cavour," she said, "and off this way," pointing to the right. "There's the sweetest little dot of a park there where I used to go with my father when he was very feeble, and almost blind. I would read to him, while he felt the spring sunshine coming down through the palms and chestnuts. There is a lovely fountain, not far from there, a new one. The main jet waves like a rainbow banner. Scores of little streams throw themselves into the basin, like strings of brilliants, as if the sunbeams were saying millions of prayers on a diamond rosary. We must come and see it some night. They say that from the Via Nazionale it has almost spectral splendor. An electric light on each side of it, is so capped as to pour all its bluish rays on the fountain, while the rest of the piazza is lighted only by the yellowish gas."

"Magnificent, no doubt," said Margaret, "but I don't want to go there this morning." Her face had lost its color, her eyes their brightness. Her lips were tensely drawn as if her heart were shivering; she had meant to go alone to the column: yet Camilla's presence was a comfort. In her secret soul, in spite of ten thousand assurances to the contrary, was the ghost of a hope that Jerome's name was not on the column. She ought to tell Camilla. "I am going now to the Dogali column. One of those heroes belonged to me. An Italian soldier, a comrade, saw him fall, and brought me his last message—in New York."

Camilla tried to speak, but the words stuck in her throat, and she pressed against her heart the cold hand that rested on her arm. They turned into the Via del Principe Umberto, and walked across the Piazza toward the column with slow heavy steps, as if in a funeral train.

"My father could find no fault in Jerome," Margaret said. "No doubt his blood was as good as ours a few generations back: but I wouldn't let him stoop to prove that. His father was a carpenter—our Lord's trade you know."

"You knew him well?" asked Camilla with a caution for which her people do not generally get credit.

"We sat near each other in class our four college years. He worked his way, and took care of his mother: and one winter he had no overcoat. I had so much money; and I wanted so to help him, but I was afraid to. O, how I did glory when the class made him its President. We were never silly about things, but a freemasonry grew up between us so that we could say anything we liked without moving our lips."

"As we do in Italy," threw in Camilla.

"He took mathematics by instinct," Margaret went on, "and I was pretty fair in languages; so we used to help each other: and nobody was the wiser. He was very good. He ought to have been a missionary; but he wanted to make money, on my account. Mother and I got him into my father's law office, though he never knew who helped him. He lived with us after his mother died."

"O, that last summer was beautiful! Mother would take him with us to our country place. We three studied Italian together; and Jerome used to read to us those lovely days, on the Hudson. Father came home from England in November with some sort of a marriage scheme for me. Well, dear hearts, they are all gone now. I never heard from Jerome after he went to Italy, till that soldier brought me his last word."

The obelisk with the bronze palms on the altar at its base seemed to point like a cold, grey finger to the clear, deep heavens that had received the Dogali heroes.

"I do not know his exact rank," said Margaret while they read each name. "The soldier could not explain it, because their tactics differ from ours."

"You did not give me his full name," said Camilla.

"Jerome Goodyear," was the reply.

"In Germany it was Gutjahr. By some little legal formality they had it translated after they came to America."

"Translated!" whispered Camilla in her secret heart. "That might be done again," and she went over the list a third time, looking for "Giralamo Buonanno," as "Jerome Goodyear" would read translated into Italian. But there was no such name on the column. "An officer, and his name omitted? No, that could not be," she said to herself as they walked away toward the Piazza del Indipendenza. They were going to take a look at the Prætorian Camp, where the soldier told Margaret that Jerome was quartered at one time in Rome.

The sky was cloudless and brilliant. The hills, in view through the openings made by the streets, lay in an exquisite violet haze beyond the Campagna, that was just touched with the soft, tender, spring green. That picture of marvelous beauty had stirred hearts whose beating was stilled centuries ago. Our young ladies did not waste words upon it; but, as they turned again to their hotel, they passed the ruined arches of Diocletian's baths, taking their thoughts back to the magnificence of old Rome; and Camilla her friend said, in an indirect attempt at comforting, "God only endures. This life is the merest fragment of his eternity. We must not make too much of any of its incidents."

(To be Continued.)

SCROFULA

eczema,
tetter, boils,
ulcers, sores,
rheumatism, and catarrh, cured
by taking

AYER'S Sarsaparilla

It
purifies,
vitalizes, invigorates,
and enriches
the blood.

Has Cured Others
will cure you.

Send us $1.00 for sample of the

Victor Fountain Pen.

Guaranteed 14 Karet Gold. Can return if not satisfied.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,

301 Broadway, New York.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS. REDUCES INFLAMMATION. ALLAYS
PAIN. CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed
by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

Spring Medicine

Is a necessity with the large majority of people. So popular has Hood's Sarsaparilla become, this season that it is now generally admitted to be the Standard Spring Medicine. It thoroughly purifies and vitalizes the blood, creates a good appetite, cures biliousness and headache, overcomes that tired feeling, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and imparts to the whole body feeling of health and strength. Try it this spring.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, 41¢; six for $5. Prepare only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

Wives! Sons DAUGHTERS!

We will send you for three months FARM POULTRY the best poultry paper, if you send us ten names of persons who keep hens, (few or many), also 25 cents for one pack of Sheridan's Condition Powder.

POULTRY FOR PROFIT

or 15 cts. if you mention this paper, FARM POULTRY, a 20 page magazine, six months Sample copy free. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

NOTHING ON EARTH WILL MAKE HENS LAY LIKE SHERIDAN'S CONDITION POWDER

Highly concentrated. Dose small. In quantity cost less than one-tenth cent a day per hen. Prevents and cures all diseases. If you can't get it, we send by mail post-paid. One pack, 25c. Five $1. 31-41b. can $1.25. 6 cans $5. Express paid. Testimonials free. Send stamps cash. Farmers' Poultry Guide (price 25c.) free with 10 orders or more. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

BUY THE WRINGER THAT SAVES! THE MOST LABOR IN OUR PURCHASE GEAR

Saves half the labor of other wringers and costs but little more. Crank is attached to either roll.

EMPIRE Does not GREASE the CLOTHES. Solid White Rubber Rolls. Warranted.

Also "DAISY" and "VOLUNTEER" WRINGERS, Clothes Drying Bars, etc. Agents wanted everywhere. EMPIRE WRINGER CO., Auburn, N.Y.

"Pigs may whistle, but they have an mouth for it." Don't use common soap for scouring! It is not suited to it. Use

SAPOLIO.

Sapolio is a solid cake of Scouring Soap.

DO YOU WANT TO RECEIVE read and distribute sample copies of over thirty different holiness papers and magazines of the pure Bible and Wesleyan type, and aid in their more general circulation, "Spreading scriptural holiness over these lands"? If so, send me a silver dime, and your name and address will be printed on my Holiness Exchange Mail List, which goes to all publishers of holiness literature. Write name and address plain. Address J. H. PADGETT, Printer, Ennis, Texas.

LIFE AND REMINISCENCES OF GENERAL SHERMAN

By a distinguished author. Contributions furnish specially for book by prominent soldiers and statesmen. Agents Wanted. Will out sell everything. Send 35c. instantly for outfit. We guarantee best book and best terms. Buy no other.

R. H. WOODWARD & CO., Baltimore, Md.

400 RECITATIONS

AND READINGS. We will send to any address receipt of 35 cents, a handsome book, bound in paper cover, and containing 400 of the best recitations ever issued. Address:

J. S. OGLIVIE, 57 Rose Street, New York.

BAKER'S
BREAKFAST COCOA
Delicious, nourishing, absolutely pure. Costing less than one cent a cup.

Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" sent free by
E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK

American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. Lou.

SAVED BY A MATCH.

PROFESSOR DRUMMOND in an address lately given, related the following narrative: "I was crossing the Atlantic a short time ago, and one night I and some of the passengers were talking to the captain, when he told us of an accident that had occurred to him in that neighborhood some years previously.

"He was in command of a vessel, which had got thus far on her voyage, when the screw broke, and the engineer withdrew the shaft with the intention of repairing it, but the water rushed in through the hole, he bulkhead was not closed in time, and in a few minutes the ship began to sink, the boats were got out and the captain stepped into one laden to the gunwale; the night was dark and the sea so rough that it seemed impossible for the boat to live.

"After a while they saw the lights of an approaching steamer, but how could they signal it? They made search in the boat and found a battered lantern with an inch or two of kerosene in it, then they tried to find a match, every man felt in his pockets but in vain, not a match was to be found. The captain bade them search again, and turn every pocket inside out, and at last out of some corner a match was produced. The man who found it handed it to the mate, the mate passed it to another officer, and he gave it to the captain, the sailors clattering round him holding out their jackets to keep off the wind, and watching him with anxiety.

"The captain said he had faced many a difficulty and danger, but he never felt such responsibility as at that moment, when he had to strike the match; but he did it. The lantern was lighted, and when it was saved to and fro the ship saw the signal, altered its course, and picked them up. Now what gave such value to that match? It was the only one; and that it is which gives such value to your lives. Your life is the only one—if misdirected and lost, you have no other in which to remedy the error.

AN EFFECTIVE SERMON.

AN old woman in Dr. Todd's famous New England Church kept a small grocery store, and it was currently reported she was dishonest in her dealings with the few townspeople who bought of her. One Sunday Dr. Todd preached a powerful sermon from the text, "False weights are an abomination unto the Lord." The old woman was much roused by this sermon. She was trying to tell an old acquaintance about it. "A very powerful discourse, Maggie. Ah, but he come down upon the sinners! It would ha' done your heart good to hear him." "What was the sermon about? What was the text?" "Ah, I cannot remember the text. But it was about weights and measures and groceries and balances." "But what was the subject? What was the theme of the discourse?" "Oh, the theme. I do not know. But this I know, Maggie. I went right home and burned my half-bushel!"

A BLIND CHRISTIAN'S JUBILEE.

DR. MOON, M. D., of Brighton, the great teacher of the blind, is blind himself. Fifty years ago he lost his sight; for fifty years he has never seen God's beautiful world. He says that those years have not been a long night but a bright day. When he was so dreadfully afflicted, Dr. Moon did not give way to despair, did not fold his hands and fret because he had lost his sight. He did far better—made up his mind to do all he could for those who, like himself, were blind. For fifty years he has carried on the good work—the year 1890 was his year of jubilee. Dr. Moon has an asylum for the blind at Brighton, and there he teaches them to read, to knit, to play the piano, to make baskets, and do other useful and amusing things. He has pictures as well. They are very large and are embossed, that is, raised from the cardboard, so that the blind people can feel with their fingers and so say what the picture is made to represent.

FREE TO LADIES

A MODERN HYGIENIC.

A BOOK CONTAINING ARTICLES ON

SENSIBLE DRESSING.

NOT RADICAL DRESS REFORM

By Caroline M. Dodson, M. D., of Philadelphia, President of National Woman's Health Association of America; Oscar B. Moss, M. D., of Kansas City; Mrs. Annie Jenness-Miller, of New York; and other eminent writers upon this important subject.

A HANDSOME PAMPHLET BOOK ILLUSTRATED WITH FINE ENGRAVINGS OF

BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

SENT BY MAIL, POSTAGE PREPAID, ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL CARD REQUEST.

GEO. FROST & CO. 31 BEDFORD ST. BOSTON.

THE NEW MODEL "HALL."

A PERFECT TYPEWRITER. BEST MANIFOLDER. TERMS TO AGENTS LIBERAL. PORTABLE, INEXPENSIVE. WRITES ALL LANGUAGES. Read Mr. Howell's Opinion.

"I wish to express my very great satisfaction with the Hall typewriter. Impressions and alignment are both more perfect than any other typewriter that I know, and it is simply a pleasure to use it. It is delightfully simple and manageable. (Signed) W. D. HOWELLS. Send for Catalogue and Specimens of Work. Address N. TYPEWRITER CO., 10 Temple Pl., Boston.

THE DOLLAR TYPEWRITER

THIS IS THE TYPE USED: ABCDEFGHI

A perfect and practical Type Writing machine. for only ONE DOLLAR. Exactly like cut; regular Remington type; does the same quality of work; takes a fool's cap sheet. Complete with paper holder, automatic feed, metal type wheel & inkling roll. It manifolds & uses copying ink; in fact does all of the work of a $100 machine. Speed, 15 to 25 words a minute. Size, 3x4x9 inches; weight, 12 oz. MENTION THIS PAPER. Satisfaction guaranteed. Circulars free. AGENTS WANTED. Sent by express for $1.00; by mail, 15c extra for postage. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N.Y. City.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

AGENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PURCHASING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

It has helped every practical man. Shakspeare is delightful; Bunyan is encouraging, but this book is both of these and more—it is necessary.

There is another book which has helped and encouraged thousands. It is filled from cover to cover with the signed indorsements of many well known Divines, six college presidents, and a number of professional men and women who have all been restored to health and strength by the use of Compound Oxygen. Compound Oxygen is a concentration of ozone. It is charged with electricity. You inhale it, at once a genial glow pervades the system, for, in order to use it you must release the Oxygen by heat. A tin cup of warm water frees the current and sends an oxygenated vapor to the breathing surfaces that heals—warms—revitalizes.

The Book will tell the rest—rather the patients will tell you for they do the talking in its pages. You can correspond with them if you like.

This Book will be sent entirely free of charge to any one who will address

Drs. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

58 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

The Breath of Spring is in the Air.

Time to practice EASTER MUSIC, is it not?

Send for our Fine List of Carols, Anthems, &c., or for Easter Allelulias [5 cts., 50 cts. per doz.] Rosabel, or Our Easter Offering [15 cts., $1.44 doz.] a Cantata by Lewis.

MUSICAL SOCIETIES

should wind up the season by practicing such Cantatas as Don Munio [$1.50, $13.50 doz.], Wreck of Hesperus [35 cts., $2.40 doz.], 91st Psalm [60 cts., $5.40 doz.], Ballad. [Send for our list of 150 Cantatas.]

FAIRS AND EXHIBITIONS

are made successful by introducing easy Cantatas, like Dairy Maid's Supper [20 cts., $1.80 doz.], Lewis, or Garden of Singing Flowers [40 cts., $3.60 doz.], or Rainbow Festival [20 cts., $1.80 doz.] Lewis.

BOYS AND GIRLS

who sing will be delighted to take part in the brilliant flower cantata, New Flora's Festival [40 cts., $3.60 doz.], New Flower Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.], Kingdom of Mother Goose [25 cts., $2.18 doz.], Gipsy Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.]. Send for lists.

Much attractive Exhibition Music is found in School Collections.

Children's School Songs [35 cts., $3.60 doz.], Golden Boat [50 cts.] charming action songs by Mrs. L. O. Chant, First Steps in Song Reading [30 cts., $3.00 doz.]

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.

C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

Sunday School Music.

The Bright Array. The latest book by the favorite authors, ROBERT LOWRY and W. H. DOANE.

Price, $30 per 100 copies. 35 cents each if by mail.

Select Songs. By F. N. PELLOUBET, D. D. 344 Hymns and Tunes for use where one book is desired for Prayer Meetings and the Sunday School.

Cloth covers, $40 per 100 copies.

Winnowed Songs. By IRA D. SANKEY. 267 New and Selected Sunday School Songs. Just issued.

$35 per 100. 40 cents each by mail.

A complete Catalogue and Specimen Pages sent on request.

THE BICLOW & MAIN CO.

81 Randolph St., Chicago. 76 East 9th St., New York.

MUSICAL.

METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY.

Best private instruction in all branches, also surrounds pupils with superior advantages. In Class Work, Lectures, Concerts, and the Languages. Refined boarding privileges for lady pupils. Dudley Buck and Albert Ross Parsons heading departments. Opens Sept. 15. Pupils received at any time. Book sent free.

19 and 21 East 14th St., New York.

TYPEWRITERS.

Largest like establishment in the world. First-class Second-hand Instruments at half new prices. Unprejudiced advice given on all makes. Machines sold on monthly payments. Any Instrument manufactured shipped, privilege to examine. EXCHANGING A SPECIALTY. Wholesale prices to dealers. Illustrated Catalogues Free.

TYPEWRITER { 70 Broadway, New York.
HEADQUARTERS, { 144 La Salle St., Chicago.

Three Great Books

FOR RELIGIOUS READERS.

Dr. Strong's Our Country.

More than 130,000 sold. Paper 25 cts. cloth 50 cts.

One of the most powerful books that have come from the American press during the present century. It portrays America's material, social and religious condition and tendency, and points out the perils which threaten her future. The wide circulation of this book has given an extraordinary impulse to the work of holding America for the highest political, social and religious, national life.

Words are feeble in the recommendation of this book.—Pulpit Treasury.

Dr. Pierson's Crisis of Missions.

Paper, 35 cents, cloth $1.25

"One of the most important books of the cause of Foreign Missions, and, through them, to home Missions also, which ever has been written. It should be in every library and every household. It should be read, studied, taken to heart and prayed over."—Congregationalist.

Dr. Cuyler's How to be a Pastor.

Cloth, 75 cents.

"The fruit of large native sense, long experience, wide observation, and devout consecration."—Congregationalist.

"If any man living understands the subject of this little book it is Dr. Cuyler."—Independent.

"Ought to be read by all pastors, young or old."—N. Y. Tribune.

Send for our list of books for practical Christian Workers.

The above books mailed postpaid on receipt of price by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers.

740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

PERFECT FITTING DRESSES.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments.

Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An Invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine.

Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular.

THE McDOWELL CO.

6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

Our Journals "La Mode de Paris" or "Album des Modes" give the latest styles and practical lessons on Dressmaking each month. Send 35 cents for March number explaining Princess Front without centre opening or darts, most useful garment ever invented.

For boy or man as an educator or as a source of amusement or income, at a small expense, get one of our

PRINTING PRESSES

JOSEPH WATSON,

25 Murray St., N. Y. City.

Amateur Printers' Guide Book, 15 cents.

BICYCLES FREE—To Boys and Girls—

We have a plan by which a good Boy or Girl in every neighborhood can procure a "Little Giant Safety" free if willing to do a little work for us, send stamp for full particulars address, FOWLER & WELLS CO., Pub'rs, 777 Broadway, New York.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

THE SIN OF OMISSION.

It isn't the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you a bit of heartache
At the setting of the sun.
The tender word forgotten,
The letter you did not write,
The flower you might have sent, dear,
Are your haunting ghosts to-night.

The stone you might have lifted
Out of a brother's way,
The bit of heartsome counsel
You were hurried too much to say,
The loving touch of the hand, dear,
The gentle and winsome tone,
That you had no time nor thought for,
With troubles enough of your own.

These little acts of kindness,
So easily out of mind,
These chances to be angels
Which even mortals find,—
They come in night and silence,
Each chill reproachful wraith,
When hope is faint and flagging,
And a blight has dropped on faith.

For life is all too short, dear,
And sorrow is all too great,
To suffer our slow compassion
That tarries until too late.
And it's not the thing you do, dear,
It's the thing you leave undone,
Which gives you the bitter heartache
At the setting of the sun.

—Selected.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The peculiar combination, proportion, and preparation of Hood's Sarsaparilla makes this medicine different from other and superior to them all. Prepared by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

It is marvelous what an improvement the Bailey Reflector is over the old style cone reflectors and chandeliers for lighting Churches. The "Bailey" is so constructed that it diffuses the light into the farthest ends and corners of the Church, so that the finest print can be read with ease everywhere, thereby making all parts of the Church equally desirable. There is no material thing that we know of that will add so much to the prosperity of a Church as a good light. With a "Bailey Reflector" your Church will be as cheerful at night as by day light. Write to the BAILEY REFLECTOR Co., 708 Penn Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa., for their catalogue and price list.

NEW ENGLISH PERFUME, Crab-Apple Blossoms.

(Malus Coronaria.)

Chief among the scents of the season is Crab-Apple Blossoms, a delicate perfume of highest quality and fragrance.—London Court Journal.

It would not be possible to conceive of a more delicate and delightful perfume than the Crab-Apple Blossoms, which is put up by The Crown Perfumery Co., of London. It has the aroma of spring in it, and one could use it for a lifetime and never tire of it.—New York Observer.

THE CROWN PERFUMERY CO.,

177 New Bond St., London. Sold Everywhere.

Prices: 1 oz., 75c.; 2 oz., $1.25; 3 oz., $1.75; 4 oz., $2.25.

On receipt of either of the above sums, by Caswell, Massey & Co., New York, or Melvin & Badger, or T. Metcalf & Co., Boston, or Geo. B. Evans, Phila., the size ordered will at once be sent post-paid to any address. On receipt of 12 cents in stamps, they will mail a Bijou trial bottle of this delicious perfume, post-paid. Annual sale over 200,000 bottles.

Beware of fraudulent imitations. The genuine Crab-Apple Blossoms perfume is never sold by the ounce, except in the Crown Stopped Bottles of the company as shown above. Refuse all substitutes.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. 3-12 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

The Most Reliable Food For Infants & Invalids. A medicinal food, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes cans. Pamphlet free. Woolrich & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

DR. TALMAGE says: "A great deal of sorrow is caused to young hearts and old by the thought that Christmas comes but once a year," but he continues, "why not extend the glorious season of joy, gladness and good-will throughout the year?" This beautiful thought has been brought rather forcibly to our attention of late by the hundreds of letters we daily receive, asking for "Christmas Boxes." What! Christmas Boxes in March, the idea! who ever heard of hanging up stockings in the Spring-time? But then the people have to use soap the year round and nearly twice as much is used in summer as in winter—you wouldn't think that—would you? But it is a fact, and if folks want "Sweet Home" Soap and wish to make the whole household merry with lots of useful, pretty, valuable and ornamental things, why not do it now as well as in December? and so we extend "Our Mammoth Christmas Box" offer for a limited time. Another thing! There was such an awful rush of orders last Christmas that some of our friends did not get the goods as soon as they expected. It aint so now, you can have the Mammoth Christmas Box when you want it. Better order at once.

Very Soapfully Yours,

J. D. LARKIN &amp; CO.,

Factories: Seneca, Heacock and Carroll Sts., BUFFALO, N. Y.

- Our Mammoth Christmas Box! -

LIST OF CONTENTS.

ONE HUNDRED CAKES (full size) "SWEET HOME" FAMILY SOAP, enough to last an average family one full year. This Soap is made for all household purposes, and has no superior.

6 BOXES BORAXINE, (large size) for cleaning wood-work, washing dishes, dairy utensils, removing grease spots or stains from carpets, etc., or general house-cleaning, has no equal. Saves half the labor of washing, is a thorough disinfectant, and is a blessing to every housekeeper who uses it. Remember BORAXINE is nothing but a fine quality of Soap and Borax pulverized together. It is pleasant for the hands and cannot injure the finest fabrics.

One-Fourth Dozen Modjeska Complexion Soap.

An exquisite beautifier. Producing that peculiar delicate transparency, and imparting a velvety softness to the skin which is greatly admired. It removes all roughness, redness, blotches, pimples, and imperfections from the face. For all toilet purposes it is the luxury of luxuries. Especially adapted for the nursery or children's use, or those whose skin is delicate.

One Bottle Modjeska Perfume.

A delicate, refined, delicious perfume for the handkerchief and clothing. The most popular and lasting perfume ever made.

One-Fourth Dozen Ocean Bath Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Artistic Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Creme Toilet Soap.

One-Fourth Dozen Elite Toilet Soap.

One English Jar Modjeska Cold Cream. Soothing, Healing, beautifies the Skin, Improves the Complexion, Cures Chapped Hands and Lips.

One Package Clove Pink Sachet Powder. Delicate, Refined, Lasting.

One Bottle (Fancy Patent Stopper) Modjeska Tooth Powder.

One Stick Napoleon Shaving Soap.

OUR MAMMOTH "CHRISTMAS" BOX

Contains a great variety of Toys, Playthings, etc., for the Babies, and sundry useful and amusing things for the older folks. Such as Boys' Tools, Saws, Hatchets, Shovels, Rakes, Hoe, Top, Spinner, "Crack Shots," Games, Jack Stones, Etc.

IT ALSO CONTAINS

One fine Silver-plated Button Hook.
One Lady's Celluloid Pen Holder.
One Fancy Tidy.
One Glove-buttoner.
One Package "Steadfast" Pins.
One Spool Black Silk Thread.
One Gentlemen's Handkerchief, large.
Fourteen Patent Transfer Patterns for Stamping and Embroidering Table Linen, Toilet Mats, Towels, Ties, etc.
One Lady's Handkerchief.
One Child's Fancy Handkerchief.
One Illuminated Wall Match Safe (can be seen at night).
One Package Assorted Christmas Cards.
Two Collar Buttons (patented).

In addition to all of the above articles, we place in each box ONE

ALBUM containing pictures of the following celebrities:

- |                          |                        |
|--------------------------|------------------------|
| 1. Wm. E. Gladstone,     | 13. General Scott,     |
| 2. Bismarck,             | 14. Thomas A. Edison,  |
| 3. Daniel Webster,       | 15. Benj. F. Morse,    |
| 4. J. G. Whittier,       | 16. Joseph Jefferson,  |
| 5. George Bancroft,      | 17. Benj. Franklin,    |
| 6. Abraham Lincoln,      | 18. Henry M. Stanley,  |
| 7. Ulysses S. Grant,     | 19. Oliver Perry,      |
| 8. Robert E. Lee,        | 20. Goethe,            |
| 9. Gen. Sherman,         | 21. Schiller,          |
| 10. Thomas Carlyle,      | 22. Alex. Hamilton,    |
| 11. Commodore Faragut,   | 23. John Howard Payne, |
| 12. "Stonewall" Jackson, | Etc., Etc., Etc.       |

Remember, "Sweet Home" Family Soap is an extra fine pure soap, made from refined tallow and vegetable oils. On account of its firmness and purity, each cake will do double the work of the common cheap soaps usually sold from groceries.

Our Price for the Mammoth "Christmas" Box Complete, is Six Dollars.

J. D. LARKIN & CO., SENECA, HEACOCK & CARROLL STREETS, BUFFALO, N. Y.

FACTORIES:

Some people prefer to send cash with order—we do not ask it, but if readers of this paper remit in advance we will place in the box in addition to all the other extras a valuable present for the lady of the house. Articles that are near and dear to the heart of every woman, and that she will be proud of for years to come.

Where boxes are paid for in advance, we ship same day order is received. All other orders are filled in their regular turn.

Persons remitting in advance can have their money refunded without argument or comment if the box does not prove all they expect. Price of box complete, $6.00.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 11.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

MISSION WORK AMONG THE BANTUS.

Heli Chatelain, Newly Appointed Consul at Loanda—I. A Makolo Village—2. "Jere," the Royal Shoemaker—3. Natives Washing at Dondo.

THE PLAGUES OF THE CITIES.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON ON BALEFUL AMUSEMENTS AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, LAST SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 15, 1891.

Innocent Amusements Becoming Destructive—The Prevalence of Corrupt Amusements—Principles by which Amusements may be Tested—How the Baleful may be Recognized—By Results—Their Effect on Occupation—On the Disposition—By their Tendency to Induce Extravagance—Their Insidious Demoralization—By the Company they Attract—A Talk with a Dying Friend—An Address at a Funeral—A Dying Wife's Witnessing Ring.

"Let the young men now arise and play before us." II. Samuel 2: 14.

HERE are two armies encamped by the pool of Gibeon. The time hangs heavily on their hands. One army proposes a game of sword-fencing.

Nothing could be more healthful and innocent. The other army, accepts the challenge. Twelve men against twelve men, the sport opens. But something went adversely. Perhaps one of the sword-men got an unlucky clip, or in some way had his ire aroused, and that which opened in sportfulness ended in violence, each one taking his contestant by the hair, and then with the sword thrusting him in the side; so that that which opened in innocent fun ended in the massacre of all the twenty-four sportsmen. Was there ever a better illustration of what was true then, and is true now, that that which is innocent may be made destructive?

What of a worldly nature is more important and strengthening and innocent than amusement, and yet what has counted more victims? I have no sympathy with a straight-jacket religion. This is a very bright world to me, and I propose to do all I can to make it bright for others.

I never could keep step to a dead-march. A book years ago issued says that a Christian man has a right to some amusements; for instance, if he comes home at night weary from his work, and, feeling the need of recreation, puts on his slippers, and goes into his garret, and walks lively round the floor several times, there can be no harm in it. I believe the Church of God has made a tremendous mistake in trying to suppress the sportfulness of youth, and drive out from men their love of amusement. If God ever implanted anything in us, he implanted this desire. But instead of providing for this demand of our nature, the Church of God has, for the main part, ignored it. As in a riot, the mayor plants a battery at the end of the street, and has it fired off, so that every thing is cut down that happens to stand in the range, the good as well as the bad, so there are men in the Church who plant their batteries of condemnation, and fire away indiscriminately. Everything is condemned. But my Bible commands those who use the world without abusing it, and in the natural world, God has done every thing to please and amuse us. In poetic figure we sometimes speak of natural objects as being in pain, but it is a mere fancy. Poets say the clouds weep, but they never yet shed a tear; and that the winds sigh, but they never did have any trouble; and that the storm howls, but it never lost its temper. The world is a rose, and the universe a garland.

And I am glad to know, that in all our cities there are plenty of places where we may find elevated moral entertainment. But all honest men and good women will agree with me in the statement that one of the worst plagues of these cities is corrupt amusement. Multitudes have gone down under the blasting influence never to rise. If we may judge of what is going on in many of the places of amusement by the Sodom pictures on board-fences, and in many of the show-windows, there is not a much lower depth of profligacy to reach. At Naples, Italy, they keep such pictures locked up from indiscriminate inspection. Those pictures were exhumed from Pompeii and are not fit for public gaze. If the effrontery of bad places of amusement in hanging out improper advertisement of what they are doing night by night grows worse in the same proportion, in fifty years New York and Brooklyn will beat not only Pompeii, but Sodom.

To help stay the plague now raging, I project certain principles by which you may judge in regard to any amusement or recreation, finding out for yourself whether it is right, or whether it is wrong.

I remark, in the first place, that you can judge of the moral character of any amusement by its healthful result, or by its baleful reaction. There are people who seem made up of hard facts. They are a combination of multiplication tables and statistics. If you show them an exquisite picture, they will begin to discuss the pigments involved in the coloring. If you show them a beautiful rose, they will submit it to a botanical analysis, which is only the post-mortem examination of a flower. They have no rebound in their nature. They never do anything more than smile. There are no great tides of feeling surging up from the depths of their soul, in billow after billow of reverberating laughter. They seem as if nature had built them by contract, and made a bungling job out of it. But blessed be God, there are people in the world who have bright faces, and whose life is a song, an anthem, a psalm of victory. Even their troubles are like the vines that crawl up the side of a great tower, on the top of which the sunlight sits, and the soft airs of summer hold perpetual carnival. They are the people you like to have come to your house; they are people I like to have come to my house. If you but touch the hem of their garments you are healed.

Now it is these exhilarant and sympathetic and warm-hearted people that are most tempted to pernicious amusements. In proportion as a ship is swift it wants a strong helmsman; in proportion as a horse is gay, it wants a stout driver; and these people of exuberant nature will do well to look at the reaction of all their amusements. If an amusement sends you home at night nervous so that you cannot sleep, and you rise up in the morning, not because you are slept out, but because your duty drags you from your slumbers, you have been where you ought not to have been. There are amusements that send a man next day to his work bloodshot, yawning, stupid, nauseated, and they are wrong kinds of amusement. They are entertainments that give a man disgust with the drudgery of life, with tools because they are not swords, with working aprons because they are not robes, with cattle because they are not infuriated bulls of the arena. If any amusement sends you home longing for a life of romance and thrilling adventure, love that takes poison and shoots itself, moonlight adventures and hair-breadth escapes, you may depend upon it that you are the sacrificed victim of unsanctified pleasure. Our recreations are intended to build us up; and if they pull us down as to our moral or as to our physical strength, you may come to the conclusion that they are obnoxious.

There is nothing more depraving than attendance upon amusements that are full of innuendo and low suggestion. The young man enters. At first he sits far back, with his hat on and his coat collar up, fearful that somebody there may know him. Several nights pass on. He takes off his hat earlier, and puts his coat-collar down. The blush that first came into his cheek when anything indecent was enacted comes no more to his cheek. Farewell, young man! You have probably started on the long road which ends in consummate destruction. The stars of hope will go out one by one, until you will be left in utter darkness. Hear you not the rush of the maelstrom, in whose outer circle your boat now dances, making merry with the whirling waters? But you are being drawn in, and the gentle motion will become terrific agitation. You cry for help. In vain! You pull at the oar to put back, but the struggle will not avail! You will be tossed, and dashed, and shipwrecked, and swallowed in the whirlpool that has already crushed in its wrath ten thousand hulks.

Young men who have just come from country residence to city residence will do well to be on guard and let no one induce you to places of improper amusement. It is mightily alluring ing when a young man, long a citizen, offers to show a new comer all around. Still further. Those amusements are wrong which lead you into expenditure beyond your means. Money spent in recreation is no thrown away. It is all folly for us to come from a place of amusement feeling that we have wasted our money and time. You may by it have made an investment worth more than the transaction that yielded you hundreds or thousands of dollars. But how many properties have been riddled by costly amusements.

KILLED IN A GROGSHOP FIGHT.

The first time I ever saw the city—it was the city of Philadelphia—I was a mere lad. I stopped at a hotel, and I remember in the even-tide one of these men plied me with his infernal art. He saw I was green. He wanted to show me the sights of the town. He painted the path of sin until it looked like emerald; but I was afraid of him. I shoved back from the basilisk—I made up my mind he was a basilisk. I remember how he wheeled his chair round in front of me, and, with a concentrated and diabolical effort, attempted to destroy my soul; but there were good angels in the air that night. It was no good resolution on my part, but it was the all-encompassing grace of a good God that delivered me. Beware! beware! oh, young man. "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof is death." The table has been robbed to pay the club. The champagne has cheated the children's wardrobe. The carousing-party has burned up the boy's primer. The table-cloth of the corner aloon is in debt to the wife's faded dress. Excursions that in a day make a tour around a whole month's wages; ladies whose lifetime business it is to go shopping; large bets on horses, have their counterparts in uneducated children, bankruptcies that shock the money market and appal the church, and that send drunkenness staggering across the richly-figured carpet of the mansion, and dashing into the mirror, and rowning out the carol of music with the hooping of bloated sons come home to break their old mother's heart.

I saw a beautiful home, where the bell rang merrily late at night. The son had been off in sinful indulgences. His comrades were bringing him home. They carried him to the door. They rang the bell at one o'clock in the morning. Father and mother came down. They were waiting for the wandering son, and then the comrades, as soon as the door was opened, threw the prodigal headlong into the doorway, saying, "There he is, drunk as a fool. Ha, ha!" When men go into amusements that they cannot afford, they first borrow what they cannot return, and then they steal what they cannot borrow. First they go into embarrassment, and then into lying, and then into theft; and when a man gets as far on as that, he does not stop short of the penitentiary. There is not a prison in the land where there are not victims of unrepentant amusements.

Merchant of Brooklyn, or New York, is there a disarrangement in your accounts? Is there a leakage in your money-drawer? Did not the cash account come out right last night? I will tell you. There is a young man in your store wandering off into bad amusements. The salary you give him may meet lawful expenditures, but not the sinful indulgences in which he has indulged, and he takes by theft that which you do not give him in lawful salary.

How brightly the path of unrestrained amusement opens. The young man says, "Now I am having a good time. Never mind economy. I'll get money somehow. What a fine road! What a beautiful day for a ride! Crack the whip, and over the turnpike! Come, boys, fill high your glasses. Drink! Long life, health, plenty of pleasures just like this!" Hard-working men hear the clatter of the hoofs, and look up and say, "Why, I wonder where those fellows get their money from! We have to toil and drudge, but they do nothing." To these gay men life is a thrill and an excitement. They stare at other people, and in turn are stared at. The watchman jingles. The cup foams. The cheeks flush. The eyes flash. The midnight hears their guffaw. They swagger. They jostle the decent men off the sidewalk. They take the name of God in vain. They parody the hymn they learned at their mother's knee; and to all pictures of coming disaster they cry out, "Who cares!" and to the counsel of some Christian friend, "Who are you?" Passing along the street some night, you hear a shriek in a grog-shop, the rattle of the watchman's club, the rush of the police. What is the matter now? Oh, this reckless young man has been killed in a grog-shop fight. Carry him home to his father's house. Parents will come down and wash his wounds, and close his eyes in death. They forgive him all he ever did, although he cannot in his silence ask it. The prodigal has got home at last. Mother will go to her little garden, and get the sweetest flowers, and twist them into a chaplet for the silent heart of the wayward boy, and push back from the bloated brow the long locks that were once her pride. And the air will be rent with the agony. The great dramatist says "How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a thankless child."

"THERE HE IS, DRUNK AS A FOOL!"

I go further, and say those are unchristian amusements which become the chief business of a man's life. Life is an earnest thing. Whether we were born in a palace or hovel; whether we are affluent or pinched, we have to work. If you do not sweat with toil, you will sweat with disease. You have a soul that is to be transfigured amidst the pomp of a judgment day; and after the sea has sung its last chant, and the mountain shall have come down in an avalanche of rock, you will live and think and act, high on a throne where seraphs sing, or deep in a dungeon where demons howl. In a world where there is so much to do for yourselves, and so much to do for others, God pity that man who has nothing to do.

Your sports are merely means to an end. They are alleviations and helps. The arm of toil is the only arm strong enough to bring up the bucket out of the deep well of pleasure. Amusement is only the bower where business and philanthropy rest while on their way to stirring achievements. Amusements are merely the vines that grow about the anvil of toil, and the blossoming of the hammers. Alas for the man who spends his life in laboriously doing nothing, his days in hunting up lounging-places and loungers, his nights in seeking out some gas-lighted foolery! The man who always has on his sporting-jacket, ready to hunt for game in the mountain or fish in the brook, with no time to pray, or work, or read, is not so well off as the greyhound that runs by his side, or the fly bait with which he whips the stream.

A man who does not work does not know how to play. If God had intended us to do nothing but laugh, he would not have given us shoulders with which to lift, and hands with which to work, and brains with which to think. The amusements of life are merely the orchestra playing while the great tragedy of life plunges through its five acts—infancy, childhood, manhood, old age, and death. Then exit the last earthly opportunity. Enter the overwhelming realities of an eternal world!

"TAKE THOSE STRINGS AWAY!"

I go further, and say that all those amusements are wrong which lead into bad company. If you go to any place where you have to associate with the intemperate, with the unclean, with the abandoned, however well they may be dressed, in the name of God quit it. They will despoil your nature. They will undermine your moral character. They will drop you when you are destroyed. They will give you not one cent to support your children when you are dead. They will weep not one tear at your burial.

I had a friend at the West—a rare friend. He was one of the first to welcome me to my new home. To fine personal appearance, he added a generosity, frankness, and ardor of nature that made me love him like a brother. But I saw evil people gathering around him. They came up from the saloons, from the gambling-hells. They plied him with a thousand arts. They seized upon his social nature, and he could not stand the charm. They drove him on the rocks, like a ship full-winged, shivering on the breakers. I used to admonish him. I would say, "Now I wish you would quit these bad habits, and become a Christian." "Oh," he would reply, "I would like to; I would like to; but I have gone so far I don't think there is any way back." In his moments of repentance, he would go home and take his little girl of eight years, and embrace her convulsively, and cover her with adornments, and strew around her pictures and toys, and everything that could make her happy; and then, as though hounded by an evil spirit, he would go out to the enflaming cup and the house of shame, like a fool to the correction of the stocks.

"DO YOU SEE THAT RING?"

I was summoned to his death-bed. I hastened. I entered the room. I found him, to my surprise, lying in full every-day dress on the top of the couch. I put out my hand. He grasped it excitedly, and said, "Sit down Mr. Talmage, right there." I sat down. He said, "Last night I saw my mother, who has been dead twenty years, and she sat just where you sit now. It was no dream. I was wide awake. There was no delusion in the matter. I saw her just as plainly as I see you.—Wife, I wish you would take these strings off of me. There are strings spun all around my body. I wish you would take them off of me." I saw it was delirium. "Oh," replied his wife, "my dear, there is nothing there, there is nothing there." He went on, and said, "just where you sit, Mr. Talmage, my mother sat. She said to me: 'Henry, I do wish you would do better.' I got out of bed put my arms around her, and said, 'Mother I want to do better. I have been trying to do better. Won't you help me to do better? You used to help me.' No mistake about it, no delusion. I saw her—the cap and the apron and the spectacles, just as she used to look twenty years ago, but I do wish you would take these strings away. They annoy me so. I can hardly talk. Won't you take them away." I knelt down and prayed, conscious of the fact that he did not realize what I was saying. I got up. I said, "Good-bye; I hope you will be better soon." He said, "Good-bye, good-bye."

That night his soul went to the God who gave it. Arrangements were made for the obsequies. Some said, "Don't bring him in the church; he was too dissolute." "Oh," I said, "bring him. He was a good friend of mine while he was alive, and I shall stand by him now that he is dead. Bring him to the church."

As I sat in the pulpit and saw his body coming up through the aisle, I felt as if I could weep tears of blood. I told the people that day, "This man had his virtues and a good many of them. He had his faults, and a good many of them. But if there is any man in this audience who is without sin, let him cast the first stone at this coffin-lid." On one side the pulpit sat that little child, rosy, sweet-faced, as beautiful as any little child that sat at your table this morning. I warrant you. She looked up wistfully, not knowing the full sorrows of an orphan child.

Oh, her countenance haunts me to-day, like some sweet face looking upon us through a horrid dream. On the other side of the pulpit were the men who had destroyed him. There they sat, hard-visaged, some of them pale from exhausting disease, some of them flushed until it seemed as if the fires of iniquity flamed through the cheek and crackled the lips. They were the men who had done the work. They were the men who had bound him hand and foot. They had kindled the fires. They had poured the wormwood and gall into that orphan's cup. Did they weep? No. Did they sigh repentingly? No. Did they say, "What a pity that such a brave man should be slain?" No, no; not one bloated hand was lifted to wipe a tear from a bloated cheek. They sat and looked at the coffin like vultures gazing at the carcass of a lamb whose heart they had ripped out! I cried in their ears as plainly as I could, "There is a God and a judgment-day!" Did they tremble? Oh no, no. They went back from the house of God, and that night, though their victim lay in Oakwood Cemetery, I was told that they blasphemed, and they drank, and they gambled, and there was not one less customer in all the houses of iniquity. This destroyed man was a Samson in physical strength, but Delilah sheared him, and the Philistines of evil companionship dug his eyes out and threw him into the prison of evil habits. But in the hour of his death he rose up and took hold of the two pillared curses of God against drunkenness and uncleanness, and threw himself forward, until down upon him and his companions there came the thunders of an eternal catastrophe.

Again: Any amusement that gives you a distaste for domestic life is bad. How many bright domestic circles have been broken up by sinful amusements! The father went off, the mother went off, the child went off. There are to-day the fragments before me of blasted households. Oh, if you have wandered away, I would like to charm you back by the sound of that one word "home." Do you not know that you have but little more time to give to domestic welfare? Do you not see, father, that your children are soon to go out into the world, and all the influence for good you are to have over them you must have now? Death will break in on your conjugal relations, and alas, if you have to stand over the grave of one who perished from your neglect!

I saw a wayward husband standing at the death-bed of his Christian wife, and I saw her point to a ring on her finger, and heard her say to her husband, "Do you see that ring?" He replied, "Yes, I see it." "Well," said she, "do you remember who put it there?" "Yes" said he, "I put it there," and all the past seemed to rush upon him. By the memory of that day when, in the presence of men and angels, you promised to be faithful in joy and sorrow, and in sickness and in health; by the memory of those pleasant hours when you sat together in your new home talking of a bright future; by the cradle and the joyful hour when one life was spared and another given; by that sick-bed, when the little one lifted up the hands and called for help, and you knew he must die, and he put one arm around each of your necks and brought you very near together in that dying kiss; by the little grave in Greenwood that you never think of without a rush of tears; by the family Bible, where, amidst stories of heavenly love, is the brief but expressive record of births and deaths; by the neglects of the past, and by the agonies of the future; by a judgment-day, when husbands and wives, parents and children, in immortal groups, will stand to be caught up in shining array, or to shrink down into darkness; by all that, I beg you give to home your best affections.

Ah my friends, there is an hour coming when our past life will probably pass before us in review. It will be our last hour. If from our death-pillow we have to look back and see a life spent in sinful amusement, there will be a dart that will strike through our soul sharper than the dagger with which Virginus slew his child. The memory of the past will make us quake like Macbeth. The iniquities and rioting through which we have passed will come upon us, weird and skeleton as Meg Merrilies. Death, the old Shylock, will demand, and take, the remaining pound of flesh, and the remaining drop of blood; and upon our last opportunity for repentance, and our last chance for heaven, the curtain will forever drop.

THE LATE BISHOP PADDOCK.

THE death on March 9, of Right Rev. B. H. Paddock, D. D., Bishop of Massachusetts, removes from the Protestant Episcopal Church one of its most able, judicious and zealous bishops. No better evidence could be adduced of his remarkable aptitude for the duties

The Late Dr. Paddock, Bishop of Massachusetts
(From a Photograph by Anderson, New York.)

of the Episcopate than the progress of the Church during his administration of the diocese. The three parties in the Church have drawn nearer to each other under his influence, and to work together in greater harmony for the advancement of Christ's Kingdom.

Dr. Paddock was a native of Norwich, Conn., where he was born February 29, 1828. His father was the Rev. Seth Birdsey Paddock who was for many years rector of Trinity Church, Norwich. After acquiring the rudiments of education in a private school, he entered Trinity College, Hartford, Conn., at the age of sixteen, and graduated four years later. He spent three years subsequently in study at the General Theological Seminary, New York, graduating thence in 1852. His first sphere of labor was the Church of the Epiphany, New York. Thence in 1854 he went to Norwich to succeed his father at Trinity. In 1860 he became rector of Christ Church, Detroit, Mich., and in 1869, rector of Grace Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. After four years labor there, he resigned to accept the Bishopric of Massachusetts.

THE BIBLE IN BANTU-LAND.

HELI CHATELAIN AND HIS WORK FOR CHRIST AMONG THE NATIVES OF AFRICA.

How a Poor, Lame, Swiss Boy became a Gospel Pioneer among the Bantus—Scientist, Philologist, Explorer and Teacher—Speaking a Dozen Different Native Dialects and Writing Grammars and Vocabularies in K'imbundu for the Use of Missionaries—"Jere," the Converted African Lad, who may yet be a King.

(See Illustrations on first page.)

REARLY in the annals of man's work in the Master's cause, in these days, do we find a brighter example of consecration and self-sacrifice than that of Heli Chatelain, whose career is sketched in this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is a story of indomitable courage and perseverance in well-doing, in the face of obstacles that might well have dismayed most men. It is, moreover, a story of privation and suffering in the cause that will enlist the sympathy of all.

Heli Chatelain was born in the little village of Morat, in Switzerland, on April 29th, 1859. He went to school until he was ten years old and then he fell sick. The next ten years of his life were passed in the rigid seclusion of his room, most of the time on a bed of pain. Heli had no youth, like that of other boys; he could hear the sturdy Swiss lads playing outside and occasionally he would be visited by some of them, but the pale invalid was for the most part a prisoner. In the intervals of freedom from pain he read much and developed an extraordinary aptitude for acquiring languages. During these years of study he learned to know the Saviour and gave himself wholly to God, resolving that his life thereafter should be devoted to the Master's service.

"This condition," he explained, "grew upon me almost unconsciously. Indeed, I used to pray for conversion even after I was converted."

With returning health and vigor, he soon set about entering upon the work he had long waited for. When he could Walk With the Aid of Two Sticks, he went to Lausanne to earn his living by teaching languages, for he had become proficient in nearly every European tongue. His purpose in securing this employment was to save money enough to take him to Africa. The "Dark Continent" he regarded as the best field for his labors.

"Long before I could walk, I realized that the United States would have a great influence on the future of Africa," he explained. "My idea then was to colonize Central Africa with the converted natives of Madagascar and Southern negroes from the United States—or rather leaven it with small colonies. Mean while, I did some missionary work among the Italians in Lausanne. The first time I tried to save money, I found it exceedingly difficult. During my second year at Lausanne, my father died and all I had accumulated went to settle up the estate, for he had lost much money in business. Then I changed my plans slightly and again began to save money, intending this time to go first to Madagascar; but when I had enough funds, I was again disappointed, for at that time Madagascar was blockaded by the French. Then I decided to come to the United States where, at all events I could become acquainted with the negroes. I arrived in 1888 and entered the German Evangelical School at Bloomfield Seminary, where I studied while earning my own living. I was also enabled to establish an Italian mission in Newark about this time. In the summer of 1884 I had again saved a little money with the view of going to Madagascar."

It was at that time that Mr. Chatelain came to New York to the Dr. Geo. Dowkontt, with the three-fold purpose of studying medicine, working among the Italians and watching his opportunity to go to Madagascar. Amid all disappointments and set-backs, he never lost sight of the main object. Just as he had almost perfected his arrangements to sail, the intelligence came that the bank in which he had placed his little savings had collapsed and been summarily closed by order of the Banking Superintendent.

During the period of despondency that followed this disaster, he was fortunate enough to make the acquaintance of Dr. William R. Summers who was preparing to start with Bishop Taylor for Africa.

At the Very Darkest Hour

he Lord put within reach the realization of his hopes. The party lacked a linguist, and Mr. Chatelain offered his services, which were accepted. Next fall, in 1884, he went to England with Dr. Summers. Crossing to Berlin, they joined Bishop Taylor, and on the 5th of January, 1885, the party sailed from Liverpool for Africa. At Monrovia, the Liberian Capital, they left the Bishop, Chatelain and Summers intending to push on as pioneers as far as Loanda. At Loanda, the young missionary endeavored to become acquainted with the people of the country. Much time at first was occupied in getting a house ready for the party of forty men, women, and children who were to follow in a month with the bishop. Dr. Summers went to the interior on a prospecting tour, and during his absence, Chatelain fell ill of bilious fever and lay sick for six months. The party arrived, and most of the members left for the interior, but he was still so ill that he had to be left behind at Loanda, where in conjunction with a young Englishman, he started a self-supporting school in competition with a number of free schools conducted by the government. They soon had plenty of scholars.

For the next two years, Mr. Chatelain lived at Loanda, occupied with his school work and learning the Portuguese language, as well as a smattering of the native tongues. His aptitude for acquiring languages here stood him in excellent stead, for he found little difficulty in learning many of the native dialects, which are all branches of the Bantu. He was then ordered to Malange, the most inland of Bishop Taylor's stations, where he organized a free school for the natives, supporting himself meanwhile by teaching, and losing no opportunity of collecting materials for a vocabulary of the Ki'Imbundu tongue, as well as a grammar and primer, the necessity of which had been strongly impressed upon his mind, and which would prove of the greatest benefit to missionaries hereafter. After stopping there six months, he came down to the coast and returned to Europe at his own expense for the purpose of having his books printed. While in London he was again attacked by sickness (his last illness at Loanda had left him greatly enfeebled), and was compelled to go to his mother's home in Switzerland, where he continued his labors on his Ki'Imbundu primer, a Gospel of St. John in Ki'Imbundu, and a grammar in English and Portuguese for the use of students, which were soon completed.

In the summer of 1889 he came to the United States, bringing with him Jeremiah, a young native of Africa, whom he had taken with him as

A Companion From Ki'Imbundu,

and who had been of the greatest service to him in his school and Gospel work. At first he had found it almost impossible to make a religious impression upon the natives, but he made satisfactory progress, under God's blessing, after mastering their language. He then found them quick and attentive, and had the satisfaction of seeing them flock to the little hall in which he preached, in such numbers that there was not even standing room. Still, like many other missionaries he had sometimes wellnigh despaired of reaching the hearts of these people.

"Jere" was his first convert, and this fact became known to Mr. Chatelain in a very simple way. When he arrived at Malange, after having walked all the way from Loanda, his shoes were in wretched condition. Brother Mead, the missionary stationed there, told him that if he would go to Soba Bangu's village (Soba was the king or chief of the tribe), he would there find a good shoemaker. He did so and found that the shoemaker, or rather cobbler, was a young relative of the chief, a lad named Jeremiah. The latter mended the worn shoes, and in naming a price,

Lied to the Missionary,

who instantly corrected him. "It make very little more," urged the native, with a grin. "It's a lie, all the same," stoutly retorted Mr. Chatelain, "and it's as much a sin as though it were ten times the price." Soon after he was surprised to see "Jere," the royal cobbler, walking toward his tent, bearing a good-sized basket.

Martyrdom in Madagascar. (See page 172.)

Here was a gift in return for which another of much greater value would doubtless be expected. The lad deposited the basket in the door of the tent and lifted the cover, revealing a layer of eggs, under which was a goodly quantity of fine white flour. "Me make present," said he nodding and showing all his white teeth. "But," said Mr. Chatelain, "you can take it back again because I have no present to give you." "Jere" smiled, and earnestly protested in his own dialect that he wanted none. He had brought the flour and eggs, he said, being prompted by his heart to do it in return for the good advice the missionary had given him. The seed had fallen in good ground.

"Jere" now devoted himself wholly to Mr. Chatelain, helping in his work, especially in gathering material for his vocabulary and grammar. Being a bright, intelligent lad, Mr. Chatelain could readily use him in this respect. In return, the missionary taught him to read and write and sent him from Europe proof-sheets of his books. Alone in his native village, with only an occasional hint from the missionaries, "Jere" continued his studies and soon was able to read tolerably well and to write also. This was a great step in advance—to have the chief's relative

On the Side of Christ.

It was God's way of choosing his instruments for, when Mr. Chatelain returned, he found "Jere" working enthusiastically. Not only had he made progress himself, but he had taught his younger brother and cousin and, though persecuted and opposed by his own people, he contrived to impart to the little children of the village in the evenings, what he himself had learned of the Gospel and the story of Christ's life on earth. Such has been the harvest following that single conversion that the children of Soba Bangu's village are now, under the influence of the young convert's teachings, growing up as Christian men and women. "Jere" is the great grand-nephew of the king of the tribe and is second in the line of succession to the title of king; but he is too modest ever to assume authority and the chiefship will probably go to his younger brother, who is also a convert. There are probably about two thousand souls in Soba Bangu's dominion.

After coming to this country in 1889 with

"Jere," Mr. Chatelain again became associated with Dr. Dowkontt, assisting him in the publication of the Medical Missionary Record for a few months, until an opportunity for further activity offered itself. He was induced to accompany the United States Eclipse Expedition to Loanda, West Africa, as philologist and general informant. With the expedition he went to the Azores, St. Vincent de Paul, the Cape Verde Islands, Sierra Leone and Loanda, arriving in December, just in time to catch the eclipse. The astronomers went south to Cape Ledo, while the naturalists went as far as the railroad was laid to the interior. Through a mistake on the part of the chief of the expedition, Mr. Chatelain was left behind and at the request of the Superintendent of Bishop Taylor's missions, he labored during six months at Loanda.

Initiating the New Missionaries

in the native languages and helping them to reorganize the schools. When "Jere" heard that his benefactor had arrived in Loanda, he left his home and walked four hundred miles from Malange to see him, fording swollen rivers—for it was the rainy season—and daring many perils.

Mr. Chatelain leaves shortly for St. Paul de Loanda, where he has been appointed as United States Commercial Agent, and where he will continue his missionary work to advantage. Much of the work he has already accomplished will be of great service to mission workers in Africa. Among his publications are two vocabularies in the African dialects of the interior, with the corresponding words in German, a comparative grammar of Ki'Imbundu, also with a German translation, and a book of seventy-six legends or fables in the native tongue, the material for which was very largely supplied by "Jere," to the missionary. One of the objects of his new appointment at St. Paul de Loanda, is the collection of material for the Smithsonian Institution at Washington and for the approaching World's Fair at Chicago.

The illustrations on the first page show portraits of Mr. Chatelain and "Jere," together with a most interesting scene on the banks of the river at Dondo—a stream much used by traders. Dondo is the head of steam-navigation and the terminus of several trails leading to the interior. Within the past few years the territory round about has been opened to Gospel influences and there are now mission stations at all the important points, from Soba Bangu's domain down to the seacoast.

The portrait of Mr. Chatelain is from a photograph, taken expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, by Mr. Davis Garber, photographer, New York. The other illustrations are from photographs taken in Africa and brought to this country by Mr. Chatelain.

THE BODY OF CHRIST.

S. S. LESSON FOR MARCH 29, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
I COR. 12. GOLDEN TEXT, ROM. 12: 4, 5.*

The Human body the Expression of the Soul—Jesus the Express Image of the Father—The Church the Expression of Christ since his Ascension—Manifesting him to the World—The Oneness of the Body the Culmination of his Prayer—United by Faith, not Affinity—Love to the Brethren the Test of Love to God—Even to Uncongenial Brethren—A Common Interest in the Common Welfare.

THE body of Christ; what is it? Our human bodies express the unseen spirit and soul which they encase; and become our means of contact with others. Christ's human body was the express Image of God's Person (Heb. 1: 2), the Word of God, God's way of expressing himself, a kind of translation of the Divine, so that man would understand him. After his resurrection, he said to the disciples, "Handle me and see, for a spirit hath not flesh and bones as ye see me have." (Luke 24: 39.) That risen body was to the believing disciples an instrument through which they saw, heard and touched God. "That which was from the beginning, which we have heard, which we have seen with our eyes, which we have looked upon, and our hands have handled of the Word of Life . . . that eternal Life which was with the Father, and was manifested unto us."

Now that Christ is ascended into heaven, his Church, which is his body, has received the vocation to take his place, and express the thoughts and words and life of Jesus, that men who hear and see Christ-filled men and women may be brought near to God. "We which live are always delivered unto death for Jesus' sake, that the life also of Jesus might be made manifest in our mortal flesh." (II. Cor. 4: 11.) The full manifestation of Christ can never be in any single isolated member: but in his body in our relations to him and to one another: in one member specially the patience of Christ, in another his humility, in another his forbearance. There is a power to bind and to loose which is given, not to individuals, but to the body; there is a rule of the peace of God in our hearts "to the which we are called in one body" and the individual can never know it

Apart from the Body.

Our gathering together to him, the true "redemption of our body," when the last enemy "death shall be destroyed," is not, and cannot be, an individual thing. The great prayer of our Lord (John 17), culminated in his intense desire for his disciples, "that they all may be one, as thou Father art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me." It is this oneness which he knows to be invincible, that the enemy of souls has sought, all through this dispensation, to frustrate; and, as though to insure a complete victory, he has raised up an external unity in the Romish Church, which is compulsory and external, a caricature of the true unity of the body of Christ, which is life and liberty.

We receive our vocation as members of Christ's body, and members one of another,

By Faith, Not by Affinity.

Paul teaches us to think of ourselves soberly, "as God has dealt to every man the measure of faith. For as we have many members in one body, and all members have not the same office; so we, being many, are one body in Christ, and every one members one of another." By faith we see that we are incomplete alone, that even Christ is incomplete without us, and that no member, however feeble can be spared from the body. Then, also, by baptism we are brought into this relationship. "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of the body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ: For in one Spirit were we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Gentiles, whether bond or free, and were all made to drink into one Spirit." In baptism, we are buried with Christ, and put out of sight. If it means anything to us, it is the yielding up of self, the sequel to being crucified with Christ. But the burial is a planting, or sowing for a resurrection; we die to our own life ("they loved not their lives unto the death," Rev. 12: 11), that we may live again in the body of Christ.

How many there are sighing and groaning after a more ardent love to Christ and to souls, a more perfect patience, a truly Christ-like spirit. God has provided for all in our relation to Christ and to one another in the body. Our relations to one another are God's proving of our reality; any one can be holy who leads a life where he is not tried, troubled, crossed, etc., by others. The proof of Christ's love to us is that he has loved us when we were yet enemies, and died for us. The proof of our love is to love those in the body of Christ who act as though they were enemies, who misunderstand, who grieve and hurt us. Jesus loved his Church and gave himself for it; we have the privilege, in like manner, to lay down our lives for the brethren. Jesus "bare our sins in his body on the tree," and we have the privilege of saying with Paul, "Who is weak, and I am not weak? who is offended and I burn not?" Paul so realized his position as belonging to the body that nothing could happen to the body of Christ but that it touched him. This is #### True Christ-likeness.

How like "He that toucheth you toucheth the apple of his eye!" If there was a sin in the body, Paul could not stand aloof as judge of the offender; his brother's sin, his fellow-member's sin, was his sin, too. It was the instinct of the early Church to repudiate all personal, individual possessions, "Neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common." This is the true spirit of the Church of Christ. This is the restoration of the image of God; three in one; the Church many in one. The world is one wide battlefield of interest against interest, will against will. One man's loss is another man's gain. Christ has constituted his Church to be the miracle of grace which witnesses against this state of things. One member's gain is every member's gain, one member's loss, every member's loss. "That there should be no schism in the body; but that the members should have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it."

But this is again the exact contrary to socialism. Socialism and communism are combinations for selfish ends, so many selves combined to overcome so many more selves, and to provide each one for his own satisfaction. The Church of Christ sinks self and self-interest for the body, willing to be a nothing and a nobody, and to have no place but as

"A Servant of All."

(Eph. 4: 16, 16.) "Therefore if the foot shall say, Because I am not the hand, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body?" The foot is the first-mentioned member. Why? It is the lowest down and the most universal servant: it bears the weight of the body, and is the most unseen; therefore God gives it a first place. Blessed is the member who at all times, in joy or sorrow, in shame or glory, bears upon his heart all the other members. "Whosoever of you will be chiefest shall be servant of all"—a "foot." Many would rather be the hand, the prominently active member, "whose praise is in all the churches;" whose meetings are advertised, and whose name is known, yet without the foot, the body would make no step of progress, and the movements of the hand might be much restricted. "If the ear shall say, Because I am not the eye, I am not of the body, is it therefore not of the body?" Again, the ear, the quiet, still member, which drinks in, and is scarcely noticed at all, is mentioned before the quick, flashing, speaking eye. Mary, the sister of Martha and Lazarus, was an ear of the body; she "sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his word." Elijah by the brookside, and in the widow's house, took in the thoughts of his God, and so did Paul, in the Roman prison. How much we owe to the ear of the body whenever we meet with its quiet but potent ministry! One sermon of Elijah did more for the cause of God than the united lives of many other prophets, because he listened to his God. But this active members are also exceedingly necessary. "If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing?" but in the same way, "if the whole were hearing, where were the smelling,"—the "quick scent in the fear of the Lord" (Isa. 11: 3.) "But now hath

God Set the Members in the Body,

as it hath pleased him." Shall we be displeased, because, in immediate contact with us, there is a member whose life and spirit try us to the very utmost? How should we prove all the wondrous patience there is in our God if we were not "pressed out of measure, above strength" (II. Cor. 1: 8), with the perpetual wear and friction, of this, fellow-member? There is no furnace for the children of God where the fire is so hot as the furnace of our fellow-members: there is no high-school like it. It is comparatively easy to bear with worldlings, who have not, or know not that they have access to the grace which God has made known to us. But the failures of our fellow-members reflect discredit upon us, our vanity is touched by them, and just so long as we regard them and ourselves as units and as separate witnesses for Christ, we feel perhaps justified in yielding to a spirit of indignation when they are troublemakers of Israel, Achans in the Church of Christ. But let us see that God has set them in the body, "as it hath pleased him," and us in the body as it hath pleased him, and that just where they do not recognize the harm they do, he gives us to recognize it, and to confess to him with shame that which they are unaware of.

A JARRING FAMILY.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for March 29.
Romans 12: 4, 5,

BY the side of a cosy fire two brothers sat talking one winter night. The clock had struck twelve but neither of them showed any signs of weariness. They had not seen each other for many years. Martin Jernyn, the younger of the two, had been preaching the Gospel in China, often far beyond the reach of the mails and had, besides, been too much engrossed in his work to take a deep interest in home affairs. He was now in his native country again for a brief visit and on the first day after his landing went to his brother's house. William, the elder of the two, was only just married when his brother went away: now he had quite a family—four boys and two girls.

"You ought to be a very happy man, Will," said the younger brother. "You seem to have everything pleasant around you. What beautiful, intelligent children God has given you. Robert is almost a man and I suppose Mary is through school."

"Yes, they are children any man might be proud of; but somehow we don't pull together very well. There's a great deal of anxiety in bringing up a family. A father has to prepare for disappointments. They are sure to come. I suppose they are. In what shape have they visited you?"

"Oh, in many ways. Robert vexed me a good deal. I wanted him to come to the factory with me. I am superintendent there now, and I could have helped him along. But he said he hated the business and should never do any good at it. He was always making models and fixing up some kind of machine. I had to let him go to a machinist to learn that business. I thought Edward would have turned out better, but he was set on being a musician, and I had to give way again. I tried to get him to see that he could make music his amusement, but he has made it his business, and a poor business I fear he'll find it. As for the two girls, they don't get on with their mother. They are always bickering. We ought to be happy, but we are not."

* This lesson is suggested by Mrs. Baxter for use in schools where the choice of a subject for March 29 is optional with teachers. The passage of Scripture selected for a Temperance lesson is Isa. 5: 11-23, and for a Missionary lesson Isa. 11: 1-10.

Martin Jermyn found plenty of evidence that his brother's words were true. He was grieved to see how little affection there was among the members of the family. The father was at his business in the daytime and at night he was always away. He had his club and he was a member of an Institute and had many friends. There was always some engagement to take him away from home in the evening. Robert despised his brother's musical pursuit and took no pains to conceal it. Edward on his side called his elder brother a Philistine, as a term of opprobrium for his lack of sympathy with art. The two younger boys, who were at school, were not good friends and the girls had nothing in common, the one being given to reading and study and the other to drawing. Every one of the family seemed isolated in the home though each had friends outside it. Martin was concerned to see how much happiness was lost by the differences.

It was a difficult problem to deal with, but the missionary did not despair of it. Before he had been in his brother's home a week he had won Robert's good-will by studying his models, by watching his little steam-engine at work and praising his ingenuity. He had persuaded Edward to play some new music for him and had helped the two younger boys with their lessons. The girls, too, were won over, for their uncle could talk to Mary of her books and was interested in Helen's sketches. For the first time in their lives all the children had at least one feeling in common—they all liked their uncle and respected him. It drew them unconsciously together as uncongenial members of a church are drawn together by love of Jesus.

Somehow, the evenings in the Jermyn household grew more enjoyable. The missionary had some photographs of Chinese scenes, and Helen, who was making pictures of them, would bring her drawing to the family-room. Mary had generally some argument on hand with her uncle, whose wider experience made her book-knowledge seem crude and unpractical. And the evident pleasure with which Martin's, "Now let us have a little music," was said, delighted Edward's heart. It was not easy to draw them closer together, but gradually each was led to study the other's occupation, if only to criticize, and that disposition could not fail to develop into appreciation, where, as in this case, there was real talent in exercise. The father, too, was induced to give an evening or two in the week to the family. His brother praised the children's respective performances so highly that he began to be proud of them too, and to take an interest in them. He brought some of his business friends in "to hear that boy play," and to see Helen's drawings. People began to say there was "always something pleasant going on at the Jermyn's," and the acquaintance of the family was counted a privilege.

The missionary did not seem to have made any special effort. His interest in each case appeared perfectly natural and spontaneous. In reality, however, the change was the result of much thought, and he gave still more to making it permanent. "You are such a thoroughly all-round family," he said, as his visit was drawing to a close, "I shall feel quite desolate when I get back to my work in China. I hope you will keep these pleasant evenings up. I shall like to think of you altogether, each contributing to the general enjoyment."

"There would be no doubt of it if you were going to stay," said Robert. "I do not know how it will be when you are gone. We shall all miss you so."

"But you have been so much happier," was the uncle's reply, "you will do it for your own sake, or, perhaps, it is better to say for the sake of each other. Still, if my wish counts for anything, you can be sure that it will please me to hear from you, that your interest in each other and your mutual love increases. I shall know then that you love me too."

REDEMPTION DRAWING NIGH.

The Signs of the Near Approach of the Second Advent of Christ.

BY REV J. DAWSON.

OUR blessed Lord's Second Coming will undoubtedly be a sudden event. It will take the world by surprise. And yet it has to be preceded by certain signs which will proclaim to the Church "The Lord is at hand. And so our Lord says, "When ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the Kingdom of God is at hand." We learn from the opening verses of Matthew 24, that certain persons were expressing their admiration for the beauty and magnificence of the Temple. Its goodly stones and precious gifts extorted their admiration. Hearing this, our Lord tells them of the fate which awaited this magnificent pile, "As for these things which ye behold, the days will come in the which there shall not be left one stone upon another, that shall not be thrown down." The curiosity and interest of his hearers is greatly excited, and they immediately ask, "But, Master, when shall these things be, and what sign will there be when these things shall come to pass?" In reply to this inquiry, Jesus gives utterance to a prophecy, the fulfilment of which, commencing within a few years from the time when it was spoken, will only be completed when the Archangel's trumpet shall sound, and when the Lord shall descend from heaven, clothed with majesty, and power, and glory, to receive his saints to himself.

The prophecy may be divided into two parts. The first part relating to the destruction of Jerusalem, and the second part referring to "the coming of the Son of Man in a cloud with power and great glory." The first event typifies and foreshadows the second.

The Dividing-Point of the Prophecy.

The point at which the prophecy divides is the 24th verse. In the previous verses our Lord has clearly indicated the fate which awaited the holy city. It had to be compassed with armies and to become a desolation. It had to be "trodden down of the Gentiles." But this was not to be the last scene in its history. Its desolation has not to be perpetual. On its fallen stones is written "Resurgam." Unlike Babylon and Nineveh, and many of the great cities of antiquity, it has a magnificent future. The period of the domination of its enemies is limited. It has only to be trodden down until "the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." From this point the prophecy enters upon its second stage. It tells us that when the times of the Gentiles are fulfilled, fresh events will take place, and fresh signs will manifest themselves; and that these will be succeeded by the accomplishment of the hope of the Church—the return of Christ.

There are events which we commonly call Signs of the Times.

One of these is the subject of a prophecy by Zechariah. In the 5th verse of the 14th chapter of his prophecy he declares, "And the Lord my God shall come, and all the saints with thee." But when shall he come? Not until all nations are gathered together in hostile array against Jerusalem. Now according to this prediction the coming of the Lord has to be preceded by a series of rapidly succeeding events which will be open to the observation of all the world. The armies of hostile nations united by the bonds of a common cause, surround the holy city and take it; gross acts of cruelty signalize their victory; many of the inhabitants are carried away as prisoners of war, and then the Lord comes.

But now there is this difficulty. Our Lord's return is always spoken of in Scripture as taking place suddenly, and in a great measure unexpectedly. Christ himself says, "Watch, therefore, for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come." But if these events which we have described above, and which will not be obscure and hidden, but open and known to all, are to be the precursors of the day of the Lord, how can it be said "Of that day and hour knoweth no man?" For when Antichrist appears and marshals his hosts against Jerusalem, every student of the inspired record will know "The Lord is at hand." I think we shall find a satisfactory answer by looking attentively at the descriptions given of our Lord's return in glory. His advent will consist of two parts or stages. The first his coming to the air for his Church. The second, his coming to the earth with his Church. Let us for a moment look at each of these separately. In the first place, what are we taught respecting his coming to the air for his Church! In his first epistle to the Thessalonians, the fourth chapter and in verses 15, 16, St. Paul writes: "Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall we ever be with the Lord."

But whilst I believe, therefore, that some of the signs of the times will only manifest themselves fully and distinctly after our Lord has appeared in the air and accomplished the first stage of his advent, I think that there can be no doubt that the days immediately preceding that first stage will be marked by certain characteristics which will intimate that the coming of the Lord cannot be far distant. Does it not become a very important question for us to ask if we can perceive any of these signs around us at the present day; if we can hear any distant rumbling of the thunder telling us of an approaching storm? From what St. Paul writes to Timothy it is plain that will be one of the prevailing signs of the last days; and no one can deny that this spirit is already abroad. Nihilism in Russia, Socialism in Germany, Communism in France, Fenianism in Ireland, are a source of anxiety and alarm to kings and governments. We see this same spirit spreading its baneful influence amongst "all sorts and conditions of men."

Revolutionary Lawlessness

Another sign of the approach of the last days is the decay of faith. "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith in the earth?" We are all aware of the rapid growth of unbelief during the last few years. Thirty-five years ago "Essays and Reviews" and Dr. Colenso's books called forth a perfect tempest of disapprobation, and were read almost by stealth. But these works were mild and harmless compared with much of the literature of the present day. Books, pamphlets, reviews, magazines and newspapers, boldly impugning the verities of our faith, and in many instances openly advocating bold materialism, are circulated by our libraries and lie on our drawing-room tables. And to such an extent have sceptical and even atheistic principles been imbibed, that I am afraid we ministers often have but a very small idea how many of our hearers either disbelieve our statements of Gospel truth or regard them as problematical and as open to debate.

The Christian's Proper Attitude.

Now, in the presence of these "signs of the times," what should be our attitude, and what our state of mind? Our Lord says that "men's hearts will fail them for fear, and for expectation of the things which are coming on the earth." "Men's hearts." But we are Christ's. The very signs, so full of terrible import to unconverted men, are to us the sweet echo of the approaching footsteps of our Lord.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

EX-EMPRESS FREDERICK.

ENGLAND, France and Germany have had a great flutter of excitement caused by the visit a few weeks ago of ex-Empress Frederick at Paris. Indeed, her visit was suddenly ended by danger of personal violence. A mob at the depot from which it was expected she would depart made it wise for her to depart from another depot and all over the world there was a sense of relief when it was found that the German ex-Empress was safely out of France. No one can understand how absurd such excitement was unless he has seen the ex-Empress of Germany and noticed what a harmless, innocent, gracious and good woman she appears to be. I was never so favorably impressed with any very distinguished woman as with this ex-Empress at Athens, Greece, November 23rd, 1889. She wore not a single jewel, and was in plain black. She was dignified but not coldly so. She had a countenance that indicated good sense and kindness. But it was a somewhat tearful face. This may have been partly due to the fact that she was to leave her newly-married daughter in Athens, but I think the sadness of face was consequent upon the multitude of troubles through which she had passed, the long and terrible sickness and death of Emperor Frederick and many other griefs, domestic and political. Though her days have been passed in palaces, having occupied the throne herself, and she is the daughter of a queen and the mother of an emperor, yet unostentatious and gentle and Christian.

How the visit of such a woman at Paris could upset the equilibrium of Europe is something wonderful. It only shows what great popular excitements may be aroused without sufficient cause and that the populace are always waiting for a victim. It is so in all countries. Ever and anon you find the people going pell-mell in wild attack upon some man or woman. Having demolished this one or that one, the public wait, practically saying: "Next! Hand us another!" It is no compliment to human nature that the public is so easily launched in the cause of defamation and moral assault. Now it is Horace Greeley. Now it is Charles Sumner. Now it is Schuyler Colfax. Now it is Empress Frederick. Join in no such crusade. Applaud no such undertaking. If we join in any riot, let it be a riot of good cheer. Fling nothing unless you can fling flowers. The mob around the Parisian depot waiting for the opportunity to express animosity and bitterness against as kind and lovely and good a woman as there is in all the world, is a powerful and fresh illustration of something in human nature that ought to be suppressed and if possible extirpated. It is as natural for some persons to attack others as it is for a hound to go for a hare. If you find yourself getting soured with the world and misanthropic, better, by the grace of God, get on some other tack. Cynicism is of the devil. I hereby declare my determination to believe nothing against any one until beyond dispute the wrong-doing is proven. I have always been glad that by reason of my profession it is impossible for me to be drafted as a jurymen, for I am always prejudiced in favor of the man or woman assailed, and therefore I might demand more evidence than I would have a right to expect.

I am going more and more to cultivate the habit of thinking well of others. I do this because I notice what an everlasting stew and fret those people are in who are always going for others, trying to pull them down or take the wind out of their sails or stop them. If anyone through good fortune or prosperity of any sort gets into position higher than that we occupy, let us thank God for their success and not stand round the depot waiting to hiss at an ex-Empress.

"But," says some one, "why did the ex-Empress go to Paris and risk the stirring up of the old grudge between France and Germany?" This is the answer—she went to get important pictures for an exposition at Berlin. Her mission was right and beautiful. She went in the interest of sublime art as well as of international good-feeling. Beside that, it is nearly twenty-one years since Sedan was fought. That is long enough to allow all pugnacity to die out. If people cannot get over a belligerent feeling in twenty-one years, they are awfully to blame. Since the Franco-German war a new generation has taken the stage of action. Napoleon is dead, the Prince Imperial is dead, Thiers is dead, Gambetta is dead, most of the more prominent generals are dead, Imperialism is dead. Was it unreasonable to suppose that so long after the war a visit in the interest of art by a woman who never touched a wound except to heal it would have been taken in kindest spirit, and the soldiers' graves which nature long ago covered with green grass and bright flowers would now have been covered with pictures? No! no! In all nations, our own not excepted, it seems to be the interest of many to keep the old grudge good, and ever and anon the bad spirit demonstrates its existence and postpones to some later concert the silver trumpets of the Bethlehem sky which proclaimed peace and good-will to man. But thank God the adjournment is not forever. There will be later generations in France and Germany and America, who will have no grudges to settle, and war, the system of wholesale cut-throatery, will descend to the bottomless pit from which it ascended.

We catch a glimpse of that coming dawn in the present proposition of Lord Salisbury to our American Government. One-half the irritation that has been felt on the Behring Straits controversy would fifty years ago have brought out declaration of war, and English guns and American guns would have already thundered, and, diverted from healthful industries, we would have been calculating how many men we could kill without ourselves being killed. There will be no war between England and the United States. There never will be. The North and the South of this continent will yet have as kindly feeling toward each other as New York and Massachusetts, as Georgia and Louisiana. Pictures from the Louvre and the Luxembourg will yet be loaned for some coming exhibition at Berlin. American art will welcome into its galleries the finest European art. The painter's pencil and the sculptor's chisel and author's pen and orator's tongue will all be on the side of peace. The Empress of the wide empire of fine arts will visit all our capitals, and be welcomed clear round the world.

BRIEF NOTES.

Mayor George A. Hilton is meeting with much success in his Gospel Temperance work in California. At Santa Paula and Ontario his meetings were of a deeply spiritual character, and were much blessed.

Mr. Yatman's meetings in Denver, Colo., have been the means of stirring up a strong religious interest in that city. The Rocky Mountain Christian Advocate says that he spoke to thousands of persons every day, and that the meetings for special classes "proved powerful in impression and splendid in results."

The American Bible Society has made a grant to Dr. George F. Pentecost of a thousand Testaments and two thousand Gospels for use in his meetings in Calcutta. The Bible Society made other grants of books to the value of $5,000, and funds to the amount of $13,694. These grants are for work in various countries, including Mexico, Cuba, Sweden, Austria and Italy. The Society has issued during the year closing April 1st, 942,317 volumes.

Mr. Moody announces that he has received a promise of help in his next Northfield Conference from Rev. F. B. Meyer, of Regents Park Chapel, London. Mr. Meyer is one of the most enterprising ministers in London, noted for his success in reaching non-church-goers and working men. He has considerable experience with missions and systems of visiting, so that his advice will be of great value to Christian workers here.

Mr. Penzotti, whose imprisonment in Peru for preaching the Gospel was described, with pictures of his house and dungeon, in this journal on January 21st, writes under date of February 9th, that he had not been released. He believes the authorities are holding him in the hope that he will give an undertaking to leave the country if he is set free. During the year previous to his arrest, he had sold no less than twelve thousand copies of the Scriptures.

Mr. Anthony Comstock is engaged in a desperate conflict with the gambling fraternity in New Jersey over a bill now before the legislature. Mr. Comstock contends that the bill will extend the facilities and opportunities for gambling in New Jersey, as the Ives Pool Bill has done in New York. He asks all religious journals and all Christian patriots in the State to join in his protest, and give him their moral support.

The floating Chapel which Mr. I. R. B. Arnold is using for Gospel and Temperance work in the South is proving a decided success. At last reports it was on the Ohio River above Cincinnati. Mr. Arnold is able, through its agency to reach multitudes who attend no place of worship. The chapel has a seating capacity of seven hundred, and is well attended. Mr. Arnold makes an appeal for help in supporting it, which is endorsed by the American Home Missionary Society.

Religious work in the South has been greatly helped during the past few months by the evangelistic tour of Rev. A. P. Graves, D. D. At New Orleans, Lake Charles, and Monroe, La., and at Brookhaven, Miss., his meetings had the effect of moving large masses of people to serious thought and inquiry after the way of salvation. At Brookhaven the houses of business were closed at the hour of the meetings to give the employees an opportunity of attending. Dr. Graves hopes to be at Little Rock, Ark., by the close of this month.

Mr. and Mrs. E. P. Telford closed their meetings in Sing Sing, N. Y., on March 12th. The Highland Avenue Church, in which they were held, was well filled during the three weeks of the evangelist's visit. There was a deep interest among Christian people in the services, and many spoke of the benefit they had derived from them in increased light on God's Word and deepened spiritual life. A very large number of conversions took place. The evangelists commenced work at Troy, Pa., last Sunday. They held services in the Presbyterian, Baptist and Methodist churches on that day. They will spend three weeks in Troy.

CURRENT EVENTS.

The Behring Sea Dispute—Death of our Minister to Japan
—A Paris Bank Fails—The Illinois Senatorship—Prince Jerome Bonaparte Dying—General Notes.

American Diplomacy has scored a triumph in the Behring Sea dispute, and there seems to be a probability of reaching an early and amicable settlement of the whole matter. The text of Lord Salisbury's letter in reply to the dispatch of Mr. Blaine has been made public and it shows that the British Prime Minister is willing to accept most of the proposals of our State Department for arbitration. The letter, which was sent through Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Minister at Washington, deals with every point raised by Mr. Blaine in his dispatch of December 17th, and concludes by referring to the omission in Mr. Blaine's dispatch of all mention of damages to persons who have been injured, in the event of it being decided that the action of the United States in seizing British vessels has been without warrant of international law. Salisbury regards arbitration as the most satisfactory means of settling the matter and thus disposes of the war bugaboo.

The Methods of European Anarchists and those who use violence, and band themselves together secretly for outrage, find no countenance in the United States. Eleven members of the Cloakmakers Union of New York City are now in jail in Jamaica, Long Island, awaiting trial for wrecking the home and workshop of a non-Union cloakmaker in that village, a few days ago. These men went from New York, armed and carrying bottles of vitriol. On reaching the house, they destroyed the machines, ruined the furniture, and drove the family outdoors. One brutal fellow seized the baby in the cradle and dashed vitriol over its little limbs, disfiguring it for life. The police secured evidence indicating that the outrage was planned by Barondess, the leader of the strike, and the latter was also arrested. The case is one that attracts very general interest. The great body of cloakmakers repudiate any responsibility for this resort to violence.

A Pitiful Condition of Affairs Prevails Among the farmers in the central portions of Nebraska, Kansas and the Dakotas. Owing to repeated failure of crops in the arid belt, where they live, they are absolutely destitute, and, unless help comes soon, thousands of head of live stock will perish, and hundreds of families will be compelled to leave, or face starvation. A movement has started in Chicago for their relief, and some of the Western railroads have agreed to carry free, goods sent to the sufferers.

The Long Senatorial Fight in the Dead-locked Illinois Legislature ended on the 11th inst., in the election of General M. Palmer on the 154th ballot by a solid vote of 101 Democrats and 2 of the Farmers' Association men. Just before the end, one of the Farmers' Association men was tempted by the dazzling offer of the Senatorship for himself, with a certainty of sufficient votes, but it was rejected. The two Farmers' men who decided the eight-weeks' battle were Moore and Cockrell. Cicero J. Lindley, on the final ballot, received the full Republican vote of one hundred. Gen. Palmer, the newly elected United States Senator (whose portrait is given on this page), was born in Kentucky on September 13, 1817, and educated at Alton College, Ills. He entered politics and was elected a State Senator in 1854, when he opposed the Nebraska bill and brought about the election of Lyman Trumbull to the United States Senate. He supported Fremont for the Presidency in 1856, and Lincoln in 1860. He raised the Fourteenth Illinois Infantry regiment and by gallant services rose to the rank of Major-General. He was elected Governor of Illinois in 1868. He is an orator of ability.

Storms and Floods in a Dozen Different States in our own country, and a veritable blizzard in England, have made the past week a memorable one. Floods and tornadoes have done the work here, wrecking bridges and turn-pikes, sweeping away cotton-gins, barns and dwellings, and, in some places, blocking railway communication. In the south of England, trains have been snowed up for many hours, and the passengers only rescued after much suffering. All road traffic is blockaded, many of the iron works are stopped, and provisions of all sorts have risen almost to famine prices. Many towns have been entirely cut off from communication by the great snowfall. In a number of places, the snow-blizzard has been attended by loss of life.

Paris has been on the Verge of a Money panic, during the week, owing to the discovery that the Societe des Depots de Comptes Courants—a bank formerly believed to have unlimited resources and which has done a profitable business since 1859—was on the brink of failure. It experienced very heavy losses lately in Argentine investments and found itself unable to meet claims amounting to 60,000,000 francs. An appeal was made to the government and the Bank of France—the national institution—decided to advance the necessary amount. The negotiations for this purpose were conducted by the Minister of Finance, M. Rouvier, who is said to be himself a considerable stockholder in the impaired bank. In two days, during a general run, the banks' shares fell 130.

By the Collapse of the Walls of a Church in the town of Menzel, near Tunis, a few days ago, many young lives were sacrificed. The disaster occurred during a "children's service." Without the slightest warning, the side walls tottered and fell inward, while the roof simultaneously crashed to the floor, burying the entire congregation. Heartrending scenes followed. The townspeople immediately set to work to rescue those that were still alive beneath the ponderous masses of masonry and timbers, and soon succeeded in releasing fifty maimed and bleeding men, women and children. Many dead were also removed, but it was feared that hundreds of bodies were buried among the debris. The church was quite ancient.

Ocean Travel is being Rapidly Reduced to a science as exact as travel by rail on land. In twenty years the time consumed in crossing the Atlantic has been reduced one-half, and the present six-day minimum bids fair to be cut down still lower. A new steamer, the Howard Cassard, was launched at Baltimore during the week, which will probably revolutionize transatlantic travel. Her inventor has built her on purely mathematical calculations, and claims that she will have a speed of 35 miles an hour. The 1,600 horse-power engine is directly on the keel; the boilers have a heating surface of 105 feet, and the whole of the machinery is below the water line. The general equipment is as near an approach as possible to a palace-railroad train, and if her sanguine inventor's claims are realized, she will only need four days to make the trip to Europe. This experiment will be watched by steamship men and the travelling public with a great deal of interest.

With a Tenacity of Purpose that Seems somewhat strained, under the circumstances, Sir John Macdonald announces that he will contest all the seats in the recent Canadian election that were won by the Liberals by small majorities. This will go very far toward making the fight over again, as in very few cases were the majorities large. All the frontier counties that went against the government will be contested, if the courts consent. The Liberals are extracting a good deal of comfort from this determination on the part of the Premier, as, they claim, it is an evidence of weakness. They add that were the election to be held over again to-morrow, the government would be swept out of sight. Sir Charles Tupper, a member of the Cabinet, has gone on record since the election as declaring that he believes Mr. Blaine will soon be convinced of the friendly attitude of Sir John's government, and that very desirable reciprocity arrangements will soon be effected between Canada and the United States.

Prince Jerome Napoleon, One of the Few Re-maining members of the great house of Bonaparte, is dying at Rome, of congestion of the lungs. King Humbert and the members of the Italian royal family are watching at the bedside of the sufferer. His son, Prince Victor, from whom he has been estranged for years, became reconciled to his dying parent; but the Princess Mathilde, the sister of Jerome, refused to visit him on account of the presence of Madame Canisy. Jerome was born at Trieste, September 9, 1822. He had a varied political experience, having been successively a member of the French Constituent Assembly, Minister to Madrid, a State Senator and Councillor, and a General of the Army. He married Princess Clotilde, daughter of King Victor Emmanuel of Italy, in 1859, the offspring being two sons and a daughter, the elder son having inherited the great expectations of the Prince Imperial who perished in the Zulu War. Jerome visited the United States in 1861, and made many acquaintances among the prominent men of the war period. When Napoleon III. declared war against Prussia, Jerome was offered a command but declined. When he went to France shortly after the crushing defeat at Sedan, he was expelled by the government of Jules Favre. In 1875, he declared his adherence to the Republic, but lately he recalled it, and gave evidence that he still had dreams of empire for his son.

One of the Brightest of our Diplomatic Rep-resentatives abroad, Hon. John F. Swift, Minister to Japan, died of heart disease, at Tokio on the 10th inst.

Mr. Swift (whose portrait we give in this column), was a native of Missouri, where he was born some fifty-two years ago. When quite a young man he went to California and quickly became active in public affairs, both as lawyer and politician. He aided in negotiating a Treaty with China in 1880, and was at one time named for Attorney-General. Although the Republicans of the Pacific Coast made much of him and nominated him for Governor (a post for which he was defeated), he took more pleasure in literary work than in politics. He wrote several books, among them being: Going to Jericho. He had been a great traveller and possessed an unending fund of anecdote.

BIT AND BRIDLE.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

The Anxiety of the Pardoned Man—To be Guided and kept from Sin—The Promise Given—I. A Privilege to be Sought—The Guidance very Full—Personal—By a Tender Look—II. A Character to be Avoided—The Stubborn and Wayward—Kicking like a Christian—Inferior Creatures near Akin—Useless if Untrained—III. An Infliction to be Escaped—The Bit and Bridle a Curb on Freedom—Imposed if Necessary—IV. Freedom to be Attained.

"I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye. Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee." Psalm 32: 8, 9.

YOU of full forgiveness is described in the first two verses of this psalm; "Blessed is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered. Blessed is the man unto whom the Lord imputeth not iniquity, and in whose spirit there is no guile."

After a man is pardoned, anxiety is awakened as to how he shall be kept from sin in the future. The burnt child dreads the fire; and although his burns have all been healed, he dreads the fire none the less, but all the more. Those who have been scorched by sin tremble at even a distant approach to the flame. You will always know whether you are delivered from the guilt of sin by answering this question—Am I delivered from the love of sin? He who lost his way yesterday feels his

Need of a Guide

for to-day and to-morrow. David's great anxiety on this score is met by the gracious answer of the Lord: "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go."

One other observation. He is henceforth to be a disciple as well as a singer; he needs to be taught in the way, for he is a pilgrim still, and not yet at his journey's end. Sound the timbrel if you will, and shout for joy and sing unto the Lord, for he hath triumphed gloriously; but remember that on the other side of the Red Sea there is a wilderness, and you will require much grace to traverse it—such grace as only the Shepherd of Israel can give you. You will be wise to address yourselves to your journey, and resolve to follow him whose eye discerns the way, and whose hand can help you in it. A pilgrim's life is not all feasting. He has something else to do besides praising God upon the high-sounding cymbals. We must sit at Jesus' feet, as well as look to his cross. We are to bear his yoke and learn of him, that we may find rest unto our souls.

This may stand as an introduction; for now I want to conduct you further into this grave business of the saved man. You are pardoned, my friend, you know you are, and you feel the joy of that knowledge. Yes, but you are not in heaven yet; something more is needed; not to secure the love of God, not to complete the work of sovereign grace; but to educate you for the skies, to make you meet to be a partaker of the inheritance of the saints in light.

I. First, here is,

A Privilege to be Sought.

This guidance is very full in its nature. Three words are used to describe it: "I will instruct thee, and teach thee, in the way which thou shalt go: I will guide thee with mine eye." The Lord is prepared to teach you in his truth: to make you wise in heavenly matters. Though saved, you are as yet a mere child, and unfamiliar with great truths. You know but little of divine things: you know little of yourself, little of your danger, little of holiness, and little of God: but the Lord here promises to take you for his pupil, and to be himself your instructor. He instructs so effectually as really to build up the mind, hence the Psalmist says, "Through thy precepts I get understanding." Other instructors can awaken that measure of understanding which is already ours; but God giveth understanding to the simple. A good understanding is one of the gifts of his grace, and blessed are they who receive it.

Practical Teaching.

The second word is "I will teach thee;" and this teaching is most practical, for the promise is—"I will teach thee in the way which thou shalt go." God adds the precept to the doctrine, and instructs us in both. Eminently precious is that practical teaching by which you are made to know what to do, and how to do it. Theoretical teaching is of small importance compared with this practical learning. The Lord will teach us the art and mystery of holiness. He will apprentice us to the Lord Jesus as the Master of righteousness: he will make us journeymen one of these days, and turn us out full blown—"workmen that need not to be ashamed." Our great Teacher sends forth fine workmen, whose good works are seen of men, and cause them to glorify the Father in heaven.

The promise of the Lord, in the third word of the verse, goes even further than doctrinal and practical instruction; for we read, "I will guide thee with mine eye." Herein is fellowship as well as instruction; for the guide goes with the traveller, and thus will God, in the process of our instruction, give us fellowship with himself. Blessed are those who follow the Lamb whithersoever he goeth: they have both the privilege of holy walk and

Heavenly Company.

It is our high privilege that, while our Shepherd goes before us, he calls us by name, and we follow closely in his footsteps, as his well-beloved sheep. We are not only to be told the way, and led into the way, but to be accompanied in it by our Teacher and Friend.

Observe how wonderfully personal is this promised guidance. While the address in the ninth verse is in the plural, "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule," the promise is in the singular to each individual: "I will instruct thee and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go; I will guide thee with mine eye." I note with comfort, in the text, what the French call tu-toi-age. Speaking to one another very familiarly, they say "thou" and "thee." How sweetly is this seen in this passage: "I will instruct thee, and teach thee in the way which thou shalt go. I will guide thee with mine eye!" Hear you not the great Father talking to his dear child? Yes, I hear him speaking to you and to me.

Tender Leading.

Furthermore, this teaching is delightfully tender: "I will guide thee with mine eye;" that is to say if you are willing to be so directed, the Lord will guide you, not by the rough means of bit and bridle, muzzle and cord, but with his eye—a way which implies understanding on your part and love on his part. It is a recognition of confidence in us when he promises thus to guide us. The mistress at the head of the table gives a nod to Sarah, she knows what it means, and the will of the lady is done at once. The master has not to enter into details with old John, who has been with him for so many years; he knows his wishes, and a wink or a look will speak volumes. Well-trained children of God have their faces toward him, and soon perceive his mind and this secures their prompt obedience.

II. I now ask your attention while I show you

A Character to be Avoided.

We are told that since the Lord is ready to instruct us, we are not to be stubborn and wayward. It is ours to be docile and obedient. "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding: whose mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee." We are not to imitate creatures of which we are the superiors. Man is made to have dominion over the horse and mule, and the whole animal creation: let him not seek his models among his servants. I have sometimes heard speeches which have looked in that unwise direction. The driver of an omnibus was using his whip pretty freely upon one of his horses, and a gentleman sitting on the box-seat observed, "You never strike the horse on this side." "Bless you!" said the driver, "if I were to touch that mare, when I went near her in the stable at night, she would kick me like a Christian." What a remarkable simile, was it not? Like a Christian! Is that so, that Christians kick? that Christians are found taking revenge? Here is a matter about which we urgently cry, "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule." Never render evil for evil, railing for railing; for that is to copy the beasts of the field. Let us look upward to the highest and never go down to the beasts for models.

Akin to the Ass.

We must mind that we do not imitate creatures to whom we are so near akin. The mule has a touch of the ass in it, and I fear it is not the only creature of which this may be said. Is not man, as unredeemed, likened to the ass in the types of the Mosaic law? Ah, brethren! we are likened in Scripture to many strange beasts, and not without reason. David himself says, "So foolish was I, and ignorant: I was as a beast before thee;" and yet he was so good a man that he could add, "Nevertheless I am continually with thee." A large part of us is animal, and its tendency is to drag down that part which is more than angelic. How abject, and yet how august is man! Brother to the worm, and yet akin to Deity. Immortal and yet a child of dust. Be ye not the prey of your lower natures. As children of God, yield not yourselves to that which it is your duty to subdue. Have the horse and mule in subjection: keep under your body: do not bear the burden of the animal, but make the animal your burden-bearer. "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule," but rise superior to flesh and blood.

I believe the Psalmist here alludes to the horse and mule as

Creatures Naturally Wild,

and needing to be broken in and trained. These wild creatures we can make nothing of till we break them in: be not like them, useless, untrained, unbroken. Yet this is how we begin life, naturally and spiritually. It is good to get broken in early in life: "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth." It is an ill thing for a man to have no restraint in youth, and no trouble in full-grown manhood. When men and women follow out their own sweet wills, the end thereof is seven-fold bitterness. A mind uncorrected is a vine unpruned, which yields no fruit, but trails along the ground, and rots as it trails. It is a grand thing to learn the meaning of the word "obey."

Furthermore, we are not to imitate creatures devoid of reason. "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule, which have no understanding." He especially lays stress on this—that they are without understanding. You are a reasoning man; act reasonably. You have understanding; do not act under mere impulse, blind wilfulness, or ignorant folly. Here is the point, brethren: what we need is to come to an understanding with God, and to keep in that condition. The horse does not understand his driver's wishes, except as he intimates them through the bit and bridle. "Be ye not unwise, but understanding what the will of the Lord is."

Be Sensitive to the Spirit.

So dwell in God that he shall dwell in you, and his indwelling shall cause you to feel at once what it is that he would have you to do. May your will be so in accord with the Lord's will that you will only what he wills! This is the highest form of understanding that I know of; may we never rest till we have it.

But the Psalmist also adds, concerning the horse and the mule, that having no understanding, they are creatures with much self-will and waywardness. "Their mouth must be held in with bit and bridle, lest they come near unto thee." If you look at the Revised Version, you will find it is "else they will not come near unto thee;" and Calvin has it, "lest they kick at thee." This is a very obscure passage as to the words, but it is not at all doubtful as to its sense; for the point is that the animal will not do what it should do, but it will obstinately do what it ought not to do, until it gets the bit in its mouth to compel it to do its master's will. So it is with ourselves; but so it should not be. At one time we find men rashly rushing near to God; they have no reverence, no holy trembling and awe. Some appear to be as familiar with God as if he were one of themselves. Thus the Lord complains in the psalm: "Thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself." Such vain people need a bit, lest they come near to God. Others will not come near to God at all, and need a bit because they run off from the Lord into infidelity, blasphemy, or open vice. These endeavor to carry out their own wild wills, throwing up their heels as they please, and prancing over hill and plain with a defiant contempt of rule and order. We know that kind of people: let us not in any measure grow like them. Surely, I need not further urge you to avoid this unlovely character. None would wish to be as the horse, or as the mule.

III. I will now dwell for a few minutes upon Art Infection to be escaped. If you mean to be like the horse or the mule, you may readily be so, but you will have to pay the penalty. If the Lord means to save you, he will use a bit and a bridle upon you, if you render them necessary by your wilfulness. If you will be guided by his eye, there will be no need for such stern work: but if you are stubborn, he will not spare you.

I may say of this bit and bridle, that such trappings are a curb upon freedom. A man would not endure to go about wearing a bit and a bridle; yet many a child of God is in that condition spiritually, because he is not subdued to the will of the Lord. Because he is not tender of conscience, because he is frequently disobedient, because he does not carry out his Lord's will, he has to suffer severe discipline, and labor under serious disadvantage. If the man were willingly obedient to the divine will, things would go more happily with him.

"Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule," or you shall have your mouth held in with bit and bridle. That is a very unpleasant matter. It is

Not Comfortable Even to a Mule

to wear bit and bridle; and it must be very unpleasant to a man. I have known brethren whom God could not use in the conversion of many souls, for they could not bear prosperity. The Lord did bless the preacher once, and he grew so great in his own esteem that he was not bearable to those around him. For the man's own sake the good Lord saw that it was not safe to let him be useful. Here is a man who formerly succeeded in business; but he grew so worldly, so purse-proud, so forgetful of God, that it was necessary to take his wealth away from him; and it has been done—and now he is devout and lowly. Another man, when he is in health and strength, is so full of levity and carelessness that he plays the fool; and in order to keep him right it is necessary to let him have a sluggish liver, or an aching head, or, sick home, or something else, which may sober him. I know a person who is always grumbling; and I do not wonder that he always seems to have cause for it. It is like the child that I heard crying, and its mother said to it, "Hold your tongue! If you cry for nothing, I will soon give you something to cry for." Many a child of God has found something to cry for as the result of wanton murmuring. Well,

If You Make Rods

for your backs, God will use them upon you. It is his custom not to let anything lie idle in his house; so, if you are busy making a rod, he will be busy in putting it to its proper use.

But all this is unnatural to the child of God. Do not drive your Saviour to be stern with you. Do not choose the way of hardness—the brutish way, the mulish way. "Be ye not as the horse, or as the mule," which have no understanding," for then you will become sad, gloomy, dull, stupid, and full of disquietude. It is essential that your iniquities should be subdued, and they shall be. He will save you—save you from rebellion, save you from self-seeking and self-will. He will bend you to his holy will; and if it cannot come to pass anyhow else, then the bit and the bridle shall conquer you. Oh, souls, submit yourselves unto God. Vex not his Holy Spirit by hardness of heart.

IV. Now I close by noticing a

Freedom to be Attained.

There are children of God who wear no bit or bridle: the Lord has loosed their bonds. To them obedience is delight; they keep his commands with their whole heart. The Son has made them free, and they are free indeed. They are free: first, because they are in touch with God. God's will is their will. They answer to the Lord as the echo to the voice. Happy is he who can say, "Whatever thou desirest, O my Lord, I would desire it because thou desirest it." Then is it safe for the Lord to leave the man free from compulsion.

You shall be free, next, because you are tutored. The Lord cannot trust our wild nature: he gives freedom where he gives his Spirit: "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." How does our Lord put it?—"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls." He gives rest through his blood; he makes you find rest through learning of him, and bearing his yoke. The law was not made for a righteous man. I hope we shall not need church discipline, or because we have been trained to joyful, watchful, exact obedience. Oh, that it were so! Teach me, O Lord! Teach me thy way.

Providential Discipline,

All this will lead to high joy. See how the psalm ends, "Shout for joy, all ye that are upright in heart"! When the bit is taken from the mouth, the tongue will show forth the praises of the Lord. When the bridle is gone, the mouth is free to sing unto the Most High. If the heart be well adjusted there will be music in the life. When we follow the Lord's guidance with alacrity, peace shall be our companion, and joy shall hover over us like a guardian angel. This world will be the vestibule of heaven when we begin even now to rehearse that perfect obedience which is the essential condition of bliss. Beloved, all this the Holy Ghost must work in our hearts, or it will never be there. Cry to him for it in the name of Jesus, and he will give you an answer of peace.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

Isaac's Marriage.*

DO not know what were really the ceremonies of a Hebrew wedding at this early date. But the following description by one intimately acquainted with the East may be accepted as probably giving no very untrue account: Rebekah would be led to the tent by her nurse and her maids who had come with her; but one by one these would leave her, till she was all alone with her nurse, wondering whether she would please Isaac when he came. After a time the nurse would throw a shawl over her head, and a signal having been given, the curtain would be pushed aside for a moment, and the bridegroom would enter and the nurse withdraw. Now came the moment for removing the veil or shawl which hid the bride's face. If he had been a modern Oriental, Isaac would have said, "In the name of God, the compassionate, the merciful," and then raising the veil, would greet his wife with the words, "Blessed be this day," to which her answer would be, "God bless thee." This would be the first time he beheld his wife's face. If it pleased him he would announce the fact to the anxious women outside, who forthwith set up a shrill cry of delight. To the Semitic races this shout of the triumphant and satisfied bridegroom is one of the most delightful sounds that can be uttered, and has been so for immemorial ages; and it is to this that our Saviour alludes when he says, "He that hath the bride is the bridegroom; but the friend of the bridegroom who standeth and heareth him, rejoiceth greatly because of the bridegroom's voice."

The Descent Into Egypt.

To descend into Egypt, with the whole of his belongings, to place himself and his tribe under the protection of Pharaoh, was for Jacob to give up the freedom and independence which had been enjoyed now for above two centuries, and to become a mere dependent on an absolute and powerful monarch, whose will would be law to himself, his children and their descendants. It was not now as in Abraham's time. Then the patriarch and his wife, with no children, and only a moderate band of followers, could seek a temporary shelter, and look to returning into Canaan when a few years were past. But now, when the males of Abraham's stock were over seventy in number, and the households probably not less than thirty or forty, and the retainers perhaps some thousands, the movement was a veritable migration, a fresh settlement, a removal into a new and strange land for an indefinite period. No doubt there were constraining causes which left little room for choice. The desire to see Joseph was intense, and could not otherwise be gratified, for the Pharaoh was not likely to give his minister leave of absence from the court. The famine was still sore in the land and would continue according to God's word to Joseph for another five years. Starvation stared Jacob in the face if he elected to remain at Hebron, while in Egypt were ease, plenty, and good things in abundance. . . . Still Jacob, even when he started on his journey, would seem to have been doubtful as to his proper course, or even, as has been said, engaged in eager debate as to the path of duty. Abraham when in Egypt had been brought into great danger; Isaac had been forbidden to go thither. Moreover, Egypt was not only a heathen land, but one in which idolatry had been long practised and had assumed gross forms of a revolting character. Jacob therefore might naturally fear to find in it dangers both worldly and spiritual.

The Pharaoh of Joseph's Time.

It was into an Egypt of the reaction period, but still one that possessed peculiar features, that Jacob was about to be introduced. Chronological considerations alone would place the ministry of Joseph toward the close of the Hyskos period. Tradition connects him in an especial way with Apepi, the last king of the great Hyskos dynasty which began with Salatis or Saites. Apepi stands out from the Egyptian kings of the period as a monarch of a distinct individuality, and with a marked character. He built a great temple to Set or Sutekh at Tanis, his principal capital, composed of blocks of red granite, and adorned it with obelisks and sphinxes. The obelisks are said to have been fourteen in number, and must have been disposed about the courts, instead of being placed in the ordinary way in pairs before the entrances. The sphinxes, which differed from the ordinary Egyptian sphinx, in having a mane like a lion and also wings, seem to have formed an avenue or vista leading up to the temple from the town. They were in diorite, and are still to be seen at San, with the name of Apepi still engraved upon them.

But it was in the religious changes which he introduced, that Apepi's individuality appears most strikingly. The other Hyskos monarchs had apparently, after their first outburst of fanaticism, adopted the old Egyptian religion in its entirety, encouraged polytheism, and distributed their favors impartially among the various members of the Egyptian Pantheon. Apepi became a monotheist. Singling out from among the multitudinous gods of Egypt one special * From Isaac and Jacob: their Lives and Times, by George Rawlinson, M.A., F.R.G.S. This is another volume of the series, now so popular, entitled, Men of the Bible. It is an effort, and a very successful one, to present the single character in its own appropriate setting in its own light. Pp. 186; price $1.00. Published by Messrs. Anson, D. F. Randolph & Co., 38 West 23d St., N.Y.

MEMENTOES OF JOHN WESLEY.

1. The First Conference Seal—2. John Wesley's Bible and its Case—3. Wesley's Tomb—4. The Room in which John Wesley Died.

personage—the divinity Set or Sutekh—he made him the sole object of his worship, refusing to serve any other god in the whole land. He even became an apostle of monotheism, imposing the worship of a single god on the tributary monarch of Southern Egypt, who held his capital at Thebes. Whether he carried out his religious ideas to the extent of requiring conformity to them on the part of his Egyptian subjects generally, is uncertain—perhaps he scarcely ventured so far; but in Tanis and Avaris the unity of God seems to have been proclaimed. In each of these cities the king built a single great temple, “of goodly and enduring workmanship,” where, on festival days, sacrifice was offered to Sutekh, with those rites which elsewhere in Egypt were regarded as appropriate to the divinity known as Ra-Harmachis, the rising sun. We may therefore regard it as most probable that Apepi identified his sole deity with the bright orb of day, the great source of light and life to the universe.

MARTYRDOM IN MADAGASCAR.

(See Illustration on page 165.)

THE intelligence of the frightful massacre in Madagascar, mentioned in this journal last week, is an evidence of the urgent need in that land of the humanizing influence of the Gospel. The motive for the slaughter in this instance does not appear from the brief cable-dispatch reporting the atrocities to have been that intolerance of religion, which in former years lead to similar crimes, but to have been simply the barbarous vengeance of a savage invested with authority. He was incensed by the act of the people in sending a petition to the General Government protesting against his oppression. The horrible details, however, recall most painfully previous massacres in Madagascar, in which religious persecution was the chief motive. Then, as now, the official acts were characterized by cruelty and barbarity peculiarly revolting.

It was during the decade 1840 to 1850 that this persecution culminated. The victims then were not political malcontents, but men and women guiltless of any offence but that of making profession of Christianity. They were of both sexes and all ages. In one instance a husband and wife and their newborn babe were burned at the same stake. Mr. Ellis, a missionary in Madagascar at that time, witnessed other appalling massacres of which the scene depicted in the illustration was one. All the native Christians were required by the queen to present themselves to the duly constituted authorities in their districts before a certain day, and abjure their faith. Any suspected person failing to comply was specially summoned, and was condemned to death. The method of execution originally was burning, but as the number of the condemned increased, a more speedy method was adopted. The ankles and wrists of the victim were tied together, and he or she, slung on a pole, was carried to the top of a precipice and ignominiously flung over on the jagged rocks below.

Mrs. Susannah Wesley.

The heroism of the martyrs was wonderful. Each was briefly asked, on reaching the edge of the precipice, to take the oath of allegiance to the ancient faith of idolatry, and informed that the penalty of refusal was instant death. Their lives were offered them if they would renounce Christ. The alternative was appalling, yet the converts bravely declared for Jesus, and one after another they were cast over the fatal precipice. On one occasion, a young girl of rare beauty was among the crowd. She was kept back until last, in the hope that the spectacle of the execution of her friends might intimidate her. Standing alone on the rock where an hour before she had been surrounded by a multitude of friends, she was again urged to abjure her faith. She refused, and calmly bade the executioners proceed. “She is an idiot!” exclaimed the officer in command. “She does not know what she says. Take her away.” She was remanded to prison, and ultimately, on the death of the persecuting queen, she was set free. Verily, as the Psalmist has said, “The dark places of the earth are full of the habitations of cruelty.” (Ps. 74: 20.) We can but pray that God will so reveal himself in that land, that it may be delivered from the oppression of wicked rulers, and its people may become disciples of the Prince of Peace.

THE WESLEY CENTENARY.

ALL Christian readers, whatever their denomination, will be interested in the picture here given of John Wesley's mother, and of the personal memorials and relics of the great divine. The Bible and the first Conference seal have been exhibited in the museum attached to the Allan Library in London, and during the celebration of the centenary have been examined by throngs of reverent visitors. With these are given a picture of John Wesley's tomb, and of the room in which he died. As one looks at it, the scene which makes it famous is recalled. The veteran servant of Christ, conscious that his end was near, singing and praising God, uttering frequently the cheering assurance, “The best of all is, God is with us,” which in the days of his strength had been often on his lips. When the last moment was evidently come, he exclaimed, “Farewell!” and then, as Joseph Bradford, his faithful friend and travelling companion, was saying, “Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lifted up ye everlasting doors, and this heir of glory shall come in!” Wesley became unconscious of the presence of his brethren, and, without a groan or a sigh, passed away.

Susannah Wesley, whose portrait we give, was born in 1669. She was the youngest daughter of the learned Non-conformist preacher, Rev. Samuel Annesley, LL.D. Not much is known of this worthy man, but there is Scriptural ground for the presumption that he was a happy man, for he had the special claim of having a family of twenty-five children to the benediction of the Psalmist, who, comparing children to arrows, said: "Happy is the man who has his quiver full of them." (Ps. 127:5.) His daughter, Susannah, who became the wife of the Epworth rector and the mother of the Wesleys, appears to have been a most devoted mother. She died July 23, 1742, when her famous son was in his fortieth year. He thus describes her death in his diary: "About three in the afternoon, I went to my mother, and found her change was near. I sat down on the bedside. She was in her last conflict; unable to speak, but I believe quite sensible. Her look was calm and serene, and her eyes fixed upward, while we commended her soul to God. From three to four the silver cord was loosing, and the wheel breaking at the cistern; and then, without any struggle, or sigh, or groan, the soul was set at liberty. We stood round the bed, and fulfilled her last request uttered a little while before she lost her speech: 'Children, as soon as I am released, sing a psalm of praise to God.' She was buried on Sunday, August 1, the service being conducted by John Wesley, who afterwards preached the funeral sermon, his text being Rev. 20: 11, 12.

THE WESLEY MEMORIAL CHURCH.

TWO kinds of memorials to the founders of Methodism are depicted in the accompanying illustration. One is the medallion tablet to the memory of the two brothers, which has been placed in Westminster Abbey, and the other the beautiful church-building erected recently at their birthplace in Epworth, England.

Not many years ago the idea of erecting a monument to the Wesleys in Westminster Abbey would have been regarded by churchmen as almost a sacrilege, but the Church like the world, has become more liberal in our day. Under the wise and kindly rule of the late Dean Stanley no objection at all was made to the admission of the memorial. The President of the Wesleyan Conference waited on the Dean and in courteous terms asked if a monument to Charles Wesley, "the sweet psalmist of English Israel," might have a place in the venerable pile where the memory of so many eminent authors was enshrined. "And why not John, too?" asked the Dean. There was no reason against John Wesley if the Dean saw none, so the medallion on which the features of both the brothers appear was placed in position. It is near the monument of Isaac Watts, in the South Aisle by Poets' Corner.

The Memorial Church which has been dedicated to the worship of God in the town in which John and Charles Wesley first saw the light, is the most suitable memorial that could have been raised to the two gifted men. It is of a chaste and beautiful design, and is substantially built. When the project was first mooted, contributions flowed in freely from English and American Methodists, and within a year the church was built and dedicated. One of its treasured mementoes is an old table of solid oak, which stands inside the communion rail.

The New Wesley Memorial Church at Epworth, England.

It is the table which served as a communion-table in the old church at Epworth, from which the rector, the father of John and Charles, used to administer the Lord's Supper two hundred years ago.

ROMA.

A NEW SERIAL STORY,
Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c.

(Continued from page 158)

A Roman Festa.

WHEN Margaret reached her hotel, she went directly to her room, and even Camilla was shut out for a few hours. Then she went out for a walk in the open air before meeting the others at table. She was gone some time, and came in with an apology for keeping them waiting. She had met in the reception-room little Mrs. Barcolo, the English lady who was in the compartment with them from Turin to Genoa. She had come to tell them that her husband, an Italian, and a railroad man, had telegraphed her that his headquarters would have to be in Genoa for a few months. Mrs. Barcolo insisted that she could not stay in Rome with Luigi away up there in Genoa. It would make her a lot of trouble to get a release from her padrone; and, as they had said they were going to take furnished apartments, she hoped they would take hers off her hands.

"It is down in the old part of the city," said Margaret. "What do you say, girls? Would you like to live down there where the streets are all in a tangle? It is close by the Pantheon."

"We lived in that quarter once," said Camilla.

"I dare say the apartment is well furnished," remarked Carolyn. "We had better take it at once."

"It will be a capital place for study," said Margaret. "You can hardly stir without stumbling over something a few thousand years old."

"Mrs. Barcolo is an impulsive, little woman," said Camilla. "We must not give her time to change her mind."

It was decided that they should go in a body to look at the apartment, immediately after luncheon. So they set forth as soon as they rose from the table.

At the hotel door a porter called one of those ubiquitous, one-horse cabs, that one finds so convenient in Rome. A shabby driver on the box, dozing under a green umbrella, a calash to raise at need against sun or rain, and room for five persons.

"They have fine horses in this city," said Margaret, as they stepped into the vehicle.

"But zey are not harnessed to ze cabs, any more zan zey are in Paris," laughed Marie.

"They wouldn't stay fine long if they were," remarked the American girl. "With just the little peep I've had, I've seen one of these poor beasts under the lash dragging six grown people up and down these seven hills."

"The fare is very light," said Camilla, looking at the tariff. "Only half a franc for the course."

"The poor fellow can't afford that," and Margaret took a franc from her porte-monnaie. "Five pence, as you would say, Lyn; about ten cents of our money to take us four to the Via dei Crescenzi."

"I shall be obliged to protest, cousin. You Americans fling your money at such a tremendous rate, you ruin everybody on this side. You must remember it costs less to live here than in your county."

"Figures will show you, dear," was the reply, "that the average Italian has only half as much to live on as the average American, in actual food; and I don't want to be a party to his starvation."

"Between the soldiers and the priests," said Camilla, "two expensive armies, there isn't much left for the common people. You have no need for either in your good country."

"God grant we never may have," prayed the American.

On the Via dei Crescenzi, the cabman stopped before the gate of a square, open court. It was stone-paved, with a little fountain in the centre, while on the narrow ledges of the upper stories tropical plants were in full, fresh leaf. A convent tower with its bell dominated one corner, and altogether the place had a charmingly quaint, mediæval look.

"This cranky, whimsical, old building has plenty of knuckles and elbows," said Margaret, looking up at the walls about the court as fantastic in form as stone could easily be made to appear; "and balconies—as Dickens says, it seems to have rained balconies, snowed balconies, blown balconies, and hailed balconies."

Their "apartments," up two flights of stone steps proved to be even better than Mrs. Barcolo had represented.

"Quite like our old palazzo," said Camilla.

"The carpets are bright enough, and the furniture good," remarked Carolyn, dutifully elevating her brows: "but such fire-places! Why can they not have andirons, at least. We would be sure to have grates at home, for proper comfort."

"They are several degrees nearer the equator than your land or mine," said Margaret. "Though I must confess I would like a good steam radiator, or even an old-fashioned base-burner, these chilly mornings. Nevertheless, when we are in Rome we must do as Romans do. If they choose to freeze, we must freeze, also."

"The Italians would perish in the hot air of your American houses," said Camilla.

"So would we," chimed in the English girl, in hearty horror inspired by the thermometer reports of her travelled countrymen.

When the young ladies returned to Mrs. Barcolo's drawing-room, they asked how soon they could take possession. "This evening, if you like," replied the brisk little woman. She ran on at a rapid rate with the details of her loneliness, and how she could dispose of her affairs, and where they could get their dinners sent from, and what they could order, and she dared say the maids could manage the rest of it, etc., etc.

By this opportune arrangement our little party found itself ensconced in its own hired house, and sitting at its own dinner-table, Margaret at the head, and Camilla at the foot, by six o'clock that very evening.

"Aren't we favored, friends?" exclaimed Margaret, "to think of getting settled so soon? We're going to get on nicely, too. Of course it will be a deadly penance for poor Boggins to adjust herself to the new order of things; but when once she gets adjusted she'll grumble all the rest of her days because she can't take these comfortable ways home to England. Ann 'made bold' as she says, to tell me that it was a splendid time she was after having, if only 'we'd been a lavin' that darlint, old Boggins behind, before.'" A laugh at the imitation of the maid's brogue rippled over the gentle jingle of silver and china.

The ninety-first Psalm was their lesson for family-prayer that evening. As Margaret read, the others asked questions. They had known from the first of her coming to them that her faith was as direct and simple as that of the Hebrews in their best days, seeing God in everything; yet they marvelled at the richness and fullness of her spiritual joy, as it shone out in the unrestrained talk.

"I have had my full share of sorrow," she said in reply to one of Carolyn's searching queries; "Yet my soul is perfectly at rest on the bosom of God's sweet will: for his will is his love. The personal, ever-present Christ is all the world to me: so you see I am really the happiest woman in Europe."

"The king's birthday," said Carolyn the next morning at breakfast. She had been wrestling most persistently with the day's doings in La Tribuna, parsing every word to insure accuracy. "As nearly as I can make out there is to be a military review in the forenoon, and the laying of the corner-stone of the Palace of Grace and Justice, whatever that can be, in the afternoon, with something about the schools in between at the Campodoglio. This extr'ord'n'ry language is really very, very puzzling."

They all wanted to see the review, so they set out early for the Prætorian Camp where it was to be held. Before Margaret and Camilla left their room, however, the Italian girl asked her friend a question that drew from her a description of the personal appearance of the young officer for whose name they searched the list on the Dogali column. "He was tall, erect, always soldierly in bearing. His features were strong, but fine: the nose as large as the Roman, but straight, a wide, full forehead, I cannot describe his eyes. They were as clear and deep as the sky. This photo was taken six years ago. I like its boyish look. It takes me back to our school days."

Cabs were not allowed near the field of the review, but by a detour Camilla led the party around the crowds of people, to where they could stand within the gates, and see the parade to advantage.

There was loud cheering when the king and his staff rode in; and he held his hand to his visor in answering salute. Then came the cavalry at full gallop. Just after the artillery had passed the place where our young ladies were standing, the horse of one of its officers became unmanageable, and tore down the line, rearing, plunging, and doing his best to unseat his rider.

At that moment Margaret was bent on making place for a small boy whom a man had crowded back. The officer was at some distance before she raised her head. His form was above medium, muscular, and with a touch of the imperial in its bearing, noticeable even with his horse bounding and whirling along almost beyond control. Camilla was watching him through her glass; and not a movement escaped her gaze. All eyes were upon him when Margaret raised her head, and looked after him, her face grew as livid as death.

"Why, in heaven's name, doesn't he take both hands to that bit?" exclaimed a gentleman. "No man living could manage such a powerful animal as that with one hand; yet he has hardly touched the rein with his left. He's bringing the furious brute down, though." "Dogali!" shouted a man in the ranks. "Wounded at Dogali!" The magic words were caught up by the marching men, till "Hurrah, for the of hero Dogali!" rang along the line, cheer on cheer. The officer, still holding the bridle firmly in his right hand, was bending to pat his horse's arched neck with the left. When he noticed that they were cheering him, he raised his hat, and bowed, acknowledging the compliment. His face was heavily bearded, but when Camilla saw his forehead and eyes, the glass fell from her hand. She recognized Jerome Good-year from the photograph that Margaret had shown her that morning. She did not pick up the glass. Without it Margaret could not see his features at that distance:—and suppose—a thousand things flashed through the mind of the Italian girl. It might be infinitely better to believe him dead.

"Haven't we seen enough of this?" asked Margaret. "War is horrid. The sun is fearfully warm here."

"Don't you know, cousin," said Carolyn, "this is the very spot where the old Prætorian Guard used to be in camp? You do not seem to take it in. A gentleman at the hotel—a clergyman—told me that when Paul was here, he was sure to have lived near this spot."

"Zen he looked up at zis same sky!" exclaimed Marie. "At zese varee hills—ze great Saint Paul!"

They moved toward the gate; but Camilla, a little behind the rest, caught again that dread, but fascinating word "Dogali;" and she stopped to listen. A gentleman of distinguished appearance, he might have been a senator, was talking rapidly with an accompaniment of gesture that brought head, shoulders, hands and fingers into play. He was saying, "Yes, I was at the Quirinal, when the little handful who escaped the Abyssinian slaughter were presented. The king and queen received them most graciously. I saw that very artillery officer who had the struggle with the horse. One could not soon forget a man like that. It seems that he had been wounded in the side; but kept his place at the head of his men, holding the blood back with his left hand, and fighting with the right, till a sabre-cut disabled his left wrist. Then he fell from his horse, and became unconscious from loss of blood; and so he escaped the mutilation that those suffered whom the Abyssinians found alive. He has been promoted to a Major's rank in the artillery for his bravery. He has a splendid mathematical education, they say. He'll render good service, even if he is never able to take the field again. A foreigner—English, I think."

"A superb fellow," remarked the listener, with a glow. "He'll be heard from yet."

"Si, si, si. That he will. While he was talking with the queen that time, he grew very white; for he had not recovered from his wounds. She requested him to be seated; but he declined to sit in the presence of his sovereign. With one of her own gracious bows,—you know how gracefully she can do a thing like that—she said, 'Your queen insists upon her privilege of giving place to the honors of Dogali.'"

"Our beautiful queen!" exclaimed the other gentleman enthusiastically. Margaret did not go out again that day. In the military and civic display of the cornerstone-laying there were flowers and banners; and under a crimson and gold pavilion the king and queen laid the stone, and Zanardilli, the Minister of Grace and Justice, made the speech. Camilla had eyes and ears only for the soldiers; but she could not catch a glimpse of the Dogali hero.

(To be Continued.)

CONSTIPATION

and other bowel complaints cured and prevented
by the prompt use of

Ayer's Cathartic Pills

They regulate the liver, cleanse the stomach, and greatly assist digestion.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co.
Every Dose Effective.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed
by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

March April May

Are the best months in which to purify your blood. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost, and just now the system craves the aid of a reliable medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling. It increases in popularity every year, for it is the ideal spring medicine.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, 5c; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar.

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.
Dropped on Sugar, Children Love
to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 50c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. L. S. JOHNSON & CO., BOSTON, MASS.

Children

always

Enjoy It.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

of pure Cod Liver Oil with Hypo-phosphites of Lime and Soda is almost as palatable as milk.

Children enjoy it rather than otherwise. A MARVELLOUS FLESH PRODUCER it is indeed, and the little lads and lassies who take cold easily, may be fortified against a cough that might prove serious, by taking Scott's Emulsion after their meals during the winter season.

Beware of substitutions and imitations.

"Send you to the sea, and you wouldn't get salt water." You don't know what to use for scouring? Why use

SAPOLIO.

It is a solid cake of Scouring Soap. Try it.

400 RECITATIONS

AND READINGS. We will send to any address on receipt of 35 cents, a handsome book, bound in paper cover, and containing 400 of the best recitations ever issued. Address,
J. S. OGILVIE, 57 Rose Street, New York.

BICYCLES FREE—To Boys and Girls—
We have a plan by which a good Boy or Girl in every neighborhood can procure a "Little Giant Safety" free if willing to do a little work for us, send stamp for full particulars address, FOWLER & WELLS Co., Pub'rs, 777 Broadway, New York.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to any address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK.

American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. Louis.

A YOUNG GIRL'S DYING FAITH.

A YOUNG lady, whose parents were wealthy, and moved in fashionable society, was lying on a bed of sickness, and feeling that the end was very nigh, said to her father: "Father, I am going to die. Where am I going?" The father could give no reply. "Mother, dear, can you tell me what to do to get to heaven?" No reply. "I am lost," she exclaimed. "Am I not, father?" Is there anyone who can tell me what I must do to be saved?"

The servant-girl, who knew the Saviour, told her mistress of the minister who preached forgiveness through the finished work of Christ. "Oh, that I could see him," exclaimed the dying girl. He was sent for and came; when she appealed to him, "Can you tell me what I must do to obtain rest to my soul, and die in peace with my God?" He replied, "I cannot." She cried, "Alas! and is it so? Is there no help for me?" "Stay," said he, "though I cannot tell you what you can do to be saved, I can tell you what has been done for you. Jesus Christ, the Saviour, has completely finished a work by which lost and helpless sinners may be saved. The Saviour left the throne of his glory, bled and died that the sinner might live. 'He bore our sins in his own body on the tree.' As our sin-bearer and substitute he endured the punishment we deserved in order that God might be able to pardon sinners. You have nothing to do; Christ has done it. Believe and trust in him."

The dying girl exclaimed: "And have I really nothing to do? nothing to pay? nothing to give? nothing to do to recommend me to God?" The minister replied, "Nothing. Your salvation from hell does not come from any work done in you or by you, but through a work done for you on the Cross 1800 years ago; Christ has done it all; your part is to believe that Christ has already redeemed you by his own blood. God commands you to believe that Christ died for our sins, and he says that whosoever believeth this shall not perish, but have everlasting life."

The dying girl listened with breathless attention, and saw that on the Cross Christ had taken upon himself her sins, and God had sacrificed his own Son in order that he might deliver her soul from hell. She believed this, and that moment felt at peace. The next day, with eyes beaming with joy, she bade friends farewell and fell asleep in Jesus.

IRREVERENT LANGUAGE IN PRAYER.

OF Gerald Massey, the poet, an anecdote is here told for the first time. It is a characteristic of the man, who perhaps ought not to be accused of irreverence because he expressed himself with too much strength, in condemnation of the unseemly familiarity with which the Deity is sometimes addressed even by men who ought to know better. Mr. Massey, who was on a lecturing tour, happened to be the guest of a gentleman residing in a certain town in the north of England on a Sunday when a preacher of local eminence was announced to conduct service in the principal dissenting place of worship there. "Would you like to hear Wm. —, Massey?" inquired the poet's entertainer, "Indeed I would," responded Massey. Accordingly the two gentlemen were numbered among the large congregation assembled to hear the orator. "Well, how did you like Mr. —?" questioned Massey's friend on the way home. "I enjoyed the sermon greatly," was the reply; "but I was tempted to think during the opening prayer, that if I were the Supreme Being I would not permit a man to speak to me with the gross familiarity which characterized it." The anecdote reminds that John Wesley is said to have severely criticized his brother Charles' description, in one of his hymns, of the "dear disfigured face" of the Saviour of the world.

AN ODD PRAYER FOR THE MINISTER.

THE writer recalls with amusement a good story which a ministerial friend enjoys telling on himself. He (the clerical man) is one of a third generation of Methodist preachers of the same family, and has inherited the ready fluency and religious earnestness of the stock, but these are associated in his case with the disposition to sincere study which, we are told on high authority, is "weariness to the flesh." His old-fashioned friends are proud of the "smart" young dominie, but his physical condition is apt to alarm their loving fears. One Sunday evening after he had preached and was very tired and worn in consequence of the effort he had made, he called a prayer-meeting, which the warm-hearted, brothers and sisters carried along with but little or no labor on his part. One good brother on whose cordial interest he could always count, offered an earnest prayer which comprised in the catholic scope of its petition the following: "O Lord! bless our beloved minister, strengthen his poor, weak body, and his feeble mind." The dear brother meant well, but for some reason or other, the subject of this eloquent intercession manifests the preference to tell the story of it himself.

THE RAILWAY AT JERUSALEM.

MR. DAVID BARON, in a letter gives the following account of the progress of the railway between Jerusalem and Jaffa:

"The road is prepared for laying the line nearly half way to Jerusalem. Did you know that the line is to run by Hebron and Bethlehem? Nearly opposite to this (German) colony where we stay, stand the three engines called respectively 'Jaffa,' 'Ramleh,' and 'Jerusalem.' They were brought from Philadelphia, U. S. A. Had it been in other hands it would have been finished ere this. The engineers are all slow-going and, I am told, not at all up to their work. I am glad that the concession for the line from Haifa to Damascus is in the hands of a progressive Company. They will begin to work at it in a few months. We had already a

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

AGENTS of every kind, Men and Women seeking a business change, $75 to $100 monthly. Should send for our "Copyrighted methods" and double your profits or salary. Big pay for spare hours at home. Particulars free. Address, TREASURY PURCHASING AGENCY, No. 5 COOPER UNION, NEW YORK.

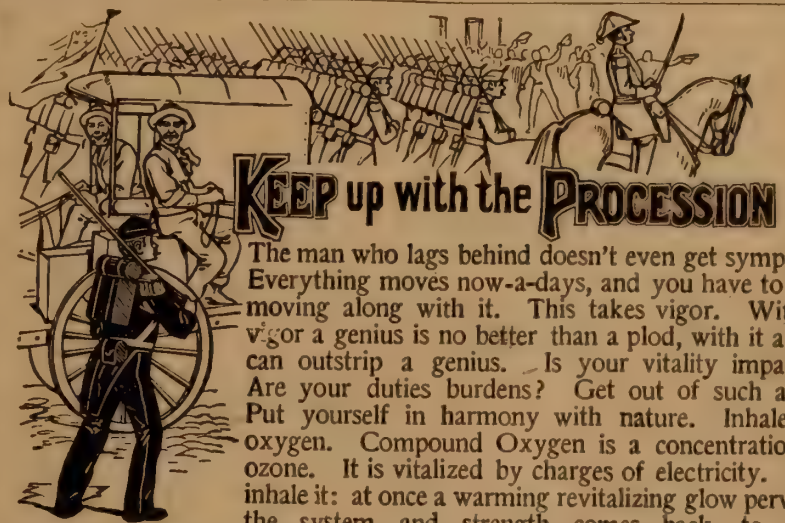

very great amount of rain this season—much more than usual. Last week going to Jerusalem nearly the whole of the plain of Sharon was flooded, in parts resembling a great lake. Oh! that God would pour down showers of spiritual blessings, floods of his Spirit and grace on this desert place! Jaffa has grown very much ever since last March when I was here. Many new houses and shops have been built in various directions and the Jewish community has increased considerably. A new Pasha has been appointed owing to complaints on the parts of the Railway Company against the old one. You will be interested to hear that the Baron here has told me that the new Pasha is much in favor of a harbor to be built at Jaffa, and will use his influence with the Sultan to assist the Railway Company in obtaining a concession.

"Had the railway been constructed according to the original plan it would have been forty-two miles in length, but by way of Hebron it will be sixty-five miles, which besides the extra time required for the journey will add considerably to the expense which, considering the poverty of the people, is a serious consideration. We are glad to see that another line to Damascus is about to be commenced."

Take Pains with your work, unless you take Pearlina to it. Without Pearlina, you may have your labor for pains. In all washing and cleaning it saves work, wear and worry. It is harmless to everything washable; it should be used with everything that is washed. Pearlina is worth more than it costs. Imitations are worthless and are dangerous.

Beware of imitations which are being peddled from door to door. First quality goods do not require such desperate methods to sell them. PEARLINE sells on its merits, and is manufactured only by
JAMES PYLE, New York

KEEP up with the PROCESSION

The man who lags behind doesn't even get sympathy. Everything moves now-a-days, and you have to keep moving along with it. This takes vigor. Without vigor a genius is no better than a plod, with it a plod can outstrip a genius. Is your vitality impaired? Are your duties burdens? Get out of such a rut. Put yourself in harmony with nature. Inhale her oxygen. Compound Oxygen is a concentration of ozone. It is vitalized by charges of electricity. You inhale it: at once a warming revitalizing glow pervades the system, and strength comes back—to stay. That's the beauty of the Compound Oxygen Treatment. The good you get from it doesn't disappear when the treatment is discontinued.

A Book of 200 pages will tell you who have been restored to health and strength by the use of Compound Oxygen. This book is filled with the signed indorsements of many well known men and women, and will be sent entirely free of charge to any one who will address

DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1529 Arch St., Philadelphia, Pa.

120 Sutter St., San Francisco, Cal.

58 Church St., Toronto, Canada.

GOLD MEDAL, PARIS, 1878.

W. BAKER & CO.'S
Breakfast Cocoa

from which the excess of oil has been removed,
Is absolutely pure and it is soluble.

No Chemicals

are used in its preparation. It has more than three times the strength of Cocoa mixed with Starch, Arrowroot or Sugar, and is therefore far more economical, costing less than one cent a cup. It is delicious, nourishing, strengthening, EASILY

DIGESTED, and admirably adapted for invalids as well as for persons in health.

Sold by Grocers everywhere.

W. BAKER & CO., Dorchester, Mass.

BEECHAM'S PILLS act like magic on a weak stomach. FOR A DISORDERED LIVER try BEECHAM'S PILLS.

PERFECT FITTING DRESSES.

DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.

Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.

Patented 1879-1885 1885-1886. No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Machine. Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO. 6 West 14th Street, New York City.

We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention—Editor Our Journals "La Mode de Paris" or "Album des Modes" give the latest styles and practical lessons on Dressmaking each month. Send 35 cents for March number explaining Princess Front without centre opening or darts, most useful garment ever invented.

THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.

If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City

Improved EXCELSIOR INCUBATOR

Will hatch larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other hatcher. Send 6c for Blue Catalogue. GEO. H. STAM, Quincy, Ill.

THE UNFAILING CRUSE.

Is thy cruse of comfort failing?
Rise and share it with another,
And through all the years of famine
It shall serve thee and thy brother.
Love divine will fill thy store house,
Or thy handful still renew;
Scanty fare for one will, often,
Make a royal feast for two.

For the heart grows rich in giving;
All its wealth is living grain:
Seeds which mildew in the garner,
Scattered, fill with gold the plain,
Is thy burden hard and heavy?
Do thy steps drag wearily?
Help to bear thy brother's burden:
God will bear both it and thee.

Numb and weary on the mountain,
Wouldst thou sleep amidst the snow?
Chafe that frozen form beside thee
And together both shall glow,
Art thou stricken in life's battle?
Many wounded round thee moan;
Lavish on their wounds thy balsam,
And that balm shall heal thine own.

Is the heart a well left empty?
None but God its void can fill;
Nothing but a ceaseless fountain
Can its ceaseless longing still.
Is the heart a living power?
Self-entwined, its strength sinks low,
It can only live in loving,
And by serving, love will grow.

—Mrs. Charles.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla is due to the tremendous amount of brain work and constant care used in its preparation. Try one bottle and you will be convinced of its superiority.

USE ONLY

BROWN'S FRENCH DRESSING

FOR Ladies' AND Children's Boots AND Shoes.

Sold everywhere.

Paris Medal on every bottle. Beware of Imitations.

WILBOR'S COMPOUND OF PURE COD LIVER OIL AND PHOSPHATES OF LIME, SODA, IRON.

For the Cure of Consumption, Coughs, Colds, Asthma, Bronchitis, Debility, Wasting Diseases, and Scrofulous Humors.

Invalids need no longer dread to take that great specific for Consumption, Asthma, and threatening Coughs—Cod-Liver Oil and Lime. As prepared by Dr. Wilbor it is robbed of the nauseating taste, and also embodies a preparation of the Phosphates, giving nature the very action required to aid the healing qualities of the Oil, and to re-create where disease has destroyed. It also forms a remarkable tonic, and will cause weak and debilitated persons to become strong and robust. It should be kept in every family for instant use on the first appearance of Coughs or Irritation of the Lungs. Manufactured only by Dr. A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, Mass. Sold by all Druggists.

KINDERGARTEN. A monthly for home and school, science lessons, stories, games, occupations, etc. Invaluable for primary teachers and mothers. $1.50 a year. Sample copy 6 cents. Special lessons for Primary Sunday Schools. Allen G. Stockham & Co., 161 LaSalle St., Chicago.

CLEANSES PRESERVES BEAUTIFIES

RUBIFOAM
FOR THE TEETH

Do You Want a Piano?

Either New, Second-hand, Square or Upright for Cash or easy monthly Payments? If so, send us your name and address and we will promptly mail Catalogue, prices, terms, etc., to any part of the world.

PEEK & SON,

MANUFACTURERS OF

THE "OPERA"

PIANO.

A HIGH-GRADE INSTRUMENT.

The most popular Upright in the market.

212 to 216 West 47th St. and 1567 to 1569 Broadway,
NEW YORK.

(PLEASE MENTION THIS PAPER.)

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES

And make it easy for you to buy of us no matter where you live.

$35 ORGANS
$500

$150
PIANOS
$1500

Yes, my dear, your Marchal & Smith Piano is a delightful one, the tone is so sweet and pure, the action so fairy-like, and the finish so elegant that nothing is left to wish for. Their Organs, too, are as sweet and beautiful as their Pianos.

I wrote and told them just what I wanted, and they sent it to me, agreeing to take it back and pay the freight both ways if I did not like it, but I could not be better pleased if I had a thousand to choose from. They send their catalogue free to every one who wishes to buy.

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.,
235 East 21st Street, New York.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 1/2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.
THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO.,
P. O. Box 289. 31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

MUSIC
SELF TAUGHT

PROF. RICE'S SELF-TEACHING SYSTEM. All can learn music without the aid of a teacher. Rapid, Correct. Established 12 Years. Notes, Chords, Accompaniments, Harmony. Send stamp for Music Journal. Circulars free. Address G. S. RICE MUSIC CO., 243 State St., Chicago.

DOBBIN'S

EDUCATIONAL and SCRIPTURAL CARDS.

Learn the books of the Bible by using Dobbin's Educational and Scriptural Cards. An interesting and instructive game. If your stationer does not keep them, send 30 cents for sample package to M. C. DOBBINS, Plainfield, N. J.

RIDGE'S FOOD

The Most Reliable Food For Infants and Invalids. Not a medicine, but a specially prepared Food, adapted to the weakest stomach. 4 sizes can be had. Pamphlet free. Write to Woolrich & Co. (on every label), Palmer, Mass.

DONALD KENNEDY
of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom takes hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the stomach it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten, inward humor makes the weak spot. Perhaps its only a little sediment left on a nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find quick happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps its a big sediment or open sore, well settled somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you think it pretty hard, but soon you thank me for making something that has reached your weak spot. Price $1.50. Sold by every Druggist in the United States and Canada.

BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills.
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Land Where Jesus Christ Lived.

A TALE FOR THE YOUNG.

By HESTER DOUGLASS. 12mo, cloth, $1.60.

"Worthy of the highest commendation. It is in every way admirable. With great skill in the use of a natural style, the author makes the Holy Land very real to the child-mind."—Sunday School Journal.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

THOS. NELSON & SONS,
33 East 17th Street, New York.

Three Great Books FOR RELIGIOUS READERS.

Dr. Strong's Our Country.

More than 130,000 sold. Paper 25 cts. cloth 50 cts.

One of the most powerful books that have come from the American press during the present century. It portrays America's material, social and religious condition and tendency, and points out the perils which threaten her future. The wide circulation of this book has given an extraordinary impulse to the work of holding America for the highest political, social and religious, national life.

"Words are feeble in the recomr vation of this book."—Pulpit Treasury.

Dr. Pierson's Crises of Missions.

Paper, 35 cents, cloth $1.25

"One of the most important books to the cause of Foreign Missions, and through them, to some Missions also, which ever has been written. It should be in every library and every household. It should be read, studied, taken to heart and prayed over."—Congregationalist.

Dr. Cuyler's How to be a Pastor.

Cloth, 75 cents.

"The fruit of large native sense, long experience, wide observation, and devout consecration."—Congregationalist.

"If any man living understands the subject of this little book it is Dr. Cuyler."—Independent.

"Ought to be read by all pastors, young or old."—N. Y. Tribune.

Send for our list of books for practical Christian Workers.

The above books mailed postpaid on receipt of price by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers.
740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

The Breath of Spring is in the Air.

Time to practice EASTER MUSIC, is it not?

Send for our Fine List of Carols, Anthems, &c., for Easter Alleluias [5 cts., 50 cts. per doz.] Rosabel, or Our Easter Offering [15 cts., $1.44 doz.] a Cantata by Lewis

MUSICAL SOCIETIES

should wind up the season by practicing such Cantatas as Don Munio [$1.50, $13.50 doz.] Wreck of Hesperus [35 cts., $2.40 doz.] 91st Psalm [60 cts., $5.40 doz.] Ballard. [Send for our list of 150 Cantatas.]

FAIRS AND EXHIBITIONS

are made successful by introducing easy Cantatas like Dairy Maid's Supper [20 cts., $1.80 doz.] Lewis or Garden of Singing Flowers [40 cts., $3.60 doz.] or Rainbow Festival [20 cts., $1.80 doz.] Lewis.

BOYS and GIRLS

who sing will be delighted to take part in the brilliant flower cantata, New Flora's Festival [40 cts., $3.60 doz.] New Flower Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.] Kingdom of Mother Goose [25 cts., $2.18 doz.] Gipsy Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.] Send for lists

Much attractive Exhibition Music is found in School Collections.

Children's School Songs [35 cts., $3.60 doz.] Golden Boat [50 cts.] charming action songs by Mrs. L. O. Chant, First Steps in Song Reading [30 cts., $3.00 doz.]

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.

OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston

C. H. DITSON &amp; Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

Sunday School Music.

The Bright Array. The latest book by the favorite authors, ROBERT LOWRY and W. H. DOANE.

Price, $30 per 100 copies. 35 cents each if by mail. Select Songs. By E. N. PELOUBET, D. D. 34 Hymns and Tunes for use where one book is desired for Prayer Meetings and the Sunday School.

Cloth covers, $40 per 100 copies.

Winnowed Songs. By IRA D. SANKEY. 257 New and Selected Sunday School Songs. Just issued.

$35 per 100. 40 cents each by mail.

A complete Catalogue and Specimen Pages sent on request.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

81 Randolph St., Chicago. 76 East 9th St., New York

AGENTS FOR the Life and Times of Gen. WM. T. SHERMAN. By the popular Historian, Hon. J. T. Headley. Illustrated. Outfit, 75 cts.; now ready. Complete copies in ten days. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 12.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

A NATIVE WOMAN OF ANGOLA, IN WESTERN AFRICA, GRINDING CORN. (See Page 181.)

THE PLAGUES OF THE CITIES.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON ON LYING AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, LAST SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 22, 1891.

The Lie in Eden—The First of a Legion—Multiplying through the Centuries—A Natural Infirmity and an Acquired Habit—Agricultural Lies—The Temptations of the Fields—Mercantile Lies—The Misery of the Oppressed Employees—Eight Cents for Making a Garment—Lying at the Counter—The Lies of Mechanics—Broken Promises—Ecclesiastical Falsehood—Social Lying—Society Permeated with Insincerity.

"Ye shall not surely die." Genesis 3; 4.

H A T was a point blank lie. Satan told it to Eve to induce her to put her semi-circle of white, beautiful teeth, into a forbidden apricot, or plum, or peach, or apple. He practically said to her, "Oh, Eve! Just take a bite of this and you will be omnipotent and omniscient. You shall be as gods." Just opposite was the result. It was the first lie that was ever told in our world. It opened the gate for all the falsehoods that have ever alighted on this planet. It introduced a plague that covers all nations, the Plague of Lies. Far worse than the Plagues of Egypt, for they were on the banks of the Nile, but this on the banks of the Hudson, on the banks of the East River, on the banks of the Ohio, and the Mississippi, and the Thames, and the Rhine, and the Tiber, and on both sides of all rivers. The Egyptian Plagues lasted only a few weeks, but for six thousand years has raged this Plague of Lies.

There are a hundred ways of telling a lie. A man's entire life may be a falsehood, while with his lips he may not once directly falsify. There are those who state what is positively untrue, but afterwards say "may be," softly. These departures from the truth are called "white lies;" but there is really no such thing as a white lie. The whitest lie that was ever told was as black as perdition. No inventory of public crimes will be sufficient that omits this gigantic abomination. There are men, high in Church and State, actually useful, self-denying and honest in many things, who, upon certain subjects, and in certain spheres, are not at all to be depended upon for veracity. Indeed, there are many men and women who have their notions of truthfulness so thoroughly perverted, that they do not know when they are lying. With many it is a cultivated sin; with some it seems a natural infirmity. I have known people who seemed to have been born liars. The falsehoods of their lives extended from cradle to grave. Prevarications, misrepresentation, and dishonesty of speech, appeared in their first utterances, and were as natural to them as any of their infantile diseases, and were a sort of moral croup or spiritual scarlatina. But many have been placed in circumstances where this tendency has day by day, and hour by hour, been called to larger development. They have gone from attainment to attainment, and from a class to class, until they have become regularly graduated liars.

The air of the city is filled with falsehoods. They hang pendant from the chandeliers of our finest residences; they crowd the shelves of some of our merchant princes; they fill the side-walk from curbstone to brown-stone facing. They cluster around the mechanic's hammer, and blossom from the end of the merchant's yard-stick, and sit in the doors of churches. Some call them "fiction." Some style them "fabrication." You might say that they were subterfuge, disguise, delusion, romance, evasion, pretence, fable, deception, misrepresentation; but, as I am ignorant of anything to be gained by the hiding of a God-defying outrage under a lexicographer's blanket, I shall chiefly call them what my father taught me to call them—lies.

I shall divide them into agricultural, mercantile, mechanical, ecclesiastical and social lies.

First, then, I will speak of those that are more particularly agricultural. There is something in the perpetual presence of natural objects to make a man pure. The trees never issue "false stock." Wheat fields are always honest. Rye and oats never move out in the night, not paying for the place they have occupied. Corn shocks never make false assignments. Mountain brooks are always "current." The gold on the grain is never counterfeit. The sunrise never flaunts in false colors. The dew sports only genuine diamonds. Taking farmers as a class, I believe they are truthful and fair in dealing, and kind-hearted. But the regions surrounding our cities do not always send this sort of men to our markets. Day by day there creak through our streets, and about the market-houses, farm-wagons that have not an honest spoke in their wheels, or a truthful rivet from tongue to tail-board. During the last few years there have been times when domestic economy has foundered on the farmer's firkin. Neither high taxes, nor the high price of dry-goods, nor the exorbitancy of labor, could excuse much that the city has witnessed in the behavior of the yeomanry. By the quiet firesides in Westchester and Orange Counties, I hope there may be seasons of deep reflection and hearty repentance. Rural districts are accustomed to rail at great cities as given up to fraud and every form of unrighteousness; but our cities do not absorb all the abominations. Our citizens have learned the importance of not always trusting to the size and style of apples in the top of a farmer's barrel, as an indication of what may be found farther down. Many of our people are accustomed to watch and see how correctly a bushel of beets is measured; and there are not many honest milk-cans.

Deceptions do not all cluster round city halls. When our cities sit down and weep over their sins, all the surrounding countries ought to come in and weep with them. There is often hostility on the part of producers against traders, as though the man who raises the corn was necessarily more honorable than the grain dealer, who pours it into his mammoth bin. There ought to be no such hostility. Yet producers often think it no wrong to snatch away from the trader; and they say to the bargain-maker, "You get your money easy." Do they get it easy? Let those who in the quiet field and barn get their living exchange places with those who stand to-day amid the excitements of commercial life, and see if they find it so very easy. While the farmer goes to sleep with the assurance that his corn and barley will be growing all the night, moment by moment adding to his revenue, the merchant tries to go to sleep, conscious that that moment his cargo may be broken on the rocks, or damaged by the wave that sweeps clear across the hurricane deck; or that reckless speculators may, that very hour, be plotting some monetary revolution, or the burglars be prying open his safe, or his debtors fleeing the town, or his landlord raising the rent, or the fires kindling on the block that contains all his estates. Easy! Is it? God help the merchants! It is hard to have the palms of the hands blistered with outdoor work; but a more dreadful process when, through mercantile anxieties, the brain is consumed!

In the next place we notice mercantile lies, those before the counter and behind the counter. I will not attempt to specify the different forms of commercial falsehood. There are merchants who excuse themselves for deviation from truthfulness because of what they call commercial custom. In other words, the multiplication and universality of a sin turns it into a virtue. There have been large fortunes gathered where there was not one drop of unrequited toil in the wine; not one spark of bad temper flashing from the bronze bracket; not one drop of needle-woman's heart-blood in the crimson plush; while there are other great establishments in which there is not one door-knob, not one brick, not one trinket, not one thread of lace, but has upon it the mark of dishonor. What wonder if, some day, a hand of toil that had been wrung, and worn out, and blistered until the skin came off, should be placed against the elegant wall-paper, leaving its mark of blood—four fingers and a thumb; or that, some day, walking the halls, there should be a voice accosting the occupant, saying, "Six cents for making a shirt;" and, flying the room, another voice should say, "Twelve cents for an army blanket;" and the man should try to sleep at night, but ever and anon be aroused, until getting up on one elbow, he should shriek out, "Who's there?"

"EIGHT CENTS! EIGHT CENTS!"

Eight cents! Eight cents! I wish I could get it done; I am so tired! I wish I could get some sleep, but I must get it done! Eight cents! Eight cents! We found afterwards she was making garments for eight cents apiece, and that she could make but three of them in a day! Three times eight are twenty-four! Hear it, men and women who have comfortable homes!

Some of the worst villains of the city are the employers of these women. They beat them down to the last penny, and try to

One Sabbath night, in the vestibule of my church after service, a woman fell in convulsions. The doctor said she needed medicine not so much as something to eat. As she began to revive in her delirium, she said gaspingly: "Eight cents!"

cheat them out of that. The woman must deposit a dollar or two before she gets the garments to work on. When the work is done it is sharply inspected, the most insignificant flaws picked out, and the wages refused, and sometimes the dollar deposited not given back. The Women's Protective Union reports a case where one of these poor souls, finding a place where she could get more wages, resolved to change employers, and went to get her pay for work done. The employer says: "I hear you are going to leave me."—"Yes," she said, "and I am come to get what you owe me." He made no answer. She said, "Are you not going to pay me?"—"Yes," he said, "I will pay you;" and he kicked her down the stairs.

There are thousands of fortunes made in commercial spheres that are throughout righteous. God will let his favor rest upon every scroll, every pictured wall, every traceried window; and the joy that flashes from the lights, and showers from the music, and dances in the children's quick feet, pattering through the hall, will utter the congratulation of men and the approval of God.

A merchant can, to the last item, be thoroughly honest. There is never any need of falsehood. Yet how many will, day by day, hour by hour, utter what they know to be wrong. You say that you are selling at less than cost. If so, then it is right to say it. But did that cost you less than what you ask for it? If not, then you have falsified. You say that that article cost you twenty-five dollars. Did it? If so, then all right. If it did not, then you have falsified. Suppose you are a purchaser. You are "beating down" the goods. You say that that article for which five dollars is charged, is not worth more than four. Is it worth no more than four dollars? Then all right. If it be worth more, and for the sake of getting it for less than its value, you wilfully depreciate it, you have falsified. You may call it a sharp trade. The recording angel writes it down on the ponderous tomes of eternity—"Mr. So and So, merchant on Water Street, or in Eighth Street, or in State Street; or Mrs. So and So, keeping house on Beacon Street, or on Madison Avenue, or Rittenhouse Square, or Brooklyn Heights of Brooklyn Hill, told one falsehood." You may consider it insignificant, because relating to an insignificant purchase. You would despise the man who would falsify in regard to some great matter, in which the city or the whole country was concerned; but this is only a box of buttons, or a row of pins, or a case of needles. Be not deceived. The article purchased may be so small you can put it in your vest pocket, but the sin was bigger than the Pyramids, and the echo of the dishonor will reverberate through all the mountains of eternity.

You throw on your counter some specimens of handkerchiefs. Your customer asks, "Is that all silk? no cotton in it?" You answer "It is all silk." Was it all silk? If so, all right. But was it partly cotton? Then you have falsified. Moreover, you lost by the falsehood. The customer though he may live at Lynn, or Doylestown, or Poughkeepsie, will find out that you have defrauded him, and next spring when he again comes shopping, he will look at your sign and say: "I will not try there. That is the place where I got that handkerchief." So that by that one dishonest bargain you picked your own pocket and insulted the Almighty.

Would you dare to make an estimate of how many falsehoods in trade were yesterday told by hardware men, and clothiers, and fruit-dealers, and dry-goods establishments, and importers, and jewellers, and lumbermen, and coal-merchants, and stationers, and tobacco-conists? Lies about saddles, about buckles, about ribbons, about carpets, about gloves, about coats, about shoes, about hats, about watches, about carriages, about books—about everything. In the name of the Lord Almighty, I arraign commercial falsehoods as one of the greatest plagues in city and town.

"IT'S ALL SILK."

In the next place, I notice mechanical lies. There is no class of men who administer more to the welfare of the city than artisans. To their hand we must look for the building that shelters us, for the garments that clothe us, for the car that carries us. They wield a widespread influence. There is much derision of what is called "Muscular Christianity;" but in the latter day of the world's prosperity, I think that the Christian will be muscular. We have a right to expect of those stalwart men of toil the highest possible integrity. Many of them answer all our expectations, and stand at the front of religious and philanthropic enterprises. But this class, like the others that I have named, has in it those who lack in the element of veracity. They cannot all be trusted. In times when the demand for labor is great, it is impossible to meet the demands of the public, or do work with that promptness and perfection that would at other times be possible. But there are mechanics whose word cannot be trusted at any time. No man has a right to promise more work than he can do. There are mechanics who say that they will come on Monday, but they do not come until Wednesday. You put work in their hands that they tell you shall be completed in ten days, but it is thirty. There have been houses built of which it might be said that every nail driven, every foot of plastering put on, every yard of pipe laid, every shingle hammered, every brick mortared, could tell of falsehood connected therewith. There are men attempting to do ten or fifteen pieces of work who have not the time or strength to do more than five or six pieces; but by promises never fulfilled keep all the undertakings within their own grasp. This is what they call "nursing" the job.

How much wrong to his soul and insult to God a mechanic would save, if he promised only so much as he expected to be able to do. Society has no right to ask of you impossibilities. You cannot always calculate correctly, and you may fail because you cannot get the help that you anticipate. But now I am speaking of the wilful making of promises that you know you cannot keep. Did you say that that shoe should be mended, that coat repaired, those bricks laid, that harness sewed, that door grained, that spout fixed, or that window glazed, by Saturday, knowing that you would neither be able to do it yourself nor get any one else to do it? Then, before God and man you are a liar. You may say that it makes no particular difference, and that if you had told the truth you would have lost the job, and that people expect to be disappointed. But that excuse will not answer. There is a voice of thunder rolling among the drills, and planes, and shoe lasts, and shears, which says: "All liars shall have their part in the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone."

I next notice ecclesiastical lies; that is, falsehoods told for the purpose of advancing churches and sects, or for the purpose of depleting them. There is no use in asking many a Calvinist what an Arminian believes, for he will be apt to tell you that the Arminian believes that a man can convert himself; or to ask the Arminian what the Calvinist believes, for he will tell you that the Calvinist believes that God made some men just to damn them. There is no need of asking a pædo-Baptist what a Baptist believes, for he will be apt to say that the Baptist believes immersion to be positively necessary to salvation. It is almost impossible for one denomination of Christians, without prejudice or misrepresentation, to state the sentiment of an opposing sect. If a man hates Presbyterians, and you ask him what Presbyterians believe, he will tell you that they believe that there are infants in hell a span long!

It is strange also how individual churches will sometimes make misstatements about other individual churches. It is especially so in regard to falsehoods told with reference to prosperous enterprises. As long as a church is feeble, and the singing is discordant, and the minister, through the poverty of the church, must go with a threadbare coat, and here and there a worshipper sits in the end of a pew, having all the seat to himself, religious sympathizers of other churches will say, "What a pity!" But, let a great day of prosperity come, and even ministers of the Gospel, who ought to be rejoiced at the largeness and extent of the work, denounce, and misrepresent and falsify, starting the suspicion in regard to themselves, that the reason they do not like the corn is because it is not ground in their own mill. How long before we shall learn to be fair in our religious criticisms! The keenest jealousies on earth are church jealousies. The field of Christian work is so large that there is no need that our hoe-handles hit.

Next, I speak of social lies. This evil makes much of society insincere. You know not what to believe. When people ask you to come, you do not know whether or not they want you to come. When they send their regards, you do not know whether it is an expression of their heart, or an external civility. We have learned to take almost everything at a discount. Word is sent, "Not at home," when they are only too lazy to dress themselves. They say, "The furnace has just gone out," when in truth they have had no fire in it all winter. They apologize for the unusual barrenness of their table, when they never live any better. They decry their most luxurious entertainments, to win a shower of approval. They apologize for their appearance, as though it were unusual, when always at home they look just so. They would make you believe that some nice sketch on the wall was the work of a master painter. "It was an heirloom, and once hung on the walls of a castle; and a duke gave it to their grandfather." When the fact is, that painting was made by a man "down East," and baked, so as to make it look old, and sold with others for ten dollars a dozen. People who will lie about nothing else will lie about a picture. On a small income we must make the world believe that we are affluent, and our life becomes a cheat, a counterfeit, and a sham.

"NOT AT HOME."

Few persons are really natural. When I say this, I do not mean to slur cultured manners. It is right that we should have more admiration for the sculptured marble than for the unknown block of the quarry. From many circles in life insincerity has driven out vivacity and enthusiasm. A frozen dignity instead floats about the room, and iceberg grinds against iceberg. You must not laugh outright: it is vulgar. You must smile. You must not dash rapidly across the room: you must glide. There is a round of bows, and grins, and flatteries, and oh's! and ah's! and simpering, and nambypambyism—a world of which is not worth one good, round honest peal of laughter. From such a hollow round the tortured guest retires at the close of the evening, and assures his host that he has enjoyed himself!

What a round of insincerities many people run in order to win the favor of the world. Their life is a sham and their death an unspeakable sadness. Alas for the poor butterflies when the frost strikes them!

Compare the life and death of such a one with that of some Christian aunt who was once a blessing to your household. I do not know that she was ever offered the hand in marriage. She lived single, that untrammelled she might be everybody's blessing. Whenever the sick were to be visited, or the poor to be provided with bread, she went with a blessing. She could pray, or sing "Rock of Ages," for any sick pauper who asked her. As she got older, there were days when she was a little sharp, but for the most part auntie was a sunbeam—just the one for Christmas Eve. She knew better than anyone else how to fix things. Her every prayer, as God heard it, was full of everybody who had trouble. The brightest things in all the house dropped from her fingers. She had peculiar notions, but the grandest notion she ever had was to make you happy. She dressed well—auntie always dressed well; but her highest adornment was that of a meek and quiet spirit, which, in the sight of God, is of great price. When she died, you all gathered lovingly about her; and as you carried her out to rest, the Sunday School class almost covered the coffin with japonicas; and the poor people stood at the end of the alley, with their aprons to their eyes, sobbing bitterly; and the man of the world said, with Solomon, "Her price was above rubies;" and Jesus, as unto the maiden in Judea commanded "I say unto thee, arise!"

But to many through insincerity this life is a masquerade ball. As, at such entertainments, gentlemen and ladies appear in the dress of kings or queens, mountain bandits or clowns, and at the close of the dance throw off their disguises, so, in this dissipated life, all unclean passions move in mask. Across the floor they trip merrily. The lights sparkle along the wall, or drop from the ceiling—a cohort of fire! The music charms. The diamonds glitter. The feet bound. Gemmed hands stretched out, clasped gemmed hands. Dancing feet respond to dancing feet. Gleaming brow bends to gleaming brow. On with the dance! Flash and rustle, and laughter, and immeasurable merry-making! But the languor of death comes over the limbs, and blurs the sight. Lights lower! Floor hollow with sepulchral echo. Music saddens into a wail. Lights lower! The maskers can hardly now be seen. Flowers exchange their fragrance for a sickening odor, such as comes from garlands that have lain in vaults of cemeteries. Lights lower! Mists fill the room. Glasses rattle as though shaken by sullen thunder. Sighs seem caught among the curtains. Scarf falls from the shoulder of beauty—a shroud! Lights lower! Over the slippery boards, in dance of death, glide jealousies, disappointments, lust, despair. Torn leaves and withered garlands only half hide the ulcered feet. The stench of smoking lamp-wicks almost quenched. Choking damps. Chilliness. Feet still. Hands folded. Eyes shut. Voices hushed. Lights out!

A STRANGE READING BOOK.

MRS. TURNER, a mission worker in China, writes: "An extra thick chan was laid down, and a big Lama, big both in size and in reputation, came and took his seat upon it. He came from Kong-wo monastery on the other side of the Yellow River. Having heard that foreigners were staying at Mr. Hua Chien's house learning Tibetan, he had expressed a desire to see them, and Mr. Tob Tsang invited us. Mr. Tob Tsang himself was lame, and seemed kind and hospitable. The Lama wished to know if we could read Tibetan. A wooden board wetted and then sprinkled with ashes from the fire, and a pointed stick, served as writing materials, and he wrote sentences for us to read. He could not speak Chinese. They talked Tibetan to us most of the time, putting into Chinese what we did not understand. Mr. Tob Tsang listened attentively to the story of Jesus."

"THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" EVANGELIST.

JAMES H. CANNON, "THE GOSPEL SINGER" AND HIS NOBLE WORK FOR CHRIST.

How a Bold Sinner was Converted and Became the Means of Bringing Hundreds to the Saviour—His Evangelical Work in Many Cities—A Golden Opportunity.

(See Portrait.)

RACE abounding, celebrated by John Bunyan as the power which transformed him and his life, has worked the same miracle on many since his day, and is still the only power we know of which can so operate on the human soul. Let heart-broken parents, grieving over the perversity of sons, fully set on the course that leads to ruin and death, say what other power there is that can save a soul from destruction. Punishment, kindness, entreaty, command,—all influences fail; the young man's own efforts, promises and good resolutions prove futile and all seems lost. Yet, let the grace of God touch the heart and the transformation is made. Saul the persecutor becomes Paul the Apostle; Augustine, the abandoned libertine becomes the saintly writer and preacher, and John Bunyan, the swearing tinker, the heroic prisoner for Christ's sake and the glorious dreamer of beatific visions. That grace is still in operation, achieving similar wondrous changes under our own observation, differing not in kind, however much they may differ in degree. One such instance is that of the evangelist whose portrait we give here, a man who was once a willing servant of Satan, but is now laboring so successfully for the Saviour that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has decided to extend the sphere of his usefulness.

James Henry Cannon was born in Plainfield, N. J., Dec. 27, 1855, of Catholic parents.

His father was a tailor. It cannot be said that pious influences surrounded his childhood, for he was permitted to run pretty much at large with other boys of the neighborhood, and he grew up a wild lad. He was a leader in juvenile mischief, and with other youths frequented the railroad depot a good deal, where he became the most expert of the band in jumping on and off the moving coal trains. One day he miscalculated and fell beneath the wheels, where his right arm was crushed so badly that it had to be amputated. At thirteen he left his home and went to Communipaw, N. J., where he became a newsboy, selling papers at the Stock Yards. Mr. S. H. Smith, the kindly superintendent, saw the boy, and believing that a better nature lay hidden beneath the rough exterior, engaged him as messenger for the Stock Yard Company.

Young Cannon performed his new duties satisfactorily, but otherwise his conduct remained unchanged. He associated with wicked young men, and gave little heed to the well-meant advice of his friends. He had at this time no thought of religion, and was the wickedest and most profane of a circle of boon companions, whose delight it was to mock at sacred things. When he was fifteen years old, a great change came over his life, which is thus described in his own vigorous language:

"There were five of us, and I was the leader in all their deviltries—the champion in their exploits of evil. One Sunday we went to the Methodist Church, on Communipaw Avenue, where revival services were being held. We had made up our minds, outside of the church, to go forward to the altar for fun, and to make a mockery of the holy ordinance; but when the invitation was given, instead of advancing to the altar, the last of our band turned and went out. All the rest of us followed him. Without observing it, I had left my hat in the church and, as it was snowing outside, I was obliged to pluck up courage, return and get it. Presently we got over our hesitation and made up our minds to go forward again the next night—purely out of the love of evil, and with the purpose of disturbing the congregation.

"I will never forget that night—it was the eighth of March, 1870. We all went up to the altar, but instead of mockery, prayers came to our lips. It was the Spirit of God that took hold of us, and as we knelt there, we felt the enormity of our sins and repented deeply. They had a praying band there that night, led by Mr. James Carpenter, who is now with Mr. Crittenden, the founder of the Florence Mission. And how they did pray! Earnest and tearful appeals to the throne for pardon were followed—so my companions assured me—by divine forgiveness. All five of us professed conversion, and the five who had come to scoff at the Lord's altar departed with hearts full of praise for his goodness. We were a wild set of young men before that, myself the worst of the lot. Circumstances separated us afterward, and two of my old companions of these days are now dead. Since that meeting, I have continued to serve the Lord, and I find him the best of Masters. His service is a perpetual delight."

In March, 1870, Mr. Cannon began his public career as an evangelist. Of his old companions, two had backslidden into sin and had met violent deaths. One was instantly killed by the railroad cars at Communipaw and the other was fatally kicked in the head by a horse. The two others were lost sight of. Strangely enough, it was in the same little Methodist Chapel in Communipaw, where he had twice come to scoff at God, that Mr. Cannon first preached. He had studied meanwhile and being naturally a fluent and graceful orator, had greatly improved his abilities. He had secured a license to exhort and he accepted an invitation to occupy the pulpit in the little chapel. He conducted services there for ten years, preaching Sundays and frequently week days as well. Then he became associated with the Wesley Evangelists, a band of young and earnest workers for Christ, organized about fifteen years ago, and he has been their leader ever since.

Mr. Cannon's experiences as an evangelist have taken him to many cities, and everywhere his ministrations have been signally blessed of God. Twice a week, Tuesdays and Fridays, he leads the service at the Florence Mission in New York. At Elizabethport, N. J.; where he conducted a revival, in the Fulton Street Methodist Church, of which Rev. Dr. La Rue was pastor hundreds were brought to the Saviour. The meetings were especially blessed to many of the railroad men there. Many conversions followed his work at White Plains, N. Y., where he assisted the Rev. Geo. H. Gregory; at Rev. S. H. Smith's South Third Methodist Church, Brooklyn; the Emory Church, Jersey City, Rev. Dr. Van Horne, pastor; the Central Methodist Church, Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Partington, pastor the First Place Methodist Church, Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Thompson, pastor, and more lately, S. Luke's M. E. Church, Brooklyn, Rev. Dr. Astor, pastor. He has labored in hundreds of other churches of various denominations in the same earnest and effective way. He is now conducting a most glorious revival at Oyster Bay, Long Island, N. Y., which began two weeks ago, in the church of which Rev. W. A. Dickson, pastor. Mr. Cannon is aided in his evangelist work by his accomplished wife, who is a fine musician and an ardent Christian.

For the future, Mr. Cannon's work in the revival field will be exclusively directed by the CHRISTIAN HERALD, which has inspired much of his labors in the past. It is the purpose of this journal to send this able, energetic and devoted servant of the Master wherever its readers deem his services to be specially required, and wherever his voice can be lifted up in exhortation, prayer and song for the advancement of the Gospel cause. Churches in and around New York City can thus have the benefit of an evangelist whose past labors in the Lord's vineyard have brought salvation to many hundreds of souls, without incurring any expense whatever beyond the mere cost of travel. We have been prompted to do this by the increasing demand for practical aid in evangelical work, more particularly from quarters where the congregations were poor. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will gladly respond to calls of this character and will co-operate with churches desiring Mr. Cannon to pay them a visit for a longer or shorter period. Letters may be addressed to Mr. Cannon, care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

A PRIMITIVE MILL IN ANGOLA.

The People of Western Africa Among whom U. S. Commercial Agent Chatelain is Going to Labor.

(See Illustrations on first page.)

THE picture on the first page, of a woman engaged in the toilsome occupation of grinding corn in a native mill, her child resting contentedly in the folds of her garment, is taken from a photograph brought from Angola by Mr. Heli Chatelain, whose portrait and life appeared in this journal last week. Angola is on the West African coast, in the territory which was assigned to Portugal in the recent partition arrangement. It lies south of the Equator, from the Congo on the north to the frontier of Benguela on the south. It is believed to contain about 250,000 inhabitants. The Portuguese have had settlements there for trading purposes since its discovery in 1486. They have made no attempt to civilize the country, their presence there being marked only by a few enclosed places for trade called feiras.

The people are a race distinct from the negro. They are tall and straight with small hands and feet. Their color is said by travelers to be "a warm chocolate," and their faces intelligent and good-humored. They appreciate the help the white man brings, and readily learn from him the arts of commerce. They cultivate a species of Indian corn which they call cassava. It is ground as it is needed for use, by the women, in the rude fashion depicted in the illustration. The receptacle is called the kimu, and the pestle the muishi. A caravan arriving in a village and needing food, has first to arrange with the chief and make him a showy present, then liberty is given to buy from the people. The stores are opened, the cassava is bought, and the women carry it off to the grinding-stones and soon bring it back in the form of flour, the men in the meantime having secured its equivalent in beads or cloth. The women who have infants take them with them to their work, carrying them in the manner shown in the illustration. The dexterous way in which one of these mothers picks up her child and with a few quick turns of her hand securely swathes it in the garment about her body, is the wonder of the spectator. It is done in a moment, yet so securely and safely that the child can be carried thus any distance without falling. The arrangement, however, is not always entirely satisfactory to the child. One of the natives, whose nose was so unusually flat as to excite the curiosity of a traveller, explained its peculiar shape by saying: "It was the fault of my mother, who when I was young, bound me too tightly to her back."

Mr. Chatelain has strong hopes of these people. They are more intelligent and quick-witted than the average Africans, and his position as the representative of the United States at Loanda, the capital of Angola, will doubtless give him unusual facilities for Christian work among them.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

A Strange Funeral Ceremony—A Wife's Heroism—An Unknown Mineral—A Honeymoon in a Hospital.

THE Eccentric Obsequies of a well-known citizen of New York, have formed the subject of much comment in the city. The citizen himself arranged the programme before his death, and exacted a promise from his friends that it should be faithfully and exactly carried out.

In fulfilment of his injunctions, his body was cremated. Then the ashes were divided into four equal parts, which were placed in the charge of four of his friends. These accompanied by the members of a club to which they and the deceased belonged, crossed the bay to the Statue of Liberty. There they made merry with champagne, as the deceased had directed. Thus fortified, the four friends who bore the ashes, ascended the staircase inside the statue. At the top, each took his place at one of the points of the compass and, reciting a formula composed by their dead friend, scattered his ashes to the four winds. This done, they descended, partook of more wine, and returned. Why the citizen desired to have his remains disposed of in that way, we are not told. It may be hoped that his wish was a mere eccentricity and not a sign of a belief that the strange ceremony was the end of him, or of his admission that he was one of "the ungodly who are like the chaff which the wind driveth away." (Ps. 1: 4.)

A Wife Died in Saving her Husband's Life in New Orleans on March 7. They had been recently married and were devotedly attached to each other. On the evening of the day named she retired to rest early, but her husband sat up to settle an intricate cash account with one of his clerks who was leaving his service. A dispute arose between the two men over some of the items. It grew fierce and blows were exchanged. A cry in her husband's voice that he was in danger, reached the wife's ears and she rose from her bed and hurried to the room just in time to see the clerk striking at him with a large knife as he lay on the floor. She sprang forward and grasped the arms of the clerk pinioning them to his side. He struggled, but though she was weak, and in delicate health her nervous strength sufficed to hold him firmly. She begged her husband to call a policeman and in his bewildered condition he thoughtlessly did so. Before he could return to the room the clerk had shaken himself free, and had turned upon the woman and murdered her. In saving her husband's life she had lost her own. It is not likely that he will ever forget the price his life cost. Yet her's was not a premeditated sacrifice. It was far higher love that Christ manifested to men, for he knew when he undertook their redemption that to achieve it he must die for them. (Phil. 2: 8.)

Two Lovers were Separated by a Kiss, recently, in an aristocratic mansion in Columbus, O. About six months ago a young lady of that city who had many lovers became acquainted with a young lawyer of Santa Paula, Cal., who is a nephew of Justice Lamar. She became attached to him and, finally, discarded all her other lovers and promised to marry him. The wedding was fixed for March 5th, and the bridegroom arrived on the previous day in readiness for the ceremony. While spending the evening with the bride many friends called to wish her good-bye, as it had been arranged that the couple should start for California shortly after the wedding. Among the callers was a young man who had been at one time a favored suitor. The lady, possibly with the desire to console him, was very cordial to him and at parting permitted him to kiss her good-bye. The bridegroom noticed the fact, but said nothing. The bride seemed to think nothing of it, saying she felt "like a sister to him" referring to the departed guest. Late at night, when the bridegroom left the house, there seemed to be no cloud between them. The next day, however, when the wedding guests were all assembled the bridegroom did not come. He sent a letter declaring himself the most miserable man on earth. He said that he could not forget the lady's look as she kissed her discarded lover and as he could not bring himself to marry her he had left the city. The bride was deeply mortified and deplored that she had not realized until too late how jealous a man he was. Christians, who are the bride of Christ, ought to realize a similar necessity for complete separation from the world. When Christ refused permission to one of his followers even to go and bid farewell to his family, he clearly intimated that they who give themselves to him must do so without reservation. (Luke 9: 61, 62.)

The Discovery of a New Metal is Announced by an ironworker of Boston, Mass. He states that during a recent visit to the Rocky Mountains he found in a district, the exact locality of which he refuses to disclose, specimens of an ore which he had never before seen. He collected a considerable quantity and brought it home. Assayers in Boston, Chicago and Cincinnati, to whom he submitted it, told him that they could not tell him the name of the mineral. Experimenting with it, he found that when it and iron were reduced to a molten condition, they combined readily. The product of the alloy was a homogeneous metal of very fine pores, capable of higher finish than before. In the treatment of iron with only one per cent. of this new ore, the former's tensile strength was increased from ten to twenty-five per cent. Using only half of one per cent. of this ore, he found that it gave the metal greater density, and a great increase—from sixty to one hundred per cent.—of tensile strength. The resulting metal, too, is capable of a high polish. If the discovery is genuine it will be very important, for the value of iron would be vastly increased if it could be made more ductile without impairing its strength. An effort is being made to produce the same result with Christian character by similar means. The result is not a success. Though the mixture of a little worldliness with religion may increase the polish and pliability of the character, it disintegrates it and destroys its strength. (Rom. 12: 2.)

A Honeymoon in a Hospital has Just Come to a close. Two patients, husband and wife, in the Pennsylvania Hospital at Pittsburgh, have been discharged cured after being in the institution sixteen weeks. They were married on November 14, 1890, in Virginia, and set out the same day for the home the bridegroom had prepared at Duluth, Minn. On their way the train was wrecked near New Florence by a collision, and both bride and bridegroom were severely injured. They were taken to the Pittsburgh hospital, where they have been ever since. It was thought at first that neither could recover, and their sufferings have been excruciating. They are now fully restored, and last week they returned to the bride's home in Virginia to rest awhile before making a second attempt to reach their Western home. The bridegroom said, before leaving, that if any one had told him that he would spend his honeymoon on a hospital cot he should have supposed that the time would have been a miserable one, but it had really been a happy time. His wife had shown such patience and self-control, and had been so tender and sympathetic with him while suffering herself, that he had been ashamed to complain. The trial had revealed the depth and strength of her character as ordinary life never could have done, and he was so filled with love and admiration for her, and such joy in the possession of his treasure that he thought the discovery cheaply purchased at the cost of his suffering. A similar discovery of the worth of the Saviour is often made by the Christian, and he, too, often makes it in a period of trial. (II. Cor. 1: 4.)

SAVED FROM FAMINE.

S. S. LESSON FOR APRIL 5, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 7: 1-16. GOLDEN TEXT, PSALM 107: 8.

Ben-hadad Bent on the Subjugation of Israel—The City Besieged—The Supplies of Food Cut off—A Ghastly Complaint From A Woman—Cannibalism Confessed—The King of Israel Angry Against God—Resolves to Punish Elisha as His Representative—The Prophet Warned—His Prediction of Plenty—The Siege Suddenly Raised—The Army Needed for the Defence of Syria—The Discovery of the Lepers—Elisha's Prophecy.

PROBABLY Ben-hadad, king of Syria, could not brook that this unknown God of Israel should thwart him at every step, and that this prophet Elisha, whom he had sent an army to apprehend, should give him the slip in a way so supernatural, and unaccountable. Ben-hadad would make another mighty effort to conquer the people of the Lord. So he "gathered all his host, and went up and besieged Samaria." God had lessons to teach the king and the people of Israel. He permitted the pressure to come upon them until almost all the food supply in the city was exhausted, and the most loathsome things were bought at an extravagant price, and used for food by the famished people. And yet

No Cry Came up to God.

Heathen Nineveh, "repented at the preaching of Jonah," backsliding, idolatrous Samaria was perishing for want of food, yet she did not cry unto the God she professed to know! Things, in Samaria at last reached a climax, when a woman cried to the king for justice, because, having actually killed and eaten her own son in company with a neighboring mother, that other had hidden her son who was to be the next victim, and the unnatural mother demanded the power of the law to ensure the horrid meal. Now the king put on sackcloth, but he did not humble himself before God; he was angry, but not broken. It was the fourth direct appeal which God had made to him: yet, instead of yielding to his discipline, Jehoram hardened his heart, and said, "God do so, and more also, to me if the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day." What had Elisha to do with the famine? There was a lively recollection of the three years and a half in which rain had not fallen on the land, and it had come to be known that it was in answer to Elijah's prayer. Now another famine was raging in the besieged city, and Jehoram attributed it to Elisha's prayers. Ungodly men dread the "prayer of faith." Vain man, he would spite God by slaying his servant.

"Elisha Sat Still in his House."

Accustomed to see God's hand in everything, and practically counting upon him moment by moment, he who had not been dismayed by a Syrian army which was bent upon his destruction was not afraid of the King of Israel, either. The elders of Israel were with the prophets; this was a good sign of progress; in Ahab's time they had been with the king. Elisha's communing with the unseen world was uninterrupted. Ere the messenger came to him with the king's death-warrant, he had got an intimation of it from his God; but it did not so much as stir him from his seat! "The Lord is my Light and my Salvation, whom then shall I fear? The Lord is the strength of my life, of whom then shall I be afraid?" (Ps. 27: 1.) "See ye," he said "how this son of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? look, when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door. Is not the sound of his Master's feet behind him?"

Elisha was the servant of his message; wherever God sent him, he stood behind his message. In dealing with Naaman, he did not so much as put in an appearance until God had manifested his power. In dealing with the allied armies, he had made use of a minstrel, as though he preferred being out of sight. When the Shunammite had come to him in her distress, Elisha first sent Gehazi to the dead child. There was no indication in his life that he thought himself a person of importance. It is always so with those who are much in the presence of God; the consciousness of that higher Presence extinguishes a man in his own eyes.

The messenger uttered words very like his master's (I. Kings 19: 10, 14), where he blamed the Lord for the trouble which had come upon him. "Behold this evil is of the Lord; why should I wait for the Lord any longer?" It might seem a very unpromising soil in which to sow a message from God; but Elisha never chose his work for his Master. He would never have "taken up work for God," but, in the deepest, truest sense, he was taken up by, absorbed with the work God committed to him, and with the God who trusted him to do it. "Hear ye the word of the Lord." What? Did he venture to preach with the sword of the King's emissary almost at his throat? Yes; for Elisha never had to defend himself, a heavenly body-guard surrounded him, so real to his spiritual apprehension that he feared no evil. It was

A Message of Mercy

which he brought to the king of Israel and to his people, an announcement of coming plenty in their famine-stricken ears: "To-morrow about this time shall a measure of fine flour be sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel in the gate of Samaria." How would such a message be received? "A lord on whose hand the king leaned!" a specimen of the chosen companions of his court, far from being humbled under the mighty hand of God in this time of trouble, turned the prophet's word into ridicule, "Behold, if the Lord would make windows in heaven, might this thing be." The moment was too solemn for frivolity; the chastening of the Lord was upon his people. There are moments when it is more than usually unseemly to joke; the dying and the dead of famine were around; the kingdom was at stake if they capitulated; it was no moment for rude remarks. The prophet answered him with a personal prediction: "Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not eat thereof." Such is the portion of men who make light of the grace of God, the irreverent and the triflers! There are some men who sharpen their wit on a stone which is breaking down some soul before his God, and they know not, or heed not the terrible fact that they are trampling on the blood of Christ which was shed for them, and sinning against their own souls.

Probably Elisha knew not how God would send supplies. He chose

A Most Unlikely Way.

Four leprous men, excommunicated and separated from the dwellings of men, and hemmed in by the Syrian army were driven by their hunger to hang around the gate of the city in the almost desperate hope of gathering some crumbs, some fragments of food which might be thrown over the city walls. Death stared them in the face, their case was desperate. O, if unsaved souls had but their eyes open they would find themselves in just such a position! The poor lepers did the wisest thing they could under the circumstances, they weighed in a mutual council the chances for life which remained to them. "Why sit we here until we die?" "If we enter into the city then the famine is in the city and we die there, and if we sit still here, we die also." There was but one alternative. "Now, therefore, come, and let us fall unto the host of the Syrians; and if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, we shall but die."

The lepers made the venture, to face their enemies was their only chance. But, to their surprised and unspeakable joy, they found in the camp of Syria a supply for their need, but "no man there," not a trace of their enemies!

God Had Been at Work, and made the wicked flee although no man pursued, and by his own royal hand he had provided a table from the commissariat of Syria to relieve his suffering people. Not only food and clothing but gold and silver, rich treasures, came into the undisputed possession of the amazed lepers, who, after refreshing their bodies, proceeded to hide their treasure.

God was over-ruling all: at first the lepers thought only of themselves in their new-found spoil, they owed nothing to the king nor to the people. But God put in their hearts a compassion for their besieged compatriots, and "they said one to another, 'We do not well; this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace; if we tarry till the morning light, some mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.'" So they came to the porter of the city, and told how they had found the Syrian camp emptied of men, but full of provisions. The news was taken to the king, but Jehoram, who always looked on God as an enemy, only saw in the tidings of the lepers, a stratagem of Ben-hadad's to draw away the garrison of the city and ensure a victory. This king of Israel always met trouble more than half way, and suffered from his imagination when there was no real trouble to fear, because he distrusted God. "Whoso hearkeneth unto me," says Wisdom, "shall dwell safely, and shall be quiet from fear of evil." (Prov. 1: 33.) One of the servants, who undoubtedly felt the pinch of hunger, more than the king did, entreated that, at least an investigation should be made, with the result that five horses with their riders were dispatched, who found the story of the lepers true. And thus it came about that God's message through Elisha was verified, and the starving people saw before them an abundant supply of provisions brought to the very gate of the city.

God had dealt with impious Ben-hadad, and turned his wrath into folly. He had justified his prophet, had shown his power and love in providing, his wondrous working in making the despised lepers his instruments of blessing. And the scoffer who ridiculed the prophet came to an untimely end. While exercising a government office in charge of the gate, the pressure of the hungry multitude was such that his flowing robes were dragged under the many feet, and he was trampled to death. He saw the blessing, but he did not eat thereof.

AUNT MARTHA.

A Story of the S. S. Lesson, for April 5: "Saved from Famine." Golden Text, Ps. 107: 8.

Y father lost his wife three months after I was born, and I was his only child. In his bereavement his sister Martha came to preside over his household affairs. Her loving care was the earliest and sweetest of my experiences. There was abundance at my father's house, which was populous with slaves, but Aunt Martha lavished such a wealth of loving attentions on me, her young charge, as perhaps is oftener seen where scant means obviate the temptation presented by opulence, to leave motherless children largely to the care of servants, than in the homes of the rich. God gave me a mother's devotion in the love of my aunt.

We lived in the suburbs of Atlanta, Georgia. I was ten years old when my father left his plantation to lead a regiment of cavalry, engaged in what he regarded as the sacred duty to defend the Confederate States against the forces of the Union Government.

"Be a manly boy, Harold," he said, as he kissed me good-bye; "take good care of your Aunt Martha. I shall soon be home again." Cheerfully and kindly he returned the affectionate farewells of the weeping servants. Exchanging a few words with Aunt Martha at the entrance of the mansion, he mounted his horse and was off at a gallop. My grief at parting was mitigated by my filial pride as I watched the superb equestrian till he vanished in the distance.

Need I recall with painful pen, that as the months passed harsh deprivation took the place of plenty in the best homes of the South? Father was home but once before the collapse of his declining fortunes with the fall of Atlanta. It was shortly after the battle of Gettysburg that the broken, gray-haired man returned for a few days' visit. He found that the establishment had been maintained and that loyal service rewarded the generosity with which his slaves always had been treated. The claims of these helpless dependants augmented the comparative poverty which had closed in upon us with the isolation of the Confederate States.

Unaccustomed wants and toilsome shifts had told heavily upon Aunt Martha, and I observed with pain, which even the buoyant spirits of childhood could not prevent, that both my father and she looked many years older than when at the call of his State he had taken up the sword of defense.

On with gloomy sameness went the months and years of my father's absence from home. Nothing could be more monotonous than our lonesome life, nor more real to my Aunt Martha's consciousness than that an awful crisis was approaching. I was old enough to be taken into her confidence, and we were all the world to each other in our sadness, for seldom came letters from the army, and with the advance of the Federal forces, we became conscious that the servants realized interests of their own, which separated them more and more from their superiors. From time to time some were missing as they sought the freedom which long since rumor had given to those slaves who went out adventurously to find it.

When the skies reflected the flames of burning Atlanta, Aunt Martha saw with bitterness of soul that the Southern cause was hopelessly defeated. Three weeks afterward my father came back to the old homestead, to begin life again. His property, both dead and alive, was gone absolutely, and with him and his sister began a struggle for mere livelihood.

The highborn Southern lady was now the slave of the humblest anxieties. She had not learned the lesson of cheerful submission and Christian hope. Oh, the months of gloom when the head of the household busied herself in silence with tasks of unwonted drudgery, or uttered vain complaints against the Providence which had brought her thus low. My father vainly tried to raise her crushed spirits.

"My dear sister," he would say, "God gives us food to eat and clothes to wear, and I am gaining if but a little, by my work on the estate. A good Providence spared my life in battle, and I feel renewed health and spirits in my outdoor toil. As he now gives us more than we deserve and more than thousands around us possess, I feel sure that God will continue to bless us. I am young and strong yet, and with purpose and vigor, I surely shall be able to renew our prosperity."

Brave words of a noble man but with little or nothing substantial for their support, it is true, and they were more than lost upon poor Aunt Martha.

"Nay, nay, brother, your beggarly toil can at best do no more than keep the wolf from the door. God has forsaken us, and we shall drudge on until kind death relieves us from bitter and hopeless deprivation."

Spite of his manly courage, the state of my father's affairs through a long period, seemed to justify the saddest prospects. A reaction set in after the feverish eagerness with which the Southern people assumed work with the extinction of slavery and the total failure of their attempt to achieve national independence. It took months for them to realize how terrible was the blow which had deprived them of myriads of men, and overwhelmed them in totally changed social conditions and awful need. Happily for them that few succumbed to despair, but I fear Aunt Martha was not the only one from whose life all light was taken by the misfortunes of the country.

The letter was from England. It was a business communication addressed to my father by a firm of attorneys doing business in Leeds, and the purport of it was that he had fallen heir to an old estate in the county of Yorkshire. God had wrought out a mighty and unexpected deliverance for us. Preparations were soon made for our removal to a foreign land, which seemed not so foreign after all when we thought that our all would soon be there, and remembered that the family had been American for only two generations. Father sold the Georgian home at a nominal price, but the best he could get in those times. Neighbors came to make their farewells and present their congratulations. Among them was the good minister who had tried in vain to remove Aunt Martha's despair. Seeing her changed appearance he remarked in his pleasantest voice:

"Flowers thrive best in the sunshine, and God be thanked (this in an aside to my father) that our dear Aunt Martha is to live where the graces of her character will grow the best and the sweetest."

The good man perhaps forgot to add that the flowers are all the fresher and more beautiful for the stormy rain which washed them and deepened the hold of their roots.

RAPID CULMINATION.

A Difficulty in the Study of Our Lord's Prophecy Explained.

BY REV. W. T. HOBSON.*

STUDENTS of prophecy have often been perplexed by our Lord's declaration that "This generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." (Luke 21: 32.) A careful examination of the words, however, reveals a meaning perfectly consistent, and also incidentally throws light on another difficulty—that of the abnormally rapid development of the political situation which is to exist at the coming of Christ.

The expression occurs immediately after the Parable of the Fig-tree. "And he spake to them a parable. Behold, the fig-tree and all the trees: when they now shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is now nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." (Luke 21: 29-31.) These things are to be to us as the green shoots on the eastern fig-tree, which are a sure indication that summer is now nigh at hand.

But what mean, then, those words of his that immediately follow: "Verily, I say unto you, this generation shall not pass away till all be fulfilled," "till all these things be fulfilled?" They seem, at first sight, as if meant to deepen the lesson of the fig-tree parable. But again, they seem still more to upset its plain meaning. For the generation that then was—what seems to be meant by "this generation" has long since passed away; it passed away within fifty years of the words being spoken; and these things have not yet been fulfilled. Indeed it is hard to see how anything that happened in the first century of the Christian era could be regarded as in that sense a sign of what has not yet taken place. At any rate, the words with the parable of the fig-tree cannot refer to any such events as signs of the Lord's coming, for they teach plainly and expressly, "When ye see these things come to pass know ye that the Kingdom of God is at hand"—"The Son of Man," "His coming in power and great glory is nigh even at the doors."

But the difficulty can be very simply solved, by adopting an interpretation of the verse that follows which there is reason to believe must have been the primitive interpretation of it. It is simply to understand the words this generation of the generation existing at the time our Lord spake of, instead of the generation existing when he spake. All is, then, plain and harmonious. And that 32nd verse then, as it was evidently intended to do, confirms and corroborates the teaching that precedes in the parable of the fig-tree, that when certain things were seen coming to pass, then we were to know that the Kingdom of God is nigh at hand. Aye, as in the words that just precede the parable, "When these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth nigh." "Verily, I say unto you this generation"—the generation I am speaking of, the generation that sees these things come to pass—"shall not pass away till all be fulfilled." The signs of the coming, and the coming itself, of the Son of Man, and of the Kingdom of God, with power, shall all take place in one generation, perhaps in a very small part of the lifetime of one generation. Those who see the signs will see the great and glorious event they have been the signs of. Those who see the green shoots appearing on the fig-tree will see the summer itself in all its glory.

Parallel Signification.

But what right, you may ask, have I to put such a meaning on the words, "this generation?" Why simply the fact of its being a very common usage of language. Look, for instance, at the 22nd verse of our chapter: "For these be the days of vengeance;" there our Lord meant, beyond a doubt, the days he was speaking of, not the days he was speaking in—"those days," as they are called in the very next verse. Still more remarkable, in the 17th chapter of St. Luke and 34th verse: "I tell you in that night there shall be two men in one bed: the one shall be taken and the other left," But it is literally, "in this night," only the translators have properly put "in that night," by way of explanation. I wish they had, in the same way, put "that generation" instead of "this generation" in the verse that follows our text for the same reason. It would have been an incalculable relief to many a simple reader of the Bible, and saved a world of needless perplexity and distress of mind to many a devout believer.

Understanding the matter so, the teaching of the whole passage is just this, that on the one hand the Lord will not come, his appearing and the kingdom will not take place, until certain things which our Lord has told us of, and which are, therefore, the appointed signs of his coming, are seen coming to pass; and that, on the other hand, those signs will take a very short time to elapse. Once they begin to come to pass, then the kingdom of God is nigh at hand. We may look up and lift our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh, our Redeemer is at the door. And so we are taught to look intelligently for the Lord's appearing, to see if events are shaping themselves into the appointed signs: we are taught to watch the fig-tree for the first green shoots appearing on it, and so to judge whether or not we have reason to say that summer is nigh at hand.

But some may say that if these signs have not begun to appear, the coming of the Lord cannot take place in our lives, and probably not for a century. "Does not that prevent my looking for 'that Blessed Hope!'" No: for I know that the appointed signs may begin to appear any day, next year or next month even, and then all will soon be fulfilled. I am exactly in the position St. Paul was in, who was wont to say, "The Lord is at hand," and who yet was aware and taught that that day would not come until there came the great apostacy first, and that Man of Sin was revealed, and that that could not be till something that was hindering it was taken out of the way.

He knew that these "things" alluded to in our text must first come to pass, but he knew also that they would soon elapse once they began. And so he used the words of faith and hope that have suited the Church ever since, and that suit her still, to express his eager, and, at the same time, his sober, his patient, and his intelligent waiting for Christ.

* From his article in the March Number of the Prophetic News, (Edited by Rev. M. Baxter) which contains also articles on "The Historical Fulfilment of the Prophecies of Daniel;" "The Restoration of Israel;" "The Coming Great Tribulation," and many others. Price six cents; seventy cents a year. May be had from Rev. Geo. A. Sparks, 90 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

To be With Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

SEEKING SETTLEMENTS.

THERE has much been said adverse to those ministers who go to churches and preach with reference to getting a settlement. Many of the things said about them are sharp and witty. But what are men to do if they have no settlement? It is absolutely necessary that they do as they are doing. If we felt called to preach the Gospel, and could get a pulpit in no other way, we would candidate fifty-two Sabbaths in the year. It is a very easy thing for a man surrounded by an affluent congregation, his hands and feet clothed with the warm wool of the sheep of his flock, to write or say caustic things about the evils of candidating. But pitch such an one out of his settlement, and with his two best sermons in pocket he would start to-morrow in the great squabble for position.

The only way to get a parish is to hunt for it. You cannot depend upon letters of commendation from neighboring ministers. Churches have found out that such letters are generally written for reasons of friendship and not because there is any especial adaptedness of the man recommended for the place under consideration. The best way is for a church to see and hear a man for themselves. Let every man select his own wife and every church its own minister. A church no more than a man can delegate some one else to do its courting. It is rare that a pastor selected by committees, or on recommendation, succeeds. Let minister and church come face to face and make up their minds on the spot how they like each other. A sort of ecclesiastical broker-shop has been proposed, by which ministers without a charge shall be made acquainted with churches without ministers. The plan will never work. It is more humiliating than the old way. We have sympathy with those candidating for a settlement, excited by our own early experience. We came out of the Theological Seminary with three sermons and one Fourth of July oration. The first Sabbath we preached twice, but there was a prominent man who got sound asleep, and he pronounced the sermon dull. Session asked us to preach the second Sabbath; but we had only one sermon left and the Fourth of July oration. We found this last inappropriate, and beyond fixing up. Everything then hinged upon the one remaining discourse. In our agitation we knocked the Psalm-book from the pulpit, and could not find our pocket-handkerchief to wipe off the perspiration. It was worse than splitting rails or digging ditches. We got the call, and have known better ever since than to say one word that would add to the embarrassment of young men or old seeking a settlement.

ORDINARY WORKERS.

THE Church is yet to learn that its chief work is to be done by consecrated men of ordinary calibre. Great speeches never marshalled a host. An eminent Scotch divine, getting into the pulpit after a week's elaboration of a learned discourse, forgot it entirely, and was compelled to give a plain talk which, under God, swept half his audience into the kingdom. There is an absurd call in the Church to-day for what are called "big guns," and but little appreciation of well-loaded rifles. The "Swamp Angel" in the last war was a failure. It proposed to do great things, but after awhile they found it was cracked and were afraid to use it lest it blow up. So, while men of but small capacity are doing their work well, and make no fuss about it, we have a few "big guns" half-cracked with conceit about themselves, and they blow up just when they are wanted for important service. The nuisance of the Church to-day is ecclesiastical "Swamp Angels." Dr. Chalmers' astronomical sermons "make us see stars," but we suppose there were, at the time of their delivery, uncelebrated ministers of Christ in Scotland, who were bringing more souls to the Saviour. Patrick Henry's speech did good in the Virginia Legislature, and was of service in giving us, when boys, something to practice on at the country school-house, till the dinner-pails along the wall shook with the cry of "Liberty or Death"; but there were men who could scarcely say a word in public who did as much service when in Independence Hall they put their name to the document that declared our national deliverance. We must all lay hold of the work. If the raging conflagration of sin is to be put out, it will not be by one fireman standing with big horn, making a great racket, but by men, women and boys bringing what water they can—some in hogsheads, some in pails, and some in small dippers, everyone doing what he or she can, God helping all the time. "Not by might nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord."

WIDE-AWAKE PRAYER-MEETINGS.

ONE of the grandest results of the Fulton Street Prayer-meeting is the fact that all the devotional services of the country have been revolutionized. The tap of the bell of that historical prayer-meeting has shortened the prayers and exhortations of the Church universal. But since it has become the custom to throw open the meeting for remark and exhortation, there has been a jubilee among the religious bores who wander around pestering the churches. They talk long and loud in proportion as they have nothing to say. They empty on us several bushels of "Ohs" and "Ahs." But they seldom get a chance, for we never throw the meetings open when they are there. We make such a close hedge of hymns and prayers that they cannot break into the garden. One of them we are free of because, one night, seeing him wiggle-waggle in his seat as if about to rise, we sent an elder to him to say that his remarks were not acceptable. The elder blushed and halted a little when we gave him the mission, but setting his teeth together he started for the offensive brother, leaned over the back of the pew and discharged the duty. We have never seen that brother since, but once, in the street, and then he was looking the other way. By what right such men go about in ecclesiastical vagabondism to spoil the peace of devotional meetings it is impossible to tell. Either that nuisance must be abated or we must cease to "throw open" our prayer-meetings for exhortation.

BRIEF NOTES.

Dr. L. W. Munhall is now laboring at Haverhill, Mass., where nine churches have united in the evangelistic services.

A change has been made in the arrangements for the May meetings of the Baptist National Societies. Instead of being held in Philadelphia, as was first settled, they will be held in Cincinnati.

The Sixth Convention of Young Men's Lutheran Associations was held in New York on March 19. Several papers on the work among young men were read by pastors and members of the Associations.

Mr. and Mrs. W. V. Baker, the blind, singing evangelists, have been assisting in the union revival services at Westfield, N. J., last week. Their rendering of the Gospel hymns is exceedingly effective.

Revival services were held at Waltham, Mass., last week, by Evangelist Bliss. The Boston Herald says that truly wonderful results have followed. At the meeting on Sunday, March 15th, in the Baptist Church, over a hundred persons rose for prayers.

Rev. George C. Needham has been suffering from an attack of the grippe, which has somewhat curtailed his labors in Chicago. He has, however, continued his services in Dr. Lorimer's church, and expects to be fully restored after a brief rest at his home in Manchester, Mass.

Next Sunday being Easter Sunday, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD service at the Academy of Music, New York, will be more than usually interesting. Dr. Talmage will preach an Easter sermon, and a selection of appropriate music from the works of the old masters will be rendered by the orchestra.

The work at the Central Union Mission in Washington, D. C., is being wonderfully blessed. The earnest band of workers there are receiving many souls for their hire, and are rejoicing over the signal tokens of the Lord's favor. During the past four weeks no less than eighty-six conversions have taken place in the mission.

Mr. T. Pullin, of Raleigh, N. C., is anxious to obtain copies of this journal of this year, from subscribers who have no further use for them. He visits the State Penitentiary, and having found a blessing attend the distribution of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD among the convicts in the past, he would be glad to continue the distribution. His address is, Raleigh Savings Bank, Raleigh, N. C.

A Conference of Christian Workers was held in Philadelphia on March 10 and 11, in the Seventh Street M. E. Church, under the presidency of Dr. L. W. Munhall. The Conference was called by the pastors of the Baptist Presbyterian and Methodist Churches, which united in the recent month's services held by Dr. Munhall. The subjects discussed were all practical, and designed to organize the work in the city on a permanent basis.

Mr. George W. Wheeler, of the Central Union Mission, Washington, D. C., desires to make acknowledgment of the receipt of the following additional sums received by him for Mr. J. McLain Brown, missionary at Tokio, Japan, a sketch of whose life and work appeared in this paper on January 28, 1891: Japan Mission Circle, 1st Presbyterian Church, Morristown, N. J., $7.50; J. B. Spratt, $1; E. F. Hall, $2; S. F. Young, $5; W. C. Parsons, $10; Mrs. E. M. Buck, $1.

Major Hilton's meetings in Southern California have been greatly blessed. In West Los Angeles the Congregational, Presbyterian and M. E. South Churches have united for two weeks, under Major Hilton's direction, and the greatest spiritual awakening ever known in this locality has followed. One of the most marked results of the work has been the quickening of the life and efforts of Christians. Many heretofore inactive have developed gifts for the Lord's work, and are reaching out after souls. Many inducements are extended this evangelist to remain in Southern California, but his appointments take him north.

CURRENT EVENTS.

A Frightful Shipwreck—The New Orleans Troubles—A Heroic Son—The New U. S. Treasurer and President of the Senate—Tippoo Tib—A New Mission Field.

New Orleans has furnished the country with a horror which may attain the dimensions of an International Question. On the 14th inst., a mob of citizens, infuriated at the failure of a jury to convict the Italians who had been accused of complicity in the assassination of Chief of Police Hennessey, assembled in front of the Clay Statue and, after listening to inflammatory speeches besieged the jail, battered in the doors, took the prisoners from their cells and shot and hanged eleven of them. This extraordinary exhibition of lynch law in a populous American city has attracted the attention of the civilized world. Lawyers, merchants and other business men were among the ynchers, and the crowd was harangued by W. S. Parkerson, a prominent lawyer and politician. After the tragedy, justice was declared satisfied and the lynchers dispersed. It is claimed that the dead Italians belonged to a secret society known as the Mafia, whose object is assassination, and which is so influential that a criminal conviction of any of its members is impossible in New Orleans. The jury that tried the prisoners and acquitted several of them is declared to have been bribed. Official communications have been exchanged between the State Department and the Italian Government at Rome, and it is believed that heavy damages will be demanded. Secretary Blaine telegraphed to Gov. Nicholls of Louisiana in official condemnation of the lynching. There is much feeling throughout the country over the event, especially in large cities where Italians are numerous, and apprehensions have been expressed for the safety of Americans travelling in Italy. All but three of the dead Italians are known to have been naturalized citizens.

The Echoes of Canada's Great Election Still resound throughout the Dominion. One of the leading participants in the struggle was Dr. Edward Farrell, a representative of the reciprocity idea. He was born at Dartmouth, N. S., in 1843, is a professor of surgery in the Halifax Medical College, a thorough Christian and an active humanitarian. He has always been a staunch Liberal, was a member of the Nova Scotian Legislature in 1874, and of the Hill Cabinet, without portfolio, till 1878. His portrait is given above.

An Appalling Marine Disaster is Reported from the Mediterranean. The Anchor Line steamship Utopia, with over 700 Italian emigrants on board, bound for New York, came in collision with the British man-of-war, Anson, off Ragged Staff, on the Bay of Gibraltar, during a heavy storm on the evening of the 17th. The warship's ram tore a hole thirty feet long in the liner's side near the stern, and the latter filled and sank in ten minutes. Nearly nine hundred persons were struggling in the water simultaneously, while the great warships, Anson and Rodney, illuminated the awful scene with their electric lights. Nearly six hundred perished, the majority being passengers. Three hundred and eleven persons were rescued by the boats of the warships. Several sailors of the French gunboat, Immortalite, were drowned while trying to rescue the perishing men and women.

The lost steamer was commanded by Captain McKeoguc, and had a crew of about fifty men. The disaster has brought sorrow to many friends of the emigrants in this country.

One of Uncle Sam's Warships, the Galena, and the United States steam tug Nina, went ashore during a heavy fog off Gay Head, near Vineyard Haven, Mass., on the night of the 13th. Another United States naval vessel, the Triana, while speeding to their assistance drove upon the ledges off Cuttyhunk Island, and knocked three holes in her bottom. It was soon clear that the Galena would be a total wreck, and the officers, who were very cool, got a line to the land and sent the crew ashore by the breeches buoy. It took seven hours to make the transfer, and then the gallant Galena was left to her fate. No lives were lost. She was on her way to Portsmouth, where $100,000 were to have been spent in repairing her. The Galena was a wooden vessel of 1,000 tons, and was attached to the Atlantic Squadron. She was built in 1878, and had cruised much of late in the West Indies as flagship for Admiral Gherardi. She was a third rate, eight-gun cruiser. The Nina was an iron tug for Navy Yard service. The Triana will probably be saved.

The News Comes from Zanzibar that Tippoo Tib, long the prince of African slave-dealers and traders, and the friend of Stanley during all his explorations, has been stricken with paralysis. Tib for many years has been a most influential factor in Central African affairs. He was Stanley's second-lieutenant, and did efficient service during the Emin Pacha relief expedition. Tippoo of late years has done much toward minimizing the slave traffic and, with Stanley at least, has always prove faithful to his promises. His death would deprive the cause of civilization of an influential friend. Tippoo, who is about sixty years old, has been the most picturesque figure in African diplomacy. As the negotiator between the whites and the wild tribes of the interior, his services have been invaluable.

A Heroic Lad of Sixteen Saved his Mother at the risk of his own life, during a terrible tenement fire in Hester Street, New York, on the morning of the 18th inst. The flames broke out in a five-story tenement, on the top floor of which a family named Cartoch lived. The father and his two daughters were suffocated but young Harry Cartoch seized his mother and bore her to the fire-escape, although flames met him at every step. Seeing her safe, he returned and caught up his little brother in his arms and succeeded a second time in reaching the window, where the three were taken down the ladders by the firemen. His arms were frightfully burned and all three were more or less injured, the mother probably fatally. Four lives were lost. Fifty persons were rescued by the firemen, but even the veterans who had seen hundreds of conflagrations in New York admitted that there was no braver deed than that of the young Hebrew lad, who faced almost certain death to save those he loved.

Our Russian Visitor of Last Winter, the Grippe, has reappeared in a more or less violent form in many parts of the country. Most of the large northern and many western cities report thousands of cases, and doctors are kept busy day and night. Fortunately, the mortality thus far has been light. New York, Chicago, Detroit, Boston and Philadelphia report thousands of cases, Detroit alone having 14,000 in a month and no evidence of abatement.

The Successor of United States Treasurer Huston is, like his predecessor, a resident of Indiana. Captain J. A. Lemicke (whose portrait appears on this page), is a native of Hamburg, Germany, and is sixty-two years of age. His business experience has covered a lifetime. Bank teller, steamboat owner, manufacturer, city and State Treasurer, he has at last reached the highest financial round of the ladder in his new office. He has twice been Treasurer of the State of Indiana, and has a ripe experience in public business.

Five of the Great Indian Tribes, a few weeks ago delegated Apiatom, a Kiowa chief, to investigate the recent "Indian Messiah" craze. Apiatom did so reverentially and faithfully and has just returned to the Kiowa reservation, with his report. He found that the pretended Messiah was a half-breed Pute, named Wilson, who had been endorsed by Sitting Bull and had been the main instigator of the dances. He found Wilson neither especially intelligent nor devout and so reported to the disappointment and disgust of the tribesmen. This will in all probability, make a revival of the craze in the coming spring impossible.

Lake Tchad, the Wildest, most Beautiful and elusive of African lakes, on the borders of the great desert, is to be the next scene of territorial contention between European nations. England, France and Germany are all equipping expeditions, with the purpose of making treaties with the powerful native states of the Central Soudan, a great and practically unknown region. Germany has already sent out two expeditions and France one, the latter under the command of M. Crampel. The British expedition, however, has pushed on ahead. Within a few years the vast and populous region around Lake Tchad and the beautiful islands on its surface, will afford a splendid field for missionary enterprise. The lake swarms with pirates and man-stealers, and has for generations been the retreat of some of the most powerful and lawless tribes, who have there fortified themselves against the incursions of enemies and made themselves a terror to the entire Soudan.

The New President, pro tempore, of the United States Senate, Charles F. Manderson, of Nebraska (whose portrait is given in this column), is an able legislator and a brilliant speaker. A native of Philadelphia, he went to Ohio a young man, and when the war broke out, entered the army. His bravery secured him rapid promotion, and at the close of hostilities he was brevet brigadier-general. After the war he practiced law. For his wounds received in the war he was awarded a pension, but he returned the $4,000 back pension money to the Government. The successor of Mr. Ingalls, as President of the Senate, is a man of considerable culture, and of great sagacity in legislature, and is very popular with both parties.

THE FAITH THAT SAVES.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

Jesus Surrounded by Cavillers—His Appeal and Promise
 I. Different Kinds of Believers—Those Who Believed Him and Those Who Believed on Him—Temporary Faith—II. The Lord Noticing the Lowest Kind of Faith—Encouraging it—Showing How it May Continue and Increase—III. Inducements to Continue—Three Specific Blessings Promised—IV. The Test Applied—V. Grounds for the Highest Style of Faith.

"As he spake these words, many believed on him. Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free."—John 8, 30-32.

CHRIST on this occasion, was surrounded by cavillers. We must not be astonished if the like should happen to us when declaring the Gospel. Our Lord went on preaching all the same, and he did not conceal objectionable truth because of opposition; say, rather, that he set it forth with greater boldness and decision when surrounded by his enemies. The more they opposed, the more he testified.

The Lord Jesus also told the contradicting sinners that the day would come when cavillers would be convinced. Observe how he put it: "When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he, and that I do nothing of myself." Cavillers, you may riot for a little season, but your time is short; the hour will come when you shall behold, and wonder, and perish. I pray that there may come an end to your unbelief by your being convinced in this life, and led to repentance; but if it be not so, you will certainly be ashamed and confounded when the Lord shall come in his glory.

But, beloved, though the Saviour was thus surrounded with objectors, and had so much to endure from their ignorance and their malice, yet his controversies with them were not without hopeful effects; for our text informs us, "As he spake these words, many believed on him." Albeit we may be surrounded with general and virulent opposition, yet there will be fruit from the preaching of the truth. The Word of the Lord shall not return unto him void: it shall prosper in the thing whereto God hath sent it. We may hope that not only a few but many will accept the sacred testimony, since we see that, even in the midst of an exceedingly hot dispute, it happened that "As he spake these words, many believed on him."

I. These believers were not all of one kind; and upon that fact I shall enlarge in this beginning of my sermon. Let that stand as our first observation upon the text—our Lord had around him. There were two sorts of believers evidently, who may be set forth to you, by the differing expressions used in the Revised Version. We read in verse 30, "Many believed on him:" and then in the thirty-first verse we read of "those Jews which had believed him." Mark the distinction between "believed on him" and "had believed him." There were two sorts of believers, and on these I will speak awhile.

Different Kinds of Believers

The first "believed on him:" these are the right kind. What is it to believe on Christ? It means not only to accept what he says as true, and to believe that he is the Messiah and the Son of God, but trustfully to rest in him. To believe on him is to take him as the ground of our hopes, as our Saviour, upon whom we depend for salvation. When we believe in him or on him, we accept him as God sets him forth; and make use of him by trusting on him to do for us what God has appointed him to do. This trusting on Jesus is saving faith. "As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name." "He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life." To believe him may be a very different thing from believing on him. Such belief may fall far short of saving faith. To believe on him means heartily to give yourself up to him, and to follow him as the way, the truth, and the life to you. Rejecting all rival confidences, the heart leans on Jesus all its weight, and leaves with him all its burdens. Believing in him, we repose all our concerns, for time and for eternity, in his hands.

Inoperative Faith.

But there is another kind of faith which was produced by the Saviour's testimony, and had much of hope in it, and yet it never came to anything. There is a temporary faith which believes Jesus in a sense, and after its own way of understanding him, or rather of misunderstanding him. A great deal of disbelief and misbelief is current at the present day. We are encouraged by certain persons to include in our churches all that have any sort of belief; and, indeed, the line is to be more inclusive still, for those who have no belief at all are to find an open door. The Church of Christ is to be a menagerie of creatures of every kind. I fear, if they come into this Noah's ark wild beasts, they will also go out wild beasts. Only those who enter by the door of regeneration and spiritual faith will in very deed be within the kingdom of the Lord. Ah, my hearers! beware of that faith which is a mere intellectual movement, which does not control the heart and the life. To come to faith through a cold argument, and to feel no spiritual life, is but a poor business. You want a faith that leads you to an entire reliance upon the person of Jesus, to the giving up of everything to him, to the reception of him as your Saviour and King, your all in all. You have not believed unto eternal life unless you have so believed on him that you make him the foundation and corner-stone of your hope.

II. Our Lord takes notice even of The Lowest Sort of Faith.

When he saw that these people believed him in a measure, and were willing to accept his testimony so far as they comprehended it, he looked upon them hopefully, and spoke to them. Out of a weak and imperfect faith, something better may arise. Saving faith, in its secret beginnings, may be contained in this common and doubtful faith. It is written, "When the Son of man cometh, shall he find faith on the earth?" Certainly he can find it if anyone can. He has a very quick eye for faith. He deals with little faith as we used to do with a spark in the tinder, in the days of our boyhood. When we had struck a spark, and it fell into the tinder—though it was a very tiny one—we watched it eagerly, we blew upon it softly, and we were zealous to increase it, so that we might kindle our match thereby. When our Lord Jesus sees a tiny spark of faith in a man's heart, though it be quite insufficient of itself for salvation, yet he regards it with hope, and watches over it, if haply, this little faith may grow to something more. It is the way of our compassionate Lord not to quench the smoking flax, nor break the bruised reed. If any of you have only a little faith now, and that marred by ignorance and prejudice, it may be like a connecting thread between you and Jesus, and the thread may thicken to a cable.

Christ's Cautions.

Our Lord addressed himself especially to these questionable believers. He turned from his assured disciples to look after those who were more in danger. It is clear that he encourages them, but he does not flatter them. He says, "if." A great "if" hovered over them like a threatening cloud. Wisely does our Lord commence his word to them with "if." "If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed." Continuance is the sure test of the genuine believer. Our Lord does not say, "Go your way, you are not my disciples"; but he, in effect, says, "I stand in doubt of you. The proof of your discipleship will be your persevering in your faith." If we say that we believe in Jesus, we must prove it by abiding in believing, and by still further believing. The Word of Jesus must be the object of our faith; into that Word we must enter, and in that Word we must continue. Beginning to believe is nothing unless we continue to believe.

The Remedy.

Our Lord showed his interest in the weaker sort of believers by helping them on in the safe way, urging them to continue in his Word. "You believe," he seems to say, "believe still; believe more; believe all that I say. You have entered into my Word; dive deeper into it, and abide in it. Let my Word surround you; dwell in it; continue in it." Good advice this; and it is the advice I would give in my Master's name to any here who are feeling after Christ and his Gospel. Hold fast in full faith to his Word, and let it hold you fast. Mind that you so believe in Jesus as to practise what he commands: you cannot continue in his Word except you learn to obey it. The test of faith is obedience. What he bids you, do it.

"Continue in my Word": get into Christ's Word as a sinking sailor would get into a lifeboat, and once there, keep inside the boat: do not throw yourself out into the stormy waves through despair, but continue in the place of hope. This is Christ's gracious counsel to those in whom there seems to be some hopeful sign. The shout of "I believe it" too often ends when the excitement is over. To sing "I do believe, I will believe," is well enough; but unless that believing appertains to daily life, and changes the inner nature, and abides even till death, it has not saved the man.

III. But, our Lord sets before these people Inducements to Continue in his Word. "Jesus therefore said to those Jews which had believed him, If ye abide in my word, then are ye truly my disciples; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." Observe three inducements, each one of them great, and when placed together exceedingly attractive.

The first was certified discipleship; "Then are ye my disciples indeed." There is more in the expression than I can readily set forth in words. A certain person says he is a disciple of Christ; but you would never know it if he did not tell you. You might live with him for years without hearing an expression or remarking an action which is distinctly Christian: this is not to be a disciple indeed. Another man loves his Lord, and treasures his words; he puts his discipleship of Christ before everything, and you cannot live with him a single day without perceiving a savor of Christ in his words and action. You say of him, "that man is indeed a Christian." How we prize a thoroughbred believer! Your mongrel is a poor animal!

The next blessing which our Lord set before believers was that of ## Sacred Knowledge.

Observe: "Ye shall know the truth"—not a truth, but "the truth;" the saving, purifying, glorifying truth. Keep on believing, and Jesus will teach you that great truth which is above all other truth—essential, quickening, cleansing, divine. You will so know the truth as to be influenced by it, actuated by it, filled by it, strengthened by it, comforted by it, and by its power you will yourself be made true. Surely this is a reason for abiding in Christ's Word!

The third benefit was spiritual liberty; "the truth shall make you free." You shall be free from your own prejudices, prides, and lusts. You shall be free from the fear of man. If you have sunk so low as almost to ask of the great ones leave to breathe, you shall break that irksome fetter. The truth known within your spirit shall make a free man of you. Hitherto you have been the bondsman of self. You have inquired, "What will this thing profit me?" and thus the desire of self-aggrandizement has ruled everything; but when Jesus is your Lord you shall be free from this motive. "The truth shall make you free;" this is a noble saying.

Dear brethren, I hope many here enjoy these three privileges; disciples indeed, you believe anything that is taught you in God's Word, be it what it may; the truth has so entered into you that you now know it and are sure; and this believed truth has made you so free that you defy the fetters which men would cast around you. Your Lord has caused you to believe in him, and you have now found the element wherein your soul may abide in life, light, and liberty. Thus our Lord dealt with those in whom he saw some hopeful signs: he set choice blessings before them to induce them to proceed further.

IV. But now, fourthly, our Lord thus tested them by the most effectual means.

The Test

was sharp in its action, and sudden in its results. He said to them, "Ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free:" and what follows? "They answered him"—answered him rather than believed him. How did they answer? Did they say, "Yes, Lord, we believe; teach us thy truth, and make us free?" No, no. They cried, "We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man: how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free?" These supposed believers stumbled at the Lord's word—stumbled at a privilege. Jesus said, "The truth shall make you free," and that offended them!

The reason why these Jews became so angry with our Lord was that he touched their pride. "Make us free, indeed!" they cried. "We always were free; we were never slaves. We enjoy the largest rights through our father Abraham; we have never come under the dominion of any false prophet or idol god. Make us free indeed! How sayest thou this?" Thus the wild thinker claims that he is free, and needs no liberty from Christ. The sinner who is in bondage to his passions says that he leads a free and easy life, and scorns the idea of being set at liberty, as if he were a bondman. The more a slave a man is to his own conceit or his own lust, the more he talks about his freedom. We should not know that he was free if he did not call himself so. Your free love, free thought, free life, and so forth, are the empty mockery of freedom. Oh, that men knew their state, and then freedom would be prized!

These people soon showed their true character; for very soon afterwards they said, "Now we know that thou hast a devil;" and they took up stones to cast at him. Oh, that we may be delivered from having a faith which will end in open rejection of the Lord.

V. I close with a fifth point: our Lord deserves of us

The Highest Form of Faith—

ly, the highest degree of faith which is possible. Would you mind looking in your Bibles into the next chapter, which fitly follows the present one? It contains the story of the man blind from his birth, to whom the Saviour gave sight. Let me read a description of the kind of faith which I desire for you all. "Jesus heard that they had cast him out; and when he had found him, he said unto him, Dost thou believe on the Son of God? He answered and said, Who is he, Lord, that I might believe on him? And Jesus said unto him, Thou hast both seen him, and it is he that talketh with thee. And he said, Lord, believe. And he worshipped him." That is the faith which saves, the faith which learns of Jesus from Jesus; hears and believes, and takes Jesus to be its God. The faith which bows at the feet of Jesus, and worships him as living, is the faith which saves. Oh, for a worshipping faith, faith on its knees in the presence of the Son of God; faith beholding Jesus, with the eye which he has opened!

"Alas!" says one, "I wish I had that faith." Listen, then, that you may find it. Faith cometh by hearing. When I meet with persons converted, I like them to tell me what text was blessed to them, for then my mind runs on that text. I have sometimes asked a convert, "What part of the sermon was it that God blessed to you?" because I should like to repeat that passage more than once or twice, I should like to "tell it o'er and o'er again." Perhaps the Lord would bless it to another, and another. Think, then, what part of our Lord's sermon was it that brought faith to those many who believed on him? I think it was the twenty-eight and twenty-ninth verses.

In verse 28 the Lord spoke of his death, and all that went with it, and all that came out of it: "When ye have lifted up the Son of man, then shall ye know that I am he." How did they lift him up? They lifted him up on the cross; it alludes to his crucifixion. But they did not know that in another sense they lifted him up; it was through his death that there was a possibility of his resurrection; and when he rose again and ascended up on high, the Holy Ghost was poured out upon the church, and he entered into heaven to make intercession for us; and all this was emphatically a lifting up.

The cross and its surroundings remain to this day the great arguments for our holy faith. The things that should lead men to believe on Jesus Christ are found at his cross. Christ on the cross is thought to be hard to believe in, but it is not so; for the more you know of a crucified Christ, the more easy will faith become. Christ raised to is the great breeder of faith. Especially is faith begotten and nourished by that part of God's Word which treats of the cross and the crown—the double lifting up of Jesus.

The Crown by His Cross

Also, once more, and I have done: you will find faith much helped by looking to the life of Jesus, as set forth in the Gospels. Read the verse: "He that sent me is with me: the Father hath not left me alone; for I do always those things that please him." What a perfect life is that of Jesus! Come along with you, you that have had other notions; come, and take Jesus to be your light and life! You that have had other confidences, leave them all and believe on him, for he is worthy of your utmost confidence. You that have been hesitating, believe in Jesus once for all. You that have been procrastinating, come this very day, and hearken to that voice which shall at once set you free. Oh, that you would now trust Jesus, my Lord and my God! May the good Spirit help you now to believe on the Crucified One, and may this be another of those occasions concerning which it shall be written in the Book of Record, "Many believed on him!" God grant it, for our Lord Jesus' sake! Amen.

A BRAVE BOY REWARDED.

GENERAL SHERMAN'S kindness to a drummer-boy is the subject of one of the many anecdotes called forth by his death. It is related that in the hot fight at the rear of Vicksburg he heard a shrill childish voice calling to him. Looking down he saw beside his horse a mite of a drummer-boy who told him that one of the regiments in the thick of the battle was out of ammunition and would have to abandon its position if a new supply were not promptly sent. The boy was bleeding badly from a wound in the leg which he had received while carrying the message to the General. Sherman told him to go to a surgeon and have his wound attended to and was then hurrying to see after the sending of the required ammunition when he heard the child calling to him again. Looking back he saw the little fellow, apparently unconscious of his wound, running after him and calling out, "Calibre fifty-eight, General; calibre fifty-eight." The General changed the character of his order, realizing that the ammunition he was sending would leave the men as badly off as before. He often spoke in after years of the boy's eagerness and courage which made a deep impression on him. When he had the power, he secured the youngster an appointment to the Naval Academy at Annapolis and was otherwise kind to him. In the struggle with the hosts of Satan in this world there are many humble Christians who are similarly useful. Though they may not be able to take part in the conflict, they can pray for those who are engaged and the Lord hears them, and in answer to their prayers, strengthens the hands of his servants. (Eph. 6; 18, 19.)

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

The Seamstress.*

ENTERPRISE, the tenement, and the competition of public institutions and farmers' wives and daughters, have done the tyrant shirt no death, but they have not bettered the lot of the needle women. The sweater of the East-side has appropriated the flannel shirt. He turns them out to-day at forty-five cents a dozen, paying his Jewish workers from twenty to thirty-five cents. One of these testified before the State Board of Arbitration, during the shirt-makers' strike, that she worked eleven hours in the shop and four at home, and had never in the best of times, made over six dollars a week. Another stated that she worked from four in the morning till eleven at night. These girls had to find their own thread and pay for their own machines out of their wages. The white shirt has gone to the public and private institutions that shelter large numbers of young girls and to the country. There are not half as many shirt-makers in New York to-day as only a few years ago, and some of the largest firms have closed their city shops. The same is true of the manufacturers of underwear. One large Broadway firm has nearly all its work done by farmers' girls in Maine, who think themselves well-off if they can earn two or three dollars a week, to pay for a Sunday silk, or the wedding outfit, little dreaming of the part they are playing in starving their city sisters. Literally they sew "with a double thread a shroud as well as a shirt"

A Discouraged Woman.

What sort of answer think you, would come from these tenements to the question, "Is life worth living?" It may be that this, cut from the last report but one of the Association for the Improvement of the Condition of the Poor, a long name for a weary task, has a suggestion of it: "In the depth of winter the attention of the Association was called to a family living in a garret in a miserable tenement in Cherry Street. This family's condition was most deplorable. The man, his wife, and three small children shivering in one room through the door of which the pitiless winds of winter whistled. The room was almost barren of furniture; the parents slept on the floor, the elder children in boxes, and the baby was slung in an old shawl attached to the rafters by cords by way of a hammock. The father, a seaman, had been obliged to give up that calling because he was in consumption, and was unable to provide either bread or fire for his little ones." Perhaps this may be put down as an exceptional case, but one that came to my notice in a Seventh Ward tenement was typical enough to escape that reproach. There were nine in the family: husband, wife, an aged grandmother, and six children; honest, hard-working Germans, scrupulously neat, but poor. All nine lived in two rooms, one about ten feet square, that served as parlor bed-room, and eating-room, the other a small hall-room made into a kitchen. The rent was seven dollars and a-half a month, more than a week's wages for the husband and father, who was the only bread-winner in the family. That day the mother had thrown herself out of the window and was carried up from the street, dead. She "was discouraged," said some of the other women from the tenement, who had come in to look after the children, while a messenger carried the news to the father at the shop. They went stolidly about their task, though they were evidently not without feeling for the dead woman. No doubt she was wrong in not taking life philosophically as did the four families which a city missionary found housekeeping in the four corners of one room. They got along well enough together until one of the families took a boarder, and that made trouble.

* From How the Other Half Lives. Studies among the tenements of New York, by Jacob A. Riis. These studies may be recommended to all readers, but especially Christian readers. They may be practically useful to ladies who are pleased with bargains, because they will explain to them what often puzzles them—how it is that the store-keepers can afford to sell ready-made garments at so low a rate as they do. Pp. 304. Published by Charles Scribner's Sons, 745 Broadway, New York.

Bearing the Newly-Discovered Mummies of the Pharaohs Over the Plain of Thebes.

The Jew of the Slums.

Bitter as are the Jew's private feuds, it is not until his religious life is invaded that a real inside view is obtained of this Jew whom the history of Christian civilization has taught nothing but fear and hatred. There are two or three missions in the neighborhood, conducting a hopeless propagandism for the Messiah whom the Tenth Ward of New York rejects, and they attract occasional crowds who come to hear the Christian preacher as the Jews of old gathered to hear the Apostles expound the new doctrine. The result is often strikingly similar. "For once," said a well-known minister to me, after such an experience "I felt justified in comparing myself to Paul preaching salvation to the Jews. They kept still, until I spoke of Jesus Christ as the Son of God. Then they fell to arguing among themselves and to threatening me, until it looked as if they meant to take me out into Hester Street and stone me." As at Jerusalem, the Chief Captain was happily at hand with his centurions, in the person of a sergeant and three policemen, and the preacher was rescued. So, in all matters that pertain to their religious life, which tinges all their customs, they stand, these East Side Jews, where the new day that dawned on Calvary left them standing, stubbornly refusing to see the light. A visit to a Jewish house of mourning is like bridging the gap of two thousand years. The inexpressibly sad and sorrowful wail for the dead, as it swells and rises in the hush of all sounds of life, comes back from the ages like a mournful echo of the voice of Rachel weeping for her children, and refusing to be comforted because they are not.

THE NEWFOUNDLAND TROUBLES.

(See Illustration on page 189.)

THE latest phase of the Newfoundland Fisheries dispute was discussed in the English Parliament on the 19th inst., when the Colonial Secretary Lord Knutsford, introduced a bill, revising some of the provisions that now regulate the rights of foreign powers in these fisheries. Some time ago, Newfoundland made protest that her fishery interests had been impaired by the treaties and concessions made by the home government.

The Colonial Secretary's bill is calculated to intensify the feeling in Newfoundland. It revives the Crown's authority to enforce, through the royal navy, the treaties in question, under which France claims her fishing rights. There is, however, a saving clause, which declares that if the Colonial Government itself undertakes to secure the carrying out of the treaties, before the passage of the new bill, the bill will be suspended. Lord Knutsford's measure is thus to a great extent a Coercion Act, in the interest of France.

The illustration on page 189 shows, in the foreground, the stages erected for drying the codfish. In April these stages are generally full, and the fisheries are then in full operation.

TRANSPORTING ROYAL MUMMIES.

(See Illustration.)

AN interval of over thirty centuries stretches between two remarkable journeys. Both were over the same route, and in both cases the most conspicuous feature was the burdens carried. They were the bodies of ancient kings and queens of Egypt, among which was that of the "Pharaoh who knew not Joseph," and who oppressed the Children of Israel. When his body was carried to the royal burying place which he had prepared for it in Thebes, the cities reared by the forced labors of the Hebrews, were in their meridian splendor. Obelisks and giant monoliths still reared their heads toward heaven. All Egypt was mourning; for the great Rameses II., the Sesostis of the Greeks, whom his subjects regarded as a god, was dead.

The other procession—that depicted in our illustration—is of recent date. Professor Maspero, the Director-General of the Bulak Museum, had for several years diligently sought the royal burial place. He was convinced that the mummies were in existence somewhere near ancient Thebes, but it was not until 1881 that he discovered a clue to the secret. The clue was followed, and after many months his search was crowned with success. Climbing the slope of the western mountain, a huge isolated rock was found, and behind this were stones and debris, which to his practiced eye had the appearance of being scattered by the hand of man rather than by nature. He put a force of laborers to work on the mass, and after long labor, the mouth of a vertical shaft six feet square and forty feet deep was uncovered. Descending the shaft a horizontal passage was found which after running westward some twenty-four feet turned abruptly northward. Following this the explorer came to a stone staircase leading into the heart of the mountain. Another short passage terminated in the mortuary-chamber twenty-three feet long and thirteen wide. Here were the precious bodies of kings, queens and priests. Beyond was another chamber in which were porcelain funeral offerings, trinkets and draperies and more bodies. The walls of these subterranean chambers were covered with carvings in relief representing processions, ceremonies and the scarabæus, the emblem of immortality.

Three hundred Arabs were at once engaged to remove the bodies. They were safely carried to the surface and then securely packed in sail-cloth and matting. When all was ready the long procession started, carrying across the plain of Thebes to the steamers awaiting them at Luxor, the bodies which had laid there undisturbed for three thousand years.

ROMA.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c

(Continued from page 174.)

An Apparition in the Soldiers' Church.

UNFORTUNATELY the next day was cloudy Margaret was invisible; and the others, left to their own devices, found their sight-seeing a little dull.

Italian skies are like spoiled children; they can be disagreeable enough, when they set about it; but the industrious Romans keep their streets so clean, that tourists need never be hindered by mud.

Camilla insisted that cloudy skies in Italy were brighter than the sunshiny ones of an English winter; and to her eye the gaily-colored umbrellas moving about were quite picturesque in effect—like gigantic butterflies.

The next day the skies had recovered from their sulkiness, and were as bright as though they had done nothing but smile since the dawn of creation. The young ladies had reached the street when Margaret asked about their wraps.

"Why, Cousin, what do we want with wraps?" asked Carolyn. "The sun is as hot as July."

"Let me go for zem," and Marie flitted back up the steps. "I am the smallest."

"Marie! Marie!" Margaret called after her. "Boggins will not let you in. She is in mortal terror of the Inquisition. You take the key."

They all laughed, and Camilla ran up to Marie with the door key.

"I don't see any use of wraps on such a bright morning," persisted Carolyn.

"Well, dear," replied Margaret, "it becomes my duty to open upon you a battery of reasons. Rome enjoys bad health, to use a Hibernicism; but it is owing mainly to the foolish behavior of tourists. There may be malaria; but I should think that where there are such oceans of it, some scientist could catch enough to get a hint of its identity. You know I looked up the health record when we were demolishing Uncle John's opposition to our coming. Few cities are as healthy as this."

"The tourists are to blame," said Camilla, with an indignant side nod. "All in perspiration in the sun, then plunging into a stone church, or museum, into which a sunbeam has never shone. They ought to know better! They get chilled to the bone: and colds, rheumatisms, and all manner of fevers break loose upon them."

A few steps brought them to the Pantheon: "The oldest, and best preserved bit of heathenism in Rome," remarked Margaret as they stood before the great structure, "in stone—I mean."

"Built by Agrippa," said Carolyn, "twenty-seven years before Christ."

"Just think of the wars that have surged about its base," remarked Margaret. "It makes our greatest buildings seem crude and new."

"Those old Romans built magnificently," said Camilla, with pride.

"So did the Egyptians and Assyrians ages earlier," said Margaret. "None but the Hebrews understood God's purpose to have the great, productive impulse express itself in thought, and law, and worship. So they built the world's religion, while the other piled up stone for time to pull down and pulverize."

"I would like to see this Pantheon reproduced," said Marie, "viz the gilt bronze roof, and the great columns, all the way around outside, and the costly marbles all over it, and the twelve great gods inside, and the colossal statues of Augustus and Agrippa each side of the grand gates. Oh, vat magnificence!"

"How these miserable bits of stone do hurt one's feet," said Margaret, as they walked around by the fountain and obelisk on the piazza in front of the church. "They always remind me of that alliterative word of Hawthorne's, 'a perpetual penitential pilgrimage.'"

"You American women should wear thicker-soled shoes," said Carolyn, with the emphasis of one who has hit the nail squarely for once."

"Right, dear, right. We will get our heads steadied down to common sense in dress after awhile, as our English cousins have done. How those old Romans must have robbed the Egyptians," she continued, turning toward the obelisk.

"Those obelisks are the stiff, livid fingers of dead religions," said Camilla, "pointing toward the clear heavens, in whose light all paganism baptized, and unbaptized, must ultimately vanish."

The Newfoundland Fisheries—The Cod-Fish Drying Stages.

"The new government has taken away the two little cupolas that Bernini put on the Pantheon," said Carolyn, "and that the Italian's called, 'Bernini's asses' ears.' For my part I don't see why they should." She looked a question at Camilla, but the only reply of that young lady was a slight shrug, which was little more than a tightening of the dorsal muscles that raised the shoulders just perceptibly, drew the head a trifle to one side, opened the palms and spread the fingers; but it gave in full her opinion of the difference between Anglo-Saxon and Italian taste.

"I wonder if there is any other building in the world lighted by just a hole in the roof," queried Carolyn, as they went inside the church.

"Open to the sky," said Camilla, looking up at the white clouds sailing through the blue heavens above the aperture; "like our souls, that the spiritual may have easy ingress. It is lovely by moonlight. I have often been here with my father. He loved dearly this old Pantheon. He used to say that though the majestic genius of those Romans built powerfully, they had to go down because they subverted the liberties of the people; and later systems of tyranny and superstition would have to give way, also; for the day must come when the strength of our people would come forth refined and spiritualized by its centuries of grinding—in moral grandeur that would do much to capture the world for the Right and True."

Carolyn listened politely to this long sentence, and Margaret, glowingly. Then the English girl led the way to the tomb of Victor Immanuel, remarking with pleasure that the soldiers had kept guard over it ever since the death of the king. "That band of iron up there," she said, "represents the iron crown of Lombardy."

"And here is another copy," said Camilla, pointing to a velvet cushion at her right hand, and reading enthusiastically the silver inscription by which it was encircled. "A Roma ci siamo, e ci resteremo."

"I don't quite catch the meaning," said Carolyn, looking hard at the letter.

"A free translation," returned Camilla, "makes it, 'Here we are in Rome, and here we will stay.' It became one of the watch-words of our war of independence."

"This is an artists' mausoleum," remarked Margaret, as they stood beside the grave of Raphael.

"There are artists in all the great churches in Italy," said Camilla proudly.

"Do you remember, Lyn," asked Margaret, "our reading about Matilda, the woman who established the temporal sovereignty of the popes?"

"Another Eve," said Camilla with a little frown.

"In that war," said the American girl, "the Pantheon was used as a fortress, and a strong one it must have been."

"A woman did that mischief," said Camilla, "and when my countrywomen are lifted from their low estate, they will make sure that it is undone—it has been a world of iniquity."

Leaving the Pantheon, the young ladies passed the little obelisk that Bernini placed on the elephant's back in the piazza before Santa Maria sopra Minerva, remarking only its whimsicalness.

"Pompey founded the temple of Minerva, that used to stand here," said Carolyn as if reciting a history lesson. "This is said to be the only fine Gothic church in Rome."

"Fine!" exclaimed Marie, her eye running over the plain front of the edifice. "It is horribly ugly."

"Here is where they used to have the imposing procession of the white mule," dutifully reported Carolyn, "The pope came in a glass coach, with a long train; and the people threw flowers over them."

"I fear zey would not do so now," said the French girl.

"The pope gave dowries to poor girls in this church once a year," Carolyn went on, in guide-book fashion. "They stood in two rows in front of the church. Fancy the poor things! Those who were going to be nuns wore white wreaths on their heads."

"Ze Count told me about zat," exclaimed Marie, trilling forth a merry, little laugh in which a child's sob seemed to have lost its way. "He said ze girls who vere to be nuns, got twice as much as ze ozzers. Ze church always gets all ze money. Ze church is varee reech, vile ze people starve and die in ignorance. Pere Jean says I must not mind ze Count, because his mozzers vos a Huguenot: but I would razer belief ze Count. He is varee good."

"St. Catharine of Sienna," said Margaret as they stopped before the high altar. "She has an honorable place of burial among their popes and magnates. She ought to have been an evangelist. She began to preach when she was only six years old. When she grew up she was a politician as well as preacher, like most of the distinguished Romanists, carrying on all manner of diplomatic negotiations."

"Ze church like ze good mozzers," remarked Marie, "gifs all her children ze liberty to do ze zings zey can."

"As long as they work only for her upbuilding," said Margaret. "Woe betide them if they attempt anything that she does not dictate. There can be no independent thinking under her rule."

A few minutes' walk brought the young ladies to the church of San Agostino.

"St. Monica, the mother of St. Augustine, is buried here," said Carolyn; "and there is a fresco of Isaiah by Raphael. This is one of the most popular Madonnas in Rome," pointing to the silver hearts and other trophies about the shrine of the Virgin.

"There used to be daggers hanging up all around here," said Camilla, "their owners had become tired of their use and had consecrated them to poor Mary. Under the new regime, since the people are free to use their tongue and pen, they don't depend upon the stiletto as they used to."

"Art critics claim," remarked Margaret "that these much-worshipped statues of Mary and Christ, were originally the execrable Agrippina and her little Nero, afterward the beastly tyrant."

In such pleasant converse the girls spent the hours wandering among the scenes of the stirring events of days long gone by until the evening shadows bade them return to their home. The next day was the Sabbath and it dawned upon Rome as sweet, and glad, and devout as among the New England hills.

"Tourists on week days," said Margaret, "but on Sunday, plain, honest Christians. We claim no indulgence for breaking the fourth commandment because we are out of sight of our church spires."

That evening while the rest went their ways to services in one church or another, Margaret took Boggins, and started for the Soldiers' Chapel on the via delle Coppelli.

The shops had been open all day, the people buying and selling almost as briskly as upon week days. Toward evening the streets had grown more quiet. Little carts had come in the morning with small, white, sharp-nosed dogs on the top of their loads, barking nervously as if afraid that their brown peasant masters would fall quite asleep, horses shaking their bright tassels, and jingling the bells on their collars: these had all gone back to the country. Noisy street peddlers had cried off their wares, or tired out their voices, if such a thing were possible. Crowds were on the street for an evening promenade, and a chaf about business, or affairs generally.

Margaret found the chapel well filled with soldiers, while a few ladies and gentlemen, evidently visitors, were seated at one side.

The preacher had been himself a soldier, and he spoke in loud, strong tones, as if giving the word of command, his illustrations being drawn from camp life. In the midst of the sermon the soldiers rose suddenly, their swords clicking against the benches, and their hands raised in salute. An officer of some rank had come in, and passing back of the men he had gone up the other side of the chapel to his place. Margaret did not notice his entrance but she saw his shoulders and the back of his head as he returned the salute, and the color left her face. He turned toward the preacher who had stopped speaking, as if making a request.

"No, you speak, please, Major." The young officer's voice was even and clear, well rounded by the habit of authority. "No, comrades, not here. We meet here only as brothers."

Margaret rose, and staggered out into the fresh air. The Major resumed his seat, quite unconscious that within a few feet of him was one in whom he was more interested than in all the world beside.

Boggins followed Margaret out, internally threatening to have the master telegraphed to at once that the malarial was getting the better of that poor, dear, silly, young American: and she always knew there could be no good o' their comin' off by themselves.

"Again that strange resemblance," thought Margaret in a confused way. There was no use thinking about it. She would put it out of her mind. She would not even speak of it to Camilla: but, oh, the torture of it all!

The next day the study and sight-seeing had to go on without her; while Boggins tormented poor Ann with a November drizzle of worry about that poor, dear child comin' down here to find a grave. She even went so far as to inquire the way to the Protestant cemetery. If she might be so bold; it might be a savin' o' time to know where the place was.

Camilla was sure that Margaret had seen Jerome: but she could not ask her: indeed, she feared to do so. She could hardly understand how such a fine, handsome fellow could remain so long heart-free in this land of brightness: Yet Anglo-Saxons had ways that bewildered her, quite as much as the modes of warfare practised by their ancestors had puzzled Julius Caesar.

After the rest had retired that night, Camilla stole softly into the maids' room shading her night-lamp with her hand.

"An' it is a ghost, or a bogie?" whispered Ann, her eyes wide with fright.

"Hush, girls. Don't make a noise. What are you afraid of?"

"Och! it's yerself, Miss Curmilly!" cried Ann. "It's not meself as is afraid of ghosts at all, at all. Of course they do be seen whin, as Boggins informs us, there's goin' to be a death. But these old stone-castles—stone floors, and everything,"—

"Like the Hinquision," threw in Boggins with doleful emphasis. "To be sure," Ann rattled on, "the purty babies with wings that a body sees on the ceilin', the last thing at night, ort to give a bit o' comfort if a body could help thinkin' they was the de-paired little ones, of which there must be a lot, where there's such a many left to mourn their loss."

Camilla laughed at Ann's oratory, which Boggins regarded as unseemly levity, asking in a dismal voice if Miss Margaret had a "more seriouser 'tack nor usual."

"When we come out o' the chapel she could hardly set one foot 'fore th' other. White as a ghost, and her hands as cold as ice. I thought mebbe I'd ort to git a cab, but then we was right here, as you might say. The fare is stupendous light; but there's no use o' wastin' it, it's malarial, Miss Carmilly."

"O, I hope not. What church did you go to with Miss Margaret?"

"It wa'n't a church, only a chapel."

"Were there any soldiers there?"

"O, yes; plenty of 'em, and not much else. They stood up and sung, as peaceable as anythin'; and then they bowed their heads while the man went through with what might 'a' been a prayer. I do not think it was Cath'lic, because Miss Margaret wouldn't be caught in no such a place, 'specially after dark. There wa'n't the dressin' and undressin', the bowin, and scrapin' that goes with their heathenish doins."

"What did the soldiers do?" asked Camilla. "Hadn't they done anything at all, any of them?"

"No; they looked all civil enough. Now I remember; there was one feller as come in after the man had got to goin' at such a awful rate. They all stood up, like you've seen a thing when you've touched a spring—it all goes at once. They held up their hands and let 'em drop again; he held up his hand. He did n't shake his fist at 'm. I'm positive 'bout that, for I didn't feel perfectly sure but he was agoin' to fight 'em all. He looked like he wer'n't one bit afraid to 'tack the lot; but he only said somethin' that nobody could understand. They all set down instantly and then Miss Margurt took ill; an' I don't know nothin' more 'bout the soldiers—nor care—neither. I'm abs'lutely sure the malarial, or somethin' 's goin' to be the death o' that poor dear."

(To be Continued.)

The Superior

remedy
for all diseases originating in impure blood;
the

MEDICINE

which may always be relied upon to give the best satisfaction,
is

AYER'S
Sarsaparilla
Cures others, will cure you

Send us $1.00 for sample of the

Victor Fountain Pen.

Guaranteed 14 Karat Gold. Can return if not satisfied.

WM. E. PIAGET & CO.,
301 Broadway, New York.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN. CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed
by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

Purifies the Blood

At the coming of spring the blood should be purified, as impurities which have been accumulating for months or even years, are liable to manifest themselves and seriously affect health. Hood's Sarsaparilla is undoubtedly the best blood purifier. It expels every taint of impurity, drives out scrofulous humors and germs of disease, and gives to the blood the quality and tone essential to good health.

N. B. If you make up your mind to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to take any other.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, $1; six for $5. Prepare only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.
100 Doses One Dollar.

JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT

Unlike any Other.

Originated by an Old Family Physician.
THINK OF IT.

In use over 40 YEARS in one Family.
DR. I. S. JOHNSON & Co.—It is sixty years since I first learned of this now celebrated remedy for the common ills of life—Johnson's Anodyne Liniment; I more than forty years I have used it in my family. I say (unasked by you) I regard it one of the best and safest remedies that can be found, used internal or external, in all cases it is claimed to relieve or cure O. H. INGALLS, Dea. 2d Baptist Ch., Bangor, Maine. Should have Johnson's Anodyne Liniment in every house for Croup, Cold, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cuts, Bruises, Sprains and Pains. Delays may cost a life. Relieves Cram, Complaints like magic. Price, 35 cts. post paid; 6 bottles, $2. Express paid, I. S. Johnson & Co., Boston, Mass.

BUY THE WRINGER THAT SAVED THE MOST LABOR IN OUR PURCHASE GEARS.
It saves half the labor of other wringers and costs but little more. Crank is attached to either roll.
EMPIRE Does not GREATLY WEAR the CLOTHES.
Solid White Rubber Rolls. Warranted.
Also "DAISY" and "VOLUNTEER" WRINGERS, Clothes Drying Bars, etc. Agents want everywhere. EMPIRE WRINGER CO., Auburn, N. Y.

DO YOU WANT TO REGET read and distribute same copies of a thirty different holiness papers and magazines of pure Bible and Wesleyan type, and aid in their general circulation, "Spreading scriptural holiness over these lands?" If so, send me a silver dime, your name and address will be printed on my Holiness Exchange Mail List, which goes to all publishers of holiness literature. Write name and address plain Address J. H. PADGETT, Printer, Ennis, Texas.

400 RECITATIONS
AND READINGS. We will send to any address receipt of 35 cents, a handsome book, bound in paper cover, and containing 400 of the best recitations issued. Address, J. S. OGILVIE, 57 Rose Street, New York.

BICYCLES FREE—To Boys and Girls
We have a plan by which a good Boy or Girl in every neighborhood can procure a "Little Giant Safety" free if willing to do a little work for us, send stamp full particulars address, FOWLER & WELLS CO., Pub 777 Broadway, New York.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Jour and Premium Supplement, sent free to address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia

AGENTS FOR the Life and Times of G. W. M. T. SHERMAN. By the popular Historian, Hon. J. T. Head Illustrated. Outfit, 75 cts.; now ready. Complete copy in ten days. E. B. TREAT, Publisher, New York.

BAKER'S BREAKFAST COCOA
Delicious, nourishing absolutely pure. Costing less than one cent a cup.

Sample Vial "RUBIFOAM" free by
E. W. HOYT & CO., Lowell, Mass.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK
American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct. Boston, St. Louis

LOVE FOR A CRIMINAL SON.
DR. GOODELL, of St. Louis, tells of young man who was a school-mate his when a boy, and after he grew up he became very dissipated, and then Dr. Goodell went back to his home in Vermont he found him in jail for murder. When the trial came it was proved that he had murdered five men. His loving mother sat by his side through all the trials. She sat there and heard witness after witness swear his life away. She would have given worlds if she could have saved the boy, but he was doomed to die. He was to be hung. That mother did all she could to get pardon, but the governor would not grant it. The day had arrived for execution. The broken-hearted mother begged to have the body of her son to bury him in her family lot. But the governor refused her that. She survived her son but a few months. She sent a petition from her dying bed to be buried alongside her son in the prison graveyard, but was refused. That mother did not know what a criminal that son was. He was her loved one. So it is with the vilest, basest sinner he begs to God. He is their Friend. He will take him, for he loves him as at mother loved her son.

ELECTRIC LIGHT IN THE HOLY LAND.
A DECIDED sensation has been caused in Jerusalem by the introduction of electric light into a new and surprising flour-mill lately started here by some German proprietors. The building in which the light has been introduced is near to the supposed site of Calvary, and close to the Damascus Gate. It need hardly be said that the Arabs and Jews are much puzzled to account for a light lamp in which there is no oil. Up to the present time, while gazing in wonder, they have been keeping a respectful distance.

FREE TO LADIES
A MODERN HYGIENIC.
A BOOK CONTAINING ARTICLES ON
SENSIBLE DRESSING.
NOT RADICAL DRESS REFORM
By Caroline M. Dodson, M. D., of Philadelphia, President of National Woman's Health Association of America; Oscar B. Moss, M. D., of Kansas City; Mrs. Annie Jennings-Miller, of New York; and other eminent writers upon this important subject.
A HANDSOME PAMPHLET BOOK
ILLUSTRATED WITH FINE ENGRAVINGS OF
BEAUTIFUL WOMEN
SENT BY MAIL. POSTAGE PREPAID.
ON RECEIPT OF POSTAL CARD REQUEST.
JEO. FROST & CO. 31 BEDFORD ST. BOSTON.

DOBBIN'S
EDUCATIONAL and SCRIPTURAL CARDS.
Learn the books of the Bible by using Dobbin's Educational and Scriptural Cards. An interesting and instructive game. If your stationer does not keep a, send 30 cents for sample package to
M. C. DOBBINS, Plainfield, N. J.
MUSICAL.
METROPOLITAN CONSERVATORY.
Private instruction in all branches, also sur- rounds pupils with superior advantages in Class- ical, Lectures, Concerts, and the Languages. Un- equalled boarding privileges for lady pupils. Dud- ick and Albert Ross Parsons heading de- partments. Opens Sept. 15. Pupils received at time. Book sent free.
19 and 21 East 14th St., New York.

SELL MUSIC
We will pay a liberal salary to Agents who will take subscrip- tion to Woodward's Musical Monthly. Send four cents receive sample copy with five complete pieces of latest and instrumental music. Address
WOODWARD'S MUSICAL MONTHLY,
843 Broadway, New York.

SOMETHING TO LIVE FOR
THE LITTLE ONES. YOU MAY BE WEARY ENOUGH OF LIFE, BUT YOUR CHILDREN ARE NOT, AND YOU OWE SOMETHING TO THEM.
IF SOME DRAINING DISEASE SAPS YOUR VITALITY IT IS YOUR DUTY TO DO ALL YOU CAN TO GET RID OF IT. YOU HAVE NOT DONE THIS IF YOU GIVE UP TO YOUR DEPRESSION WHILE ANY POSSIBLE MEANS OF RELIEF REMAINS UN- TRIED. HERE'S A SOURCE OF REVITALIZATION AND RELIEF THAT YOU CAN ATTEMPT WITH CONFIDENCE. BECAUSE IT IS NO LONGER NEW--IT HAD ITS INTRODUCTION 21 YEARS AGO, AND IS INDORSED WITH SIGNED TESTIMONY BY THOSE WHOM IT HAS CURED. 200 PAGES OF TESTIMONY BESIDES A QUARTERLY REVIEW FULL OF IT. BOTH SENT ENTIRELY FREE OF CHARGE TO ANY ADDRESS. COMPOUND OXYGEN IS VITALIZED OZONE. IT IS CHARGED WITH ELECTRICITY. YOU INHALE IT. AT ONCE A GENIAL GLOW OF RETURNING STRENGTH PER- VADES THE SYSTEM, AND AS A RESULT A CONDITION OF ROBUST VITALITY IS INDUCED THAT REMAINS WHEN THE INHALATION OF COMPOUND OXYGEN IS DISCONTINUED. THE BEST WAY TO SETTLE YOUR CONSUMPTION OR NEU- RALGIA, YOUR RHEUMATISM OR CATARRH, IS TO GET STRONG. COMPOUND OXYGEN MAKES YOU STRONG.
SEND FOR THE BOOK. YOU GET IT FREE OF CHARGE. ADDRESS
DRS. STARKEY & PALEN, No. 1523 ARCH ST., PHILADELPHIA, PA.
120 SUTTER ST., SAN FRANCISCO, CAL. 68 CHURCH ST., TORONTO, CANADA.

ENGLISH DECORATED
Dinner Set, No. 45, 112 Pieces.
Premium with an order of $20.00.
Packed and delivered at depot for $9.00 cash.

The Breath of Spring is in the Air.
Time to practice EASTER MUSIC, is it not?
Send for our Fine List of Carols, Anthems, &c., o- for Easter Alleluias [5 cts., 50 cts. per doz.,] Rosar- bel, or Our Easter Offering [15 cts., $1.44 doz.,] a Cantata by Lewis.

MUSICAL SOCIETIES
should wind up the season by practicing such Can- tatas as Don Munio [1.50, $13.50 doz.,] Wreck of Hesperus [35 cts., $2.40 doz.,] 91st Psalm [60 cts., $5.40 doz.,] Ballard. [Send for our list of 150 Can- tatas.]

FAIRS AND EXHIBITIONS
are made successful by introducing easy Cantatas, like Dairy Maid's Supper [20 cts., $1.80 doz.,] Lewis, or Garden of Singing Flowers [40 cts., $3.60 doz.,] or Rainbow Festival [20 cts., $1.80 doz.,] Lewis.

BOYS and GIRLS
who sing will be delighted to take part in the brilliant flower cantata, New Flora's Festival [40 cts., $3.60 doz.,] New Flower Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.,] Kingdom of Mother Goose [25 cts., $2.18 doz.,] Gipsy Queen [60 cts., $5.40 doz.,] Send for lists. Much attractive Exhibition Music is found in School Collections.

Children's School Songs [35 cts., $3.60 doz.,] Golden Boat [50 cts.,] charming action songs by Mrs. L. O. Chant, First Steps in Song Reading [30 cts., $3.00 doz.,]

Any Book mailed, post paid, for retail price.
OLIVER DITSON COMPANY, Boston.
C. H. DITSON & Co., 867 Broadway, New York.

Sunday School Music.
The Bright Array. The latest book by the favor- ite authors, ROBERT LOWRY and W. H. DOANE. Price, $30 per 100 copies. 35 cents each if by mail.
Select Songs. By F. N. FLOUBERT, D. D. 344 Hymns and Tunes for use where one book is desired for Prayer Meetings and the Sunday School. Cloth covers. $40 per 100 copies.
Winnowed Songs. By IRA D. SANKEY. 257 New and Selected Sunday School Songs. Just issued. $35 per 100. 40 cents each by mail.
A complete Catalogue and Specimen Pages sent on request.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.
81 Randolph St., Chicago. 76 East 9th St., New York.
THE HOUSEWIFE 4 months on trial for 10cts.
If you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.
HOUSEWIFE PUBLISHING CO., New York City
Improved EXCELSIOR INCUBATOR
Will hatch larger percentage of fertile eggs at less cost than any other hatcher. Send 6c for illus Cata. GEO. M. STANLEY, Quincy, Ill.

OR we give this set as a Premium to those who get up a Club of $20.00 for our Teas, Spices and Extracts. We are Importers of Tea, Coffee and Crockery, and sell direct to Consumers. We want YOU to send for our 120-page Price and Premium List. It tells the whole story. Costs you nothing. Will interest and pay you.
We have hundreds of other sets, Plain and Decorated.
THE LONDON TEA COMPANY,
805 Washington Street, Boston.

THE NEW MODEL "HALL."

A PERFECT TYPEWRITER. BEST MANIPULATOR. TERMS TO AGENTS LIBERAL. PORTABLE. INEXPENSIVE. WRITES ALL LANGUAGES. Read Mr. Howell's Opinion.
"I wish to express my very great satisfaction with the Hall typewriter. Impressions and alignment are both more perfect than any other typewriter that I know, and it is simply a pleasure to use it. It is delightfully simple and manageable. (Signed) W. D. HOWELLS.
Send for Catalogue and Specimens of Work. Address N. TYPEWRITER CO., 10 Temple Pl., Boston.

THE DOLLAR TYPEWRITER
THIS IS THE ABCDEFGHI
TYPE USED: $1
A perfect and practical Type Writing machine for only ONE DOLLAR. Exactly like cut; regular Remington type; does the same quality of work; takes a fool's cap sheet. Complete with paper holder, automatic feed, metal type wheel & locking roll. It manifolds & uses copying ink; in fact does all of the work of a $100 machine. Speed, 15 to 25 words a minute. Size, 3x4x9 inches; weight, 12 oz. MENTION THIS PAPER. Satisfaction guaranteed. Circulars free. AGENTS WANTED. Sent by express for $1.00; by mail, 15c extra for postage. R. H. INGERSOLL & BRO., 65 Cortlandt St., N.Y. City.

TYPEWRITERS.
Largest like establishment in the world. First-class Second-hand Instruments at half new prices. Unprejudiced advice given on all makes. Machines sold on monthly payments. Any Instru- ment manufactured shipped, privilege to examine. EXCHANGING A SPECIALTY. Wholesale prices to dealers. Illustrated Catalogues Free.
TYPEWRITER HEADQUARTERS, { 70 Broadway, New York. { 144 La Salle St., Chicago.

This Week in Silks.
ON THE MAIN FLOOR:
We exhibit a beautiful collection of Rich Lyons Novelties in Damas Barre, Damas Noud, Damas Diagonal, Damas Barre Ondule, Chevron, Moire, Taffeta Glace Diagonal, and other exclusive Woven and Broche Effects.
China and Japan Silks in Self Colored, Monotone and Jardinere Figures, in Black and Colored Grounds—Bengaline de Soie, Duchesse, Taffetas, etc., for Street and Evening Costumes.
IN THE BASEMENT:
500 pieces of India and China Silks, in a great variety of designs, from 50 to 75 cents a yard. 200 pieces, representing fifty different colorings of 22 inch Plain Indias, at 45 cents; 150 pieces of 24 inch, at 65 cents.
Washable Silks and other Fabrics es- pecially suited to the season, at exceedingly low prices.

James McCreery & Co
Broadway, cor. Eleventh St.,
NEW YORK.

PERFECT FITTING DRESSSES.
DRESSMAKING SIMPLIFIED.
Any Lady Can now Learn to Cut Perfect-Fitting Dresses.
Patented 1879-1885, 1885-1886
No one using a Chart or Square can compete with The McDowell Garment Drafting Machine in Cutting Stylish, Graceful and Perfect-Fitting Garments. Easy to Learn, Rapid to Use, Fits any Form, Follows every Fashion. An invention as Useful as the Sewing Ma- chine.
Free 30 days to test at your own home. Send for Illustrated Circular. THE McDOWELL CO., 6 West 14th Street, New York City.
We know the advertisers to be thoroughly reliable, and that their machine is a really wonderful invention.—Editor.

ART EMBROIDERING PATTERNS.
Largest outfit ever offered, containing 80 new and large designs, one alphabet with daisy 2 inch, one plain 1 1-2 inch. Price, $1.00. Illustrated catalogue of 2000 different patterns, price 15 cents.
Imported perforating machine for sale.
A. BLIQUEZ, 313 Canal St., New York

THE OPEN WINDOW.
A Monthly Magazine, issued by
THE SHUT-IN-SOCIETY
for the benefit of invalids. The object of the Society is to relieve the weariness of the sick-room, by inter- change of letters, and other tokens of remembrance.
TERMS OF OPEN WINDOW: To Associates, $1.00 per year; 50 cents to invalid members. Send for sample copy, to Secretary,
MRS. HELEN E. BROWN, 146 E. 52d St. New York City.

P RINTING PRESSES
For boy or man as an educator or as a source of amusement or income at a small expense get one of our JOSEPH WATSON, 25 Murray St., N. Y. City.
Specimen Book of type, cuts, &c., 5 cents. Circular sent free. Amateur Printers' Guide Book, 15 cents.

WE WANT AGENTS
WILMOT CASTLE & CO. ROCHESTER N.Y.
EARN 100 DOLLARS PER MONTH
BEECHAM'S PILLS cure bilious and nervous ills. BEECHAM'S PILLS cure sick-headache.

HOPEFULLY WAITING.

Blessed are they that are Homesick, for they shall come at last to the Father's House.—Heinrich Stilling.

Nor as you meant, O learned man and good,
Do I accept thy words of hope and rest;
God, knowing all, knows what for me is best,
And gives me what I need, not what He could,
Nor always as I would!
I shall go to the Father's House and see
Him and the Elder Brother face to face,—
What day or hour I know not. Let me be Steadfast in work, and earnest in the race,
Not as a homesick child, who all day long
Whims at its play, and seldom speaks in song.

If for a time some loved one goes away
And leaves us our appointed work to do,
Can we to him or to ourselves be true,
In mourning his departure day by day,
And so our work delay?
Nay, if we love and honor, we shall make
The absence brief by doing well our task,—
Not for ourselves, but for the dear one's sake;
And at his coming only of him ask
Approval of the work, which most was done,
Not for ourselves, but our beloved one!

Our Father's House, I know, is broad and grand;
In it how many, many mansions are!
And far beyond the light of sun and star
Four little ones of mine through that fair land
Are walking hand in hand!
Think you I love not, or that I forget
These of my loins? Still this world is fair,
And I am singing while my eyes are wet
With weeping in this balmy summer air;
I am not homesick, and the children here
Have need of me, and so my way is clear!

I would be joyful as my days go by,
Counting God's mercies to me. He who bore
Life's heaviest Cross is mine for evermore;
And I, who wait His coming, shall not I
On His sure word rely?
So if sometimes the way be rough, and sleep
Be heavy for the grief He sends to me,
Or at my waking I would only weep,—
Let me be mindful that these things must be,
To work His blessed will until He come
And take my hand and lead me safely home.
—A. D. F. Randolph.

J. E. JEWETT, Bookseller, 77 Bible House, New York, will furnish the above poem in leaflet form at twenty cents per hundred. A Sample Packet of 50 leaflets assorted (no two alike), will be sent post-paid, for ten cents or 100 for twenty cents. Postage stamps taken.

The superiority of Hood's Sarsaparilla is due to the tremendous amount of brain work and constant care used in its preparation. Try one bottle and you will be convinced of its superiority.

What man, woman, or child is there that does not admire flowers and beautiful plants? But few have any idea of the magnitude the business of growing them for seed or sale may become unless intimately connected with the business. The case of John Lewis Childs of Floral Park, Queens county, N. Y., fully illustrates this. He has some of the most beautifully located grounds in the country situated as they are upon the most for the picturesque Long Island and but a little over twelve miles from New York and Brooklyn. By strict integrity and attention to business Mr. Childs has gathered a list of customers which takes in not only this country but China, Japan and Australia, besides all parts of Europe. After viewing his establishment it is easy to believe that it is one of the largest for growing and sale of seeds and plants by retail in the country. Mr. Childs' annual catalogue is handsome and useful. It gives an extremely large list of ornamental flowering plants and shrubs to select from, and will suit the most fastidious.

When Baby was sick, we gave her Castoria.
When she was a Child, she cried for Castoria.
When she became Miss, she clung to Castoria.
When she had Children, she gave them Castoria.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA COMPANY

Set, Dinner Set, Gold Band Moss Rose Toilet Set, Watch, Brass Lamp, Castor, or Webster's Dictionary. 3 1/2 lbs. Fine Tea by Mail on receipt of $2.

THE GREAT AMERICAN TEA CO., P. O. Box 289, 31 and 33 Vesey Street, New York.

GOOD NEWS TO LADIES.

Greatest offer. Now's your time to get orders for our celebrated Teas, Coffees, and Baking Powder, and secure a beautiful Gold Band or Moss Rose China Tea Set.

$6

A DAY AND OUTFIT FREE! AGENTS WANTED EVERYWHERE! Grandest Money making business ever offered. A Golden Harvest for the next 3 months. A Brand New Article. Everyone buys. $75 per month Salary and Expenses to competent men. Also Team furnished free. Sample case of goods and full particulars free. Don't fail to write to-day.

Address, STANDARD SILVER WARE CO., Boston, Mass.

RHEUMATISM I will mail free to any sufferer a 32-page pamphlet, which tells what Rheumatism really is, the cause of the pain, and how to obtain a cure. Address F. W. Kimball, 3 Union Square, New York.

OUR NEW 1891 FLOWER SEED OFFER.

A Magnificent Collection of FLOWER SEEDS 200 Varieties, FREE!

An Unparalleled Offer by an Old-Established and Reliable Publishing House! The Ladies' World is a monthly 16-page, 64-column illustrated paper for ladies and the family circle. It is devoted to stories, poems, ladies' fashions, work, art, domestic needlework, home decoration, housekeeping, fashions, hygiene, juvenile reading, etiquette, etc. To introduce this charming ladies' paper into 100,000 homes where it is not already taken, we now make the following colossal offer: Upon receipt of only 12 Cents in silver or stamps, we will send The Ladies' World for Three Months, and to each subscriber we will also send Free and post paid, a large and magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, including Parrot, Yucca, Chrysanthemum, Aster, Phlox, Drummondii, Balsam, Cypress Vine, Digitalis, Double Zinnia, Pinks, etc., etc. Remember, twelve cents pays for the paper three months and this entire magnificent Collection of Choice Flower Seeds, put up by a first-class Seed House and guaranteed fresh and reliable. No lady can afford to miss this wonderful opportunity. We guarantee every subscriber many times the value of money sent, and will refund your money and make you a present of both seeds and paper if you are not satisfied. Ours is an old and reliable publishing house, endorsed by all leading newspapers. Do not confound this offer with the cheap penny schemes of unscrupulous persons. Write to-day—don't put it off. Six subscriptions and six Seed Collections sent for 60 cts.

SPECIAL OFFER! To any lady answering this advertisement and naming the paper in which she saw it, we will send free, in addition to all the above, one package of the new and popular imported Tropicolum Loblianium (assorted), containing "Lucifer," "Spitfire," "Vesuvius," and other luminaries of high degree, bright and highly colored. An abundant bloomer and easily cultivated. A beautiful climbing flower for vases, hanging baskets, old stumps, etc., most glorious in effect. S. H. MOORE & CO., 27 Park Place, New York.

Three Great Books FOR RELIGIOUS READERS.

Dr. Strong's Our Country. More than 130,000 sold. Paper 25 cts. cloth 50 cts.

One of the most powerful books that have come from the American press during the present century. It portrays America's material, social and religious condition and tendency, and points out the perils which threaten her future. The wide circulation of this book has given an extraordinary impulse to the work of holding America for the highest political, social and religious, national life.

"Words are feeble in the recommendation of this book."—Pulpit Treasury.

Dr. Pierson's Crisis of Missions.

Paper, 35 cents, cloth $1.25

"One of the most important books of the cause of Foreign Missions, and through them, to some Missions also, which ever has been written. It should be in every library and every household. It should be read, studied, taken to heart and prayed over."—Congregationalist.

Dr. Cuyler's How to be a Pastor.

Cloth, 75 cents.

"The fruit of large native sense, long experience, wide observation, and devout consecration."—Congregationalist.

"If any man living understands the subject of this little book it is Dr. Cuyler."—Independent.

"Ought to be read by all pastors, young or old."—N. Y. Tribune.

Send for our list of books for practical Christian Workers.

The above books mailed postpaid on receipt of price by

THE BAKER & TAYLOR CO., Publishers.

740 & 742 Broadway, New York.

JUST PUBLISHED.

The Land Where Jesus Christ Lived.

A TALE FOR THE YOUNG.

By HESTER DOUGLASS. 12mo, cloth, $1.00.

"Worthy of the highest commendation. It is in every way admirable. With great skill in the use of a natural style, the author makes the Holy Land very real to the child-mind."—Sunday School Journal.

Sent post-paid on receipt of price.

THOS. NELSON & SONS,

33 East 17th Street, New York.

WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?

The Beautiful Shield here represented is made from extra heavy cardboard in maroon and dark green, with embossed silver letters, beveled and silver edge, 5 1/2 x 3 1/2 inches, corded and ready to hang on the wall. It is a perfect gem. Price 15 cts. each, or 8 for $1.00 post-paid.

I also have a 16-page tract, giving interesting incidents, showing how many a sorrow would be alleviated, how many a wanderer brought back, how many a friend gained, how many an enemy reconciled, how many a perplexity resolved, by the simple reference of all actions and feelings to the standard—"WHAT WOULD JESUS DO?"

A sample, one each of the above (Shield and Tract) will be mailed post-paid for 15 cts.

J. E. JEWETT, Publisher, 77 Bible House, New York.

"A Thing of Beauty is a Joy Forever."

in order to introduce our Art works, we will send, post paid, upon receipt of 50 cents our elegant water color "The War of the Roses" size 15x20 inches mounted with a heavy mat, all ready for hanging. No frame is required. This is our price to the wholesale dealers, the retail price in Art stores being $1.50. This offer is to last for a limited time only. The publisher of this paper recommends this beautiful work

"THE WAR OF THE ROSES."

The original of this picture was painted especially for the Manhattan Art Co., and the figures were copied from models of little children in long skirts and large Gainsborough hats and caps so much in favor at the present time. Instead of a sanguinary scene in the great battle between the houses of York and Lancaster, which hundreds of years ago threw the whole English nation into a bloody and destructive civil war, we have a mimic battle in which white and red roses are the missiles scattered by the chubby fists of laughing babyhood, and the air is filled with the charming music of childish glee. This is a picture which, like love, makes the whole world akin. Everyone should have a copy of this beautiful picture.

MANHATTAN ART CO., Offices, 150 Nassau Street, N. Y. City.

WE SELL DIRECT TO FAMILIES

And make it easy for you to buy of us no matter where you live

$35

ORGANS

$500

$150

PIANOS

$1500

Yes, my dear, your Marchal & Smith Piano is a delightful one, the tone is so sweet and pure, the action so fairy-like, and the finish so elegant that nothing is left to wish for. Their Organs, too, are as sweet and beautiful as their Pianos.

I wrote and told them just what I wanted, and they sent it to me, agreeing to take it back and pay the freight both ways if I did not like it, but I could not be better pleased if I had a thousand to choose from. They send their catalogue free to every one who wishes to buy.

ESTAB. 1866
INCOR. 1871

MARCHAL & SMITH PIANO CO.
235 East 21st Street, New York.

Agents Wanted,
FOR
DR. TALMAGE'S LIFE OF CHRIST, ENTITLED
From Manger to Throne

Embracing a new life of Jesus the Christ, and a history of Palestine and its People, including Dr. Talmage's account of his journey to, through, and from the Christ-land.

ILLUSTRATED with over four hundred superb engravings of the people, places and scenery of the Holy Land by distinguished artists, and forming a beautiful and complete Picturesque Bible Land.

Among the other illustrations are accurate copies of nearly Two Hundred FAMOUS PAINTINGS OF THE OLD MASTERS which have so long enriched the Galleries and Cathedrals of Europe, but were never before published in America. Also a Grand Panorama of the Crucifixion, in twelve colors, and ten feet in length, showing the city of Jerusalem, the surrounding country, and the people and their costumes as they were on the day of the world's greatest tragedy.

"From Manger to Throne" Dr. Talmage's latest and greatest work is published in one large quarto volume of over 600 pages, size 8 1/2 by 10 3/4 inches, equal to 1200 pages of the usual size.

STYLES OF BINDING AND PRICES.
Style A—Fine Silk Cloth, - - - $3.75
Style B—Half Morocco, - - - 4.50
Style C—Turkey Morocco, - - - 5.50
Style D—Special de Luxe Edition, 10.00

Liberal terms to agents if you mention THE CHRISTIAN HERALD when you write.

BRYAN, TAYLOR & CO.,
157 Broadway, New York.

DONALD KENNEDY
of Roxbury, Mass., says

My Medical Discovery seldom hold of two people alike! Why? Because no two people have the same weak spot. Beginning at the head it goes searching through the body for any hidden humor. Nine times out of ten it finds it. Perhaps its only a little sediment left nerve or in a gland; the Medical Discovery slides it right along, and you find happiness from the first bottle. Perhaps it's a big sediment or open sore, well, somewhere, ready to fight. The Medical Discovery begins the fight, and you find it pretty hard, but soon you thank it for making something that has reached weak spot. Price $1.50. Sold by Druggist in the United States and Canada.

The Most Reliable For Infants & Invalids
Not a medicine, but a prepared Food, adapted to weakest stomach. 4 size Pamphlets free. Write for (on every label), Palm

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

Entered according to Act of Congress in the year 1891, by LOUIS KLOPSCH, in the office of the Librarian of Congress at Washington.

Edited by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

VOLUME XIV., No. 13.
Offices, BIBLE HOUSE, N. Y.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 1891.

PRICE FIVE CENTS
Annual Subscription, $1.50

NED WRIGHT, THE JERRY MAULEY OF LONDON.
Portraits of Evangelist Wright and Mrs. Wright—A "Thieves' Supper" Given by the Converted Pugilist.

THE SPLIT MAUSOLEUM.

DR. TALMAGE'S EASTER SERMON PREACHED AT "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD" SERVICE IN THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC, NEW YORK, LAST SUNDAY EVENING, MARCH 29, 1891.

Christ's Grave a Centre of Stupendous Interests—The Grave of a King—Its Surroundings—The Group at the Interment—The Seal on the Door—The Eventful Conflict—The Lessons of that Tomb—Mortuary Honors no Atonement for Wrong—The Mockeries in Poets' Corner—Adornments Appropriate for a Tomb—Dignity of Unpretentious Obsequies—The Dead Cannot be Kept Down—The Resurrection from the Sea.

"Come, see the place where the Lord lay." Matt. 28: 6.

VISITING any great city we are not satisfied until we have also looked at its cemetery. We examine all the styles of cenotaph, mausoleum, sarcophagus, crypt, and sculpture. Here lies buried a statesman, yonder an orator, here a poet, out there an inventor, in some other place a great philanthropist. But with how much greater interest and with more depth of emotion we look upon our family plot in the cemetery. In the one case, it is a matter of public interest; in the other, it is a matter of private and heartfelt affection. But around the grave at which we halt this morning, there are gathered all kinds of stupendous interest. At this sepulchre, I have to tell you, in this sepulchre there was buried a King, a Conqueror, an Emancipator, a Friend, a Brother, a Christ. Monarch of the universe, but bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, and sorrow of our sorrow, and heart of our heart. "Come, see the place where the Lord lay."

It has for surroundings, the manor in the suburbs of Jerusalem, a manor owned by a wealthy gentleman by the name of Joseph. He was one of the court of seventy who had condemned Christ, but I think he had voted in the negative, or being a timid man, had been absent at the time of the casting of the vote. He had laid out the parterre at great expense. It was a hot climate and I suppose there were broad-branched trees and winding paths underneath them, while here the waters rippled over the rock into a fishpool, and yonder the vines and the flowers clambered over the wall, and all around there were the beauties of kiosk and arboriculture. After the fatigues of the Jerusalem court-room, how refreshing to come out in these suburbs botanical and pomological.

I walk a little farther on in the parterre and I come across a cluster of rocks, and I see on them the marks of a sculptor's chisel. I come still closer and I find that there is a subterranean recess, and I walk down the marble stairs, and come to a portico, over the doorway—an architecture of fruits and flowers chiselled by the hand of the sculptor. I go into the portico and on either side there are rooms, two, or four, or six rooms of rock; in the walls, niches each niche large large enough to hold a dead body. One of these rooms of rock is especially wealthy with sculpture. It was a beautiful and charming spot. Why all this? The fact was that Joseph, the owner of the parterre, of that wealthy manor, had recognized the fact that he could not always walk those gardens, and he sought this as his own last resting-place. What a beautiful plot in which to wait for the resurrection!

Mark well the mausoleum in the rock. It is to be the most celebrated tomb in all the ages; Catacombs of Egypt, tomb of Napoleon, Mahal Taj of India, nothing compared with it. Christ had just been murdered and his body must be thrown out to the dogs and the ravens as was customary with crucified bodies, unless there be prompt and effective hindrance. Joseph, the owner of the mausoleum, begs for the body of Christ, and he takes and washes the poor and mutilated frame from the blood and the dust, and shrouds it and perfumes it.

I think embalment was omitted. When in olden times they wished to embalm a dead body, the priest with some pretension of medical skill would show the point between the ribs where the incision was to be made. Then the operator would come and make the incision, and then run for his life else he would be slain for violating the dead body. Then the other priests would come with salt of nitre and cassia, and wine of palm tree, and complete the embalment. But I think in this case embalment was omitted lest there be more excitement and another riot. The funeral advances. Present, Joseph, the owner of the mausoleum; Nicodemus, who brought the flowers, and the two Marys. Heavy burden on the shoulders of two men as they carry the body of Christ down the marble stairs and into the portico and lift the dead weight to the level of the niche in the rock, and push the body of Christ into the only pleasant resting-place it ever had. These men coming forth close the door of rock against the recess. The government, afraid that the disciples would steal the body of Christ and play resurrection, put upon the door the seal of the Sanhedrim, the violation of that seal, like the violation of the seal of the United States Government, or of the British Government, always followed with severe penalties.

A regiment of soldiers from the Tower of Antonio is detailed to guard that mausoleum. At the door of that tomb, a fight took place which decided the question for all grave-yards and cemeteries. Sword of lightning against sword of steel. Angel of God against the military. The body in the crypt begins to move in its shroud of fine linen and slides down upon the pavement, moves through the portico, appears in the doorway, comes up the marble steps. Christ having left his mortuary attire behind him, comes forth in the garb of a workman as I take it, from the fact that the women mistook him for the gardener.

THE ENTOMBMENT.

There and then was shattered the tomb so that it can never be rebuilt. All the trowels of earthly masonry cannot mend it. Forever and forever it is a broken tomb. Death that day taking the side of the military received a horrible cut under the angel's spear of flame, and must himself go down at the last—the King of Terrors disappearing before the King of Grace. "The Lord is risen." Hosanna! Hosanna!

O weep no more, your comforts slain,
The Lord is risen, he lives again.

When one of the old Christians was dying he said he saw in the sky the letter "V," and he said: "I cannot understand what that is. I see against the sky; it is the letter 'V.'" A Christian standing beside him said "I know what it means; that letter 'V' stands for 'victory.'" I gather up all these flowers to-day, and I strew them over the graves of your Christian dead in the letter "V" for "victory," "R" for "resurrection," "T" for "triumph," "H" for "Heaven." "The Lord is risen." Hosanna!

While standing around the place where the Lord lay, I am impressed with the fact that mortuary honors cannot atone for wrongs to the living. If they could have afforded Christ such a costly sepulchre they could have afforded him a decent earthly residence. Will they give a piece of marble to the dead Christ when they might have given a soft pillow to the living Christ. If they had put half the expense of that mausoleum in the making of Christ's life on earth comfortable, the story would not have been so sad. He wanted bread, they gave him a stone. Christ, like every other benefactor of the world, was better appreciated after he was dead. Westminster Abbey and monumental Greenwood are to a certain extent the world's attempts by mortuary honors to atone for neglects to the living. Poets' Corner in Westminster Abbey an attempt to pay for the sufferings of Grub Street. I go into that Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey and there I find the grave of Handel, the musician from whose music we hear to-day, as it goes down reverberating through the ages. While I stand at the costly tomb of Handel, I cannot forget the fact that his fellow-musicians tried to destroy him with their discords. I go a little further in the Poets' Corner of Westminster Abbey and I find the grave of John Dryden, the great Poet. Costly monument, great mortuary honors, but I can not forget the fact that at seventy years of age he wrote about the oppressions of misfortune and that he made a contract for a thousand verses at sixpence a line. I go a little further on in the Poets' Corner and I find the grave of Samuel Butler, the author of "Hudibras." Wonderful monument, costly mortuary honors. Where did he die? In a garret. I move further on in the Poets' Corner, and I find the grave of a poet of whom Waller wrote: "An old school-master by the name of John Milton has written a tedious volume on the fall of man. If its length be no virtue, it has none." I go a little further on in the Poets' Corner and I find the grave of Sheridan. Alas! for Sheridan. Poor Sheridan! Magnificent mortuary honors. What a pity it was he could not have discounted that monument for a mouthful of something to eat! O, unfilial children, give your old parents less tombstone and more blankets, less funeral and more bedroom. Five per cent of the money now expended at Burns' banquets would have made the great Scotch poet comfortable and kept him from being almost harried to death by the drudgery of an exciseman. Horace Greeley, abused while he lived—going out to his tomb was followed by the President of the United States and the leading men of the army and the navy. Some people could not say bitter enough things about him while he lived; all the world rose up to do him honor when he died. Massachusetts at the tomb of Charles Sumner, tried to atone for the ignominious resolutions with which her legislature denounced the living senator. It was too late. The costly monument at Springfield, Illinois, cannot pay for Booth's bullet. Costly mortuary honors on the banks of Lake Erie—honors that cost between $200,000 and $300,000—cannot pay for the assassination of James A. Garfield. Do justice to the living. All the justice you do you will have to do this side the gates of the necropolis. The dead cannot wake up to count the number of carriages in the procession, or see the polish on the Aberdeen granite, or to read the words of epitaphal commemoration. Costly mausoleum of the gentleman in the suburbs of Jerusalem cannot atone for Bethlehem's manger and Calvarean cross and Pilate's ruffian judiciary.

SEALING THE STONE.

Again! Standing in this place where the Lord lay, I am impressed with the fact that floral and sculptural ornamentation are appropriate for the places of the dead. We are all glad that in the short time of the Saviour's inhumation he lay amid flowers and sculpture. I cannot quite understand what I see in the newspapers where amid the announcements of obsequies the friends request "send no flowers."—Why, there is no place so appropriate for flowers as the casket of the departed. If your means allow—I repeat, if your means allow—let there be flowers on the casket, flowers on the bier, flowers on the grave. Put them on the row; it means coronation. Put them in the hand; it means victory. Christ was buried in a parterre. Christ was buried in a garden. Flowers are types of resurrection. Death is sad enough anyhow. Let conservatory and arboretum do all they can in the way of alleviation. Your little girl loved flowers while she was alive. Put them in her hands, now that she cannot go forth and pluck flowers for herself. On sunny days twist a garland for her still heart. Brooklyn has no grander glory than her Greenwood, nor Boston than her Mount Auburn, nor Philadelphia than her Laurel Hill, nor Cincinnati than her Spring Grove, nor San Francisco than her Lone Mountain. What shall I say of those country graveyards where the vines have fallen down and the slab is slant and the mound is caved in, and the grass is the pasture ground for the sexton's cattle. Are your father and mother of no little account you have no more respect than that for their bones? Some day gather together and straighten up the fence and lift the slab, and sink up the mound, and tear at the weeds and plant the rubus. After awhile, you yourself will want to lie down to the last slumber. If you have no regard for the bones of your ancestors, your children will have no deference for your ones. Do you say these relics are of no importance? You will see of how much importance they are when the archangel takes out his trumpet.

Turn all your graveyards into gardens. Standing in this place where the Lord lay, I am also impressed with the dignity of unpretending obsequies. Joseph that day was mourner, sexton, liveryman—had the entire charge of the occasion. Four people only at the burial of the King of the universe. Let this be consolatory to those who through small means, lack of large acquaintance, have but little demonstration of grief at the grave of their dead. It is not necessary. Long line of glittering equipages, two rows of silver handles, cast of costly wood, pall-bearers scarfed and covered are not necessary. Christ looks out from heaven at a burial where there are more in attendance and remembers there are more than he had at his obsequies. Not recognizing this idea, how many small properties are scattered in the funeral rites, and widowhood and orphanage go out to the cold charity of the world. The departed left enough property to have kept the family together until they could take care of themselves, but it is all absorbed in the funeral rites. That went for a pe which ought to have gone for bread. A man of small means can hardly afford to die in one of our great cities! Funeral pageantry is not necessary. No one was ever more lovingly and tenderly put into the grave than Christ, but there were only four in the procession.

Again; standing in this place where the Lord lay, I am impressed with the fact that you cannot keep the dead down. The seal of the Sanhedrim, a regiment of soldiers from the tower or Antonio to stand guard, floor of rock, roof of rock, wall of rock, niche of rock, cannot keep Christ in the crypt. Come out and come up he must. Came out and came up he did. Prefiguration. The first-fruits of them that sleep. Just as certainly as you and I go down into the grave, just so certainly we will come up again. Though you pile up on the top of us all the boulders of the mountains, you cannot keep us down. Though we be buried under the coral of the deepest cavern of the Atlantic ocean, we will rise to the surface. Ah! my friends, death and the grave are not what they used to be to us. For now, walking around the spot where the Lord lay, we find vines and flowers covering up the tomb, and that which we called a place of skulls has become a beautiful garden. Yea, now among the passes of South Mountain. A hundred thousand are crowding Greenwood. On this grave three spirits meet, for there were three bodies in that tomb! over that family vault twenty spirits hover, for there were twenty bodies. From New York to Liverpool, at every few miles on the sea route, a group of hundreds of spirits coming down to the water to meet their bodies. See that multitude!—that is where the Central America sank. And yonder multitude!—that is where the Pacific went down. Found at last! That is where the City of Boston sank. And yonder the President went down. A solitary spirit alights on yonder prairie—that is where a traveller perished in the snow. The whole air is full of spirits—spirits flying north, spirits flying south, spirits flying east, spirits flying west. Crash! goes Westminster Abbey, as all its dead kings, and orators, and poets get up. Strange commingling of spirits searching among the ruins. William Wilberforce, the good; and Queen Elizabeth, the bad. Crash! go the Pyramids, and the monarchs of Egypt rise out of the heart of the desert. Snap! go the iron gates of the modern vaults. The country graveyard will look like a rough-ploughed field as the mounds break open. All the kings of the earth; all the senators; all the great men; all the beggars; all the armies—victors and vanquished; all the ages—barbaric and civilized; all those who were chopped by guillotine, or simmered in the fire, or rotted in dungeons; all the infants of a day; all the octogenarians—all! all! Not one straggler left behind. All! all! And now the air is darkened with the fragments of bodies that are coming together from the opposite corners of the earth. Lost limbs finding their mate—bone to bone, sinew to sinew—until every joint is reconstructed, and every arm finds its socket, and the amputated limb of the surgeon's table shall be set again at the point from which it was severed. A surgeon told me that after the battle of Bull Run he amputated limbs, throwing them out of the window, until the pile reached up to the window-sill. All those fragments will have to take their places. Those who were born blind shall have eyes divinely kindled; those who were lame shall have a limb substituted. In all the hosts of the resurrected not one eye missing; not one foot clogged; not there are four gardens instead of one: Garden of Eden, Garden of the World's Sepulchre, Garden of Earth's Regeneration, Garden of Heaven.

Poets' Corner, Westminster Abbey.

Various scriptural accounts say that the work of grave-breaking will begin with the blast of trumpets and shoutings; whence I take it that the first intimation of the day will be a sound from heaven such as has never before been heard. It may not be so very loud, but it will be penetrating. There are mausoleums so deep that undisturbed silence has slept there ever since the day when the sleepers were left in them. The great noise shall strike through them. Among the corals of the sea, miles deep, where the shipwrecked rest, the sound will strike. No one will mistake it for thunder, or the blast of earthly minstrelsy. There will be heard the voice of the uncounted millions of the dead, who come rushing out of the gates of eternity, flying toward the tomb, crying, "Make way! Oh, grave, give us back our body! We gave it to you in corruption; surrender it now in incorruption." Thousands of spirits arising from the field of Sedan, and from among the rocks of Gettysburg, and from one arm palsied; not one tongue dumb; not one ear deaf.

If I understand this day, it means peace toward Heaven and peace toward earth. Bring more flowers. Strew all the earth with Easter garlands, for the resurrection we celebrate this day implies many kinds of resurrection, a score of resurrections. Resurrection from death and sin to the life of the Gospel. Resurrection of apostolic faith. Resurrection of commercial integrity. Resurrection of national honor. Resurrection of everything that is good and kind and generous and just and holy and beautiful. Nothing to stay down, to stay buried, but sin and darkness and pain and disease and revenge and death. Let those tarry in the grave forever. "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men."

Christ, the Lord, is risen to-day,
Sons of men and angels say.
Raise your songs and triumphs high,
Sing, ye Heavens, and earth reply.
Love's redeeming work is done,
Fought the fight, the battle won.
Lo! the sun's eclipse is o'er;
Lo! he sets in blood no more.

REMARKABLE REVIVALS.

THE REV. THOMAS HARRISON, THE "BOY PREACHER'S" WONDERFUL GOSPEL EXPERIENCES.

The First of a Series of Notable Articles on Religious Work, Contributed by the Famous Revivalist, Exclusively to "The Christian Herald"—Some Extraordinary Conversions Under his Preaching.

BY REV. THOMAS HARRISON.

SOME of my most vivid experiences in God's work have been at the capitals of the different States. About ten years ago I was preaching in Indianapolis to audiences which at first were small and apathetic. Suddenly the movement developed great proportions, grace and faith increasing until some fifteen or more churches were led to open their doors and hold revival services. This was in the month of June. Next, the theatres threw their doors wide open on Sunday nights, and all conditions of society furnished the vast audiences that crowded in. The Spirit reached many hearts at that time, and a member of the family of Governor Porter was among the number. I remember that at the Roberts Park Church (of which Rev. Dr. S. M. Vernon was pastor), where I was preaching, many of the highest State officials were visibly touched, and Edward Porter, the son of the Governor, was among the converts. The young man, who had been attending the meetings, became awakened, and conviction and conversion quickly followed. All kinds of business men—rich and poor, young and old—were influenced and brought in. One very interesting case was that of a young man, Edward Branham, I think was his name, who came in with the great crowds one Sunday night. This young business man then and there made his decision for Christ and he has been steadfast in the faith ever since.

At first these meetings progressed very slowly, and I remember that for four nights we were without a single seeker. On Friday night, however, we had two seekers, one of them being a young man named Charles Palmer. My own faith was sorely tested by our slow progress. We had the co-operation of the Methodist churches, yet nothing had occurred in these four whole days to show that we had made any substantial headway.

Following the two who came forward on that Friday, we had nine more on the Sabbath night, making eleven in all for the first week. Usually on the seventh night, at such meetings, we had a large accession of seekers, so that this experience was unprecedented and certainly discouraging. Yet I had the assistance of the best workers in the Methodist churches of Indianapolis, and from almost all the other denominations. This agitation continued until they were compelled to open their own churches.

The meetings lasted from the first of March until the first of July. They grew wondrously after that first disheartening week, and the interest was undiminished until the closing jubilee service. At every meeting, we had crowds of seekers and thousands were brought into the fold, including many from different churches. What had been so small at the outset, closed in a glorious harvest of souls.

A Great Jubilee at Springfield, Ills.

The capital which I next recall as the scene of a revival was Springfield, Ills. I began there in the month of January and continued for seventeen weeks, the interest increasing daily, until 2,240 seekers had knelt at the altar. Considering the size of the place, I regard it as the most remarkable of all the revivals in which I have been engaged. I preached at the church of which Rev. Dr. Musgrove was pastor, and many other churches in the city co-operated in the work which became so extensive that we were compelled to send for evangelists and the clergymen of Springfield held meetings in their own churches as well. This revival reached all classes: mechanics, merchants, and teachers, and even affected the household of Gov. Palmer, who has recently been elected U. S. Senator for Illinois. His son, John Mayo Palmer, a prominent lawyer, gave his heart to God and became an active worker for Christ, and is so still. His wife's prayers had much to do with this change of heart on his part. This lady was one of the most devoted of women, and had entreated God for her husband long before the change took place which made her a happy wife. I have no doubt that the conversion came in answer to her prayers.

Another notable worker at that time was the wife of State Senator Shutt. So earnest and enthusiastic was she in the work that she led sixty persons to the altar herself, going through the congregation and bringing the seekers forward for prayer, a labor in which her gentle and earnest ways were most effective.

One night there was a special outpouring of the Spirit and the ardor of the worshippers became so intense that the services were not closed until ten minutes past two o'clock in the morning. This was without a single intermission. Inquirers kept coming to the altar in crowds, seeking religion, during all these hours. Naturally, their friends at home began to be anxious about their prolonged absence, and men would come into the church—come right forward personally—and ask the people, "Where's my wife?" or "Where are my children?" And when they finally found them there, praising God, they joined in the services with an enthusiasm that seemed to be irresistible. And there they stayed with the rest of us, till the close—many of them, seeking and finding peace to their souls.

This was followed by a great jubilee, at which over two thousand persons gave their testimony. There was much rejoicing and in the midst of it all, to add to my own happiness, Bishop Bowman rose on the platform and putting his hands on my head, said: "I ordain you, in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, to win more souls to the Master."

The Spirit's Work in Kansas.

With the impulse of the great work at Springfield still upon me, I then went out to the capital of the State of Kansas—the city of Topeka. We began there with great gatherings of people and so widespread was the interest in the movement, that the newspapers published the sermons in full. Rev. Dr. S. McChesney, of the Methodist Church of Topeka, co-operated with me, and we had the support of the most prominent business men of the place. Dr. McChesney is the brother of the well-known Rev. Ensign McChesney, of the Madison Avenue M. E. Church, New York City. These meetings lasted right into the heat of the summer. Bishop Ninde preached the Jubilee sermon in July, at which hundreds were converted. One feature of the meetings was the large number of non-church-goers who came to these services, among them being a Mr. Bennett, a leading contractor, who is now an ardent Christian and the Superintendent of a Sunday School. Many years previous he had imbibed Universalist doctrines, and he said that when he got these ideas, all his convictions left him and he had not had any settled convictions for twelve years. One night he came forward for prayer; he groaned, gave one scream, and was converted! After that there was no more active worker among the business men than he. During the eight weeks we were at Topeka, he was indefatigable.

God's Work at the Nation's Capital.

It is now twelve years since I conducted services in the Foundry Methodist Episcopal Church, in Washington, D. C., of which Rev. Dr. Lanahan was then pastor. These services were the means of inaugurating a most blessed revival. The crowds who attended were so great that policemen were stationed at the doors, and even those officers, whose posts were outside, were anxious to get in but could not. President Hayes and family were present at the morning services and took a lively interest. I remember that at one of the meetings, the venerable Chief-Justice Waite, of the Supreme Court, said to General Fisk—as they were leaving the church—that it was "the happiest hour of his life." He had been brought to the church by the General, who was his life-long friend. Both these distinguished men are now dead and have passed to their reward. The politicians attended in numbers, and many of them were sharers in the blessing.

This grand old church—one of the cradles of revivalism—was frequently filled with the most brilliant audiences, including diplomats, who came in the train of the President's party. There were many striking illustrations of the power of the Spirit at that time. There was a school, or seminary, kept by Mrs. Somers, one of the most fashionable in the city, the principal being a sister of the celebrated Dr. Eddy. Suddenly, without warning, the revival broke into the school and many of the pupils were converted. Major Morgan, one of the leading men in the local government, was my right-hand man in the work at that time, and proved a most efficient aid.

These meetings lasted in all about five weeks, and closed with a great thanksgiving service. They ought to have been continued further, as at the very close, the altar was still crowded, and there were as many turned away as got in.

I found, during these experiences at the various State capitals, that many of the most active and influential men in government affairs were my best supporters. A great many of them were Christian men, and necessarily wielded a mighty influence in the revival cause owing to their high station. I may say that have enjoyed working at the capitals, and have worked all the harder there, knowing that these were the centres of power and population, and that the influence extending from them would spread out into the country towns and villages and bring into the fold many people from other places. In Illinois, eight hundred, in different parts of the State, were converted through the influence exerted at Springfield. In Indiana the whole State caught the fire of revival from the flame kindled at Indianapolis,—towns, villages and hamlets alike—and many hundreds came to Christ. It was a time of great and general awakening in the State, and "they who were scattered abroad went everywhere preaching the Word."

CONVERTED THROUGH "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD."

A very affecting letter reached us last week from Texas. It came from a lady who has long been a subscriber to this journal, and it tells just the news we are most thankful to receive. It appears that for many years this lady has been praying for the conversion of her godless husband. It seemed as if her prayers were unheard, for, not only did he persevere in his sinful courses, but he became more abandoned and more openly wicked. To his wife's appeal he returned only mocking answers and blasphemous words, which made her shudder. Still she continued her prayers though she refrained from pressing religion upon him, as it irritated him and provoked him to blasphemy. At length he forbade her going to church and made her life almost unbearable.

A few months ago he fell ill with a malady which proved to be consumption. The wife renewed her appeals to him then and persuaded him to let her read the Bible and the sermon in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He did not appear to be much interested until she read Pastor C. H. Spurgeon's sermon on "The Dying Thief." When she had finished he exclaimed, "The sermon was preached for me." It was not long before he found peace and then he sent for his friends and told them of the change which had taken place in him, boldly confessing Christ before them all. He lived three months after his conversion and his widow says that his faith and joy increased day by day. The change in him was miraculous. He was a new man. He died peacefully with a sure and certain hope of eternal life through Jesus.

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Arctic Life-Savers Rewarded—A Petition for a Nuisance—Railroad Passengers left Shoeless—A Human Balloon
—A Bride's Indecision—A Female Soldier Pensioned.

REWARDS For Saving the lives of twelve hundred men from the Arctic twenty years ago, have just been distributed. The Boston Globe states that the one hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars appropriated for the owners and crews of the five ships which engaged in the humane labor has been paid. It appears that in 1871 twenty-two of the whale-ships were hemmed in by ice and abandoned. The crews took refuge on the shore, where they heard that there were five ships further South. An imploring message was sent to the Captains by one of the men, asking them to abandon the voyage in the cause of humanity and to take the wrecked men aboard. The Captains held a conference and agreed to bring the men down and sacrificed their voyage thereby. The award is to be divided among the five ships in proportion to the number of men each rescued. It is gratifying that at last, after waiting twenty years, this deed of humanity has been rewarded. Captains who are willing to leave their fishing to save men deserve to be recompensed. Like them, the men who engage in soul-saving also often have to make a sacrifice, but their reward is sure. (Daniel 12: 3.)

The Restoration of a Nuisance is Being sought by a number of property owners in New York. When an Elevated Railroad Station was erected at 121st Street and Second ave., the property owners in the neighborhood complained of it as a nuisance and brought suits against the Company for damages. There is no doubt that it did obstruct light and air from some of the houses, so the suits would probably have been successful. But last December the Elevated Railroad Company took the unexpected course of removing the station, which had been complained of and the litigants had no longer any grievance to take into court. But they were not so well satisfied as they would have been had the Company continued the nuisance and compensated them for enduring it. After the removal of the station there were sixteen blocks in which there was no station, so that the residents there who used the line had to walk an extra distance morning and evening. The loss of the convenience resulted in so serious a depreciation in the value of the property that a committee recently waited on the Company and asked that the station be replaced. Christian men and women have often experienced a similar change of mind as to God's providential dealings. A dispensation which was at first regarded as an affliction has in after life, when its benefits have been realized, been recognized as a blessing. (Heb. 12: 11.)

A Human Balloon was the Curious Result of an injury described in the New York daily journals of March 25th. Two days before, there had been an accident in an iron mill. A rapidly turning lathe became out of gear and a bar of iron shot out, striking one of the workmen a heavy blow on the side. He was removed to Gouverneur Hospital, where it was found that four of his ribs were broken, and the end of one of them had pierced his lung. The surgeon did what he could for the man and then went to see a patient in another ward. Returning an hour later he could with difficulty recognize the injured man. When he left him he was a small, spare man, but on his return he saw in the cot a man so enormously fat as to be almost grotesque. The man's daughters, who, having heard of his injury, came to the hospital to see him, refused to believe that he was their father. His cheeks were so swollen that he could not open his eyes, and his arms and hands were those of an obese giant. The doctor explained his changed appearance by saying that the air in the injured lung had escaped through the incision made by the fractured rib and had formed a cushion an inch and a-half thick under the skin. He thought that if the man recovered, which was doubtful, the distension would gradually subside and his body would resume its natural size. The danger, he said, lay not in the puffing out of the skin, though it gave the man a dreadful appearance, but in the internal wound. If that healed, his appearance would soon be normal. It is the same principle that encourages Christian workers in their labors among the fallen and depraved. Some of the men and women they try to redeem seem monsters of iniquity scarcely human in their habits and mode of life. But they have hope, even of the worst, because they know that God can change the heart, out of which, as Christ said, "proceed the evil thoughts, murders" and other things "which defile the man." (Matt. 15: 19.)

A Number of Shoeless Passengers were Detained in the Milwaukee Railroad Depot in Chicago a few days ago by an amusing misadventure. It occurred on a train which leaves St. Paul at eight o'clock in the evening and arrives in Chicago in the morning. A car is added to the rear of that train at La Crosse and dropped off at Milwaukee. It has been the habit of the porters to collect the passengers' shoes from all the cars and take them into that rear car to be shined. They did so on this occasion, but they fell asleep over their task and were still asleep when the car was dropped at Milwaukee. When the passengers in the forward cars arrived at Chicago there was a demand for their shoes and it was then discovered that both the porters and the shoes of twenty-five passengers were in the car at Milwaukee. There were some loud complaints for a time, but the Railroad Company satisfied them by sending for the clerk of a shoe store, who measured the shoeless passengers and promptly supplied each with a new pair. It must have been a novel experience for well-to-do people to find themselves suddenly shoeless in the depot of a great city. The time is coming, however, for every one when, the journey of life being over, and the eternal destination reached, the traveller is denuded of all externals which have made his path through the world easy. Happy is he then if, through faith in the Saviour, he is welcomed into the eternal city, where the robe of Christ's righteousness, which is provided for him, supplies all his need. (Rev. 6: 11.)

A Woman Who Fought in The War has presented a claim for a pension, which is now under the consideration of the Commissioner of Pensions. Her statement, which is corroborated by reliable witnesses, is that at the outbreak of the war she was living in Cleveland, Ohio. Her name was Mary E. Dewey, and she was engaged to a young man named Benjamin Brown. He was one of the first men of his State to respond to President Lincoln's call for volunteers. Mary could not endure the separation from her lover and she devised a plan for reunion. One day Brown saw among the recruits who joined his regiment, a familiar face. It belonged to a soldier entered on the books as Charles E. Dewey. Brown did not reveal the secret, but allowed the girl to go through the war under that name. By his help her identity and sex were concealed, even when she was treated for a gunshot wound received at Spottsylvania Court-House. She fought by her lover's side in many engagements, he protecting her as far as he was able. At the close of the war she returned with her lover to Ohio; she resumed feminine attire and they were married. Her husband is now dead, and there being some difficulty in the way of her receiving a pension as his widow, she has put in a claim for a pension on account of her own services. The hardships and uncongenial surroundings of camp life, and the fatigues and dangers of her position at the front must have been trying for a woman to bear. That she did bear them, when at any time she could have escaped them by revealing her sex, is conclusive proof of the strength and fervor of her love. The fact helps us to realize what must have been the love of Christ, who being in the form of God, "took upon him the form of a servant and was made in the likeness of men, and became obedient to death." (Phil. 2: 6, 8.)

The Discovery of a Gold Mine which had been lost for forty years was reported from San Francisco on March 19. The mine which is known as the Breyfogle Mine is said to have cost dozens of lives, and so unsuccessful and fatal have been the expeditions made in search of it that it had come to be regarded by many as a myth. Briefly, the story goes that early in the fifties a party among which was Breyfogle, set out for California by way of the Southern Utah road. Breyfogle was something of a miner. Wandering one day by himself from the camp he found a place where he could literally dig great nuggets of gold out of the decomposed quartz, or cement as he called it, with his knife. He returned to camp, but the travellers were short of water and food and would not consent to remain. Breyfogle, after reaching Los Angeles, spent the remainder of his life trying to find this mine in the desert, but he and several parties whom he furnished with maps failed, and many lost their lives. It is now reported that a man named Montgomery has accidentally found the place in the rugged mountains south-east of Death Valley, one hundred and sixty miles from Daggett and is getting machinery and miners together to work it. It may be hoped for the sake of the men whom he is taking with him that his story is true, if the search for the Breyfogle mine has proved so fatal in previous years as is stated. The quest for gold often proves fatal even when it is pursued through the ways of business in the cities, where men overwork in pursuing it. But with them it is more frequently the soul rather than the body that suffers, because they sacrifice its interests and principles to get gain. (II. Timothy 6: 10.)

Indecision on the Part of a Girl in Pennsylvania has caused considerable annoyance to her friends and some mortification to herself. For some time past, two young men have been paying her attentions, and she appeared to be equally pleased with both. One of them being in a position to marry at once, pressed her to name the day, and eventually she yielded and fixed March 9th for the ceremony. Before the day arrived, however, the rival lover visited her and urged his claims. Though he could not marry immediately, his prospects were much better than those of the man she had promised to marry. The girl wavered and, to gain time, made an excuse for postponing the wedding. The prospective bridegroom was vexed at the delay, but as he really loved the girl, he yielded. Under his influence the girl fixed the wedding-day a second time. It was to be on March 16. On the morning of that day she received another visit from the rival lover. Finding how near her marriage was, he begged her to marry him at once, and even persuaded her to go to the house of a minister and be married there and then. At the door she hesitated and would not go in, but she promised that the other ceremony to which she was pledged should not take place. On her return home she dismissed the wedding-guests, who had assembled during her absence, and begged her lover to delay the wedding for another week. He consented, but, learning the true reason for the delay, sought out his rival and told him the facts. He, too, was chagrined when he heard that the wedding was only postponed, as he supposed that the girl would have finally dismissed his rival. After discussing the matter for a time, and comparing notes, they came to the conclusion that a girl who would temporize as she had done with both, would not make a true and faithful wife. They therefore called upon her together and renounced her. Many souls have been lost for eternity by a similar vacillation between Christ and the world. The results of rejecting Christ are not more fatal than those of "haling between two opinions." (I. Kings 18: 21.)

GOOD AND EVIL IN JEHU.

S. S. LESSON FOR APRIL 12, BY MRS. M. BAXTER.
II. KINGS 10: 18-31. GOLDEN TEXT, I. SAM'L 16: 7.

Jehoram's Persistent Evil-Doing—His Sentence—Jehu the Instrument of Punishment—Anointed and Proclaimed King—Pursues and Slays Jehoram—Jezebel's Death Fulfills Elijah's Prediction—Jehu's Treacherous Destruction of Baal Worshipers—Becomes Himself an Idolater.

JEHOM's cup of iniquity was full. He had seen and experienced at the hand of God the most wonderful interventions; God had sent water by a miracle to relieve his army (II. Kings 3. 16-20); he had heard of God's mighty hand through Elisha in raising up a child from the dead (4: 32-36; 8: 1-6); he knew of the healing of Naaman; he was present when Elisha had marshalled the blinded host of Syrians into Samaria, and was present when their eyes opened in answer to the prophet's prayer; and yet this man had never really given his heart to God, or even renounced idolatry! A man who continues to resist God becomes a curse upon the earth, he hardens evil-doers by his example. So it was with Jehoram, and the time came when a God of love had nothing left which he could do with such a man but to cut him off in his sins!

He had an Instrument Ready.

Why does God so often choose such imperfect instruments to do his work? Surely in his tender love, lest his children should be discouraged and think that it is only the perfect whom he can use. And who then could be sufficient? Again, it is such a proof that it is God and not man who does the work. Elisha the prophet called one of the children of the prophets to go to Ramoth-Gilead, which was probably the largest military station in the land of Israel, to call out Jehu and anoint him in the name of the Lord to be king over Israel. This meant conspiracy against Jehoram. Humanly speaking, it was as much as his life was worth for Jehu to allow himself to be proclaimed king, but, faulty as he was, he was a man of faith. He knew that God would not fail him, and he was not ashamed when the young prophet had anointed him in secret, to acknowledge before all the officers of the army that he had received a message from God and was anointed at his command. Jehu was a man of mighty

Human Energy;

he did not let the grass grow under his feet. No sooner did he get light on his mission than he set about it with might and main. Jehoram was at Jezreel where he had gone to be healed of the wound received in battle against Hazael, king of Syria. Jehu rode in his chariot towards Jezreel. On the watch tower in Jezreel, the watchman gave warning, "I see a company." The news reached Jehoram's sick chamber, and he ordered a horseman to go out and meet them, saying, "Is it peace?" When the messenger reached the advancing Jehu, he was met by the words, "What hast thou to do with peace? Turn thee behind me." A second messenger met with the same response, and when it was reported to the king, "He came even unto them, and cometh not again, and the driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; for he driveth furiously," the doomed king began to be alarmed. "Is it peace, Jehu?" was his greeting. Jehu, who as long as he was in the will of God had something of the prophet about him, said, "What peace, so long as the whoredom of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many?" The wretched king "turned his hand and fled," but it was useless. Jehu drew a bow with his full strength, and the arrow, directed by him who had sent him on his errand, pierced the heart of the unrepentant king, and soul and body alike sank under the judgment of his God. The body was cast into the field of Naboth, to fulfil the word of God by Elijah, and Jehu rode on to pursue Ahaziah of Judah, and slew him, too, and then Jezebel also became a victim to his zeal; the very eunuchs who were her creatures joined the conspiracy, and threw her from a window in Jezreel. There, under the window of the house, was the word of God fulfilled; the jackal-like dogs of eastern cities devoured the carcass of the satanic woman in the public street of Jezreel! When Jehu had taken some refreshment, he issued the command, "Go see now this cursed woman, and bury her, for she is a king's daughter." And they went to bury her; but they found no more of her than the skull, and the feet, and the palms of her hands," and Jehu said, "This is the word of the Lord, which he spake by his servant, Elijah, the Tishbite, saying, in Jezreel shall dogs eat the flesh of Jezebel."

Jehu firmly believed in the word of his God, and he went forward without compunction in his work of destruction. There are instruments used by God whom he does not call us to follow, but just as little does he call us to criticise. We may not be acquainted with the plan of God.

Rough Instruments must do Rough Work.

An iron wedge and a heavy hammer can split granite where an instrument of tempered steel could do nothing. If a man is doing the work of God in ever so strange a way let us beware how we hinder that which God blesses. We may pray for an instrument whom we dare not forbid.

There were seventy sons of Ahab, i. e., members of the royal family, at Jezreel, and Jehu wrote letters challenging the rulers and elders of Jezreel to choose out the best of the house of Ahab, to set him on the throne, and defend the cause of the house of Ahab. God's hand was against them, and they felt it. They said, "Behold two kings stood not before him; how then shall we stand?" Jehu had an easy victory, because God was with him. They returned answer, "We are thy servants, and will do all that thou shalt bid us." How true it is that man disquiets himself in vain. If God wills a certain thing, and our will is subject to him, we need never be anxious as to how it shall be brought about. Who would have imagined that in a few days' time two kings and seventy of the royal family in an idolatrous nation should be slain without further bloodshed, and that the crown should pass to another dynasty so quickly? When God is at work, and he never works

Till All is Ripe for Action,

then things move quickly. But Jehu's activity was not yet at an end. It was left for this unscrupulous instrument of destruction to complete the uprooting of Baal worship which Elijah had begun. Elijah and Elisha had aroused the conscience of the people, and had borne witness to the greatness, the holiness, and the reality of their God; it was left for Jehu to deal rather with the fruit than with the root, the externals of Baal worship rather than the principles. Jehu's success had been as much as he could bear. Up to the present time, he had closely followed the command of his God. He was commissioned to destroy the house of Ahab, he was only permitted, but not commissioned, to destroy Baal worship. An instrument of destruction is not God's chosen vessel for a reformation in religion. Now Jehu became his own leader, and his energy and self-importance got the better of his faith in God. He met Jehonadab the son of Rechab, took him up into his chariot, and said, "Come with me, and see

My Zeal for the Lord."

Already self had tarnished the first-fruits of Jehu's zeal, and Jehu, not the Lord, was now uppermost in his thoughts. Then, in his way of working, he used deception. "He gathered all the people together, and said unto them, Ahab served Baal a little, but Jehu shall serve him much," and he proclaimed a great feast for Baal to which all the worshippers of Baal were convoked, not one was to be wanting. And when he had caught them in this trap, he ordered a general massacre of them all, and it was accomplished—not one escaped.

But the man who had been so intent on destroying Baal, was guilty of idolatry in another form. Is it conceivable, that this man, who had, at such a sacrifice of life, cleared Israel of Baal worship, should yet himself bow down before the golden calves of Bethel and of Dan? Yet, so it was. Success does not always ensure faithfulness. God gave Jehu the promise that his seed of the fourth generation should sit on the throne of Israel. "But Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord God of Israel with all his heart," and the sad story ends: "In those days the Lord began to cut Israel short." There must be a witness to God's anger against the prevalent idolatry, and the borders of Israel began to narrow because God was grieved.

ANTICHRIST AND HIS HELPERS.

The Future Federal Head of the Roman Empire in its Last Form of a Ten-Kingdomed Confederacy.

BY REV. W. LINCOLN.

IT is essential for the reader, in his apprehension of the teaching of the twelfth chapter of Revelation, that he should perceive that he whom God calls in verse 1, "The Beast," is, nevertheless, the great Roman emperor of the future. God, looking down at him from his own glorious throne, aptly designates him as "the Beast." But the world will regard him with admiration and with awe. So, too, of old, the four empires which appeared to Nebuchadnezzar as a gorgeous image, Daniel, the holy seer, beheld as four wild beasts. And it is in undoubted reference to these four wild beasts of Daniel 7, and specially to the last one of those four, that the description here is given.

The dragon stands on the sand of the sea, and, as it were, produces the Beast with seven heads and ten horns therefrom. This language, divested of symbol, signifies that, by the agency of Satan after his final expulsion from heaven, there shall arise over the Roman world, through election by universal suffrage, an imperial potentate and ten subordinate kings. For the horns represent the kings of the several nations, who will elect him as their chief. For these nations will, by that time, have repudiated their old rulers under the sixth Seal and first four Trumpets. Here, then, is the short-lived triumph of Socialism, and here we perceive its ultimate issue—imperialism. We are not left in doubt as to the symbolic use of the word "sea," from which Satan raises the Beast. It represents the people, and as water always seeks its own level, so socialistic communism does away with all social distinctions.

But this is not all. This supreme federal head is to have an ecclesiastical helper or lieutenant. He is described in chapter 19: 20, as "the false prophet," who wrought signs in furtherance of the designs of his superior, the first Beast. Thus he causes fire to come down from heaven in the sight of men, in order to confirm all men in their allegiance to the emperor. (See verse 12, 14.) The two expressions denote his officiating under the sanction and supervision of the first Beast, and as his minister. His special function, as we are twice informed, is the resurrection of the empire through the ability of his master. Thus does he incite men to worship the first Beast, whose deadly wound was healed.

And thus we have here a trinity of evil. There is, first, the dragon, or Satan, the unseen one, but giving all his power to the Beast (verse 2.) There is, secondly, the Beast of verse 2, very like the dragon (compare chapter 12: 3 with chapter 13: 1.) The full manifestation of the unseen one, who rules the world as his vice-gent. Thirdly, there is in verse 11 the other Beast, "the false prophet," ministering to the glory of the first Beast. And so, as the world will then have a taste, according as they have desired, of the devil's millennium; likewise also here is the devil's caricature of the work of the Father, and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost.

LONDON'S JERRY McAULEY.

NED WRIGHT, EX-BURGLAR AND PUGILIST, AND NOW A NOBLE WORKER FOR CHRIST.

The Successful Evangelist of the London Slums—His Method of Bringing in the Criminal Classes—A "Thieves' Supper"—Prison Memories—The Old Mangle—Christian Turnkeys—The Converted Thief "Spider"—Mrs. Wright's Share in the Work.

(See Illustrations on first page.)

REMARKABLE man whose name is familiar to thousands of philanthropists in this and other lands, is now on a visit to New York. He has been carrying on with wonderful success for over twenty years, a work in England similar to that which the late Jerry McAuley prosecuted in New York. From one end of the country to the other he has gone proclaiming the glorious message, "Let the wicked forsake his way and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return to the Lord and he will have mercy upon him." The number of men who have listened to the call from his lips, and have accepted it may now be numbered by thousands. His special power has come from a very painful experience. Pugilists, thieves and blackguards, the outcasts of society listen attentively to Ned Wright, for he has been one of their number; he knows their temptations and their sorrows and can tell them from his own experience the way out of the mire. Aided by philanthropic friends he has often been the host of as strange a company as ever gathered around a hospitable board. The entertainment is the

"Thieves' Supper"

and it has been a means of great good. When "all things are ready" the host does not invite "the halt and the maimed and the blind," but those whose spiritual and moral deformities are even more deplorable. He goes to haunts well-known to him where the outcasts resort and invites them to supper. It is not always safe for such men to accept an invitation. Many of them are "wanted" by the police and are aware of the fact. The danger of betrayal, therefore, is a matter they are not likely to overlook, and the fact that they willingly accept Ned Wright's invitation is the strongest mark of confidence they can show. He has always kept faith with them, and the police, knowing the reformatory character of his work, have scrupulously refrained from making a haul of criminals at his meetings (a picture of one of these suppers taken from a photograph appears on the first page.)

A Lawless Life.

Edward Wright was born in London, July 28, 1836. His father was an intemperate barge-builder and the boy was early familiar with poverty and discomfort. Matters improved with them when the father and mother were converted, but by that time Ned had commenced an evil life. His father vainly sought to reclaim him, and Ned, finally tiring of home discipline, ran away. He tried sea-life for a time, but that did not suit him and he returned to London to consort with thieves and men who gain their living by lawless deeds. Two or three times his association with them brought him into the clutches of the law. He served various terms in prison and went from bad to worse. Once he enlisted as a soldier, but having secured the bounty he deserted. Being mixed up in a quarrel with another young man, Wright fought him and secured a victory so decisive that he determined to become a professional pugilist. He fought several battles in which he was invariably the victor and was under engagement to fight the notorious "Jack" Connelly when the grace of God touched his heart and his life was transformed.

Twenty-seven years have passed since that day and Ned Wright has never wavered. It was a hard struggle at first, but strength was given him and after he began to work for Christ temptation lost its power. His wife was converted, too, and she helped him. Times were changed for her since, clad in rags and with both eyes discolored by Ned's cruel blows, she had appealed to the court for protection from her husband's violence. She has been a valuable helper in his work especially among vicious women; and even among the men her gentle words have sometimes touched men impervious to Ned's appeals. Mrs. Wright's portrait appears with that of her husband on the first page.

Mr. Wright as an Evangelist.

Mr. Wright has a homely, rugged, yet prepossessing face. He talks like a man intensely in earnest.

"It will be twenty-seven years ago next Easter, since I was converted," he said. "For fifteen years past I have been doing missionary work in London, among thieves. Our plan is to first feed them and then bring Gospel influences to bear upon them. Until a few years ago, our headquarters were in Camberwell; then we opened a hall, and for eight years past we have been working in conjunction with the churches. We lay ourselves out for existing missions. We ask the churches for the use of their school-rooms or chapels. Knowing the haunts of the thieves, we ourselves find the audiences, and we bring them there and I preach the Gospel to them.

"What do we do in a material way to help these men? Well, you see, we have found it the poorest policy to place them with regular employers, excepting in certain cases. Other workmen are almost sure to find out all about them, and then they are driven from their places. So we go to Houndsditch and buy a few tools for them and set them to work, until they have proved the sincerity of their desire to reform, and have made a good record. This plan generally turns out well. A great many have reformed in this way and are now leading honest lives.

"Thirty years ago," added Mr. Wright, "I was connected with a band of thieves who trained young lads to pick pockets on the London bridges. Now that business is all broken up. After my conversion, I was often approached by men with large offers to become an informer, but that I never would do. Apart from the disgrace of it, if I had done so, I would never have had any influence among the thieves afterward. And speaking of the police reminds me that some of the best Christians we have in England are to be found among the governors of the prisons there. There is Captain Kirkpatrick, of Wormwood Scrubs, a noted penitentiary, who is certainly a godly man, and also the governor of the new Model Prison at Wandsworth, who is a noble Christian.

Prison Memories.

"Memories of my old prison days come back to me at times. Let me tell you a little incident that happened a few years ago. With two of my daughters, I was paying a visit to a prison.

At the entrance I met the keeper. He demurred and was disposed to refuse me admittance, although I had been granted permission by the governor.

"You won't let me in," said I, "but a few years ago I remember I was in and you wouldn't let me out."

"The man looked oddly at me. 'You've no business here,' he said.

"That's the reason I'm asking you to let me in," I urged.

"Finally he opened the gate. We were shown through the prison. I said to him, 'Can you show me Cell E. 214? I once knew a man who was in that cell.'

"Yes; it's very near here.' He took me to the cell and I opened it."

"What's that mangle thing there?" I asked, innocently.

"Oh, we call that hundreds and thousands," he replied, grinning. "It's been here nearly forty years."

"Dear me! Has it been here so long? I should like to see how it works."

"He allowed me to enter. I took the handle and tried it, my two daughters looking on with tearful eyes, meanwhile.

"Ah! said I, looking straight at him, 'I put that mangle in this cell. I was one of the men who came from the other prison and put it there. And I had to turn it, much against my will, a good many times, too.'

"Then I preached Christ to that man. I found him possessed of a good heart.

"There are turnkeys here who are Christians, sir," he said. "When they get a chance they never fail to drop a word about Christ to the prisoners."

A large proportion of the thieves who experience religion are permanently reformed, Mr. Wright says. By way of illustrating this fact, he relates the following.

A Noted Thief Converted.

"Twelve months ago, I was preaching in Newport, Monmouthshire, Wales. The meeting was held in a Baptist chapel. At the close, a man came into the vestry and spoke to me about his soul.

"Do you know me?" he asked, after a bit.

"No," said I, rather puzzled, and gazing at his face.

"Ever know a man called Spider?"

"Yes; but I only knew one Spider—the Spider I knew is a pickpocket."

"Well, I'm the Spider you knew—the cleverest pickpocket in the world, they used to call me."

"Surely not the Spider I mean?" I repeated, still incredulous.

"The very man," he added, quietly.

"Then it came out, and I was soon convinced. I took him under my wing and kept him on probation. I found how he came to such a low estate. He had been at one time in Birmingham, engaged in business at a salary of $2,500 a year. He took to bookmaking, dropped money all along the line, and got down so low as to adopt the three-card game, playing it on a board. Then he roomed in the very lowest lodging-houses and lived by picking pockets. At this craft he was undoubtedly the smartest man in all London, being particularly skilful in robbing the ladies of their diamonds.

"Well, Spider was a hard case. We kept him on the go for four months, trying to get him work, and at length we found that there was a chance for him in the employ of his old 'governor.' A letter was received, saying that if Spider was prepared to pay back what he had embezzled, he would be reinstated. He is now in the same situation, getting $3,000 a year and his commissions. The other day he wrote to me, to know what he could do to help the missions. I advised him to get tracts printed—to write them himself, if need be, and to distribute them, and thus help the good cause all he can. He is now leading a consistent Christian life, and is working for the Lord as he has opportunity."

More than seventy-five per cent. of these reformed criminals adhere to their change from the service of Satan to that of Christ, Mr. Wright estimates. He speaks from an intimate personal acquaintance with the facts. He believes in affording them all the material help possible at the outset, even where they are too sensitive to ask for it. It is an easy step to reach a man's heart after you have convinced him of your good-will. Yet he draws the line distinctly between Christian and non-Christian. He distinctly says he has no hope of a permanent reformation, and no confidence in a man's power to keep himself from being carried back into his evil ways, unless he becomes a sincere Christian.

Mr. Wright has a deeply interesting story to tell of Gospel work among London criminals, with incidents of his own work of a most thrilling character. Any church wishing to hear him may communicate with him by addressing Mr. Edward Wright, CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 to 96 Bible House, New York.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

AND SIGNS OF OUR TIMES

OFFICES, BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK.

ENTERED AT THE POST-OFFICE AT NEW YORK, N. Y., AS
SECOND-CLASS MATTER.

T. De Witt Talmage
EDITOR.

Published Weekly. Subscription price in the United States, Canada, and Mexico, $1.50 a year; $1 eight months; 75 cents six months; will be sent two months for 25 cents, postage free; in Europe and in all countries in the Postal Union, 50 cents extra postage; subscriptions always payable in advance. Single copies, price 5 cents. Any newsdealer will furnish the paper weekly when ordered.

All P. O. money orders should be made payable to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Station D, New York.

The prayers of the readers of this journal are requested for the blessing of God upon its Editor, and those whose sermons, articles, or labors for Christ are printed in it; and that its circulation may be used by the Holy Spirit for the conversion of sinners and the quickening of God's people.

THE RACE-COURSE.

I BELIEVE in fast horses. God would not have made them fast if he had not intended them to go fast. But many a man on his fast horse has ridden to ruin. Alas, for the gambling at the race track! There is one word that needs to be written on the brow of every pool-seller as he sits deducting his three or five per cent. and slyly "ringing up" more tickets than were sold on the winning horse—a word to be written on the brow of every bookkeeper who at extra inducement scratches a horse off the race, and on the brow of every jockey who slackens pace that according to agreement another may win, and written over every judge's stand, and written on every board of the surrounding fences, and that word is "Swindle." Yet thousands bet. Lawyers bet, judges of courts bet, members of the Legislature bet, members of Congress bet; ladies bet, not directly, but through agents, and when mild weather comes multitudes will gain and lose, while the parasols swing, the hands clap and the huzzas deafen, and there will be a multitude of people cajoled and deceived and cheated who will at the races go neck and neck to perdition.

Cultivate the horse by all means. Drive him as fast as you desire, provided you do not injure him, or injure yourself, or injure anybody else; but be careful and do not harness the horses to the chariot of sin, do not throw your jewels of morality under flying hoofs, do not have your name put down in the ever-increasing catalogue of those who are ruined for both worlds by the dissipations of the American race-course.

What right have men to despoil our beautiful watering-place that God intended as benediction to these cities? They say that an honest race-course is a "straight" track and that a dishonest race-course is a "crooked" track—that is the parlance abroad—but I tell you that every race-track surrounded by betting men, and betting women, and betting customs, is a straight track—I mean straight down. Christ asked in one of his Gospels, "Is not a man better than a sheep?" I say yes, and he is better than any animal that with lathered flanks ever shot around the ring of a race course. That is a very poor job by which a man, in order to get a horse to come out a full length ahead of some other racer, so lowers his own morals that he comes out a whole length behind in the race set before him.

My advice to the New York Legislature is to send home these professional gamblers that haunt their lobbies with infamous schemes; send them home to earn a living in some honest way. The curse of Brooklyn, and the curse of New York, and the curse of America, is the effort to get money without earning it, and as other forms of stealing are not respectable, they go into the gambling practices. I say to all young men, go into straightforward industries, and you will have better livelihood and you will have larger permanent success than you can ever get by a wager. But you get in with some of these whiskied, rum-blotched crews which I see sometimes going down on the Ocean Boulevard, and though I never bet I will risk the wager, five million to nothing, you will be debauched and everlastingly overthrown.

MORE MUSIC.

SOME years ago the Tintern Abbey left England for New Zealand with one hundred starlings, goldfinches and thrushes, one hundred hedge-sparrows, one hundred and seventy yellow-hammers, and a great multitude of bright plumes and sweet voices. The farmers of New Zealand proposed to let them loose, and thus clear their land of noxious insects. Heavy penalties were enacted for the protection of these foreign birds. What a grand thing it would be if we could all have an importation of birds, not only into our land, but also in our dispositions. We want more music and plumes. We have too large an importation of crows and owls. Give us a touch of goldfinches. We have enough who know how to croak; let us have more of those who know how to sing. Let it be against the law for any one to hunt down the innocent inerriments of life. Let the song-birds loose in our homes and schools and churches. Be not frightened if some great eagle of a hallelujah flies through the religious assemblies. If ever the earth is to be a type of heaven, it must become a more cheerful place. Blessed the man or woman or child who kindles a smile or plants a flower or lets loose a robin. The winged joys of life will eat up the cold, creeping sorrows as partridges devour grasshoppers, and linnets kill the caterpillars. From the four winds of heaven let there be brigantines of good cheer bearing down upon us with a rich cargo of starlings and sparrows.

AN AWKWARD NAME.

WE have friends who have been struggling for thirty or forty years under the affliction of an awkward or ill-omened name. When there are so many pleasant names by which children may be called, what right has a parent to place on his child's head a disadvantage at the start? Worse than the gauntlet of measles and whooping-cough and mumps, which the little ones have to run, is this parental outrage.

What a struggle in life that child will have who has been baptized Jedekiah or Mehetabel! If a child is "called after" some one living let that one be past mid-life, and of such temperament that there shall be no danger of his becoming an absconder and a cheat. As far as possible let the name given be short, so that in the course of a lifetime there be not too many weeks or months taken up in the mere act of signature. The burdens of life are heavy enough without putting upon any one the extra weight of too much nomenclature. It is a sad thing when an infant has two bachelor uncles, both rich and with outrageous names, for the baby will have to take both titles, and that is enough to make a case of infant mortality.

BRIEF NOTES.

Out of the 474 ministers who seceded in 1843 from the Church of Scotland, there are 42 alive and in the Free Church, besides a few others now abroad. Twelve have sat in the Moderators chair in General Assembly.

An extraordinary wave of religious revival is sweeping over Cornwall, England. The Methodist churches especially have been scenes of such manifestations of the Holy Spirit's influence as have not been witnessed there within the memory of any living person.

Professor Daniel S. Martin has promised to read a paper at the next meeting of the American Institute of Christian Philosophy on April 7. The subject will be, "The Survival of Superstitions among the Enlightened." The meetings of the Institute are now held in Hamilton Hall, Columbia College, New York.

The second week of Dr. L. W. Munhall's services at Haverhill, Mass., has witnessed a wonderful outpouring of the Spirit. Both at the general meetings and those for men only, the audiences have been so large that it has been found necessary to issue tickets of admission. At the afternoon meeting on March 22, over one hundred persons confessed Christ, and in the evening a large proportion of the vast audience rose to ask for prayers.

An esteemed friend of this journal, the Hon. W. H. DeWitt, of Chattanooga, Tenn., is now passing through the waters of affliction. His beloved son, Eugene De Witt, who was a distinguished member of the Chattanooga bar and a Police Commissioner, is dead. The Bar Association and other public bodies have passed resolutions of sorrow and condolence. May God comfort the bereaved family!

Rev. Somerset Gardner has been laboring at the Church of the Redeemer, Baltimore, Md. Dr. W. D. Stevens, the rector of the church, writes: "Many of our people were quickened under Mr. Gardner's preaching. Some professed their acceptance of Christ. Of these latter, one was a Roman Catholic and another an extreme Ritualist. Mr. Gardner's manner is quiet, and his method in no way sensational. His entire reliance seems to be on the Spirit through the Word. I trust many of our churches will have the benefit of this brother's services."

Rev. D. Spencer, F. R. G. S., pastor of a Suburban Church, London, England, is in this country for a few months and would like to minister to any evangelical church in the United States or Canada, or hold evangelistic services. He possesses a warm commendation from his own church, and having preached in Rochester Detroit and Toronto, on a former visit, is not unknown here. Mr. Spencer is a literary man and was formerly editor of the Christian Treasury. Letters may be addressed to him at this office.

Rev. Jacob Freshman's work among the Jews of New York, goes on with increased evidence of the divine blessing. On Easter Sunday, Mr. Freshman baptized two more Jewish converts. He has been so successful in bringing Hebrews to recognize in Jesus of Nazareth the Messiah promised to their fathers, that it is a matter for regret that his operations should be curtailed by any deficiency of funds. He needs money badly for the purchase of Christian literature specially adapted to the people he is trying to reach. Only $5,000 now remains unpaid of the mortgage on his church, and an effort is now being made to lift this remaining burden. Contributions may be sent to him at 17 St. Mark's Place, N.Y.

An especially interesting programme for the coming spring and summer has been planned by the Bible Institute at Chicago, of which Mr. D. L. Moody is president. About the middle of April, Rev. Dr. W. G. Moorehead, of Xenia, Ohio, whose scholarship and ability as a Bible teacher are well known, begins a three-months' course of lectures. Rev. James Stalker, whose life of Christ is familiar to Bible students, will be at the institute a few days in May. In July and August, Rev. F. B. Meyer of Regent's Park Chapel, London, will be the leading lecturer. Ministers, evangelists, lady teachers and Christian workers of every class will have an opportunity to learn the best plans and methods along aggressive lines in the various forms of mission work connected with the Institute. No charge is made for tuition. Any who desire to attend should write at once to the Supt. R. A. Torrey, 80 W. Pearson St.; or Mrs. S. B. Capron, Ladies Department, 232 La Salle Avenue, Chicago.

CURRENT EVENTS.

Madagascar's Tyrant Published—A Woman's Journey Across Africa—An Interesting Church Controversy—Wreck of the "Strathairly"—Buddhism in Paris—Rev. Howard Crosby Ill—Are the Negroes Dying Out?

OD'S Vengeance has overtaken a tyrant in Madagascar. In a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, it was told how Ramiasatra, Governor of the Province of Belanono, had caused the massacre of nearly 300 persons, many of them women and children, because they had dared to protest against his acts of cruelty. After his victims were beheaded and dismembered, the survivors were compelled to erect a ghastly trophy, composed of the skulls of their friends. Such was the indignation aroused by these acts that the Government of the island took cognizance of the matter, and the massacre has now been avenged by the execution, on the same spot where their victims perished, of the wicked Governor and his brother, who was one of the principal instigators of that dreadful crime.

An Interesting Chapter of the Chilian War has just been disclosed, in which the heroic conduct of a young naval lieutenant is the leading feature. It seems that when the insurrection broke out, the greatest apprehension of the Balmacedists were for the navy. One commander after another declared against the government, and it was feared that Balmaceda would be without a warship to enforce his authority on the sea. A young lieutenant on board the Almirante Lynch, knowing his captain to be in sympathy with the rebels, came upon him one evening when he was asleep, tied his legs and arms and put him ashore, being aided by the crew. Two other commanders of insurgent proclivities were similarly served by the same smart young lieutenant, who thus added three fine gunboats to Balmaceda's resources without spilling a single drop of blood. By land, unfortunately, the war is a more sanguinary one, two hundred captured rebels were tied together and shot with cannon and musketry near Valparaiso. The situation at Valparaiso is critical and a bombardment is expected.

The Week like its Predecessor has been marked by marine disaster. Before daylight on the 25th inst., the Earn line steamship Strathairly, plying between Baltimore and the West Indies, went ashore off Cape Hatteras, during a fierce northwest gale, and seven out of a crew of twenty-six men were saved, the second mate being the only officer rescued. The suffering of these men during the fight for life off that desolate coast lasted fully twelve hours, ending in the complete wreck of the vessel. The surf ran so high that the life-saving crews were unable to use their appliances. When the life-boat from Chicamico station reached the Strathairly the seven half-frozen survivors were found clinging to the rigging, all the others having dropped off during the night.

The Serious Illness of the Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, arouses the sympathetic interest of a large circle of friends all over the country. He is suffering from a severe attack of bronchitis and pneumonia, and at one time was so low that his recovery seemed extremely doubtful. Dr. Crosby, who is both an eloquent preacher and a brilliant scholar, was born in New York City, on February 27th, 1826. He graduated from the New York University in 1844, and for several years was Professor of Greek in that University and subsequently at Rutgers College, New Brunswick. In 1863 he succeeded the Rev. Joel Parker as pastor of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church. He has travelled extensively in Bible lands and has written several admirable volumes on the subject, besides books on other topics. His best known work is his Commentary of the New Testament. In addition to his pulpit duties, he has taken a very active interest in public affairs, being always found working on the side of morality and good government. His elder son, Ernest H. Crosby, is American Consul at Alexandria, Egypt, while the younger son, Nicholas, is professor of Greek in a private college in this country.

The Effort to Find a Basis for Union Among the Churches has met with an unexpected check in New York. As announced in these columns a few weeks ago, Dr. W. S. Rainsford, Rector of St. George's Protestant Episcopal Church, whose portrait is given below, invited Dr. Lyman Abbott, the Pastor of Plymouth Congregational Church, Brooklyn, to preach a sermon at one of the services which Dr. Rainsford holds on Friday evenings during Lent. Other Protestant Episcopal clergymen, including Drs. Heber Newton, Stanger, and Dr. Van der Water, have given similar invitations to their non-Episcopal brethren. The practice was, however, condemned as an innovation contrary to the canons of the Church by Bishop A. Cleveland Coxe, in a sermon preached on March 20, in Buffalo. Dr. Morgan Dix, Rector of Trinity Church, New York, also denounced it in his own pulpit last week. It would appear that many other clergymen are of the same mind for a protest against it, extensively signed, has now been lodged with the Dean of the Diocese. The terms of the protest have not been given to the public, but it is understood that the objection urged by the signers is not to the character or teachings of the invited clergymen, but is based on the fact that it is against the law of the Church for any person to "officiate" who is not in the line of Apostolic succession. As the protest is practically a request to Bishop Potter to discipline the offending clergymen, his action is awaited with much interest. Dr. Abbott's portrait is the lower of the two given above.

The Recent Mob-Law Riot in New Orleans is now being investigated by the Grand Jury of that city, and there is a prospect of numerous indictments. State Attorney-General Rogers, has assumed charge of the inquiry and this fact has aroused violent opposition from the defenders of the mob. It will be a very difficult task to secure actual evidence of participation in the attack on the Parish Prison. Meanwhile, the correspondence between this Government and Italy has greatly modified the situation and removed all danger of the lynching becoming an international question.

There are Thousands of Idolators in Paris, where the worship of Buddha has spread to a remarkable extent. This is the latest vagary of the changeable capital, where vice and infidelity have had their strongholds for generations. It is certainly a singular commentary on the civilization of France that in the nineteenth century, the Buddhist sect, "Sin-Sin," should have its devotees in Paris, and its temples where priests from heathen Ceylon pray and prostrate themselves before a statue of Buddha and lead the devotions of a mixed congregation, composed of Frenchmen, a few Englishmen and a sprinkling of Orientals. The mummary includes the burning of tapers in flower-filled vases, the offering of incense, innumerable prostrations, the striking of gongs to "frighten off wicked spirits" and the singing or chanting of heathen hymns. Such a spectacle is possible in no other civilized capital in the world!

Changes in the Character of the Tide of Immigration flowing to this country from the old world are constantly taking place. Italy is considering the advisability of prohibiting her sons and daughters from coming to the United States; the Chinese have practically stopped coming, and now, we are informed that a great Japanese influx is threatened. Thousands have already arrived in California, and are laboring in the same vineyards where, a few years ago, the Chinese worked until driven away. These arrivals are the precursors of many more thousands. They are really fine laborers, with the same skill, delicacy and economy that marked the Chinese, and which made the latter so powerful a competitor of the whites.

For a Woman to Journey Across Africa without an armed escort, and attended only by a few carriers and a guide, is certainly a bold and startling venture. Yet this is precisely what Mrs. French-Sheldon, an American, proposes to do. She is now on the way from Zanzibar to the interior, travelling in a curious basket car, that recalls the old-fashioned sedan chair. This palanquin is five feet and one-half in diameter, and weighs only fifty-five pounds, being of light bamboo, strengthened with aluminum wire. It is a wonderfully compact affair, however, and can be made to serve as a travelling coach, a sleeping-room, a tent, toilet-room, library, etc. It is water-proof and can easily be carried over the roughest mountain roads. It is true, the route she proposes to take, from the coast to the lakes and so eastward, has already been partly opened by explorers and is now comparatively safe for long distances; but there are still perils innumerable in Central Africa, and it is hard to foresee how a woman can escape them. Mrs. Sheldon is remarkably courageous and believes she will be less exposed to danger than an armed caravan led by men, because "even the savages will accord the right of way to a woman." If she goes with godly purpose on her strange expedition, well may come of it, and under the divine protection she may safely cross the Dark Continent, the exploration of which has already cost hundreds of valuable lives; but, if otherwise, her venture would seem to be reckless and ill-considered.

All Europe is Intently Watching the Literary duel between Emperor William and his ex-Chancellor. William is about to make his debut in print as the compiler of the memoirs of his illustrious grandfather, William I., and Bismarck is said to be apprehensive that the coming book will endeavor to belittle his share in the founding of the German Empire. Should his fears in this respect be well founded, he will at once publish his own memoirs, which include a large number of letters that Emperor William has been vainly trying to secure with a view to their suppression. These letters he demanded of Bismarck sometime ago, but the latter replied that they were out of the country, his son, Herbert Bismarck, having placed them in the vaults of a Safe Deposit Company in London. There now seems to be less prospect than ever of Bismarck's restoration to power.

An Important Bulletin by the Census Bureau shows the population of the South Atlantic and South Central States, Missouri and Kansas, by races. These states contain fifteen-sixteenths of the entire colored population of the country, and the figures reveal the fact that the colored race is not holding its own against the white in point of numbers. During the first thirty years of the century, the negro increased much more rapidly than the white, owing largely to the slave trade, and in these years there were six colored to ten white. Now, however, the proportion has changed to four to ten. In the States in question, the colored race, numbers less than 7,000,000 as against nearly 17,000,000 white. Only two of the far Southern States show a positive gain on the part of the negro, but the tendency of the whole is downward.

THE JOYOUS RETURN.

A NEW SERMON, PREACHED BY PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

An Arraignment Ending in a Gracious Invitation—I. The Call to Come to God—An Instructive Call—Pathetic—Divine—II. The Argument for Coming—Fear—Anticipated—Guilt no Hindrance—III. Help Extended—Direction What to Bring—How to Pray—Two Sentences of Petition—Three Renunciations—IV. Coming to the Lord by the Help.

"O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord: say unto him, Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously, etc." Hosea 14: 1-3.

We are in the last chapter of the book of the prophet Hosea. Throughout the book there has been thunder: sometimes a low rumbling, as of a distant tempest, sometimes peal on peal, as of a storm immediately overhead. And now the tempest has gathered all its force. Here it culminates. You expect the bolt of heaven to destroy. Lo, instead thereof a silver shower of mercy!

To use another figure: the whole book of Hosea is like a great trial wherein witnesses have appeared against the accused, and the arguments and excuses of the guilty have been answered and baffled. All has been heard for them, and much, very much against them, and the convicted stand at the bar to hear their sentence. Behold the Judge, instead of pronouncing doom of death, stretches out his hands to the condemned, and in tones of pity cries, "O Israel, return!"

This is a wonderful chapter to be at the end of such a book. I had never expected from such a prickly shrub to gather so fair a flower, so sweet a fruit; but so it is: where sin abounded, grace doth much more abound. No chapter in the Bible can be more rich in mercy than this last of Hosea; and yet no chapter in the Bible might, in the natural order of things, have been more terrible in judgment. Where we looked for the blackness of darkness, behold a noontide of light!

I. First, notice

The Call to Come:

"O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God." Oh, that the call may be made effectual this day! It is a very instructive call; for it tells the sinner exactly what he has to do. Return: that is, reverse your course. The course you have taken is the opposite of that which you ought to have taken; therefore, come back. You have gone from God; come back to God. You have been prayerless; begin to pray! You have been hardened; yield to the Word. You have been full of cavils; believe even as a little child. Reverse the engine. Take the other track! "Return!" is but a single word, but that word is full of meaning.

The word is also instructive, because it says, "Return unto the Lord." Do not only look to God, but return to him. Arise, and go unto your Father. Do not barely think about it, but do it. Do not return part of the way to this and to that good custom and salutary habit; but come right back to the Lord, and rest not till you feel that you are in his arms. It is of no use for the prodigal to say, "I will arise," unless he adds, "and go to my father." It is of no use his quitting one far-off country for another; but it must be said of him, "And he arose and came to his father."

The Best Direction We can Give to many a sinner is—Reverse your course of life, and let your reversed course of life lead you to God himself. How surely will he need the abounding grace of God for such a work as this! for Virgil's lines are true—

The gates of hell are open night and day;
Smooth the descent, and easy is the way.
But to return and seek the upper skies,
In this the task and mighty labor lies.

I cannot help reminding you that this instructive and practical exhortation is also a very pathetic call. Possibly some of you may have had to plead with one of your own children, who has been very wilful, and has threatened to do that which would have been exceedingly injurious to him. You have said, "Oh, do not so, my son! Oh, do not so, my daughter!" and you have thrown your soul into your pleading. Even thus doth God, with sacred pathos, with love welling up from the depth of his heart, plead with every sinner before me, and he words the pleading thus—"O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God."

I would remind you, also, that, pathetic as it is, it is a divine call. "O Israel, return!" Who saith it? The prophet? Yea, and more than the prophet: he who pleads is the prophet's God. He swears by his own life that he willeth not the death of the sinner, but that he turn unto him, and live. If it were my call, you might refuse it with small blame; but it is God's call: shall your Maker call in vain? Will you add to all your sin the turning of your back upon the God of love? Shall Jehovah cry in pity to your souls and cry in vain? God grant it be not so!

II. Secondly, I beg you to notice

The Argument for Coming.

"Return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." What a wonderful argument is this! You are in an evil plight through sin; therefore return to the Lord your God. But, saith one, "I was afraid I might not come because I had fallen." See how your fear is anticipated. The case is reversed, and your having fallen is made by the Lord into an argument why you should return to him. "I am broken-kneed," saith one; "I have fallen so badly that I shall never be worth a penny for any good work." Yet, the Lord cries, "Return, for thou hast fallen." Because you are thus fallen, you have need to return; and God considers your need, not your merit. Because you are fallen, God's pity invites you to return. Use the word "fallen" literally. If you are a fallen man, return; if you are a fallen woman, return. Why is it that the word "fallen" has a force in reference to woman which it has not in regard to man? Surely a fallen man is as sad a sight as a fallen woman. But whether male or female, here is the argument for your returning to God: "Thou hast fallen; therefore return." I pray you, yield to so gracious a plea.

The Root of the Mischief.

Dear friends, the argument is also this: the cause of your evil plight is sin. "Thou hast fallen by thine iniquity." Sin is the root of the mischief. Do not say, "I was fated to be so." Thou art wounded, but thine own hand has given the injurious stab. "Thou hast fallen by thine iniquity;" blame no one else. That you are an unbeliever is your own fault; you will not come to Christ that you might have life. The way you follow is the way of your own choice, in which you follow the imaginations and devices of your own heart. All the misery of your present estate is due to yourself alone.

Your guilt should not make you hesitate; for the Lord knows all about it, and his invitation shows that he does so. He says, "Return; for thou hast fallen." O my hearer, hast thou tried to hide that fall? Art thou sitting here and trying to forget thy ruin? The Lord does not forget it, and does not wish you to forget it. He sets it before your mind, and bids you come to him as a fallen person. The Lord Jesus Christ receives sinners as sinners. He does not want them to change their character and then come, but they are to come to him for a change. Come as sinners; with your evil habits, your guilt, your condemnation, your spiritual death, and your corruption. Come just as you are.

III. Now let us see how our gracious God meets us, and provides for us

The Help in Coming.

The Lord helps our ignorance and our fear. He gives us direction as to what to bring. Read the second verse. "Ah!" saith the sinner, "I do not know what to take with me in approaching the Most High." The answer is, "Take with you words." Your heart is right; you are longing for salvation; you need not say, "Where-with shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God?" "Take with you words;" you have plenty of them. The heart must be there first, and then nothing more is asked than "words." Cheap enough is this offering. Leaves of the wood are not so easy to come at. This is simple enough.

Where to Return.

And then, the Lord helps the coming sinner by a direction as to where to turn. "Take with you words, and turn to the Lord." "I was wanting to see the minister," saith one. Turn to the Lord! "I desire to converse with a man of God." Turn to the Lord! We read in the book of Job, "To which of the saints wilt thou turn?" My answer would be—Sinner, turn thou to the sinner's friend, and leave the saints alone. If thou wouldest be saved, turn not to Peter, nor James, nor John; but turn to him whom all these call "Master and Lord." "Take with you words, and turn to the Lord." Have you been in the habit of turning to a man who is called a priest? I pray you, do so no longer; for there is now but one sin-atoning priest, and he is the Lord Jesus. Have you turned to ceremonies? Do you look for rest in sacraments? You look that way in vain; for they are not the way of salvation. Turn rather to the Lord as he is revealed in the Lord Jesus. Take with you words, and turn to the Lord himself. Against him you have sinned: to him make confession.

A further help is this. The Lord helps us to return to him by giving

A Direction how to Pray.

What a gracious God he is! Suppose a case. A great king has been grievously offended by a rebellious subject, but in kindness of heart he wills to be reconciled. He invites the rebel to sue for pardon. He replies, "O King, I would fain be forgiven, but how can I properly approach your offended majesty? I am anxious to present such a petition as you can accept, but I know not how to draw it up." Suppose this great king were to say, "I will draw up the petition for you," what confidence the suppliant would feel in presenting the petition! He brings to the king his own words. That prayer is best which is offered in God's own way, and is of God's own prompting. May you present such a prayer at once!

Here I find two sentences of petition. The first is—"Take away all iniquity." Dear seekers, I pray you, do not look on one sin, and say, "Lord, spare it!" Do not wish to have one sin left; but cry "Take it away! Take it away! Take away all iniquity. However sweet, or fascinating, or deeply-seated, Lord, take away all iniquity. If I have been given to the intoxicating cup, take it away! If I have been the slave of greed, take it away! If I have been subject to passion, or pride, or lustfulness, take it away! Whatever is my besetting sin, 'take away all iniquity!'" The taking of it away may cost you a right hand or a right eye; still, shrink not, but cry, "Take away all iniquity." Have done with it all.

A Kind Reception.

The next petition is, "Receive us graciously." Confess that a kind reception of you by God must be of grace alone. Nothing but grace can open a door for our returning. Sinners cannot be received of the Lord on any other terms but those of mercy. We would not ask to be dealt with according to our merits; but we thank the Lord that he hath not dealt with us after our sins, nor rewarded us according to our iniquities. As to our sins, we cannot answer him one of a thousand. The Lord must receive us graciously or reject us righteously. Are we not glad that sinners can be received in the name of grace, and find a welcome in the tender mercy of our God? Offer, then, this petition, "Receive us graciously." I am not content merely to talk to you about these gracious words; I want every soul here to use them in personal prayer.

One sentence of promise follows these two of petition: "So will we render the calves of our lips." What are the "calves of our lips"? They are sacrifices of praise and thanksgiving. Yonder are the calves of the stall which men bring in sacrifice: they are struck down, and they die at the altar. God does not ask from us bullocks which have horns and hoofs. He takes no pleasure in the blood of calves, or of goats. He desires a broken heart, true faith, and humble love: these live at the altar. "Whoso offereth praise glorifieth God." Let us bring him our best thoughts, our best expressions, our best testimonies, our heartiest praises: these are not calves of our stalls, but "calves of our lips." Let our gratitude be a living sacrifice, and our conduct a constant testimony to the goodness of God.

Renunciation Necessary.

Now come three sentences of renunciation: "Asshur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses: neither will we say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods." First, the natural, legal trust, so much esteemed among men, must go. Israel used always to fall back upon Assyria. If Egypt threatened the people, or if any other nation oppressed them, they sent a present to the King of Assyria to come and deliver them. But now they cry, "Asshur shall not save us." The popular trust of the world is in self-righteousness in its various forms. You were going to be saved by your own repentance, reformation, and future well-doing; but of this you must say, "Asshur shall not save us." Are you trusting in sacraments? Give up so vain a confidence. They are not meant to save, but to instruct those who are saved already. Are you trusting in your hereditary godliness, your

Birtheright Religion?

Away with so poor a foundation! Are you trusting in your prayers, your givings to the poor, your attendance on sermons, your honesty, your good nature? Set these on one side, and cry, "Asshur shall not save us." All confidences must go save Jesus Christ, whom God has laid in Zion for a foundation stone. On him must we build, and on none other; for "Asshur shall not save us."

But, next, they gave up all carnal confidence of their own: "neither will we ride upon horses." When we come to God we must quit all trust in ourselves of every sort: in our tears, our prayers, our moral life, our excellent instincts, or anything else we must place no trust. "Some trust in horses, and some in chariots, but we will remember the name of the Lord our God." It may be, you have fine horses of morality and religiousness, you have many virtues upon which you think you might fairly depend: give up these trusts. Put away every confidence in yourself, in whatever fashion it appears.

IV. This last word should induce sinners to return to God, and then we shall see

The Coming by this Help.

You that are great, and good, and full, and inwardly strong, you will not return to God. You that are nothing, and less than nothing, you that are fallen in your own sight, you that cannot help yourselves, you are likely to come: I pray that you may come at once. You see he helps us by giving us words; but as he never helps men to be hypocrites, he will also help us to feel the words. He who gives us words to speak, will give us grace to speak them sincerely. Are not these words the true desires of your hearts? On your knees, when you get home, pour them out before God. In your pews while you are here, present these petitions in silence.

Let your coming to the Lord now be decisive and actual. You have meant it for years, and yet nothing has been done. Some of you have been hearing me preach now for a quarter of a century. Think of that! I met, the other day, with one who heard me at New Park Street, and at last he has come out to confess his Lord after more than thirty years. Slow work this! Better late than never. Come, my friends, are you going to stick in the mud for ever? Will you lie outside the wicket-gate throughout another year? God grant you may cry now, "Take away all iniquity: receive us graciously!"

Oh, that this might be the universal cry of all my audience at this hour! Oh, that we might all join in one common return unto the Lord! Let us call this day "The day of the joyous return." "Come, and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and

He will Heal us:

he hath smitten, and he will bind us up." Who says, "No?" What? Will you choose your own destruction, and persevere in the way of sin? I hope you will all say, "Ay," and that the Holy Spirit will lead you to carry out the resolve.

The special call is to the fallen: "Return; for thou hast fallen." Come ye fallen ones, come and welcome. It is to the wandering for to such is the command appropriate which saith "Return." The call is to the forlorn and destitute: "In thee the fatherless, findeth mercy." You that are fallen, far off, fatherless, and forlorn, come at once to God in Jesus Christ. Come now! Come! Come! Come! See how the Lord meets you! Read the fourth verse; I could almost kiss the lines as I gaze on them: "I will heal their backsliding:" come sick one, here is healing for you. "I will love them freely:" come unlovely one, here is love for you.

These latter verses speak as if the gracious work were done: they describe a scene most bright, full of color, and rich with perfume, as a fact accomplished. The chapter begins with an exhortation, but it runs into description, as if the people really had come, and God had met them and had blessed them exceedingly. Lord, make it so at this very moment! Jesus says, "If any man thirst, let him come unto me, and drink." "The Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth say, Come. And let him that is athirst come. And whosoever will, let him take of the water of life freely." The Lord gather you all into the arms of his grace, for his Son's sake! Amen.

A PENITENT BRAKEMAN.

DURING the services held by Mr. James H. Cannon THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Evangelist, at Oyster Bay, Long Island, N. Y., an interesting conversion occurred. Mr. Cannon was travelling from New York to Oyster Bay, on March 13, when he was introduced to the brakeman of the train by the conductor, who had himself been blessed at the meetings. The evangelist found that the brakeman, though the father of a family and evidently alive to his responsibilities, never attended church nor had sought to gain for himself that divine knowledge which alone could enable him to bring up his children wisely. He invited the man to come to the meetings and that night he was there. He listened attentively to the address, and when an invitation was given to those who were anxious for salvation to come forward, the brakeman was among the number. He was very much in earnest, but was troubled by the fear that God would not receive a man who had lived to middle age regardless of his duty to him. Mr. Cannon quoted the promises and prayed with him, encouraging the man to pray for himself. At last light broke on his soul and he left the building rejoicing in his newly-found faith.

At the same meetings, one of the most remarkable cases of juvenile depravity was disclosed. A mere boy, who was among the seekers, had not long been released from prison. Though of a respectable family, he had a terrible propensity for evil. He had stolen whenever he had opportunity; had been a sneak thief and had graduated in burglary, spending his ill-gotten booty in dissipation. Out of pure mischief he had fastened obstructions on the ties of a railroad, and, having been caught in the act, was sent to prison. After his release, he strayed into Mr. Cannon's meetings, and, under the evangelist's preaching, was led to Christ. His remorse was like that of aged criminals, but like them he found peace in believing.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS.

On the Dreamy Nile.*

FROM Coptus downward on the dreamy Nile, past innumerable canals with their primitive water-wheels; past populous villages and lordly villas, embowered in sycamores and palms; past still more lordly ruins now silent for many a century; past caravans and pleasure-parties and bodies of Roman soldiery, foot and horse, coming and going on the thoroughfares that closely skirt the river on either hand—past water craft of all sorts, from skin-buoyed rafts, carrying sandstone from Chennu to the Delta, up to gay barges carrying travellers to Thebes and the dead Egypt of the Pharaohs—past crocodiles and hippopotami and pelicans, sporting in the water, or basking along the muddy shore as so many logs or stones.

An Ancient Mart of Trade.

The whole Alexandrian world, the most industrious and bustling world known in ancient times, was in full movement. Such tides of surging men from sea to lake, and from lake to sea; such tides of donkeys and horses and camels, coming and going; such a menagerie and roar of sounds, from the tramp of thousands, the shrill calls of traders, hawking their wares, the cries of the animals, and their drivers, the infinite clatter from the tools of the artisans of every name pouring out from the open shops, far and near!

The Hebrews of Ancient Alexandria.

"Speaking of your Sabbath," continued he, reminds me that I ought to invite you to our place of worship for to-morrow; for I learn that you are not a worshipper of Belus."

"Hardly," said Aleph, with a smile.

"Nor a fire-worshipper?"

"By no means."

"Nor a worshipper of the sun?"

"I was not so taught," emphatically.

"But you were taught to worship the One God, who made the heavens and earth, and who spake by Moses and our other prophets?"

"Even so; our family religion for generations has been that of the Hebrews—as being the most credible and satisfactory within our knowledge."

"We Jews are 300,000 strong. So there are several synagogues in the city; but two of these are much larger than the rest and stand for two different schools of doctrine among us."

"May I ask what the doctrinal difference between the two synagogues is?"

"The chief difference," answered Alexander, "relates to the degree of authority to be allowed to the Sacred Books. We of the Diaplauston say that their authority is final on all matters on which they speak—that their writers were so guided and guarded by Jehovah in composing them that they were at first perfectly free from mistake of all sorts: while the other school maintains that, while properly enough said to be of divine origin, our Scriptures have always been more or less mistaken in their teachings and need to be sifted by learned men."

Invading a Sanctuary.

As they came nearer the sanctuary, they were seen to be twelve Roman soldiers in full armor, carrying at their heads a standard on whose spread wings stood an effigy of the emperor with this inscription in large capitals—"DEUS TIBERIUS CÆSAR." The soldiers were followed at a short distance by a weeping, groaning, threatening crowd of Jews, who had tried, it would seem, to prevent the entrance of the party with their desecrating symbol, and were now following them with lamentations and execrations. Alexander had now come up.

"I demand to know for what purpose you have come into the sanctuary with standard and arms."

"To give you and your friends," the officer

*From "Aleph, the Chaldean, or the Messiah, as seen from Alexandria," by E. F. Burr, D.D., L.L.D., N.Y., W. B. Ketcham, Publ'r.

The Czarewitch of Russia on His Travels in Hyderabad, India..

replied, with mock solemnity, "an opportunity, which no doubt you will gratefully accept, to pay an act of religious worship to the great God Tiberius Cæsar," and he kneeled before the standard and with both hands lifted up, cried "Great God, I worship thee."

Rising, he exclaimed, "Now, I have set you an example—copy it, everyone of you."

"You came here," said Alexander sternly, "to commit an outrage—came as a private venture of your own and a few mischievous companions. Now begone from the sanctuary which you have profaned."

"We will see," cried the Roman, in a transport of fury, as he rushed on Aleph with his drawn sword.

Aleph caught the blow with his cane. He had learned the art of fence; his cane was as good as a shield and met the sword at every point. At last, after a desperate lunge, the sword went flying aloft; and both Cimon and Aleph had seized its master.

"Expel them!" shouted Alexander to the crowd that was now surging like a sea.

The mob needed no spur. They threw themselves on the soldiers, already cowed by what had passed and in a moment were dragging them, disarmed and unresisting, behind Cimon and Aleph. Had it not been for the example of coolness and forbearance, the people might have torn them limb from limb.

A LETTER-WRITER OF TUNIS.

(See Illustration on page 205.)

THE public scribe is an institution peculiar to the Orient, where education, even of the most elementary character, is confined to the few. The illustration on page 205 shows one of these public letter-writers inditing a missive at the dictation of a fair patron. His writing paraphernalia, his surroundings, and his personal appearance, are all calculated to inspire respect in the minds of his customers, who are drawn from all ranks, the rich as well as the poor coming to him to have their correspondence written. Such an official is naturally the possessor of manifold secrets, and he is generally found trustworthy.

The public scribe acts also as general advisor and interpreter. He is consulted by many on important questions of law and business. In Tunis, the capital city of the African State of the same name, he is to be found in the busiest part of the city, in the neighborhood of the bazaars, where he can be accessible to the merchant and trader, or to the ladies of the household who may require his services.

THE CZAREWITCH IN INDIA.

THE rivalry of England and Russia for ascendancy in Asia, and the suspicious watch the former nation has kept on Russian advances southward, renders the tour which the Czarewitch is now making a matter of unusual significance. The Czarewitch, as his name implies, is the eldest son of the Czar of Russia and the heir-apparent to the crown. He bears the names of Nicholas Alexander, after his great-grandfather and his father.

He was born May 18, 1868, and is therefore now in his twenty-third year. The seclusion in which his parents have been obliged to live, owing to the plots of the Nihilists, has prevented anything being known to the public of his disposition or his personal character. How much depends on both is realized when we reflect that in the natural course of events he will, on the death of his father, be lord over eight million square miles of territory—one sixth of the surface of the globe—and absolute ruler of one hundred and six million persons. His portrait appears on this page.

The Czarëwitch has been seeing something of the territory which he is to govern. Proceeding to Trieste he embarked on a Russian man-of-war. Thence he sailed through the Suez Canal to Bombay, where he became the guest of the British Government. This reception had of course been the subject of previous diplomatic negotiation. The English Government cordially acceded to the Czar's request and the young man has had a hearty welcome. He is to pass through China and Asiatic Russia on his way home. The illustration on this page is taken from a photograph by an artist in Hyderabad and represents the Czarewitch traveling in a native vehicle which is called a "tonga."

JULIA'S TRIUMPH.

A Story of the S. S. Golden Text, for April 12. "Man looketh on the outward appearance but the Lord looketh on the heart." I. Samuel 16: 7.

VERY one was talking of Julia Clein. That is, every one who was at the Main Street Church that Tuesday night. To Julia and her parents, and to most of those present it was equivalent to world-wide fame, for the church was their little world. It was quite full. Even when the pastor preached his famous funeral sermon in improving the death of Colonel Jones, there were not more people in the building, and that occasion had always been quoted as high-water mark. It was the Sunday School entertainment that had drawn the throng.

About half the programme had been presented, when the pastor, as arranged, announced that he had now a pleasant duty to perform. As the teachers and scholars knew, a prize had been offered a year ago to the boy or girl who brought the largest number of new scholars to the school during the year. The successful competitor was Julia Clein. (Applause.) Julia Clein, nicely dressed, her face crimson with blushes, was called to the platform, and the pastor, with neatly turned remarks on the blessedness of bringing lambs to the fold, presented the three handsome volumes, with which Julia returned to her seat amid more applause. It was a triumph full of pleasure to her and it was not spoiled for Julia by the envious whisper of some who said the scholars she brought came from other schools.

On a back seat, away back under the gallery, three children about twelve years old sat watching the proceedings. They were very poorly clad, though the best had evidently been made of such clothes as they possessed. Near them was a girl but little older than themselves. They clung to her as if feeling that they were out of place, and she was the one link that held them. She was their teacher, and had brought them to the school. They were not very welcome, and there was no class in which they could be conveniently placed; so Mary Briggs, the girl who brought them, became their teacher in a class by themselves. Where she "picked them up" no one knew, but it must have been in some rear tenement or other.

"I think I must go, Miss Mary," said one of them at last; it's so nice to stay, but mother said I must come home early, before father came in; for if he had been drinking he might take on when he heard of my being here."

A kiss and a hasty "good-night," and the child hurried away. Miss Mary seated herself between her two remaining charges and held a little hand in each of her own.

"I shall see you on Sunday, sure?" Mary asked as she accompanied the two children after the entertainment, to the court in which they lived.

"Oh, yes, teacher," said one. "I would not miss it for anything. It's my best day, I always wanted to go to Sunday School, but mother would not let me. She said my clothes weren't good enough, and she used to cry about it; but when you came and said 'Never mind the clothes,' she was as glad as I was. And I tell her all about the lesson, and I can sing the hymns to her. I often sing to her when I am in bed and she is waiting up for father. She says she went to Sunday School when she was a girl and it's like the old times, before the troubles came to her, to hear the old hymns. It comforts her."

"And you will come too, Bessie?"

"Of course, Miss Mary," was the reply. "My mother don't care about my coming, nor my father don't either. They say I can come if I like, and I do like to very much. And I've tried to be good ever since you let me come. Good at home I mean. That's ever so much harder than being good at school. Mother owned up yesterday I was a better girl. She said she didn't know if it was Sunday School did it. But I knew."

The two children safely housed in the miserable places they called homes, Mary Briggs turned homeward with a heart full of thankfulness that she had been able to bring a little light into some desolate lives. Julia Clein was just entering her home, and Mary heard her merry laugh as she passed. The triumph of the evening had been Julia's, but Mary was content, and perhaps in that day when rewards are distributed by him who "looketh on the heart," there will be a triumph for her, too, more enduring than that which comes from men who are apt to "look on the outward appearance" only.

A Letter-Writer in Tunis. (See page 204.)

ROMA.

A NEW SERIAL STORY.

Written expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

BY JENNIE FOWLER WILLING.

Author of "Diamond Dust," "Chaff and Wheat," "From Fifteen to Twenty-five," "The Potential Woman," &c.

(Continued from page 190.)

ET artists rail at the government as they like, about the destruction of that picturesque, old Rome," said Margaret, one evening at table. "For my part, I am just stupid enough to delight in the change."

"It depends upon whether they want our city for a museum or a home," said Camilla.

"Who would want his house just to please ze picture-makers?" chimed in Marie.

"Old Rome was only a set of immense churches, convents and palaces," said Margaret, "each with its piazza, column, and fountain, with the narrowest, crookedest streets of seven-by-nine shops, running from one to the other, arranged simply for the pleasure of a few priests and nobles. But that day is gone by."

"And let all the people say 'amen,'" responded Camilla, heartily.

"Have you noticed, cousin, how the tiny shops are packed?" asked Carolyn. "Even the ceilings are hung with things."

"They keep their shops in order," remarked Camilla, with a touch of dignity.

"Indeed they do," said Margaret. "Don't you remember, Lyn, that one where we went for the tamarind syrup? The cheeses were piled up at each side of the door, exactly like those marble columns at the side-entrance of St. John Lateran—a regularly built arch. The radishes, and onions, and eggs, are all laid in patterns; and even the sausages, the last material for artistic effect, are hung thickly over the ceiling, each with its bit of greenery tied on with a red string and white paper flower."

"Our national colors," said Camilla. "When the sun sets flowers blooming on every ledge and cornice of ruin, and where masterpieces of art are within everybody's reach, the people cannot help being artistic. Any peasant can leave his cart at the door of San Pietro in Vincoli, and run in for a look into the face of Michelangelo's Moses or into the Capuchin convent to see Guido Reni's Archangel."

The "apartment" in which the energetic Mrs. Barcolo had finally settled our young ladies, shouldered upon the Piazza, just behind Santa Maria Maggiore, one of the three great churches of the city. Camilla insisted that the back of the edifice was handsomer than the front, its rear flight of steps being one of the finest in Rome.

"Just look at ze voman on ze housetop over ze way," exclaimed Marie, as she and Carolyn stood upon the little balcony before the window. "She washes her clothes in ze big, stone tub, and ze baby amuses itself viz ze shickens in zeir coop close by ze door. Ve can vatch zeim from our perch, as ze angels do watch over us."

The palazzo in which they had their "apartment," covered the space between four streets. It held fifty-four suites of rooms, each a complete dwelling, and housed between three and four hundred people.

"We have good blood in our palazzo," remarked Camilla one day, as they were going down the hundred and eighty-six short steps between their rooms and the pavement. Carolyn had taken pains to count them, to see how tired they ought to be. "Here we have a count and countess," pointing to the front door of a neighbor between them and the street. "See! there are both their coronets, though only her name is on the door,—'nata Ruspoli'," because her blood is better than his; the Ruspoli is about as good as any in Italy."

"It is really very, very funny to see the lady's name on the door," remarked the English girl. "You have nothing like that in America, cousin?"

"Oh, no: married women lose their identity with the parson's 'amen.'"

"For example, Burdett-Coutts," said the Italian girl, quickly, "and Harriet Beecher Stowe. Some day it will be Margaret Pelham Smith, or Jones."

"We must strike our colors to the Italian," laughed Margaret. "But I must insist, Camilla, that your Romans do live too much out of doors. In those side-streets every man, woman and child is scampering about, at his own sweet will."

"You don't hear much quarrelling among them," said Camilla.

"Oh, no: they seem to be in the jolliest mood; women sitting on the curbstones, eating their supper, or knitting and sewing, with their children tumbling about, and men busy with their affairs."

"It would be nice, my queen, if every family had its own little garden; but they are very poor. The skies are as bright and the fountains as sweet and cool for them, as if they were princes. It is about all the comfort they have. The churches and convents take up all the room. The poor people can understand the flowers and the fountains better than they can the Latin prayers. Are poor people's homes any better in London, or New York?"

"Lyn, we will have to dip our flags again, and a truce to criticism. Don't you remember the inscription on that lady's tomb in the Protestant cemetery, that we saw when we were looking for Shelley's grave? She never caused pain, except by her death! Now, my dear, we're not going to tease you any more till we die."

"There is a dial plate in Venice," said Camilla, "with this word on its face, 'I record only the serene hours.' My poor Italy ought not to be criticized; she is doing so well. She has lifted herself out of the quicksands with a mountain on her back. When my father was banished from Rome, you could not even have worship in your own house without a call from the papal police: but now there is more religious toleration in Rome than in your territory of New Mexico, if the magazines tell the truth."

A little later that afternoon the four young ladies got down from their cab in front of San Pietro in Carcere, for a look into the Mamertine Prisons. They stepped inside the basement door, and a boy in a gown led them down stairs. A pretty-faced lady, and a quaint-looking gentleman, wearing a high, straight-rimmed hat, joined the party. They were the Hollanders. "You speak English?" the lady asked Margaret. "The boy speaks only Italian. Will you be so kind to interpret for us, excuse me, if you please."

"With pleasure," replied the American girl.

"I sink I un'erstan' enoof English to get it all. Maybe you pelief all der priest do say?"

"I trust not," said Margaret with a smiling shake of the head. "He says that those barbarous, old Romans used to put down through that hole those who were condemned to die. Probably Jugurtha, whom they starved to death, and Vincingetorix, and Cataline, Paul, possibly, Peter—no—it is not likely that he ever saw Rome."

They went on down stairs, the Dutch lady translating to her husband what Margaret had said with a quiet amusement over her additions to the boy's statements.

"That," said the American girl, pointing to an iron grating about a foot square over a place in the wall, "he says that Peter's face made that dent when his jailor pitched him against the wall. His face must have been hard, or the rock, soft."

At that moment Carolyn gave a sharp, little cry, and there was a commotion among those further down the stairs. It seemed that some one had stepped on her dress: she had lost her balance and pitched forward, being caught in her fall by the arms of a tall young Englishman—Goldthorpe Gordon!

"Lyn, are you hurt?"

Carolyn gathered herself up as quickly as possible, in alternating flush and paleness. "No—that is—I should have been, but—I turned my foot. I was frightened off those stairs the moment I stepped on them."

Goldthorpe's and Carolyn's mammas, old school friends, had arranged their children's future while the young people were in pinafores. The Teutonic love of personal liberty that made their ancestors in Cæsar's time, prefer their frozen bogs, and their own way, had separated them, as Margaret told her Uncle John in Paris. That unsympathetic, young person, seeing how this adventure was sure to end, whispered to Camilla in Italian, "You and I may elope with anybody now. Uncle John will be so delighted with this denouement, our peace will be made in advance."

Mrs. Gordon who was with her son, and who was very fond of Carolyn, insisted upon tying her handkerchief about that young lady's ankle. "Perhaps she had better be driven directly to her hotel. Are you faint, my dear?"

O, no; not at all. Let us see the rest of this. We must do it thoroughly, you know."

"If you will allow me to assist you," said Goldthorpe offering his arm. The boy went on with his recitation.

"This fountain sprang up miraculously," translated Margaret, "to furnish Peter with water for baptizing Paul's converts. I heard a lecturer on Roman antiquities say on good authority that it was mentioned by Latin writers in the days of the Republic."

After showing the places in the wall where the ropes were fastened by which Cataline was strangled, the lad led the party back to the nineteenth century daylight. "Priests within, and beggars without," remarked Margaret, as the party was besieged by the tatterdemalions who were lying in wait.

Carolyn insisted that they should go directly to the Forum. She had studied it up, she said, laughing nervously, and she was sure to forget, if she did not recite while the lesson was fresh.

With Gordon's help she got down the steps into the excavated Forum. Seating her on the camp-stool that he had brought for his mother, upon the pavement of the Basilica Julia, and placing himself upon a stone beside her, he shielded her from the sun with his umbrella. "There," she said, pointing toward the columns back of the Campodoglio, "that was the temple of Saturn."

"That takes us back to the days of Tarquinius Superbus," said Margaret, "over four hundred years before Christ."

"I read over my Cæsar when I was getting ready for this journey," said Goldthorpe. "I went through Merivale carefully enough for an exam."

"I have been through Merivale," said Carolyn, "making notes—and a lot beside."

Mrs. Gordon was in quite too happy a state of mind to care a pin for all the old Romans who ever disgraced history with their bad behaviour. "It is really very, very curious," she said, meaning the similarity of taste in study of the two young people.

"I believe," said Margaret, "that the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus stood over there on the hill where the church of Aracoli now stands."

"What were those three columns a part of?" asked Mrs. Gordon.

"The temple of Vespasian" replied Carolyn. "The Via Sacra came down from the Capitol between the temples of Saturn and Vespasian."

"And zat vone by itself?" asked Marie. "The column of Phocas," was the reply. "It did not belong to the old Forum at all. When all this was filled with rubbish, and called the cowfield, that one alone stood above the ground: and it was what Byron wrote about it that set our Duchess of Devonshire excavating this Forum."

"How tremendously strong those old fellows made things," said Goldthorpe turning toward the opening into the Cloacus Major. "Fancy a system of sewerage that has lasted twenty-four hundred years!"

"Think of us puny, little moderns standing where the crowds listened to Cicero, Mark Antony, and the rest," said Margaret. "We know what they said better than we do last Sunday's sermon. How we have wrestled with their unmanageable verbs!"

"And those two columns, dear," said Mrs. Gordon. "That stand out so beautifully against the sky."

"A part of the temple of Castor and Pollux," was Carolyn's reply. "The paymaster of the cavalry used to stand on the steps of that temple to pay off the troops."

"Tired, dear?" asked Mrs. Gordon.

"Not specially so," replied Carolyn, who took more kindly to coddling than might have been hoped.

"We must not stay longer to-day," said Gordon, shutting his umbrella and assuming control quite naturally.

"Where are you, Miss Pelham?" he asked of Margaret as he gave his arm to Carolyn.

"One sixty-three Via Torino, just back of Santa Maria Maggiore."

"Oh—ah—yes—just a step. You

(Continued on next Page.)

Colds and Coughs

croup,
sore throat,
bronchitis, asthma,
and hoarseness
cured by

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

the safest
and most effective emergency medicine.
It should be in every family.

Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co
Lowell, Mass.

"MRS. WINSLOWS' SOOTHING SYRUP
for CHILDREN TEETHING." SOFTENS THE
GUMS, REDUCES INFLAMMATION, ALLAYS
PAIN, CURES WIND COLIC. Twenty-five cts. a bottle.

Agents Wanted to sell our
MAGNIFICENTLY ILLUSTRATED. Highly endorsed
by prominent Divines of all Denominations. Send for Illustrated Descriptive Circulars and Terms.

March April May

Are the best months in which to purify your blood. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost, and just now the system craves the aid of a reliable medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling. It increases in popularity every year, for it is the ideal spring medicine.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, 41¢; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

EVERY MOTHER

Should Have It in The House.

Dropped on Sugar, Children Love

to take JOHNSON'S ANODYNE LINIMENT for Croup, Colds, Sore Throat, Tonsillitis, Colic, Cramps and Pains. Relieves all Summer Complaints, Cuts and Bruises like magic. Sold everywhere. Price 35c. by mail; 6 bottles Express paid, $2. I. S. JOHNSON & CO., Boston, Mass.

I took Cold,
I took Sick,
I TOOK

SCOTT'S EMULSION

RESULT:

I take My Meals.

I take My Rest.

AND I AM VIGOROUS ENOUGH TO TAKE ANYTHING I CAN LAY MY HANDS ON; getting fat too, FOR Scott's Emulsion of Pure Cod Liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda NOT ONLY CURED MY Incipient Consumption BUT BUILT ME UP, AND IS NOW PUTTING

FLESH ON MY BONES

AT THE RATE OF A POUND A DAY. I TAKE IT JUST AS EASILY AS I DO MILK. SUCH TESTIMONY IS NOTHING NEW. SCOTT'S EMULSION IS DOING WONDERS DAILY. TAKE NO OTHER.

DO YOU WANT

TO RECEIVE read and distribute sample copies of over thirty different holiness papers and magazines of the pure Bible and Wesleyan type, and aid in their more general circulation. "Spreading scriptural holiness over these lands?" If so, send me a silver dime, your name and address will be printed on my Holiness Exchange Mail List, which goes to all publishers of holiness literature. Write name and address plainly. Address J. H. PADGETT, Printer, Ennis, Texas.

400 RECITATIONS

AND READINGS. We will send to any address on receipt of 35 cents, a handsome book, bound in paper cover, and containing 400 of the best recitations ever issued. Address, J. S. OGILVIE, 57 Rose Street, New York.

BICYCLES FREE—To Boys and Girls. We have a plan by which a good Boy or Girl in every neighborhood can procure a "Little Giant Safety" free if willing to do a little work for us, send stamp for full particulars address, FOWLER & WELLS Co., Pub'r 777 Broadway, New York.

SAMPLE COPY of Ladies' Home Journal and Premium Supplement, sent free to an address
CURTIS PUBLISHING CO., Philadelphia.

NEW RELIGIOUS BOOK

American Pub'g Co., Hartford, Ct., Boston, St. Louis

ROMA.

(Continued from preceding Page.)

"Come any day, can you not?"

"Oh, yes," replied Margaret, "we must review our history on this spot. The world has been ruled longer from within a few feet of where we are standing than from any other point on the planet."

"Rome ruled the world," said Gordon sentimentally.

"And this was the centre of her power," added Margaret. "On the Capitoline, worship, on the Palatine, imperial dignity, and here, commerce and the administration of law."

The next morning Carolyn could not walk without limping, so they postponed their visit to the Palatine and the Coliseum. Gordon came early with dutiful inquiries from his mother; Margaret, after a mischievous proposing of various expectations to take him with the others, and leave Carolyn at home, by way of helping on the special affair by an obstacle, left the young people to themselves, while she and Camilla went to their room to write up their tales and letters.

"There!" she laughed as she took her pen, "I've persecuted those or things enough for this morning. They'll make the most of their limping, if they think they are going to be interrupted every minute. It is a natural, Anglo-Saxon contrariety. It never does its best without opposition. These courtships are mighty matters." Camilla looked a quick interrogation. "Indeed they are, my dear. A blunder on that line can never be retrieved."

"You don't believe in celibacy, do you?" queried the Italian.

"Indeed, not. God married the first man in Paradise; and it is insane to think to improving his plan."

"But Paul —"

"Poor Paul might groan in Heaven over the abuse of his words. He wrote about women and about marriage that which applied only to the conditions of society, and straightway his sayings must be torn to tatters in the attempt to stretch them over all people in all time. If we were to come down into these arches and convents, he would find his Master's scourge of small words to these priests and nuns, and them at honest home-making, one man and one woman, as God ordered; and so make an end of the etched scandals that have blackened the record of the entire coterie of old maids and bachelors."

"It will delight the family," and Camilla gave a nod over her shoulder toward the drawing-room that showed her reference to be, not to a possible Pauline visitation, but to the trimonial affair in hand.

"Indeed, it will!" replied Margaret.

"Dear, old Uncle John! How like to look over his shoulder while he reads Goldthorpe's letter! I'll quite forget to deal properly with my inability to act as duenna to these charming young ladies. But I and I are safe, my dear, eh?"

